Nowadays a math named Ramgulela is believed to represent Lomasa, but this place lies about 350m east of the Janmasthana and its denomination as Lomasa seems to have arisen merely to justify these three verses. Vasistha might refer to the Vasisthakunda which lies c.450m south-west of the Janmasthana. Unmatta as a name of a tirtha is unknown to the Mahatmya as well as to local Pandits. One is tempted to think of Mattagajendra or Surasa/Surapa, which however lie c.900m north-west of the Janmasthana instead of the said 182m. We have conjectured that Unmatta could refer to the disappeared Bhairava shrine within the Ramkot, possibly situated on the Hanumantila (see Intr.AM 17 and ad OAB 21.3d). The absence of these three slokas in MS P could point to their spurious character, although the textual critical analysis would not

directly warrant such conclusion.

When returning to situation (1) we observe that OA and B basically agree, albiet that OA has added Sitapakasthana and Sitakupa, places which only occur in the OA recension (see OA 24, and OA 26). The given distances of the Kaikeyibhavana and Sumitrabhavana (respectively 36m and 55m), when reckoned from the mosque of Babur, do not correspond with the modern situation. Today both sites (Sumitrabhavana c.100m S, Kaikeyibhavana c.250m N) are devoid of any significant religious buildings, as they might always have been. The directions in B and OA (see OAB 25.1, and OAB 25.3) may therefore be considered to refer only to spots or subsidiary shrines in the northern and southern precincts of the Janmasthana compound which were named after Sumitra and Kaikeyi merely for the sake of completion (see Intr.AM 25).

More difficult to explain is the location of the Janmasthana with respect to Vighnesa as indicated in S 21.1. As has been said above an identification of Vighnesa referred to in S 21.1a (tasmad) with Vighnesvara of S 21.2a is problematic. The Vighnesa implied in S 21.1a might be identical to a place of the same name mentioned in OA which today, however, is considered to lie in the opposite direction, i.e. to the north-east of the Janmasthana (see Intr.AM17).

Notwithstanding all the difficulties discussed above, the original location of the Janmasthana temple is comparatively certain since it seems to be attested by the location of the mosque built by Babur, in the building of which materials of a previous Hindu temple were used and are still visible. The mosque is believed by general consensus to occupy the site of the Janmasthana.

After the destruction of the original temple a new Janmasthana temple was built on the north side of the mosque separated from it by a street."(Page 144-146)

3540. He (Hans Baker) has given synopsis on pages 146-149 as under:

"Assessment of the content.

The history of the birthplace of Rama, Janmasthana, has been treated in Pt.I. A synopsis may suffice here.

Specimens of pillars that formed part of the Hindu temple that was demolished by order of Babur in AD 1528 show that the original birthplace temple dated from the 10th or 11th century (I, 43-45). Before its destruction the temple must have been one of the main pilgrimage centres of Ayodhya, especially on the occasion of Ramanavami (I, 128, 132). On the instigation of a Muslim saint Khwajah Fazl Abbas, as local tradition has it (or of another Muslim Faqir named Jalal Shah according to Sitaram 1933, 34f.), the first Mogul governor appointed by Babur, Mir Baqi, replaced the temple by a mosque in AD 1528 (I, 133f.).

The destruction of the temple would not have implied the end of all forms of worship in and around the holy site. Just as they do today, pilgrims may have assembled near the mosque to have darshan of the

tirtha, and in order to perform the puja special provisions may have been made. Tieffenthaler describes a vedi erected in the court of the mosque which is three times circumambulated by the pilgrims who then make a prostration (Tieffenthaler I, 181; Cp. Tripathi 1969, 39 ff. Quoted below). The ritual of Ramanavami described in OA 22, which is said to be carried out in the Janmasthana (OA 22.22), does not require a temple or the like and could therefore have been performed somewhere near the original holy spot in the 16th and following centuries. Such perseverance and flexibility of Hinduism under Muslim repression, which was demonstrated throughout the history of North India, could have provided an objective reason for the compiler of the OA recension not to delete or minimalize his description of the Janmasthana despite its occupation by a mosque. The general pretentions of this sort of literature to describe an eternal situation created in an immemorial past, a kind of religious superstructure that is detached from the upheavals of the gross material world, may explain why no reference whatsoever to the actual situation found a place in the Mahatmya. Considerations of this kind lead inevitably to the conclusion that the historical event of the destruction of the Janmasthana temple is of no use in fixing a date (pre or post Babur) for the recensions of the AM.

The Janmabhumi may be conceived of as a compound which has comprised and still comprises several holy site. The description is restricted to the Janmasthana temple itself in the S recension (OABS 21), but B has added two apparently subsidiary shrines- the places of Sumitra and Kaikeyi (OAB 25). The OA recension bears witness to a still further developed compound which comprised also two shrines of Sita, viz. her kitchen and her well (Sitapakasthana (OA 24) and Sitakupa (OA 26)). The above mentioned tirthas are today within a distance of 200m from the mosque of Babur. According to local tradition the shrines of Sumitra and Kaikeyi were destroyed alongwith the temple of Janmasthana. An interpolation occurring only in edition a connects the three palaces (Kausalya, Kaikeyi, and Sumitra) with three ghats (tirthas) at the Sarayu (III, App. 1 No. 4). Due to a shift in the bed of the river these ghats are nowadays much in decay. Thus glorification of the sacred complex Rama's birthplace spreads over AM 21-AM 26.

The later history of the site is briefly as follows.

Although under some liberal Muslim rulers the tension between Hindus and Muslims with regard to the Janmasthana may have been temporarily alleviated by giving the Hindus permission to perform their puja on a platform near or even within the precincts of the mosque (Tripathi 1969, 39: akbar ne hindu janta ki prasamsa ke liye ahate me ek cabutara banvane ki ajna de hi, jis par ram parivar ki murtiya sthapit karke jhopari ke bhitar mandir ka rup diya), yet Babur's inheritance remained a bone of contention between both sections of the populace.

The slumbering conflict came to a head in the controversy that had arisen in 1855 between Hindus and Muslims in consequence of the Letter's claim to offer prayers at Hanumangarhi (see ad OA 17.2c). About 300 fanatical Muslims had assembled in the mosque and resolved to launch an attack on the Vaisnava vairagis. The fight that ensued is described by Bhatnagar 1968, 119: "In the meantime the Muslims proposed to put a door in the enclosure-wall of the masjid and repair its defences. Some people were sent to bring a pair of strong doors from Begampura" (i.e. the area to the north of the Ramkot, H.T.B.). "While they were coming back, they were surrounded by the Vairagis who asked them to abandon their projected scheme. In a moment the news spread like wild fire and the Muslims rushed to the help of their comrades and attacked the Vairagis. Then ensued a regular fight between the two factions. While the conflict was in progress the Muslims tried to enter Hanumangarhi but the attempt failed and they had to retreat with the loss of their leaders who were left wounded at the garhi . . . "The Vairagis in the meantime shouting slogans fell on the masjid and cut the Muslims to pieces. Shah Ghulam Husain with a few followers escaped by jumping over the walls, leaving behind some 70 dead and many more wounded." (For the aftermath of this massacre, which led to the expedition of Amil Ali, see Bhatnagar 1968, 117-140).

Soon after this rupture, in February 1856, Oudh was annexed by the British Government and Ayodhya came directly under British rule. "A railing was put up" around the mosque "to prevent disputed, within which, in the mosque the Mahomedans pray, while outside the fence the Hindus have raised a platform on which they

In December 1949 new riots broke out between Hindus and Muslims. During the night of December 23 the Hindus succeeded in installing idols within the mosque (Tripathi 1969, 60f.). "The agitation continued for more than three years. It had serious repercussions on the law and order situation in this town and resulted in some assaults and murders. During these years the relations between the Hindus and the Muslims remained strained and the services of the police were constantly on call. The site of the dispute (i.e. the mosque of Janmasthana) is in police custody pending the decision of the civil court. The police maintains an armed guard on the spot for the protection of the building and the prevention of any breach of peace, and a temporary out-post has been established near the site of the dispute." (Faiz-Gaz. 249). This situation continues up to the present day.

Modern situation.

Today the mosque and the railing set up by the British are still there. The lawsuit is still pending in the Court of the Civil Judge Faizabad. A sentry stands outside the fence and more soldiers are permanently quartered inside the mosque. No Muslims are allowed to enter the precincts and the Hindus may come only as far as the fence in front of the entrance gate where they have erected a small altar*. On a platform near the altar groups of Hindus are continuously engaged in Kirtana. A pamphlet circulated among the many pilgrims who visit the place for darshan reads " "Shri Ram Janma Bhumi of Ayodhya is a* very sacred place. Anticipating Hindu-Muslim friction the Govt. has declared it a disputed place and has taken possession over it. Regular case is being conducted in the civil and criminal court. Since December 27, 1949 day and night Akhand Kirtan is being performed with a determination that it will continue so long as "Ram Janma Bhumi" is not freed" . . . "It is the sacred duty of the entire Hindu Community to finance this holy cause donations (sic:) and thus earn immense "PUNYA". "A glimpse of the idols within the mosque can be seen. Offerings of food (sweets) can be given through the bars of the fence. At present only eleven Hindus are allowed to enter the mosque on special occasions to perform the puja of the idols (Sita and Rama).

On the northern side of the mosque is a new Janmasthana temple. The place was founded by a sadhu called Ramadasa, pupil of Devamurari (Prayaga), in the 18th century (Tripathi 1969, 75 ff.). Gradually the hut built by Ramadasa evolved into the large temple that nowadays occupies the site. The temple is built around an inner court on the west side of which are two cellas. In one of these the images of Rama and his parivara deities are installed, the other one contains the idols of Dasarath and his entourage.

Against the wall of the court stands a piece of a door-jamb said to come from the old Janmasthana temple. It has been described in I, 44f. The temple is visited by many pilgrims."(Pages 146-149)

3541. This description of Baker is either a reiteration of the information supplied in various Gazetteers or that contained in History book. However, at places he has simply proceeded by assuming many things on his own without asigning such information.

3542. On behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-4), certain expert witnesses, (Historians) were examined to tell us that according to their expert opinion, which they have formed after due research and enquiry, the conclusion drawn is that no temple existed at the disputed site at the time when the said construction was made and there was no demolition of any alleged temple for constructing the disputed structure. The nature of the issues is such where one cannot expect a direct oral evidence. An incident of several hundred years ago, if occurred, what were the circumstances, when and how it happened, can only be seen/ inferred from the historical material, if any. By its very nature, there cannot be any direct evidence in the form of a witness. A documentary evidence in the form of inscription, if available, could be of immense help. One helping hand in such matters, where the issues pertain to science, art or other matters, the Court may form its opinion by taking help of opinions of Expert. Section 45 of the Evidence Act, 1872 enables the Court to consider opinion of the persons specially skilled in such matters. It reads as under:

> "45. Opinions of experts.-When the Court has to form an opinion upon a point of foreign law, or of science or art, or as to the identity of handwriting or finger impression, the opinions upon that point of persons specially skilled in such foreign law, science or art, or in questions as to identity of handwritings or finger impressions are relevant facts*.*

Such persons are called experts."

3543. Section 5 of the Evidence Act says that evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are declared to be relevant under Part I Chapter 2 and of no others. Therefore, there is an embargo by the statute that except to the extent the evidence may be given under Section 5 no other evidence should be entertained by court.

3544. In Collector, Gorakhpur Vs. Palakdhari ILR (1899) 12 All 1 at page 43 this Court observed that Section 5 excludes everything which is not covered by or comes within the purview of other sections which follow in the statute. A word of caution was added by Hon'ble Mookerji in Emperor Vs. Panchu Das & Ors. AIR 1920 Cal 500 (FB) that the principle of exclusion should not be so applied as to exclude matter which may be essential for the ascertainment of truth. To the same effect is the observation in Queen-Empress Vs Abdullah ILR (1885) 7 All 385 (FB).

3545. In Siris Chandra Nandy Vs. Rakhala Nanda AIR 1941 PC 16 it was held that it is not open to any Judge to exercise a dispensing power and admit evidence not admissible by the statute merely because it appears to him that irregular evidence would throw light upon the issue. The consensus of the opinion however, has been that in case of doubt about the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence, the Judge should declare in favour of admissibility, rather than of non-admissibility. In other words, admissibility is the rule and exclusion is the exception.

3546. Then there is an exclusion of certain facts which need not be proved that is those covered by Section 56 to 58. Section 57 specifically enables the Court to resort to appropriate books or documents of reference where the matters are of public hostory, literature, science or art.

3547. Section 58, however, is of some importance in this matter since the question of admission by the parties in different ways i.e. pleadings, the evidences produced, having somehow connection with the property in dispute in general have been raised by all the parties at one or the other occasion. Section 58 says:

> "58. Facts admitted need not be proved.- No fact need to be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings:
> Provided that the Court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission."

www.vadaprativada.com

3548. Admissions under Section 58 can be classified into two: (a) Judicial admissions; and (b) Extra-judicial. Judicial admissions are formal admissions made by a party during the proceedings of the case while extra-judicial admissions are informal admissions not appearing on the record of the case. Judicial admissions are binding on the party since they constitute a waiver of proof. They can be made the foundation of the rights of the parties.

3549. Extra-judicial or informal admissions are also binding on the party against whom they are set up. Where they operate as, or have the effect of estoppel, in that case they are fully binding and constitute foundation of the rights of the parties otherwise they are binding partially and not fully, as observed by Privy Council in Chandra Vs Narpat Singh 1906 (29) All 184 (PC).

3550. An issue arises when a material preposition of fact or law is affirmed by one party and denied by the other. A Court has to try the questions at which the parties are at issue, and not those where they are agreed. Admissions made deliberately for the purpose of the suit, whether in the pleading or by agreement, will act as an estoppel to the admission of any evidence contradicting them.

3551. Section 59 provides as to when a fact may be proved by oral evidence and says that all facts, except the contents of documents or electronic records, may be proved by oral evidence. Section 60 says that oral evidence must be direct and reads as under:

> "60. Oral evidence must be direct.- Oral evidence must, in all cases whatever, be direct; that is to say-
> If it refers to a fact which could be seen, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he saw it;
>
> If it refers to a fact which could be heard, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he heard it;
> If it refers to a fact which could be perceived by any other sense or in any other manner, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he perceived it by that sense or in that manner;

www.vadaprativada.com

If it refers to an opinion or to the grounds on which that opinion is held, it must be the evidence of the person who holds that opinion on those grounds;

Provided that the opinions of experts expressed in any treatise commonly offered for sale, and the grounds on which such opinions are held, may be proved by the production of such treatises if the author is dead or cannot be found, or had become incapable of giving evidence, or cannot be called as a witness without an amount of delay or expense which the Court regards as unreasonable:

Provided also that, if oral evidence refers to the existence or condition of any material thing other than a document, the Court may, if it thinks fit, require the production of such material thing for its inspection."

3552. A question has repeatedly been raised in this matter in respect to certain documents, which were marked exhibit long back before Civil Judge. The normal system of marking of exhibit of a document is, when it is proved by witness or on admission of the other parties it is so granted. However, marking of document as exhibit would only means that the existence of document or genuineness thereof is admitted or proved and after marking it, no further proof is required for the purpose of its existence or genuineness.

3553. In Saddiq Ali Vs. State 1981 CrLJ 379 a Full Bench of this Court observed when the genuineness of a document is admitted, the contents also stand admitted and need not be proved by further evidence.

3554. In Purushotama Reddiar Vs. S Perumal AIR 1972 SC 608 it was held that the contents of a document admitted in evidence without objection may not be conclusive evidence but all the same the contents are also admitted by such admission.

3555. But one must make a distinction that the contents stand admitted does not mean the truth of the facts contained in the document or denoted by those contents also stand admitted. That is a totally different aspect. The party admitting a document does not accept the truth of the contents and is free to challenge the contents by cross-examination or otherwise.

3556. The Apex Court in Sait Tarajee Khimchand Vs. Yelamarti Satyam AIR 1971 SC 1865 also observed that mere marking of an exhibit does not dispense with the proof of the truth of the contents of the document and it is always open to the opposite parties to impeach the document and the contents thereof in all other possible manner (See also Sailendra Kishore Vs. Harekrishna AIR 1978 Orissa 125).

3557. These provisions and some other of the Evidence Act may apply where a fact may be proved in the manner as permitted in the Evidence Act by oral evidence or by available document. But where a fact in dispute relates to events of history and science of hundreds and thousands years ago, availability of evidence is apparently difficult. The present one is such matter where this situation exists. The parties have produced a lots of witnesses to prove the facts one or the other way but most of such witnesses of fact, we find, their evidence inadmissible in view of the above provisions on the historical facts in issue.

3558. Basically, a witness is to be examined for what he has seen or directly heard in relation to a fact in issue or relevant fact. Formation of opinion on the set of the facts placed is within the exclusive domain and prerogative of the Court. Generally opinions and beliefs of third persons are inadmissible in evidence. However, there may be certain issues where the Court may feel necessity of expert opinion. These are outside the legal and judicial fields. A Judge is not supposed to possess the expert knowledge in such fields. Probably, it is for this reason that the law of evidence provides for expert opinion, to be adduced as evidence, subject to certain conditions prescribed in the Act. It is Section 45 which renders the opinion of such experts as relevant fact. An experts opinion, in any case, constitutes material for the Court to arrive at a proper conclusion.

3559. Section 45 refers to certain specified fields, i.e., foreign law, science, art, identify of handwriting and finger impressions. A bare reading thereof gives an impression that it is confined to certain fields mentioned therein. Initially the terms like Foreign Law, Science etc. were read very strictly. A question as to identification of typewriting whether by a particular typewriter or not would be included within the format of Section 45 came to be considered initially in Hanumant Vs. State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1952 SC 343 and the Court held that it would not be included. The correctness of the above judgment came to be considered before a Constitution Bench in State Vs. S.J. Choudhary AIR 1996 SC 1491, where the Court considered the meaning of the word 'science' in Section 45 of the Evidence Act and overruled its earlier decision in Hanumant Vs. State of Madhya Pradesh (supra) observing:

> "The plain meaning of Section 45 is that the Court in order to form an opinion upon a point of foreign law, or of science, or art, or as to identity of handwriting, or finger

impressions can treat the opinion upon that point of person specially skilled in such foreign law, science or art, or in questions as to identity of handwriting, or finger impressions as relevant facts. In other words, the opinion of persons specially skilled in such foreign law, science, or art, or questions as to the identity of handwriting or finger impression, called experts therein, are relevant facts. The opinion of such experts is admissible in evidence as relevant facts by virtue of Section 45 of the Evidence Act.

6. In our opinion, irrespective of the view taken on the question of meaning of the word 'handwriting' in Section 45 to include typewriting, the word 'science', occurring independently and in addition to the word 'handwriting' in Section 45, is sufficient to indicate that the opinion of a person specially skilled in the use of typewriters and having the scientific knowledge of typewriters would be an expert in this science; and his opinion about the identity of typewriting for the purpose of identifying the particular typewriter on which the writing is typed is a relevant fact under Section 45 of the Evidence Act. It is obvious that the Indian Evidence Act when enacted originally in 1872 did not specifically mention typewriting in addition to handwriting because typewriters were then practically unknown. However, the expression' science, or art' in Section 45 in addition to the expressions 'foreign law' and 'handwriting' used in the Section as originally enacted, and the expression 'finger impressions' inserted in 1899 is sufficient to indicate that the expression 'science, or art' therein is of wide import. This expression 'science, or art'

cannot, therefore, have a narrow meaning in Section 45 and each of the words 'science' and 'art' has to be construed widely to include within its ambit the opinion of an expert in each branch of these subjects, whenever the Court has to form an opinion upon a point relating to any aspect of science or art.

7. The meaning of the word 'science' as understood ordinarily with reference to its dictionary meaning must be attributed to the word as used in Section 45 of the Indian Evidence Act. Some of the meanings given in the dictionaries are :

The Oxford Encyclopedic English Dictionary :

"Science.....a systematic and formulated knowledge, esp. of a specified type or on a specified subject (political science). b. the pursuit or principles of this....."

www.vadaprativada.com

The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, Vol. 2.,:

"Science...2a Knowledge acquired by study; acquaintance with or mastery of a department of learning... 3a. A particular branch of knowledge or study; a recognized department of learning;..."

Collins Dictionary of the English Language:

"Science n. 1 the systematic study of the nature and behavior of the material and physical universe, based on observation, experiment, and measurement, and the formulation of laws to describe these facts in general terms. 2. the knowledge so obtained or the practice of obtaining it. 3. any particular branch of this knowledge: the pure and applied sciences. 4. any body of knowledge

organized in a systematic manner. 5. skill or technique..."

It is clear from the meaning of the word 'science' that the skill or technique of the study of the peculiar features of a typewriter and the comparison of the disputed typewriting with the admitted typewriting on a particular typewriter to determine whether the disputed typewriting was done on the same typewriter is based on a scientific study of the two typewritings with reference to the peculiarities therein; and the opinion formed by an expert is based on recognized principles regulating the scientific study. The opinion so formed by a person having the requisite special skill in the subject is, therefore, the opinion of an expert in that branch of the science. Such an opinion is the opinion of an expert in a branch of science which is admissible in evidence under Section 45 of the Indian Evidence Act.

8. There cannot be any doubt that the opinion of an expert in typewriting about the questioned typed document being typed on a particular typewriter is based on a scientific study of the typewriting with reference to the significant peculiar features of a particular typewriter and the ultimate opinion of the expert is based on scientific grounds. The opinion of a typewriter expert is an opinion of a person specially skilled in that branch of the science with reference to which the Court has to form an opinion on the point involved for decision in the case. In our opinion, on a plain construction of Section 45 giving to the word 'science' used therein its natural meaning, this conclusion is inevitable; and for supporting that conclusion, it is not necessary to rely on the further reason that the word 'handwriting' in Section 45 would also include typewriting."

3560. In United States Shipping Board Vs. The Ship "St. Albans" AIR 1931 PC 189 with respect to opinion of experts, the Privy Council said :

"The extent to which the opinions or conclusions of skilled persons are receivable by way of proof in point of fact has not been seriously in doubt from the time when, in 1782, in Folkes v. Chadd (1782) 3 Dougl, 157, Lord Mansfield stated the grounds on which the evidence of Smeaton, the famous constructive engineer, was to be admitted upon a disputed question of obstruction to a harbour:

"the opinion of scientific men upon proven facts may be given by men of science within their own science."

Another Chief Justice, Lord Russell of Killowen, explained the rule in a modern case of Reg. v. Silverlock (1894) 2 Q.B. 766=63 L.J.M.C. 233=10 R. 431= 72 L.T. 298=43 W.R. 14=18 Cox. C.C. 104=58 J.P. 788. The witness must have made a special study of the subject or acquired a special experience therein. "The question is, "Lord Russell said: "Is he peritus: is he skilled; has he adequate knowledge?"

3561. In Amar Nath Vs. Mrs. Amar Nath AIR (35) 1948 Lahore 126 a Special Bench of the Lahore High Court observed:

"What is admissible is evidence on the nature of this marriage ceremony, on the intention of the parties in going through the ceremony, and on the question of custom in

variance of the general law, if such a custom is alleged. Evidence is not admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the principles of the ordinary Hindu Law of marriage*; that is purely a point of law which it is for the Court to decide. In 21 Lah. 493 their Lordships of the Privy Council* deprecated the practice of obtaining the opinion of experts for ascertaining the principles of Hindu or Muslim law. Their Lordships observed on page 503:

"... Hindu or Muslim law were to depend on the evidence given in a particular case. ....The system 'expert advisers' (muftis, and maulvis or in the case of Hindu law pandits) had its day but has long been abandoned, though the opinions given by such advisers may still be cited from the reports. Custom, in variance of the general law, is matter of evidence but not the law itself."

In this judgment their Lordships expressly approved the observations of Sulaiman J. in Aziz Bano Vs. Mahomed Ibrahim Hussain 47 ALL. 823 on page 835. In holding that the so called expert evidence of a witness in regard to the Shia law on marriage was not admissible under the Indian Evidence Act, the learned Judge observed :

"The Shia law on marriage is the law of the land and is in force in British India. ..... It is the duty of Courts themselves to interpret the law of the land and apply it and not to depend on the opinion of witnesses however learned they may be."

These observations would apply equally to the interpretation of the Hindu Law of Marriage."

3562. In Mosque known as Masjid Shahid Ganj Vs.

www.vadaprativada.com

Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, Amritsar, 1940 PC 116 Privy Council also took the same view and condemned the practice of obtaining opinion of so called religious experts in the matter of principles of Hindu or Muslim Law.

3563. In Forest Range Officer & others Vs. P. Mohammed Ali & others AIR 1994 SC 120, it was observed :

> "The expert opinion is only an opinion evidence on either side and does not aid us in interpretation."

3564. The caution, the Court must exercise while considering opinion rendered by an expert is expressed in Murarilal Vs. State of M.P. AIR 1980 SC 531, where the Court held:

> "But, the hazard in accepting the opinion of any expert, handwriting expert or any other kind of expert, is not because experts, in general, are unreliable witnesses- the quality of credibility or incredibility being one which an expert shares with all other witnesses-, but because all human judgment is fallible and an expert may go wrong because of some defect of observation, some error of premises or honest mistake of conclusion. The more developed and the more perfect a science, the less the chance of an incorrect opinion and the converse if the science is less developed and imperfect. The science of identification of finger-prints has attained near perfection and the risk of an incorrect opinion is practically non-existent. On the other hand, the science of identification of handwriting is not nearly so perfect and the risk is, therefore, higher. An expert deposes and not decides. His duty is to furnish the judge with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of his conclusion, so as to enable the judge to form his own independent judgment by the application of these criteria to the facts proved in evidence'." (Para 4)

"Reasons for the opinion must be carefully probed and examined. ... In cases where the reasons for the opinion are convincing and there is no reliable evidence throwing a doubt, the uncorroborated testimony of an handwriting expert may be accepted. ..." (Para 11)

"Evidence of experts after all is opinion evidence. The opinion is to be supported by reasons. The Court has to evaluate the same like any other evidence. The reasons in support of the opinion, if convincing, make the opinion acceptable. There is no place for ipse dixit of the expert. It is for the court to judge whether the opinion has been correctly reached on the data available and for the reasons stated."

3566. Hon'ble Subba Rao (C.J.) (as His Lordship then was) in Guntaka Hussenaiah Vs. Busetti Yerraiah AIR 1954 Andhra 39 said :

"The expert's evidence is only a piece of evidence. A Judge of fact will have to consider that evidence along with the other pieces of evidence. Which is the main evidence and which is the corroborative one depends upon the facts of each case."

3567. In Magan Bihari Lal Vs. State of Punjab AIR 1977

www.vadaprativada.com

SC 1091, the Court held that it is now well settled that expert opinion must always be received with great caution and perhaps none so with more caution than the opinion of a handwriting expert. This type of evidence, being opinion evidence, is by its very nature, weak and infirm.

3568. A Single Judge of this Court also expressed the same opinion in Saqlain Ahmad Vs. Emperor AIR 1936 Alld. 165 observing :

> "The value of the expert evidence depends largely on the cogency of the reasons on which it is based. In general it cannot be the basis of conviction unless it is corroborated by other evidence."

3569. In Lalta Prasad Vs. Emperor 5 IC 355, the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh observed :

> "Expert testimony derived from comparison of handwriting is no doubt very valuable as evidence corroborating the direct evidence if any upon the point, but it is only in rare cases that it can take its place.

3570. It would be prudent to quote the following passage from Taylor's Law of Evidence, page 1344, para 1877 about the admissibility of evidence of experts :

> "Still as experts usually come with a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, little weight will in general be attached to the evidence which they give, unless it be obviously based on sensible reasoning."

3571. In Mt. Titli Vs. Alfred Robert Jones AIR 1934 All. 273, it was observed:

> "The opinion of an expert by itself may be relevant but would carry little weight with a Court unless it is supported by a clear statement of what he noticed and on what he based his opinion. The expert should, if he expects his opinion to be accepted, put before the Court all the materials which induced him to come to his conclusion, so that the Court, although not expert, may form its own judgment on those materials. ... The mere mention that certain kind of tests knows as Binet and Simon tests were applied and certain results were obtained, might be relevant as piece of evidence but would not be conclusive."

3572. In Palaniswamy Vaiyapuri Vs. State AIR 1968 Bombay 127, a Division Bench of Bombay High Court in para 11 of the judgment said :

"The opinion of an expert must be supported by reasons and it is the reasons and not ipse dixit which is of importance in assessing the merit of the opinion."

3573. In Sita Nath Basak Vs. Mohini Mohan Singh AIR 1924 Cal. 595, a Division Bench of Calcutta High Court observed that in the matter of infringement of copyright, the Court should be reluctant to sit as an expert to decide the question of infringement of copyright and the proper course, in ordinary circumstances, is to get the opinion of experts. This was explained in Government of West Bengal Vs. Nitya Gopal Basak & others 1985 CRI.L.J. 202 by a learned Single Judge of Calcutta High Court that the above view was expressed primarily on the ground that the Court would have to take great pains and would have to waste its valuable time to ascertain how far the piracy extended and it was desirable therefore to seek opinion of expert to compare the works and to ascertain the details to avoid excessive expenditure of time and labour. It was also pointed out that such a course was also necessary as the Court might not be conversant with the alphabets of the book.

3574. In the context of opinion of handwriting expert, in Fakhruddin Vs. State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1967 SC 1326, the Court held that the opinion of handwriting expert though is relevant in view of Section 45 of the Evidence Act, but that too is not conclusive. Reliance was placed on earlier decisions in Ram Chandra Vs. State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1957 SC 381 (at page 388) and Ishwari Prasad Misra Vs. Mohammad Isa AIR 1963 SC 1728 where it was observed that expert evidence as to handwriting is an opinion evidence and it can rarely, if ever, take the place of substantive evidence. It cannot be conclusive because it is after all opinion evidence. In para 11 of the judgment in Fakhruddin (supra), the Apex Court further observed that where an expert's opinion is given, the Court must see for itself and with the assistance of the expert come to its own conclusion whether it can safely be held that the two writings are by the same person. This is not to say that the Court must play the role of an expert but to say that the Court may accept the fact proved only when it has satisfied itself on its own observation that it is safe to accept the opinion whether of the expert or other witness.

3575. In re B. Venkata Row (1913) 36 Mad. 159 a quotation from Dr. Lawson's work on the "Law of Expert and Opinion Evidence" was quoted, which reads as under :

> "The evidence of the genuineness of the signature based upon the comparison of handwriting and of the opinion of experts is entitled to proper consideration and weight. It must be confessed however that it is of the lowest order of

evidence or of the most unsatisfactory character. We believe that in this opinion experienced laymen unite with the members of the legal profession. Of all kinds of evidence admitted in a Court this is the most unsatisfactory. It is so weak and decrepit as scarcely to deserve a place in our system of jurisprudence."

3576. This was followed in Indar Datt Vs. Emperor AIR 1931 Lahore 408. A Similar observation was made by Division Bench of this Court in Srikant Vs. King Emperor (1905) 2 ALJ 444 and Kali Charan Mukerji Vs. Emperor (1909) 9 Cr.L.J. 498.

3577. In Sudhindra Nath Vs. The King AIR (39) 1952 Cal. 422, it was observed :

"We are now left with the evidence of identification by the hand-writing Expert. With regard to this class of evidence, it is a rule of law that it is extremely unsafe to base a conviction upon the opinion of hand-writing experts. Without substantial corroboration; because it is well known that a comparison of hand-writing as a mode of proof is always hazardous & inconclusive, unless it is corroborated by other evidence*."*

www.vadaprativada.com

3578. In the context of a post mortem report, in State of Haryana Vs. Ram Singh (2002) 2 SCC 426, the Court said that the post mortem report though by itself is not a substantive piece of evidence, but can by no means be ascribed to be insignificant provided it is corroborated by other evidence.

3579. In Perumal Mudaliar Vs. South Indian Railway Company Ltd. AIR 1937 Mad. 407 the manner of recording opinion of expert was considered and a Single Judge (Hon'ble

www.vadaprativada.com

Beasley, C.J.) said :

> "The evidence of experts must be given in the ordinary way. Subject to certain exceptions- those exceptions being amongst others, the certificates of the Imperial Serologist touching the matter of bloodstains and of the Chemical Examiner, which are made admissible in evidence by themselves-it is quite obvious that the opinion of an expert must be given orally and that a report merely or certificate by him cannot possible be evidence. Unless he goes into the witness box and gives oral evidence, there can be no cross examination of the expert at all."

3580. Similarly, another Single Judge in Coral Indira Gonsalves Vs. Joseph Prabhakar Iswariah AIR 1953 Mad. 858 said :

> "Certificates, like these, do not prove themselves. They must be 'strictly proved' by the doctor who issues them. He has to state what tests he carried out to arrive at his conclusion and must stand cross-examination and convince the Court that his conclusion about the potency is correct."

3581. In reference to an Excise Inspector as to whether he may be considered as expert within the meaning of Section 45 of the Evidence Act, the Apex Court in Sri Chand Batra Vs. State of U.P. AIR 1974 SC 639 said :

> "Another question before us is whether the Excise Inspector, whose evidence was under consideration, had sufficient knowledge to be deemed to be an expert within the meaning of Section 45 of the Evidence Act so that the tests adopted by him, together with all the attendant circumstances, could establish beyond doubt that the appellant was in possession of illicit liquor. We think that these are also essentially questions of fact."

"We find that the Excise Inspector who had deposed, at the very outset of his evidence, that he had put in 21 years service as Excise Inspector and had tested lacs of samples of liquor and illicit liquor. As already pointed out, the competence of C.D. Misra to test the composition and strength of the liquid under consideration was not questioned at all. We, therefore, think that this particular Excise Inspector could be treated as an expert within the meaning of Section 45 of the Evidence Act."

3582. In Haji Mohammad Ekramul Haq Vs. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 488 the Court held that an opinion of expert unsupported by any reason is not to be relied on.

3583. In The Forest Range Officer and others Vs. P. Mohammed Ali and others, AIR 1994 SC 120 the Court said:

"The expert opinion is only an opinion evidence on either side and does not aid us in interpretation." (para 8)

3584. Who an expert witness would be, has been considered in State of Himachal Pradesh Vs. Jai Lal and others, AIR 1999 SC 3318 and it says:

"An expert witness, is one who has made the subject upon which he speaks a matter of particular study, practice; or observations; and the must have a special knowledge of the subject." (para 13)

"Therefore, in order to bring the evidence of a witness as that of an expert it has to be shown that he has made a special study of the subject or acquired a special experience therein or in other words that he is skilled and

has adequate knowledge of the subject." (para 17)

"18. An expert is not a witness of fact. His evidence is really of an advisory character. The duty of an expert witness is to furnish the Judge with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of the conclusions so as to enable the judge to form his independent judgment by the application of this criteria to the facts proved by the evidence of the case. The scientific opinion evidence, if intelligible, convincing and tested becomes a factor and often an important factor for consideration along with the other evidence of the case. The credibility of such a witness depends on the reasons stated in support of his conclusions and the data and materials furnished which form the basis of his conclusions."

"19. The report submitted by an expert does not go in evidence automatically. He is to be examined as a witness in Court and has to face cross-examination."

3585. The relevance and importance of expert's evidence in the present dispute has also been noticed by the Apex Court in Dr. M. Ismail Faruqui (supra) and in para 154 it says:

"Thirdly, there is the aspect of evidence in relation to the question referred. It is not our suggestion that a court of law is not competent to decide such a question. It can be done if expert evidence of archaeologists and historians is led, and is tested in cross-examination. . . . . The Court being ill-equipped to examine and evaluate such material, it would have to appoint experts in the field to do so, and their evaluation would go unchallenged. Apart from the inherent inadvisability of rendering a judicial opinion on such evaluation, the opinion would be liable to the criticism of one or both sides that it was rendered without hearing them or their evidence. . . . ."

3586. Expert evidence thus is only a piece of evidence and external evidence. It has to be considered along with other pieces of evidence. Which would be the main evidence and which is the corroborative one depends upon the facts of each case. An expert's opinion is admissible to furnish the Court a scientific opinion which is likely to be outside the experience and knowledge of a Judge. This kind of testimony, however, has been considered to be of very weak nature and expert is usually required to speak, not to facts, but to opinions. It is quite often surprising to see with what facility, and to what extent, their views would be made to correspond with the wishes and interests of the parties who call them. They do not, indeed, wilfully misrepresent what they think, but their judgment becomes so warped by regarding the subject in one point of view, that, when conscientiously deposed, they are incapable of expressing a candid opinion.

3587. In Ramesh Chandra Agrawal Vs. Regency Hospital Ltd. & Ors. JT 2009 (12) SC 377 Apex Court considered the issue pertaining to expert opinion in a bit detail. In para 11, the Court has said:

"The law of evidence is designed to ensure that the court considers only that evidence which will enable it to reach a reliable conclusion. The first and foremost requrement for an expert evidence to be admissible is that it is necessary to hear the expert evidence. The test is that the matter is outside the knowledge and ecperience of the lay person. ...

The scientific question involved is assumed to be not with the court's knowledge. Thus cases where the science involved, is highly specialized and perhaps even esoteric, the central role of expert cannot be disputed. The other requirements for the admissibility of expert evidence are:

i. that the expert must be within a recognized field of expertise

ii. that the evidence must be based on reliable principles, and

3588. The Court has also said that in order to bring the evidence of a witness as that of an expert it has to be shown that he has made a special study on the subject or acquired a special experience therein or in other words that he is skilled and has adequate knowledge on the subject. Referring to this Court's decision in Titli Vs. Jones (Supra) the Court said that it is not the province of the expert to act as Judge or Jury. The real function of the expert is to put before the Court all the materials, together with reasons which induce to come to the conclusion, so that the court, although not an expert, may form its own judgment by its own observation of those materials. Again in para 15 of the judgment in Ramesh Chandra Agrawal (Supra), the Court said:

"An expert is not a witness of fact and his evidence is really of an advisory character. The duty of an expert witness is to furnish the Judge with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of the conclusions so as to enable the Judge to form his independent judgment by the application of these criteria to the facts proved by the evidence of the case. The scientific opinion evidence, if intelligible, convincing and tested becomes a factor and often an important factor for consideration along with other evidence of the case. The credibility of such a witness depends on the reasons stated in support of his conclusions and the data and material furnished which form the basis of his conclusions. (See Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Dr. Sukumar Mukherjee and Ors.) Criminal Appeal Nos. 1191-1194 of 2005 alongwith Civil Appeal No. 1727 of 2007, decided on 7.8.2009."

3589. It also referred to an earlier decision in The State (Delhi Administration) Vs. Pali Ram AIR 1979 SC 14 where the Court said "No expert would claim today that he could be absolutely sure that his opinion was correct, expert depends to a great extent upon the materials as put before him and the nature of question put to him" and further in para 17 of the judgment in Ramesh Chandra Agrawal (supra) the Apex Court said:

"In the Article "Relevancy of Expert's Opinion" it has been opined that the value of expert opinion rest on the facts on which it is based and his competency for forming a reliable opinion. The evidentiary value of the opinion of expert depends on the facts upon which it is based and also the validity of the process by which the conclusion is reached. Thus the idea that is proposed in its crux means that the importance of an opinion is decided on the basis of the credibility of the expert and the relevant facts supporting the opinion so that its accuracy can be cross checked. Therefore, the emphasis has been on the data on basis of which opinion is formed. The same is clear from following inference: Mere assertion without mentioning the data or basis is not evidence, even if it comes form expert. Where the experts give no real data in support of their opinion, the evidence even though admissible, may be excluded from consideration as affording no assistance in arriving at the correct value."

3590. Musheer Khan @ Badshah Khan & Anr. Vs. State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 2010 SC 762 is a very recent judgment where the Apex Court has said "under the Evidence Act the word 'admissibility' has very rarely been used. The emphasis is on relevant facts. In a way relevancy and admissibility have been virtually equated under the Indian Evidence Act." Further referring to the opinion of finger print expert in that matter it says that it is well known that the evidence of finger print expert falls under the category of expert evidence under Section 45 but it is also clear that this evidence of finger print expert is not substantive evidence. Such evidence can only be used to corroborate some items of substantive evidence which are otherwise on record.

3591. Lord Campbell in Tracy Perrage Case (1843) 10 CI & F 154 said that, being zealous partisans, their belief becomes synonymous with faith as defined by the Apostle, and it too often is but "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen". He also said that, skilled witnesses come with such a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, that hardly any weight may be given to their evidence.

3592. Miller J in Middllings P Co. Vs. Christian, 4 Dillon 448 said, "By own experienced both in the local courts and in the Supreme Court of the United States is, that whenever the matter in contest involves an immense sum in value, and when the question turns mainly upon opinions of experts, there is no difficulty in introducing any amount of them on either side."

3593. This is what we have found here also. Both sides have produced well qualified and highly trained Historians and others giving diametrically opposite opinion. It would be useful to quote from Sarkar's Law of Evidence, 16th Edition, 2007 Vol. 1, page 1052:

> "The infirmity of expert evidence consists in this that it is mostly matters of opinion and is based on facts detailed by others or assumed facts or opinion against opinion and experts are selected by parties by ascertaining previously that they will give an opinion favourable to the party calling them. Expert evidence is however, of value in cases where the courts have to deal with matters beyond the range of common knowledge and they could not get along without it, eg in matters of scientific knowledge or when the facts have come within the personal observation of experts."

3594. The learned author on page 1053 (supra) also said "An expert is fallible like all other witnesses and the real value of his evidence consists in the logical inferences which he draws from what he has himself observed, not from what he merely surmises or has been told by others. Therefore in cross-examining him, it is advisable to get at the grounds on which he bases his opinion. There is special difficulty in dealing with the evidence of expert witnesses. Such evidence must always be received with caution; they are two often partisans- that is, they are reluctant to speak quite the whole truth, if the whole truth will tell against the party who had paid them to give evidence. At the same time such witnesses are in a position of advantage; for they have had that special training and experience which the judge and jury are without; and the absence of which renders necessary the presence of such witness. Expert witnesses are far too prone to take upon themselves the duty of deciding the questions in issue in the action, instead of confining themselves to stating fairly and clearly their real opinion on the matter.

3595. In Gulzar Ali Vs. Sate of Himachal Pradesh 1998 (2) SCC 192 the Apex Court observed that the observation of the High Court that there is a natural tendency on the part of an expert witness to support the view of the party who called him, could not be downgraded. Many so-called experts have been shown to be remunerated witnesses making themselves available on hire to pledge their oath in favour of the party paying them.

3596. In Hari Singh Vs. Lachmi, 59 IC 220 the Court observed that the evidence of skilled witness, howsoever eminent, as to what he thinks may, or may not have taken place under a particular combination of circumstances, howsoever confidently he may speak, is ordinarily a matter of mere opinion. Human judgment is fallible. Human knowledge is limited and imperfect. An expert witness howsoever impartial he may wish to be, is likely to be unconsciously prejudiced in favour of the side which calls him. The mere fact of opposition on the part of the other side is apt to create a spirit of partisanship and rivalry, so that an expert witness is unconsciously impelled to support the view taken by his own side. Besides it must be remembered that an expert is often called by one side simply and solely because it has been ascertained that he holds views favourable to its interests.

3597. We have given just in brief some of the principles, well settled, which may guide a Court while considering opinion of an expert. We have to weigh the experts' opinion made available to us in the matter in dispute though in two directions and will try to find out the most creditworthy and reliable opinion. In the light of the above, we proceed to consider the opinion of the experts, who have made their deposition as historians. On behalf of the pro-mosque parties i.e. Muslims, PW 13-Dr. Suresh Chandra Mishra, PW-15 Dr. Sushil Srivastava, PW-18 Prof. Suvira Jaiswal, PW 20 Prof. Shirin Musvi have been examined as Experts (Historians); PW 16-Prof. Suraj Bhan, PW 24 Prof. D Mandal, PW-27 Prof. Shereen F. Ratnagar, PW-28 Dr. Sita Ram Roy, PW 29 Dr. Jaya Menon, PW 30 Prof. R.C. Thakran, PW 31 Dr. Ashok Dutta, PW 32 Dr. Supriya Varma and DW 6/1-2 Mohd. Abid have been examined as Experts (Archaeologists). On the other hand pro-temple parties i.e. Hindus have examined, OPW-9 Dr. Thakur Prasad Varma, OPW 11 Dr. Satish Chandra Mittal, DW-13/1-3 Dr. Bishan Bahadur as Expert (Historians); OPW 10 Dr. K.V.Ramesh and OPW 15 Dr. M.N.Katti as Experts (Epigraphist); OPW 3 Dr. S.P. Gupta, OPW-17 Dr. R. Nagaswami, OPW-18 Arun Kumar, OPW 19 R.D.Trivedi and DW 20/5 Jayanti Prasad Srivastava as Experts (Archaeologist). The relevant statements of the Expert Historians of the two sides need be considered at this stage. However, there are two witnesses namely PW-16 and PW-24 who initially appeared as

Historian Archaeologist.

3598. PW 13, Suresh Chandra Mishra, has deposed his opinion that as per in-depth study which he has made about the dispute of Babari Mosque, he has come to know that this Mosque was constructed by Mir Baqi and no demolition was made before its construction. No evidence he could find suggesting existence of any temple at the disputed site. Appointed as a Reader in Saraswati Co-educational College affiliated with Delhi University in August 1973, he did his Ph.D. in 1985 from the same University, while in service. He claimed his specialization in Ancient History:

''मेरा विशिष्टीकरण (महारथ) प्राचीन इतिहास पर है।'' (पेज 1)

"My specialization is in Ancient History." (ETC)

3599. An expert witness is like any other witness and has to be tested in the same manner. We find that the learned counsels of various defendants cross examined PW 13 very elaborately and his entire statement is running in 288 pages. All kinds of questions have been asked from him to test his veracity, competence, expertise etc. He claims to have visited disputed site in 1964 and on pages 33 said:

''विवादित स्थल और विवादित भवन की सम्बन्ध में मेरी गहन जिज्ञासा 1989–90 में जागृत हुई। लेकिन मुझे विवाद का ज्ञान तो पहले ही से था। इस विवाद का ज्ञान मुझे लगभग 1968 के आसपास हुआ था।''

"My curiosity about the disputed site and the disputed building cropped in 1989-90 but I had knowledge of the dispute from before. I came to have knowledge of this dispute in and around 1968." (ETC)

3600. On page 37, he says that after deep study, he could

ascertain the place of birth of Lord Rama:

''मुझे पता लग चुका है कि उनका जन्म स्थान कहॉ है। यह स्थान अयोध्या ब्रह्मकुण्ड और ऋषि मोचन घाट के मध्य में पड़ता है। यह समस्त बयान और अपने निष्कर्ष मैंने अपने ग्रन्थों को पढ़कर सर्वेक्षण करके, खोजबीन करके, और पूछॅताछ करके दिये हैं।'' (पेज 37)

"I have learned where his birth-place is. This place lies between Ayodhya Brahma-kund and Rishi-Mochan ghat. I have given all this statement and my findings by going through books and by carrying out surveys, investigations and enquiries." (ETC)

3601. The material which he studied to form the said opinion has been detailed on page 38:

''इस संबंध में मूल ग्रन्थ बाल्मीकी रामायण, महाभारत, वह अन्य सेकेन्डरी वर्क्स का अध्ययन किया। सेकेन्डरी वर्क्स में आर0जी0 भण्डारकर कृत हिस्टी आफ वैष्णजीम डा0 सुबीरा जैसवाल द्वारा लिखी किताब डवलपमेंट आफ वैषनव इन इण्डिया, ई0 बनर्जी द्वारा लिखित राम के बारे में लिखी किताब, राइट्यस आफ रामा जो आर0एल0 ब्राकिउटन द्वारा लिखी किताब, अगस्त्य संहिता, उत्तर तापनीयोपनिषद, अयोध्या महात्म के अन्य तीन संस्करण वृदांवन रिसर्च इन्सटीट्यूट से प्राप्त पाण्डुलिपि और बाडलीयन लाइब्रेरी लंदन, तथा रामनारायण दास के संस्करण जो अयोध्या में राममयीकरण चिन्हों के या स्थलों के क्रमिक संवर्धन को विषद रूप से स्पष्ट करते हैं का अध्ययन किया है। एक और बहुत आवश्यक किताब जो मैंने अयोध्या पर पढ़ी है वो ग्रोनिंगगेन विश्वविद्यालय (नीदरलैण्ड) के हांस बेकर द्वारा लिखित अयोध्या को भी पढ़ा है। यह बाद वाली पुस्तक 1990 से पहले प्रकाशन में आ गयी थी और बाकी की किताबें अलग अलग समय में प्रकाशित हुई है।'' (पेज 38)

" In this respect, I studied the primary treatises like Valmiki Ramayana and Mahabharata and also certain secondary works. In the secondary works, I have studied 'History of Vaishnavism' by R.G.Bhandarkar, 'Development of Vaishnavas in India' by Dr.Suvira Jaiswal, a book on

Rama by E. Banerjee 'Righteous of Rama' by R.L.Brokiuton, 'Agastya Samhita', 'Uttar Tapniyopnishad', other three editions of Ayodhya Mahatmya, manuscript received from the Vrindavan Research Institute, ... from Bodleiyan Library London and a memoir of Ram Narayan Das which vividly deals with the gradual growth of symbols or sites typical of Rama. Another very important book which I have studied on Ayodhya, is a book titled 'Ayodhya' authored by Hauns Bracker of Groningen University of Netherlands. The subsequent book had been published before 1990 and the rest of the books were published at different times." (E.T.C.)

3602. Following part of his statement, cross examination, in our view, would reflect on the reliability of the opinion of the aforesaid witness:

"बाबर मेरा चुनिंदा विषय था।" (पेज 54)

"Babur was my favourite subject" (ETC)

"विवादित ढांचे के बारे में मैंने मौके पर भी अध्ययन किया। इतिहासिक दृष्टि से मैंने सबसे बड़ी बात पाई कि इस ढॉचे की गुम्बद (डोम) उस पर अंकित फूल की पॅखुडियां, तिकोन, उसका सहन, बाहरी दीवाल पर बना हुआ सिंह (शेर) तथा मस्जिद के नीचे भाग में मुस्लिम गलेज्ड वेयर जो इस बात के प्रतीक थे कि वह मस्जिद है।" (पेज 70)

"I made study with regard to the disputed structure, even at the site. The most important thing from the historical point of view which I found, was a dome of this structure depicting flower-petals, a triangular shape, its courtyard, a lion carved out on the exterior wall, and the Muslim glazed ware in the base part of the masjid, which features were the symbols showing it (this structure) to a mosque." (E.T.C.)

''यह कहना भी गलत है कि मैंने उसमें यह गलत बयानी की हो कि जब मेरे माता–पिता इस भवन के अन्दर चले गये तो मैं बाहर खड़ा रह गया था। वैसे यह ठीक है कि सन् 66 और सन् 68 में भी इस विवादित परिसर के बाहरी मुख्य द्वार पर ताला बन्द था और कोई भी व्यक्ति अन्दर नहीं जा सकता था।'' (पेज 93)

"It is wrong to say that in the said testimony I have wrongly stated that when my parents went inside this building, I was left standing outside the building. However, it is true that even in 1966 and 1969 the main outdoor of this disputed premises was locked and none could go inside." (ETC)

''जब मैं अपने इस स्थल निरीक्षण पर 1990 में गया तो वहां जाने पर रोक–टोक थीं लेकिन उसके बावजूद भी मुझे लोगों ने वहां जाने दिया। मुझे अब महीना या मौसम याद नहीं है जब मैं स्थल निरीक्षण पर गया था। मैं मौके पर शाम के समय गया था। लेकिन निश्चित तौर पर समय नहीं बता सकता। मैं यह भी ठीक से नहीं कह सकता कि सूर्य छिपने से पहले गया था या सूर्य छिपने के बाद गया था। मैं यह नहीं कह सकता कि उस वक्त दर्शन करने का समय था या नहीं। उन बातों को 8 वर्ष हो चुके हैं। सड़क से परिसर के पूर्वी छोर पर जो सड़क आती है उससे मैं भीतर गया था। . . . . यह कहना गलत है कि 1990 में पूर्व की ओर से परिसर में अंदर जाने पर पूर्णरूप से रोक लगी हुई थी। मैं रोक के बावजूद भी इजाजत लेकर अंदर गया था। जो पुलिस वाले वहां बैठे थे मैंने उनसे यह इजाजत ले ली थी।'' (पेज 147)

"In 1990, when I went to this site for inspection, there was a bar on ingress to that place. But despite all that, people allowed me to go there. Mosque or Rama's Birth Place? Historians Report to the Indian Nation" dated 13th May 1991. This document has been heavily relied by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) in support of the submissions that neither the site in dispute was ever believed to be the birthplace of Lord Rama nor there existed any temple which was demolished to construct building in dispute. Its relevant extract is:

"Introduction

For the last two years a furious agitation has been organised in this country under the aegis of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad and its allies over what has come to be known as the Ram Janambhumi-Baburi Masjid Dispute. Precious lives have been lost, communal riots have broken out, and for the first time since independence the secular nature of our State has come under serious threat, all seemingly over the issue of what is to be done to a 16th-century structure at Ayodhya.

The Vishwa Hindu Parishad demands that this structure, a mosque built in 1528-29 known as the Baburi Masjid, stands on the very site where Lord Rama was born ("Ram Janambhumi" or "Ram Janamsthan"), and at which sacred spot there existed a Rama temple, which was destroyed in order to build the mosque. This historical wrong done to the Hindu community nearly 450 years ago is now sought to be set right, the mosque pulled down or shifted, and a new, magnificent Rama temple built on the same spot. The legalities of the dispute – the entire case is before the Allahabad High Court (Lucknow bench) – are to be brushed aside, in view of the higher verdict of History, which the VHP has already beclared to be in its favour.

The government of India, under circumstances that are well known, began negotiations [December 1990] with the VHP and the Baburi Masjid Action Committee (BMAC), with a view to examine the historical and legal merits of the case of both the parties. Thus the dispute over the facts of history were now to be decided by the litigants, with the government of India as an umpire, and not by any independent forum of historians: a very unhappy procedure. We therefore approached the Government of India to include impartial historians in the process of forming judgement on historical facts and to let us have access to such evidence, archaeological and textual, as has been presented to it or is in possession of Government organisations, such as the Archeological Survey of India. We regret to say that the Government of India's response to this was largely on of silence. The BMAC declared that it was ready to abide by the findings of a set of independent historians, but this position was not acceptable to the VHP.

However, in spite of these obstacles, we thought that national interest required an unbiased and impartial inquiry, so that people should be clear about what the historical facts are. We scrutinised most carefully the evidence submitted to Government by the VHP and BMAC, and collected historical material on our own. Two of us went to Ayodhya to examine and survey the site and the structure of the Baburi Masjid. We also examined archeological material from Professor A.K.Narian's excavations at Ayodhya, now preserved at the Banaras

Hindu University. To our regret, through no lack of trying on our part, material from B.B.Lal's excavations at Ayodhya was not made available for inspection for us; and we had to depend on published reports only.

Having undertaken this effort, we place in all humility the results of our enquiry before the nation. We will at least have the satisfaction that, within the limits of our capacity, we have done our duty.

The VHP's case rests on the following four major claims:

(1) The Hindus have always, and certainly over a long period before the construction of the Baburi Masjid, believed in there being a very sacred spot at Ayodhya, where Lord Rama was born.

(2) This spot was the very site where the Baburi Masjid now stands.

(3) A temple dedicated to Rama stood at this holy site long before the Baburi Masjid was built.

(4) The temple was pulled down to construct the Baburi Masjid at this spot.

We now proceed to examine these claims, largely in the order as they are listed above.

We have, first, to see what substance there is in claims (1) and (2), namely that Hindus have for a very long time believed in the sanctity of Ram Janamsthan at Ayodhya, and in its existence at the very site of the Baburi Masjid."

"No basis in Hindu scriptures

People will be surprised to find that the VHP has

been unable to cite any ancient Sanskrit text in support of its claim that there has been an ancient Hindu belief in Ram Janamsthan at Ayodhya. Surely if there were such a strong belief, there would have been numerous Vaishbavite texts exhorting worshippers to visit the spot. The absence of any such reference makes it very dubious that the belief in Rama Janamsthan is of such respectable antiquity as is being made out. It is even doubtful if it is earlier than the late 18th century, as we shall see here.

The only Sanskrit text the VHP experts have produced in support of claims (1) and (2) is the Skanda Purana. They refer to the Ayodhya-mahatmya, that is, the merits of visiting Ayodhya given in Skanda Purana. We have used the printed version of the Skanda Purana (Kashemarian edn., Bombay, 1910) and two other versions found in Manuscripts in Vrindavan Reswarch Institute, Vrindaban, and the Bodleian Library, Oxford. These texts are of recent origin and the insertion of interpolations in the Ayodhya mahatmya section of the printed Skanda Purana seems to have continued at least till the 18th century. The internal contents of the Skanda Purana including the mention of Vidyapati, who passed away in the first half of the 16th century, show that the core of this Purana itself was not compiled until earlier than the 16th century. Ayodhya-mahatmya given n the printed version has not been compiled by one hand. For example, the course of the description of the tirathas [pilgrimage] in general is interrupted and all of a sudden the glorification of Ayodhya starts. In the case of Ayodhya itself the virtues of visiting and bathing in the Sarayu river are not given at one place, but at two places; in between the contexts have nothing to do with the Sarayu. We also find that in the description of the trithas, Visishta replaces Agastya as the narrator, and then again the narration is taken over by Agastya. This shows obvious interpolation. The description of Janamsthan occurs in the last chapter of the Ayodhya-mahamtya (Verses 18-25), and is clearly a later addition. It is easier to make insertions at the end of texts.

In spite of these various inconsistencies, even if we accept the location of the birthplace of Rama as given in Ayodhya-mahatmya, it does not tally with the site of the Baburi Masjid. Two terms are used for the birthplace of Rama, Janamsthan and Janambhumi. Even if we take the two to be identical, the Ayodhya-mahatmya information about the location of the birthplace does not take us to the Baburi Masjid site. Both the Vrindaban and Bodleian versions of the Mahatmya mention the compass directions and distance from a few states. According to verses 21.24 the birthplace is located 500 dhanus (910 meters) westward of Laumash and 1009 dhanus (1835 meters) eastward of Vighneshvara. According to local Hindu belief Laumash or the place of Lomash is identical with the present Rinamochana Ghat. On this basis the Rama Janambhumi should be located somewhere west, in the vicinity of the Bhahmakunda close to the bed of the Sarayu. Further according to the Mahatmya Rinamochana Ghat, or the place of Lomash, lies 700 dhanus (1274 meters) northeast of Brahmakunda. Both the direction and the distance have been found to be approximately correct by us. It is further stated that the Janamsthana lies northeast of Vighnesh. According to local tradition the place of Vighnesh is marked by a pillar, which lies southwest of Rinamochana Ghat. This again excludes the Baburi Masjid site and places the birthplace somewhere between Rinamochana and Bharmakunda on the bank of the Saraya. Thus, according to Hindu belief as given in the Ayodhya Mahatmya of the Skanda Purana, the birth place of Rama cannot be located on the site where the Baburi Masjid stands. It is argued by experts of the VHP that the location of Rama Janambhumi is given on the basis of solar directions and cannot be determined through the use of campus. But even if we take solar directions into account the Janambhumi of the Skanda Purana cannot be located on the site of the Baburi Masjid.

The various versions of the Ayodhya-Mahatmya seem to have been prepared towards the end of the 18th century and the beginning of the 19th; even as late as that the birthplace was not considered to be important. It is significant that the Janamsthan is not mentioned even one in any itineracy of pilgrimage given in the Mahatmya.

The description of the tirthas in Ayodhya as given in the Ayodhya Mahatmya sow that the Svargadvara tirtha was far more important in the eyes of the compilers of the pilgrimage section than the Janambhumi. Svargadvara is believed to be the place where Rama left for heaven and is considered sacred because of that reason. The Skanda Purana speaks of two Svargadvara tirthas in Ayodhya.

Whatever might be its real location there is no doubt that in Hindu belief it was far more meritorious to visit this place than other local places of pilgrimage. The earliest mention of this tirtha appears in a Gahandavala inscription of the 11th century, which speaks of the land grant made by king at the confluence of Sarayu and Ghaghara. This grant speaks of the worship of Vasudeva at the confluence site but not of any temple (D.C.Sirkar, Select Inscriptions, Volume II,PP.276-77, lines 20-23). It appears that the sanctity attached to the place of Rama's death was of greater importance in earlier times. It is significant that the Ayodhya-Mahtmya of the printed version of the Skanda Purana devotes one hundred verses to the description of the Svargadvara which is made to identical with Gopratara thirtha (b.112-211) and gives only eight verses to the description of the Janamsthana (10.18-25).

No place Ayodhya in associated with Rama's birth either in the 11th century or even six centuries after. When a place is associated with his birth possibly in the late 18th century its location given in the various Mahatmyas does not tally with the present Baburi Masjid. It. Therefore, seems quite erroneous to hold that according to old Hindu belief the Rama Janambhumi temple was situated at the same site as is now occupied by the Baburi Masjid."

"Evidence in recorded History

The VHP has been unable to present any early textual evidence that Rama birth-place in Ayodhya was either spotted as such or recognised as a place. Its archiological evidence for the existing of a temple at the site of the Baburi Masjid is, to say the least week and dubious; in fact archaeology suggests proximity of a Muslim settlement to the mosque from the 13th century onwards.

What then, of the recorded evidence? What does this tell us about the VHP's claims of temple destruction at the hands of Babur's men?

Within the category of recorded historical evidence, the most primary source for the construction of the Baburi Masjid consists of the inscriptions in Persian that were put on the mosque, immediately upon its construction in A.D. 1528-29. These inscriptions were particularly published (with some inconsequential mistakes) in A.S. Beveridge's translation of Babur's memoirs as an appendix (Banurnama, London 1921, Vol. II, Appendix U, pp. Ixxvii-Ixxix), comprising six couplets only. But in actual fact, the original inscriptions consisted of as many as fourteen couplets, together with an invocation and the engraver's signature. The entire text has been retrieved and published in the Epigraphia Indica, Arabic & Persian Supplement, 1965, pp. 58-62, an authoritative publication of the Archaeological Survey of India.

The contemporaneity of inscriptions is shown by their text and date. Their accuracy is establised by the fact that Mir Baqi finds mention in Babur's memoirs as the governor of Awadh or Ayodhya at exactly this time (A.H. 935): see A.S. Beveridge;s trans., II, PP.684-85, also P.679. Even for the use of the world qalandar for Babur, we have the authority of his daughter Gulbadan Begum tha the sobriquet was popularly given to him (Humayun Nama, London 1904 P.12).

These fairly long inscriptions show that the construction of the Baburi Masjid was completed in 1528-29. But nowhere is any hint given in them that the edifice was built after destroying a temple or upon the site of a temple. If one accepts for the purposes of argument that there was a temple at the site, and the builder of the mosque (Mir Baqi) destroyed it to build a mosque, one has to answer why at all should all references to this fact should be omitted in the foundation inscriptions. Surely had Mir Baqi destroyed the temple, he would have deemed it a meritorious deed; and what would be more natural than that he should get this act recorded along with that of the building of the mosque to add to his religious reputation. That he did not get any such act recorded surely means that he in fact not destroyed any temple, and so found no reason to record something that had not happened.

Within fifty years or so of the construction of the Baburi Masjid, Tulsidas composed in 1575-76 his celebrated Ramcharitmanas, the most fervent exposition of the Ramayna story in Hindi. Is it possible to believe that Tulsidas would not have given vent to heartrending grief had the very birth site of his Lord been ravaged, its temple razed to the ground and a mosque erected at that place? Surely he could not but have known of the event, had the desecration and temple-destruction taken place in 1528-29, early in his life but long before the composition of his work. Knowing of it would be not have complained in his verses that fate (if anything else) was now preventing Rama's devotees from worshipping the very sacred seat of the Lord's birth? His silence can only mean that he knew of no such scandal; and, given his attachment to Rama and Ayodhya, this must then mean that no such event had infact taken place.

Tulsidas, on the contrary, suggests that it was not Ayodhya but Prayag that was to him the principal place of pilgrimage (tirath Raj); and so no tradition of the veneration of the any spot as that of Rama's birth at Ayodhya had yet taken shape.

In subsequent descriptions of Ayodhya of both the

16th and 17th centuries no indication occurs that the baburi Masjid, or, for that matter, any other mosque, was built at the birth-site of Rama. Abul Fazl in his A'in-i-Akbari, completed in A.D. 1598, includes Ayodhya among the important places of pilgrimage of India. He says that the sacred ground extends "forty kos to the east and twenty from north to south" and thus is not confined to the city itself. It mentions the Ramnavmi festival here (III, Tr. Jarrett, rev. Sarkar, Calcutta, 1948. p.335). The same tradition about the very large area of the holy city is given in his account of Ayodhya in the chapter on the process of Awadh: "In ancient times its populous site covered an extent of 148 kos in length and 36 in breadth, and it it esteemed one of the holiest places of antiquity". Abul Fazl goes on to say that Ayodhya "was the residence of Ramchandra, who in the Treta age combined in his own person both the spiritual supremacy and the kindly office" (II, Jarrett, rev. Sarkar, Calcutta, 1949, p. 182). Clearly, the tradition till then did not confine Rams's place of birth to the existing town of Ayodhya, let alone the site occupied by Baburi Masjid. Had such tradition existed, Abul Fazl would surely have mentioned it, because he does mentioned the tradition that two Jewish prophets lie buried at Ayodhya; "Near the city stand two considerable tombs of six seven yards respectively. The vulgar believe them to be the resting places of Seth and prophet Job, and extraordinary tales are related of them" (Ibid). It can not escape notice that there is not the remotest reference to Rama's birth-site, let alone to any mosque being built on it.

The same is found to be the case with William Finch's fairly extensive description of Ayodhya, which he visited during his stay in India during A.D. 1608-11. He says:

"Heere are also the ruines of Ranichand(s)[2] castle and houses, which the Indians acknowled(g)e for the great God, saying he took flesh upon him to see the tamasha of the world. In these ruines remayne certain Bramenes, who record the names of all such Indians as wash themselves in the river running thereby; which custome, they say, hath continued foure lackes of yeeres (which is three hundred ninetie before the worlds creation). Some two miles on the further side of the river is a cave of his with a narrow entrance, but so spacious and full of turnings within that a man may well loose himself there if he take not better heed; where it is thought his ashes were buried. Hither resort many from all parts of India, which carry from thence in remembrance certain graines of rice as blacka as gun-powder, which they say have been (p)reserved ever since. Out of the ruines of the castle is much gold tried." (Early Travels in India, 1583-1619, ed. W. Foster, reprint, New Delhi, 1968, p.176)

We have thus a reference to where Rama's ashes were buried, which, as we have seen from the Skanda Purana, as deemed of principal importance as svarga duara, but there is no reference to where Rama was born. We are told of "the ruins of the castle" (Ramkot) extensive enough for a search for gold to be undertaken, but not of any exact site of special veneration within that castle' – let alone a temple site desecrated by a mosque*.*

In 1695-96, Sujan Raj Bhandari completed his work Khulasatu-t Twarikh. This contained in the first part a geographical account of India, in which the author devoted special attention to the holy places. While describing Mathura, he did not omit to mention that the temple of Keshav Rai here had been destroyed by Aurangzeb who had a mosque built in its place (ed. Zafar Husain, Delhi, 1918, p.40; tr. J. Sarkar, India of Aurangzeb, Calcutta, 1901, p.25). But his account of Ayodhya contains no reference to any destroyed temple here.

"In the Hindu books it is called Ayodhya, the birthplace of Ramchand. His building over the ocean, his going to Lanka (Ceylon) with a countless host of monkeys and bears, his slaying Ravan (the kind of that country), and his recovery of his wife (who was preserved chaste and pure during her captivity under Ravan) are well known. The history of Ramayan, is an account of his strange and wonderful deeds. As this city was the residence of king Ramchand, it is held to be one of the holiest place. One kos from it, the river Ghabar (Gora) having united with the river Saraju, passes by the foot of the fort (of Ayodhya). In the outskirts of the city they sift dust and get gold. In the town are the tombs of Shaish (Seth), the son of Lord Adam, (the peace of God be on him!) and Ayub (Job), the prophet – both places of pilgrimage to the Muhammadans". (text, p.42; Sarkar's tr., p.31)[3]

In A.D. 1759-60, Rai Chaturman completed his work Chahar Gulshan, which contained a geographical account of India. It has not been printed, and Sarkar's translation in his India of Aurangzeb mainly reproduces its statistics. The unpublished text has this to say of Ayodhya's association with Rama :-

"Ayodhya is deemed one of the select places of worship. It was the birth place (zadqah) of Raja Ramchandar, son of Jasrat, who was one of the ten avtars, that is, one of the ten visible incarnations of God: and he was married to Sita. Ram Chandar engaged himself in wielding worldly sovereignty with exercising spiritual authority". (Account of Suba Awadh: See MS Abdus Salam Coll., Maulana Azad Library, Aligarh, No. 292/62).

Thus until two hundred and twenty years after the construction of the Baburi Masjid, there was no suggestion anywhere, in the long contemporary inscriptions of the mosque or any other description of Ayodhya that there was a precise site of Rama's birth, where the holy structure had been destroyed and the mosque built – whether we take the writings of Hindus or of Muslims or the record left by single European observer."

"Source of Trouble

Religious myths have a tendency to grow despite the clearest evidence to the contrary. Now, where Hindu beliefs about the site of the mosque were clearly vague and contradictory, it was the turn of a section of Muslims to claim with pride that at Ayodhya mosques had, indeed, been built after the destruction of temples on the sites of Hindu holy places. It was this growth of bravado which exacerbated relations between the two communities, and which resulted in a serious clash at Ayodhya under the Awadh Nawabs in 1855. Under the shadow of bitterness

of that clash, a fiery tract was composed by Mirza Jan in A.H. 1272 A.D. 1855-56 under the title Hadiqa-i-Shuhada. This book contains a passage allegedly quoted from a persian work Sahifa-i-Chihal Nasaih-i Bahadur Shahi, said to be written by "a daughter of Bahadur Shah ' Alamgir (Sic)".

The other claims of the polytheistic Hindus situated in Mathura, Benaras, Awadh (Ayodhya) etc., which the wretched infidels believe to be the birth place of Kanahya (Krishna), or the rasoi (Kitchen) of Sita or the residence of Hanuman, in which, they say, Ram established on him after the conquest of Lanka, have been destroyed, and for the strengthening of Islam mosques have been established all these sites; let them not leave these mosques without firday prayers and congregation." (printed book, Habibganj Collection, Urdu, 32/115, Maulana Azad Library, P.114).

Since much has been made of this quotation supposedly from the pen of a Mughal princess, it is important to note that the author himself confess that he had read the book forty years before he was writing, and claims that he had then copied the passage. This on the face of it is very implausible. The princess remains unnamed, and her father Bahadur Shah is given the title 'Alamgir', which not he but his father Aurangzeb (d.1707) had borne. No work by a daughter of Bahadur Shah or bearing the title Sahifa-i Chihal Nasa-i Bahadur Shah is known to exist in any collection anywhere in the world*. One fails to locate it in C.A. Storey's Persian Leterature-a bio-bibliographical survey, or D.N. Marshall's* comprehensive Mughals in India – a Bibliographical Survey, Vol I: Manuscripts. It is very likely, therefore, that the work or the passage was a figment of Mirza Jan's imagination.

While in his so called quotation from the Counsels of the Mughal princess Mirza Jan only speaks of a temple at the site of Sita-ki-rasoi being destroyed he goes on himself to say that the Baburi Masjid was built at Rama's birthplace by destroying the temple of Ram Janamsthan, close to Sita-ki-Rasoi, so that the mosque, was then known as Sita-ki-rasoi. Thus the legent had grown to Rama's birth site had been added Sita's kitchen*; and Mirza Jan was exulting in the the supposed destruction of a temple here, of which generations of earlier Hindus and Muslims were unaware.*

Subsequent to Mirza Jan's tract – in fact, subsequent to the clash over the Baburi Masjid in 1855 – the myth that the Masjid was built on the site of a destroyed temple became the common possession of the partisans of the two communities*. How the legend could grow, out of a sense of bravado and revenge on both sides, is illustrated by the series of Urdu tracts, which VHP triumphantly lists. Lack of space prevents an analysis of this material; but it is enough to say that no evidence, nor already discussed by us, is presented in this literature. It is only illustrative of the growth of the mentality of modern communalism; its authority for what stood at the site before the Baburi Masjid was built is nil. "*

"Conclusion

The conclusion that we have reached after a careful consideration of the entire available evidence may be summarised as follows:-

1. No evidence exists in the texts that before the 16th century (and indeed before the 18th century), any veneration attached to any spot in Ayodhya for being the birth-site of Rama.

2. There are no grounds for supposing that a Rama temple, or any temple, existed at the site where Baburi Masjid was built in 1528-29*. This conclusion rests on an examination of the archeological evidence as well as the contemporary inscriptions on the mosque.*

3. The legend that the Baburi Masjid occupied the site of Rama's birth did not arise until late 18th century; that the temple was destroyed to build a mosque was not asserted until the beginning of the 19th century*, when the observer, before whom the assertion was made, disbelieved it.*

4. The full blown legend of the destruction of a temple at the site of Rama's birth and Sita-ki-rasoi, is as late as the 1850's. Since then what we get is merely the progressive reconstruction of imagined history based on faith*.*

It is for the people of this country to judge whether on the basis of such dubious evidence as the VHP has presented in support of its case, it is justifiable to mortgage the destiny and good repute of the country.

As historians it is also our duty to point out that in no civilised country of the world is a building of the 16th century permitted to be destroyed or tempered with.

In 1891 when a Fuhrer drew up his descriptive list of Antiquities and Inscription in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, 1891, he put the Baburi Masjid among the monuments of Class II (P.P. 296-7). On page i, he explained the implications of this classification; it meant that though the monument was "in possession of private bodies and individuals", it was possible or desirable to save (it) from further decay by such minor measures as the eradication of vegetation, the exclusion of water from the wells and the like". Being such a monument, the Baburi Masjid became a protected monument under the Ancient Monuments Act, 1904 (re-legislated, 1958). Besides being built nearly 450 years ago, it is a significant example of Sharqi architecture*. It is a part of our common national heritage. Under law, Government must save and preserve it as a fully protected monument.*

If then, we have a care for historical facts, if we want to uphold the law, if we have love for our cultural heritage, we must protect Baburi Masjid. A country is surely judged by how it treats its past."

Ratnakar and also read the articles of Surajbhan." (E.T.C.)

3619. The above extracts of her statement are self speaking. It is really surprising that a witness, claiming to be an Expert Historian, can make such serious statements on historical facts and that too without any study or adequate enquiry into the matter. Newspaper reports or what was told by some others or otherwise cannot be equated with the research work expected from an expert on the subject. She could admit her disagreement with a historian author of a book not after reading it but merely on the basis of some discussion made in her department.

3620. Moreover, the expertise and authority of PW-18 has been challenged by PW-20 Professor Shirin Musavi in her statement at page 129 saying that Suvira Jaiswal is an Ancient Indian Historian and not an authority on Medieval History.

3621. In fact, what appears from her statement from pages 116-117 that she has deposed to support the statement of PW-16, 20 and 24. The reason is also apparent. She admits to have obtained her Ph.D. under the guidance of Dr. (Prof.) R.S.Sharma, who was at Patna University and later on came to Delhi University. He is a co-author of the article "Historian Report to Nation" along with Suraj Bhan- PW-16 and two others.

3622. We may mention here that though the said report claims to have been written by four persons but in fact it was not signed by Sri D.N.Jha. The opinion of an alleged expert, which is not based on her own study and research work but reflection of other's opinion, in our view, shall not qualify to be considered relevant under Section 45 of the Evidence Act as well as the law laid down by the Apex Court in State of Himachal Pradesh Vs.

3623. Normally, the Court does not make adverse comments on the deposition of witness and suffice it to consider whether it is credible or not but we find it difficult to resist ourselves in this particular case considering the sensitivity and the nature of dispute and also the reckless and irresponsible kind of statements, and the material got published by the persons claiming to be Expert Historian, Archaeologist etc. without making any proper investigation, research or study in the subject.

3624. This is really startling. It not only surprises us but we are puzzled. Such kind of statements to public at large causes more confusion than clear the things. Instead of helping in making a cordial atmosphere it tends to create more complications, conflict and controversy. Such people should refrain from making such statements or written work. They must be extremely careful and cautious before making any statement in public on such issues.

3625. The people believe that something, which has been said by a learned, well studied person, would not be without any basis. Normally they accept it as a correct statement of fact and affairs. Normally, these persons do not find a stage where their statement can be scrutinized by other experts like a cross-examination in a Court of law. In legal terminology, we can say that these statements are normally ex parte and unilateral. But that does not give a license to such persons to make statements whatsoever without shouldering responsibility and accountability for its authenticity. One cannot say that though I had made a statement but I am not responsible for its authenticity since it is not based on my study or research but what I have learnt from others that I have uttered. No one, particularly when he claims to be an expert on the subject, a proclaimed or self styled expert in a History etc. or the facts or events can express some opinion unless he/she is fully satisfied after his/her own research and study that he/she is also of the same view and intend to make the same statement with reasons.

3626. We do not know how much damage such kind of statements have already caused, but, if any, that has already been done. At this stage we can only hope and trust that the intelligentsia of this country particularly those who are experts in any discipline, shall live more responsible life, and before expressing any opinion or statement of fact particularly when that involves an extra ordinary sensitive matter, due care and caution shall be practised.

3627. PW-20 Prof. Shirin Musavi Professor in the History Department, Aligarh Muslim University Aligarh also deposed that she did not find any evidence or material to show that Babri Masjid was constructed after demolishing any temple or that any temple ever existed at the disputed site. She also said that the place in dispute was never known as Ram Janam Bhumi or Ram Janam Asthan. Some of the extracts from her cross-examination are reproduced hereunder to throw light as to how much opinion of the above witness is creditworthy and honest, and is relevant under Section 45 of the Evidence Act:

PW-24 Prof. D Mandal retired from the Department of Ancient History and Archaeology, Allahabad University, who was appointed on adhoc basis as Lecturer in 1972 but prior thereto he claimed to have worked as exploration assistant since 1960. 3629. A bare perusal of the above makes it clear that he virtually made a critical analysis of the book that is Paper No.118C1/36, a small booklet published by Prof. B.B.Lal and beyond that made no further or other study/research etc.. Only on that basis, he wrote a book, and analyzed the belief of the people whether the disputed structure was constructed after demolishing a temple or that there existed any temple of 11th or 12th century which was demolished before its construction. The own admissions and clarification this witness has given, we find that the entire opinion of this witness is short of the requirement under Section 45 of the Evidence Act, 1872 to qualify as an opinion of an Expert which may be considered relevant on a fact in issue, by this Court.

3630. OPW 9 Thakur Prasad Verma was Reader in Kashi Hindu Vishwavidyalaya Varanasi and retired in 1993. He had worked in the Department of Ancient Indian History, Culture and Archaeology. He is graduate in Ancient Indian History Culture and Archaeology, Doctorate in Indian Ancient Paleography (Bhartiya Puralipi Shastra); Post Graduate Diploma in Numismatic. He was plaintiff no.3 in Suit 5 having been impleaded after the death of Sri B.N.Agarwal and was pursuing the aforesaid suit as next friend of plaintiffs no.1 and 2 but recently on his own request, has been replaced. He came to depose about the faith of Hindu public that Lord Rama was born at the disputed place at Ayodhya where a mosque was constructed after demolishing a temple. However, the disputed place has continuously been worshiped by Hindus having a special and peculiar importance. According to him Ram Janam Bhumi temple was initially constructed by Vikramaditya of Ujjain and thereafter it used to be renovated as and when it was required. In 1032-33 AD Salar Masood demolished the temple and thereafter was killed on 14th June, 1933 AD in the battle at Baharaich. A new temple was constructed during the reign of Govind Chandra of Garhwal Dynesty in 12th Century but the same was also damaged after about 17/18 years. It was again constructed by King Anaychand of Garhwal Dynasty but then demolished by Mir Baqi, Commander of Babar in 1528 AD. These facts he has written in "Ayodhya ka Itihas Avam Puratatva Rigved Se Abtak" Exhibit No.3 (Suit 5) wherein last chapter 11 has been written by Dr.S.P.Gupta and rest by him. The said book and some of the facts stated therein, we have already discussed while considering the issues relating to date of construction of the disputed structure. OPW 9 admitted that Salar Masood never came to Ayodhya and he mistook the place

'Ajudhan' with 'Ayodhya' though 'Ajudhan' is in the State of Punjab. That being so, his statement that demolition was made by Salar Masood at Ayodhya in 1032-33 has proved wrong.

The Muslim period, which spanned between 1206 AD to 1526 AD, is divided into many dynasty. Out of these dynasty, the reign of the so-called Slave dynasty was from 1206 AD to 1290 AD. As a matte of fact, there was no dynasty with the name of Slave dynasty, because it had three different branches. Reigns of Mamulak, Ilbari and Shamsi branches were seen. Among the rulers of this period were included Qutub-ud-din Aibak, Sultan Aram Shah, Iltutmish, Rukun-ud-din Firoz, Razia Sultan, Muij-ud-din Bahram Shah, Alla-ud-din, Masood Shah, Nasir-ud-din Mahmud, Balban, Kaikbad and Kaimur. The period from 1219 AD to 1320 AD witnessed the reign of the Khilji dyansty. Among the ruler were included Jalal-ud-din Firoz Khilji, Alla-ud-din Khilji and Qutub-ud-din Mubaarak. The period from 1328 AD to 1414 AD witnessed the reign of Tughlaq dynasty. Among these rulers were included Gayas-ud-din Tughlaq, Muhammad Bin Tughlaq and Firoz Shah Tughlaq and after him came three weaklings among whom the last one was Muhammad Shah Tughlak, because 1440 AD saw the emergence of the Syed dynasty. Khijra Khan Syed was the founder of this dynasty. The Syed dynasty spanned between 1414 AD and 1450 AD. 1450 AD marked the beginning of the Lodi dynasty, whose rulers included Bahlol Lodi, Sikandar Lodi and Ibrahim Lodi. After that came the

A perusal of the above statements and in particular that of PW 16, 20, OPW 9 and 6, the Court finds opinion of the Expert Historians so varying that no definite conclusion can be drawn therefrom. However, on one aspect, some of the experts of both the sides were unanimous that if an excavation is made at Ayodhya, at the disputed site or near it, more relevant facts may be available which would help this Court to arrive at a just conclusion. This became more important in view of the fact that a stone inscription, sought to be relied by the plaintiffs (Suit-5), was claimed to have been found on 6/7 December, 1992 from the debris of the demolished disputed structure. It is a stone inscription of 115 cm. X 55 cm. size having several lines engraved in a language which is not decipherable atleast by this Court. The experts say that it is written in Sanskrit but the script is slightly different or at least a little difficult being much older. Under the orders of the Apex Court, ink estampage (Paper

No.203 C1/1) was prepared. This estampage was deciphered by Dr. K.V.Ramesh, a renowned Epigraphists, whose competence, in fact remained undisputed by all the parties. This translation/text is Exhibit 2 Suit 5 (Register 29, Page 5-25). In first two pages, the epigraphist has made his comments and observation and then there is sanskrit and English text and English translation.

3636. Dr. T.P.Verma and Dr. S.P.Gupta substantially relied on the translation of the contents of the said stone inscription asserting that there was a huge Vishnu Hari Temple at the site in dispute which was demolished and thereafter disputed building was constructed in 1528 AD. Some dispute arose about the correct translation made by Sri Dr. T.P.Verma and Dr. S.P.Gupta. Ultimately expert's translation was obtained by plaintiffs (Suit-5) from Dr. Koluvyl Vyassrayasastri Ramesh-O.P.W.10 (Exhibit No.2, Suit 5) (Reg. 29, Page 5-25). The said transliteration and English translation is as under:

English Translation

Line1 . . . . . Obeisance to [Lord] Siva. . . . . .*

Lines 1-2, verse 1. [This line is nearly totally erased. But there is enough space for a verse in a lengthy metre such as Sardulavikriditam]

Lines 1-2, verse 2. . . . . of the physique of [Lord] Trivikrama. . . . . by His height containing within His body the sixteen doctrines(or maha-vidyas) . . . . . in Whose palm He holds the universe like (holding) the Moon, whose kalugiri (in the case of Bharata-varsa, one of the seven great mountain ranges, viz., Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Suktimat, Rksa, Vindhya and Pariyatra) whose falling rocks(,while striking one another,) create noise had, out of wanton arrogance. . . . . .

Lines 2-3 verse3. The illustrious Bhargava (i.e., Parasurama) . . . . an ornament of the earth . . . like insects . . . . with firm hands upraised . . . . . having increased, events brought into existence, barren faces. . . . . .

Lines 3-4, verse4. during the violent dance of the Lord of (the goddess) Candi (i.e., Lord Siva), from thr rocking head jewel. . . . . .

genuine reputations which emanated from the opening in the skull-shaped spherical half of the universe. . . In that family heroestook their birth, who were determined to resurrect the warrior clan which had been rendered weak by the wars waged by Bhargava (Parasurama) (against them).

Lines 4-5, verse5. Noble was that very family which was the birth-place of valour which had successfully removed the sufferings of the other (Ksatriya clans) in which Mame, the abode of thousands of perfect and extremely valorous deeds and who was the utmost favourite of the world.

Lines 5, verse 6. That very Son of the Sun (i.e., Karna), Mame, the unequalled hero of the world, uttered everyday the words "may I have no mercy on (my) body, may I not hanker for material wealth, may I be diligently disinterested in sensual temptations . . . . . .

Lines 5-6, verse 7. The thorny trees, like the sensuous villains, repeatedly wrote (i.e., scratched) on the skins of the breasts and hips and loins of the womenfolk of the tribal villages of the plains and hills who had taken refuge in the thickets as a result of the destruction of their abodes in sportive wars waged by him.

Lines 6-7, verse 8. His fame alone having pervaded till then the heavens, the high-minded [Mame], wishing to go to the heavens in person and reside there in that wonderful world, he bequeathed his entire realm along with all the wealth to his son Sallaksana just as the Sun-god had bequathed all his lustre to the Fire-god.

Line 7, verse 9. As a result of some unknown power of the gift of that realm, which had no bounds and was other-worldly, a super-human valour manifested itself in Sallaksana; it was indeed an earthly exception.

Lines 7 – 8, verse 10. The sword was at the tip of his fingers, his hand was verily the great army, his fame, like sumptuously cooked delicacies, were ever palatable; even without a kingdom to rule, these personal instruments enabled him to spread extensively an empire sans worries.

Line 8, verse 11. He who was for long intervals enjoying himself on battle-fields, bore on his head his ruthless sword, which was quick to end the lives (of his enemies).

Lines 8-9, verse 12. Within the serene surroundings of the Malaya mountain, on the banks of the heavenly Ganges, at the entrances of the cave-dwellings of the Himalayas, in the caverns in which the hunter-tribes dwell, the accomplished womenfolk gaily sing (literally, read) the strings of his eulogy composed for the first time by the semi-divine beings moving about in the skies.

Lines 10-11, verse 13. On the advice tendered by the elders, in the terrains of the Himalayas, in the pristine pure regions of the Malaya (Mountains), in the lands along the banks of the heavenly Ganges as well as in other regions the semi-divine unmarried girls, with intent to gain husbands, ever offer worship to the hands of the satiating images sculpted in his (i.e., Sallaksana's) likeness.

Lines 10-11, verse 14. He who is to be offered oblations by the beautiful for the realization of their desires . . . . himself by the worlds . . . .in whose abode, which is pleasing with wealth and happiness, hi is sung about by multitudes of celestial singers.

Lines 11-12, verse 15. The people look upon as a phenomenon the fact that, Sallaksana, who was, through

good fortune, enjoying the genuine company of the damsels of the heavens, had happily begotten a son who, by appearance, was no different from his father.

Lines 11- 12, verse 16. [That son] Alhana, who was the beloved of the good people, is like a pointed saw to the war-mongers. He retrieved the splendour of the habitually fickle-minded Goddess of wealth by means of fair and persuasive means.

Line 12, verse 17. He was indeed extraordinary and whenever he confronted (his foes the heap of their) arrogance, accumulated over a protracted period, melted away. The garb of good deeds and bad deeds (worn by them) slipped away by his mere looks.

Line 13, verse 18. He was the destroyer of (his enemies' manliness, and made those who were afraid effeminate; as against the belief among the people, his eminence far dwarfed that of the lofty mountains.

Lines 13-14, verse 19. His nephew (literally brother's son), the widely celebrated Meghasuta, the illustrious one, who superceded Anayacandra; he earned the lordship of Saketa-mandala through the grace of his elder, the Lord of the earth, Govindacandra.

Line 14, verse 20. Not only did he, who was powerful, put an end to the arrogant warriors who were dancing in unrestrained frenzy in the battles constantly fought by him, but he also gave (to his people) an excellent army which was replete with (soldiers comparable to) the wish-fulfilling trees.

Lines 14-15, verse 21. By him, who was meditating in his

mind on the easiest means of quickly jumping across the ocean of worldly attachments, was erected this beautiful temple of [The god] Visnu-Hari, [on a scale] never before done by the preceding kings, compactly formed [i.e. built] with rows of large and lofty stones which had been sculpted out.

Lines 15-16, verse 22. The position of Alhana, whose tireless shoulders were like safety latches for the stability of the king Govindacandra's empire, was subsequently occupied by his younger (son?) Ayusyacandra.

Line 16, verse 23. Great poets dared not compare him with Sahasanka and Sudraka; out of sheer fear none save the God of Love dared draw the bow-sting in his presence.

Line 17, verse 24. By him, who was of good conduct, and abhorred strife, while residing at Ayodhya, which had towering abodes, intellectuals and temples, Saketa-Mandala was endowed with thousands of wells, reservoirs, alms-houses, tanks.

Line 17-18, verse 25. the young damsels, who were as attractive as the female musk-deer and does, while they rested on the cool surfaces of the Himalayan rocks, sang about his (i.e., Ayusyacandra's) fame.

Line 18, verse 26. Whose bodily splendour, which was ever characterised by glowing eyes, was at all times pleasant with gentle feelings, was a source of salvation for the good just as (the holy pilgrimage centre) Kasi is.

Lines 18-19, verse 27. Separating [the flesh and blood of the demon] Hiranyakasipu from his skeleton, subduing [the demon] Bana in battle, tearing asunder the arms of the

Lines 19-20, verse 28. And now, the fierce arms of the ruler . . . annihilates even the fear caused by the westerns (i.e., the Islamic invaders from the west). The brilliance of the mighty great ones . . . . east and west . . . . . .

Line 20, verse 29. Because of the subjects' effective acts of merit, the king being famous in the world . . . . . the illustrious Ayusyacandra . . . . . ."

3637. Sri K.V. Ramesh, O.P.W. 10, has also submitted a report about the said inscription , which says:

"The subjoined stone inscription is engraved on a rectangular stone slab, the written area roughly covering an area of 115 cms X 55 cms. The slab as at present extant is diagonally broken in two leading to the loss of a couple of letters in almost every line. Besides, the first and last two lines have suffered heavy damage resulting in the loss of many letters. All in all, the loss of letters have proved a handicap to epigraphists and Sanskritists in the matter of fully interpreting the contents of the text. Nevertheless, the overall purport and the crux of its import are clear beyond doubt. In the first instance a hurriedly prepared estampage, and in recent times, a high quality estampage as well as some photographs were all provided by Dr. S.P. Gupta Chairman, Archaeological Society of India, New Delhi for which I am highly thankful to him.

The text of the inscription is written in fairly chaste Sanskrit, the orthographical features being regular for the period to which the inscription belongs, namely the middle of the 12th Century A.D. The inscription is not in any way dated, but may be assigned, with confidence, to the middle of the 12th Century on palaeographical grounds as well as the internal evidence provided by the inscriptional text in question.

But for the opening salutation to Siva at the very beginning, the entire text of the inscription is composed in Sanskrit verse of fairly high literary excellence. As has been stated above, the palaeographical and orthographical features are normal for the period to which the inscription belongs, viz, the middle of the 12th century A.D. This was an important period of transition from classical Sanskrit to the North Indian vernaculars. This can be easily identified in contemporaneous inscriptions, including the present one, in the confusion in the use of class nasals and anusvara, and in the employment of the sibilants and palatals.

As for the contents of the text, it is fully reflective of medieval vanity as far as the eulogies of the heroes mentioned in the inscription are concerned. The most important internal historical information we get from this epigraph is the mention of Govindachandra, obviously of the Gahadavala dynasty, who ruled over a fairly vast empire from 1114 to 1155 A.D.

Verse 1 is entirely lost. Verse 2, which is badly mutilated, refers to Trivikrama and, hence, may have been composed in praise of Lord Visnu. Verse 3, which is also badly damaged, seems to allude to the near-total

decimation of the warrior clans by Bhargava-Parasurama. Verse 4 refers to the emergence of a Ksatriya family, heroes born in which successfully resurrected the decadent warrior clans. According to Verse 5, in that noble family was born the beloved of the people, Mame. Verse 7 speaks of his detachment from mundane things while Verse 8 informs us that he bequeathed his realm and wealth to his son Sallaksana. Verse 9 to 14 contain conventional praises showered on this Sallaksana in which the poet has displayed a high level of poetic imagination. Verse 15 refers to the birth of his son whose stunning resemblance to his father was the talk among the people. Verse 16 refers to this son as Alhana and credits him with retrieving the past power and glory of his family. While the next two verses (17 and 18) contain his conventional praise, verse 19 gives the information that his nephew, Meghasula by name, as superseding a certain Anayacandra and obtaining the Lordship of Saketa-mandala through the grace of the senior Lord of the earth, Govindacandra, While verse 20 lauds the military might of this hero, verse 21 gives the important information that, in order to ensure his easy passage into the heavens, Meghasuta built a lofty stone temple for the god Visnu-Hari. From verse 22 we learn that he, who was responsible for the stability of Govindacandra's empire, was succeeded by the younger Ayusyacandra as the Lord of Saketa-mandala. Verse 23 contains his conventional praise. According to verse 24, he set up residence in the city of Ayodhya, which was adorned with lofty abodes, intellectuals and temples, and added to the entire Saketa-mandala thousands of small and big water reservoirs. Verse 25 and 26 contain more conventional praises of Ayusyacandra. Verse 27, which is partly damaged, alludes to the well-known episodes of Visnu's incarnations as Narasimha, Krsna, Vamana and Rama. The badly damaged verse 28 refers to a King (probably Ayusyacandra) as warding off the danger of invasion from the west (i.e. from the invading Muslim forces). Verse 29, which is incomplete, mentions the king Ayusyacandra.

The reference to Saketa-mandala is interesting. It is well known that North India. Just as in the case of the South, was divided into administrate divisions called mandalas (see the word mandala in the indices to H.C. Ray's monumental two-volume work 'The Dynastic History of Northern India', II edn.' 1973, Delhi)"

3638. The expertise of Dr. Koluvyl Vyassrayasastri Ramesh-OPW 10 as an Epigraphist could not be disputed by any of the parties. In fact some of the witnesses of both the sides admitted that he is the best authority so far as the translation of Sanskrit inscription is concerned. PW-16 Dr. Suraj Bhan in Part II page 6 has said about Dr. Koluvyl Vyassrayasastri Ramesh:

"मैं डा0 के0 बी0 रमेश को जानता हूँ, वह एपीग्राफिस्ट हैं और मान्यता प्राप्त है।" (पेज 6)

"I know Dr. K.B. Ramesh. He is an epigraphist and have recognition as such." (E.T.C.)

3639. Dr. Koluvyl Vyassrayasastri Ramesh himself appeared in witness box and proved the decipherment and translation of the contents of stone inscription and also the fact that it must belong to 12th Century A.D. From the reading of the contents, he also stated in para 14 of his affidavit that a temple of Vishnuhhari constructed by Meghasuta must have been in existence in the temple town of Ayodhya from 12th Century A.D.

www.vadaprativada.com

3640. It would be appropriate to refer some extracts of the statement of OPW 10:

> "While deciphering the inscription I have shown square brackets with numbers and star marks to indicate the numbers of the verses calculated by me although that number is not mentioned in the inscription." (Page 20)
> "The first two pages and the top portion of page No. 3 of my report have the introductive part of my observations. In other words it may be termed to be as an introduction part of my report." (Page 21)
> "According to me, the period of the inscription in question can be dated back to the 12th century and wherever I have used specifically the period around middle of 12th Century, I meant that it was from about 1130 to 1170 A.D. If once I have used the period around middle of the 12th Century, it will remain the same even if I subsequently refer it to as 12th Century." (Page 29)
>
> "After 2000-2001 I had studies many facsimiles of inscriptions of Gahadwala rulers, namely, Chandradeo, Govindchandra and Vijaychandra. I compared all such facsimiles with the estampage of the inscription in question from palaeographical point of view. I did not deem it necessary to mention in my report specifically hat while comparing the estampage of the inscription in question with other facsimiles." (Page 37)

www.vadaprativada.com

"It is not correct to say that till 13th century, for temple, the word 'Devalaya' etc. but not Mandira was in use. . . . . It will not be correct to say that up to 12th century, the word 'Mandira' was not being used for temples but for human dwellings." (Page 44)

"My translation regarding verse 22 appears to be defective as it does not make the position clear regarding succession of Alhana and Ayusha Chandra. In my opinion, the correct translation of verse 22 of the inscription in question would be that Ayusha Chandra, son of Alhana occupied the position of Meghasuta as chieftain of Saketa Mandala*." (Page 46)*

"It is clearly mentioned in verses 19 & 24 of the inscription that Ayodhya was the headquarters of Saket Mandal. Since the Raja of Saket Mandal was residing in Ayodhya." (Page 51)

"Inscription specifically states that Ayushya Chandra was residing at Ayodhya when he was the ruler of Saket Mandal." (Page 52)

"The temple referred in this inscription was constructed by Meghasuta but the inscription was got written by his successor. There is a gap between the period of construction of the temple and the inscription." (Page 53)

". . . which the temple built by Meghsuta was in existence when his successor Ayushya Chandra got this inscription engraved." (Page 54)

"The inscription is engraved for the main purpose of recording the construction of the Vishnu Hari temple

3641. From the above inscription, the following facts we can safely infer:

(A) There existed a temple of Vishnuhari at Ayodhya in 12th Century A.D.

(B) It was constructed by a Ruler of Garhwal Dynasty i.e. by Meghasuta.

3642. The inscription giving this information became available in December 1992 actually pertain to 12th Century A.D. Its genuinity and authenticity could not be doubted though it was argued on behalf of the Muslim parties that the manner in which it claimed to have been obtained cannot be decisive to hold that it was fixed in a building existing at the disputed site. The stone inscription therefore by itself cannot be decisive to hold that Vishnuhari Temple existed or was constructed at the disputed site.

3643. OPW-9 and 11, the authors of the book "Ayodhya Ka Itihas Evam Puratatwa" (Paper No. 289 C1) admitted several inaccuracies in the translation of the aforesaid stone inscription, they had published. They also admitted unequivocally whatever has been translated by Dr.Koluvyl Vyassrayasastri Ramesh- OPW 10, that is the most authentic and must prevail.

3644. In the meantime, Prof.D.Mandal PW-24 also published a book expressing his opinion that if further excavation is made at the site in dispute, it may be helpful to find out whether there existed any earlier religious structure of Hindus or not.

3645. Exhibit 63 (Suit-5) (Register 30 Page 7-98) also Exhibit D-26 (Suit-5) is a photocopy of a Book titled as "Ayodhya Archaeology After Demolition" by D. Mandal first published in 1993, reprint in 1994 by Orient Longman Limited, Haidrabad. On page 13, there is an acknowledgement of the author as under:

> "Any work done is never the outcome of one person's endeavours. This tract owes a great deal to several friends who have helped in various ways. For the inspiration and encouragement unstintingly provided, I wish to thank especially Professors R.S. Sharma, B.N.S. Yadav, D.P. Agarwal, S.C. Bhattacharya and N.C. Ghosh*. I am also grateful to Mr. Ziaul Haq, a senior journalist based in Allahabad, Mr. Sanjay Kumar (photographer) and Mr. L.K. Tiwari (draftsman). I thank Dr. Also Rai who suggested that this work be published as a tract, and the editors of the series, especially* Prof. Neeladri Bhattacharya and Romila Thapar. I am grateful to Dr. Shereen Ratnagar for providing a concise and clear introduction to archaeological methods. Not least, I thank my wife, Ms. Basanti Bose, for her valuable support. The responsibility for any shortcomings, however, is entirely mine."

3646. The "Editorial Preface" which is published and is on record at page 17 to 22 Register 30 has been written by Romila Thapar and "Introduction" to the book which is on record from page 23 to 35 has been written by Shereen Ratnagar. It appears to have been written to counter the claim of some experts with respect to the site in dispute based on the stone inscriptions claimed to be recovered in December 1992 as also report of Sri

B.B. Lal wherein he mentioned to have found some pillar bases during his excavation made in 1975-76.

3647. Shereen Ratnagar has tried to give an idea about the merits and demerits of the process of excavation, ascertainment of historical facts and also justification of a report or comments of a person, who himself has not gone in field archaeology vis-a-vis report of a person who has actually conducted excavation. The concluding two paragraphs may be referred as under:

> "It must be reiterated that in excavation we actually destroy stratigraphic context without which the antiquities we find make little sense. At any excavation therefore, regular trench diaries; accurate drawings of sections and planning of walls, floors, or hearths; photography; and the management of multiple notebooks recording strata numbers and description and their corresponding batches of small finds are as important and as challenging as the actual digging, as these allow for re-examining of the data at a later stage when new finds, new techniques of analysis and new methods are developed in the subject. The data of archaeology do not simply lie in the ground awaiting recovery when they will 'speak for themselves;, it is when we excavate and record, when we make out typologies and classifications, that we generate date.
> The importance of excavation records will become evident when it is pointed out that even professional archaeologists cannot visit every excavated site. It is the excavation reports which they read with critical care; it is the report, its drawn and photographed sections and the chapter invariably entitled 'stratigraphy', which enable the

www.vadaprativada.com

seasoned field excavator to distinguish the various features, the authentic from the inauthentic data and evaluate the stratigraphic skills of the excavator and thence the valid from the invalid conclusions. Such review and re-analysis of previously gathered information (artefacts, photographs and other records) by scholars not present at or involved with the original dig, is entirely valid and accepted in archaeological research."

3648. This book appears to have been published when a Presidential reference was pending before the Apex Court. D. Mandal, the author of the book, who has also deposed his statement as PW 24, on page 16 of his book (Register 30, Page 36), says:

"Evidence gathered from archaeological excavations at the site will be of vital importance making it pertinent to discuss the extent to which archaeology science can help resolve the question. Admittedly, archaeological cannot answer questions relating to faith, or questions such as whether Rama was an historical figure, or problems about locating his birthplace. However, archaeology can answer with a considerable degree of certainty, many questions about various past activities of people, for which material evidence is available. It is for this reason that archaeological research continues and is of importance."

3649. The report seems to have considered the question, whether there was a temple below the mosque. Though Prof. B.B. Lal's finding of a pillar bases and wall during his excavation in 1975 could not be disputed but the author refute that those structures did not belong to an erstwhile temple as claimed, and tried to justify his conclusions on page 39-40 of his book (Pages 65 to 66 Register 30) as under:

"The analysis of all the strands of information from Discovery 1 reveals that:

1. That various structural remnants claimed to be the vestiges of 'pillar bases' are not contemporaneous. They belong to at least five different, sequential structural phases (rebuilding episodes).

2. It is highly probable that the so-called pillar bases are actually the remnant portions of walls of different structural phases*.*

3. This rules out the possibility of there having been one structure raised on a series of pillars.

4. There is clear indication in the trench of the existence of at least two rooms or room clusters or parts of buildings belonging to two different phases, but with the same general layout and construction methods.

5. Constructed as they are of brickbats laid haphazardly, the so-called pillar bases were certainly not capable of bearing the vertical load of large-sized stone pillars, as has been suggested (RB-MH Pt II) and frequently reiterated.

6. The contention that a 'pillared building' was raised in the eleventh century A.D. is absolutely baseless. No structural feature or artefactual find points even in a circumstantial manner to a date approaching the eleventh century. Instead, what is firmly suggested for the poorly built structure unearthed in the trench, is a date between the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries A.D.

7. We can only surmise that the much publicized sherds of Islamic glazed pottery were found in all the deposits associated with the five structural phases. If this surmise is correct, then the use of this pottery was simultaneous with the habitation of the structure (through all five rebuildings of reparis). A time span of up to three hundred years that is indicated by this pottery, is quite consistent with the remains of the five occupational deposits, associated with the sequential structural phases, i.e., with the depth of material found. Such a discovery is fairly common in archaeology.

8. The discussions above reveal the selective manner in which some archaeologists had cited the archaeological finds to argues for the existence of a temple*. (In the process, the stratigraphy was paid scant attention). No reference has been made by Y.D. Sharma et al. In NAD, n.d. to the total range of pottery found in the trench. A study of this should be undertaken urgently. Attention must be paid to the ordinary red ware of everyday use associated with the de luxe glazed pottery, as also to other minor antiquities. These will shed light on the function of the structure, for example, whether it was any ordinary house with, say, cooking utensils, or not a residential structure devoid of domestic artefacts of everyday use."*

3650. The author suggested that the said structures might have been the residuance of some building of the period between 13th to 15th century. The author could not dispute the existence of some structure beneath the disputed structure but refuted the claim that it was a massive temple of 11th or 12th century and instead suggested that it could have been structure of 13th to 15th century.

3651. Be that as it may, one thing is very clear that there is not even a whisper in the entire work that there could have been possibly a structure like Idgah or Kanati Mosque underneath the disputed structure over which the disputed structure was constructed, though this book was published as long back as in 1993.

3652. The Court also had some other documents showing that certain inscription were found from time to time indicating the reign of Garhwal Dynasty at Kannauj, which had within its territory Ayodhya also.

It refers to 21 copper plates of the King of Kanauj, Vikram Samvat 1171-1233 (AD 1114-1176) written by F. Kielhorn. It is said that fourteen of these plates contain grants of the King Govindachandra of Kanauj, one is the grant of King Vijayachandra and his son Jayachchandra and six are the grants of King Jayachchandra.

This is in respect to Chandravati plate of Chandra Deva Vikram Samvat 1150 to 1156. These six plates were found at Chandravati in State of Banaras. On page 193 (Page 137, Register 20), it says:

Its ancient boundaries (chatur-aghata), as recorded in this inscription, were "Kollakanandivara pattala the Gomati, Bhagirathi and Varana." We may assume that the pattala of Kathehali was nearly co-extensive with its modern representative; for, though one of the old boundaries, Kollakanandivara has not been identified with certainty, it is not impossible that it is the same as Kol Aslah which now marks the western limit of the Katehir pargana. We note in support of this that Kol Aslha is also a pargana and its first component may will be a remnant of "Kollaka".*

It refers to a Shunga inscription from Ayodhya authored by Rai Bahadur Daya Ram Sahni. This inscription was found at Ranopali about a mile distance from Ayodhya. About this inscription on page 55 of the book (page 159, Register 30) it says:

> "The inscription is important for more reasons than one. It is the first inscription on stone or metal yet discovered which mentions the name of Pushyamitra, the celebrated founder of the Sunga dynasty. Hitherto he was only known from literary sources, e.g., the Divyavadana (XXIX), Patanjali's Mahabhashya (III-2-123), where references is made to a sacrifice performed by him, some of the Puranas, Kalidas's drama, the Malavikagnimitra, etc. The passages referring to the Sunga dynasty in the Vishnu and the Bhagvata Puranas are quoted in parallel columns in Pargiter's The Purana Text of the Dynasties of the Kali Age, pp. 30-33. From the extract from the former we learn that the dynasty was founded by the General Pushyamitra after he had slain the last Maurya king Brihadratha. His son was Agnimitra, who was succeeded by Vasujyeahtha. The latter's son was Vasumitra and his son Andhraka. He was succeeded by Pulindaka and the latter by Yomegha. He was followed by Vajramitra. He was followed by Samabhaga. The latter's son was Devabhumi.

Kalidasa's drama mentions three of these kings, i.e., the founder, his son Agnimitra and the latter's son Vasumitra and further informs us that Pushyamitra instituted a Rajasuya sacrifice and appointed Vasumitra as the guardian of the sacrificial horse, which in accordance with religious custom was to wander at will for a year and that the horse was seized by the cavalry of the Yavanas, whom Vasumitra successfully defeated and brought the horse back to his grandfather's sacrifice. The Rajasuya sacrifice was performed by universal monarchs and the sacrifice of this name mentioned in the drama of Kalidasa may have been the one performed by Pushyamitra on the occasion of his coronation. The Ayodhya inscription,

however, records the performance of two Asvamedha sacrifices by Pushyamitra*. It is at present not known what necessitated the institution of the second sacrifice by him. It is to the credit of Pushyamitra that he revived this sacrifice which had long been in abeyance owing to Asoka's commandments prohibiting the immolation of animals even for sacrifices. Mr. Jayaswal thinks that the Asvamedha sacrifice mentioned in an inscription discovered at Nagari also referred to Pushyamitra. It is true that such an inscription was found by Dr. D.R. Bhandarkar when he was engaged in his excavations at Nagari. It has, however, been found by Rai Bahadur Gaurishankar H. Ojha to be only a fragment of the Ghosundi inscription and to supply the missing portion of the first line of that record. Thus restored, the epigraph shows that the son of Gajayana and Parasari mentioned in it was one Sarvatata, who had performed a horse-sacrifice, but makes no mention of Pushyamitra.*

The Ayodhya inscription is also interesting as it establishes the fact that the correct name of the founder of the Sunga dynasty was Pushyamitra , not Pushpamitra as found in some of the Sanskrit works. Dr. Buhler had already been led to this conclusion by the form Pusamitta which he found in certain Jaina Prakrit gathas, but epigraphical evidence was wanting.

The interpretation of this short records is rendered difficult by the uncertainty about the exact significance of the words Pushyamitra shashthena and I am afraid the difficulty will not solved until another inscription of the

Sunga dynasty containing the genealogy of these kings comes to light. I propose here to recapitulate what has been said by the previous writers before I record my views of the point. Pandit Ratnakara rendered these words as the sixth descendent, brother or son of Pushyamitra and as with the last alternative, Phalgudeva would become identical with Pushyamitra, he thought he could overcome the difficulty by supplying a word like pujyasya between the words pituh and Phalgudevasya and interpret the expression as "in honour of Phalgudeva, a teacher or deity of this father." Rai Bahadur Gaurishankar Hirachand Ojha favoured the meaning "sixth in descendent from Pushyamitra," while Mr. Jayaswal preferred to interpret the expression as the sixth brother of Pushyamitra, making Phalgudeva the father of Pushyamitra. This view was endorsed by Dr. A. Banerji-Sastri, who rejected "the descent theory" for the reason that if Dhana[Deva] was sixth in descent from Pushyamitra and evidently proud of it, his name would have ended with the word mitra. This, as Mr. N.K. Bhattasali has shown, is no real obstacle as the names of several of the kings of the Sunga dynasty as given in the Puranas and found on their coins have different endings. Dr. Sastri also emphasis the fact that in the Smrit. 'descent' is signified by the termination of the 5th case, not the 6th as is the case in the expression under discussion. Mr. N.G. Majumdar has hunted up a parallel expression in verse 88 of the 16th Sarga of the Raghuvamsa. The expression in question is panchamam Takshakasya, which is interpreted by three commentators as meaning "grandson of grandson of Takshaka." Mr. Majumdar therefore sees no difficulty in interpreting Pushyamitra shashthah as "sixth in descent from Pushyamitra". In his third article on this inscription, however, Mr. Jayaswal points out that the example from the Raghuvamsa referred to above is actually interpreted by Mallinatha as meaning the fifth son of Takshaka. 'The sixth of Pushyamitra' in the Ayodhya inscription should therefore mean the sixth son of Pushyamitra. As, however, this interpretation would make Phalgudeva identical with Pushyamitra, he proposes to read Dharmarajna in the 2nd line as Dharmarajni, and to compound it with the following word pituh. He thus construes the record as meaning that Dhanadeva, the sixth son of Pushyamitra, erected a house in honour of Phalgudeva, the father of his lawful queen.

It will be seen from the above that the only parallel expression found by the ingenuity of Mr. Majumdar is capable of two divergent interpretations. As has been pointed out by Dr. Banerji Sastri, the inscriptions so far known fail to through light on the question and he is right in stating that the established custom in epigraphical records is either to name the generations in succession or not at all and that it is not usual to mention a distant stage by omitting the intervening ones. One such example I have indeed secured in verse 44 of the Vamsavali of the Chamba rajas, where we find the words "Meruvarman was the 10th from Jayastambha" after the nine intervening ancestors of Meruvarman have been duly referred to indirect succession. Even here, however, the vibhakti employed is the fifth, not the sixth or possessive case. An example of this kind with the sixth case ending occurs in the Raghuvamsa, Sarga 6, verse 29; -

त्वमेव कल्याणि तयोस्तृतीया

"Thou alone, fortunate lady, art fit to be their third. "

Sunanda, the attendant of Indumati, while narrating the achievements of the prince of the Angas observes that the goddesses Sri and Sarasvati, though naturally hostile to each other, together reside in him in peace, thus indicating the propriety of her union with him. It will be observed that though the grammatical construction in this case is the same as in the doubtful expression being discussed, the sense of descent is out of the question. Whether more exact parallels both in form and sense will or will not be found in the vast field of Sanskrit literature, I am unable to say. It seems, however, exceedingly difficult to disregard clear palaeographic evidence and to group this record with the other known documents of the early Sunga period. I would, therefore, with Pandit Ratnakara, supply a word like purushena after shashshena and translate "by the sixth descendent of Pushyamitra". It will be seen from the facsimile that only the first portion of the name of the chief who had this inscription engraved is preserved. Previous writers have restored it as Dhanadeva and Mr. N.G. Majumdar identifies him with a chief of that name whose coins have been found round about Ayodhya. Be the name, however, what it may, the inscription has established beyond doubt the fact that Ayodhya formed part of the Sunga Empire as late as the date of the inscription, which, on palaeographic grounds must be

3656. There is a reference of a pillar inscription of Lal Darwaja Masjid at Jaunpur in the book "Sanskrit Inscriptions of Delhi Sultanate" 1191-1526 by Pushpa Prasad, Reader in History, Aligarh University published in 1990 and on page 149-152 (Register 30 page 167 to 171) it refers to the said inscription as under:

Fuhrer, Sharqi Architecture, New Series, 1911, 1, pp. 50-1

This inscription is engraved on the two faces of the third octagonal pillar in the first row of the north-west cloister of the Lal Darwaza masjid at Jaunpur. It consists of ten lines in Sanskrit in Nagari script and is dated in the year Plava Samvat 1353*, Wednesday, the 12th day of the waning moon of the month* Jyestha/15 May A.D. 1296*.*

The inscription opens with an adoration of Ganapati (Ganesa). The purpose is to record the construction of a temple of Padamesvara on the north-side entrance of Visvesvara temple at Kasi by Padma Sadhu.

The inscription itself indicated that its original site had been a temple (the Visvesvara temple) at Kasi (Varanasi). This must have been the same as 'the Bisheshwara temple' mentioned by Sherring in his account of Benares. The large mosque built by Aurangzeb presently stands on its site. But sherring records the tradition that 'the Mohammedans as usual transferred its stone to their own mosques and that relics (of the stones) are found at Jaunpur.

The transfer took place during the reign of Akbar when the Visvesvara temple, already deserted was demolished and its stones used by Bayizid Bayat. The latter in his well-known memoirs records the incident thus:

'At that time (1570-71) there was an idol temple which owing to passage of time had become deserted and become the place of trade of the market people. I purged that place of them and started erecting a madrasa for scholars. It was completed around those few days that Raja (Todarmal) came from a bath (in the river). In that temple there was pillar 12 gaz (32 fit) high; and there was a date in the Hindu characters inscribed on it stating that it had been set up seven hundred years ago. When Bayizid took it down, he had cut it into two parts, and the two parts into four portions each. Six parts of stone were used in the pillars and slabs of the mosque of the madarasa; and two parts were taken by Khwaja (Dost) Muhammad. Bakshi of the Khanan (Mun'im Khan) who put them on the door way of the mosque at Jaunpur.

The remnant of the great pillar or lat mentioned by Bayizid survives in the mosuqe built at the site of the Visvesvara temle; it is thought originally to have been 40 feet high.

Bayizid does not say which mosque at Jaunpur obtained the relics from the temple destroyed by him. Mr. Iqtidar Alam Khan, to whom I am indebted for guidance on this source supposes it to have been the defaced Maukhari

inscription at the Jami Mosque and the outer arch of the southern entrance. This would otherwise in with Bayizid's reference to the stone having been placed on the door of the mosque. But the explicit reference in the Lal Darwaza inscription to the Visvesvara temple of Kasi leaves little doubt that it comes from one of the two stone parts of the pillar which Bayizid Bayat had sent to Jaunpur. The mosque had been built much earlier in A.D. 1447 by the Sharqi queen Bibi Raji.

3657. Another document placed before us as Exhibit B-16 (Suit-4) (Register 33 Page 91-133) is a copy of the Presidential Address by Sri S.P. Gupta at 23rd Annual Conference of Indian Archaeological Society held on Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) on 22nd December, 1989. The subject of the paper is "Ram Janambhumi Controversy: Passions Apart what History and Archaeology Have to Say". On this issue, since Dr. S.P. Gupta himself has appeared as witness before us, we find no reason to refer his opinion contained in the said document and instead would prefer to consider his oral statement as and when it is needed. Besides, the learned counsels for the parties, during the course of argument or in their written statements have also not referred this document.

3658. Suffice at this stage to mention that in his own way Dr. S.P.Gupta sought to convey that the disputed structure came into existence after demolition a Hindu temple existed at the site in dispute and for that purpose he sought to support his inference based on some historical and archaeological facts. On the contrary another enquiry was made by Sri Sushil Kumar Srivastava PW-15 and he took a contrary view.

The author himself has appeared as witness and the book is also available to the Court as Book No. 155.

3662. Since the author himself has appeared as witness on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-4) and the book itself is on record as Book No. 155, we find no occasion to refer the said exhibit and, in fact, it has also not been referred by the learned counsels during the course of argument or written arguments.

are photocopies of some pages of the book "Babar" by Dr. Radhey Shyam, 1st Edn. 1978. Sri Jain placed reliance on page 456 of the book (Register 34 page 111) where it reads as under:

> "A parallel may perhaps be found in Ayodhya where the famous Janamstha temple remained till Babar's days, although the place, for more than two hundred years had been the capital of the Muslim province of Oudh."

3664. On page 458 of the book, Sri Jain placed reliance on the following:

> "Moving via Kalpi and Kanoor, he crossed the Ganges and passing through Lucknow he entered Oudh on Saturday 7th Rajab 934 H./28th 1528 and encamped on the confluence of the Ghagra and Sarju rivers. From 2nd April 1528 to 17th September 1528 there is a gap in his Memoirs. It appears that during this period and until the beginning of the rainy season he remained busy in dealing with the Afghans. Before returning to Agra he appointed Mir Baqi to hold charge of Ayodhya. Shortly after Babar's departure Mir Baqi, on his own account attacked the Hindu temple with a large army. It is related that for seventeen days the Hindus offered resistance. At last failing to stand the onslaught they bowed before the inevitable. Mir Baqi, somehow managed to enter the temple and thereafter he tried to reach the sanctuary. Here the Brahmin priest of the temple, Shyamanand and the members of his family offered resistance to him and did not allow him to approach the sanctuary. Mir Baqi seized and killed the priest and the members of his family. He entered the sanctuary, but to his utter surprise he could not find a single idol there. Whether the temple was razed to the ground or not is still controversial issue. But it appears that he build the mosque over a part of the ruins or converted the temple into a mosque. The well known Baburi Masjid, which still stands there is claimed by the Hindus and Muslims both."

3665. In our view, the passage is noted to be rejected for the reason that the learned author has further said in continuation as under:

"The entire structure raises grave doubts. It may be observed that it would be quite injudicious to hold in any way Babar responsible for the destruction of the famous Janamsthan temple. Destruction of temples was neither in consequence with his policy not attitude, especially at a time when he needed the support of the non Muslim population."

3666. Next was Exhibit J-30 (Suit-4) (Register 34 Page 137-157) which is copy of the extract of an article "Ayodhya in Ancient India" by B.C. Law published in journal of Ganga Nath Jha Research Institute Vol. I, 1943, pages 423 to 443. Sri Jain refers to the following:

"Political History

The Ramayana refers to the kings of Ayodhya and the system of administration prevalent there. It is interesting to note here the duties of an Iksvaku king. Aroused from his sleep at dawn by the hymns of prisoners and sutas, a king was served with water for washing hands and feet. Duly bathed a Ksatriya king offered oblations to fire and prayed before the images in temples inside his place. After finishing the morning duties he used to attend to the business of his state and then go to his court where he would meet his ministers. The kind with his ministers used to listen personally to the prayers and complaints of his subjects. Worthy treatment was given to state guests including kings and princes. The king used to spend the the first half of each day in doing the business of his state and the latter half of his time was spent in enjoying the company of the ladies of his harem.

The chief aim of a righteous monarch was to earn the loyalty and goodwill of his subjects. He used to hear the report of his trusted servants and reliable courtiers in order to ascertain the public opinion about his government. He used to redress the grievances of his subjects as far as possible. Nobody was detained or kept waiting at his door if he came to pray for something before the king. He was assisted in his administration by able ministers, eminent jurists and men well-versed in the sacred lore. Punishment was always in proportion to the nature and gravity of the offence. Life-long exile or transportation was an alternative for death sentence.

The king used to give private interviews to spies and special messengers for confidential talks. Divulging state-secrets, watching or overhearing such secret talks were highly punishable. The succession to the throne was generally determined according to the law of primogeniture in the Iksvaku family.

Rama's youngest brother Satrughna ruled Mathura which he founded. His younger brother. Bharata, with his two sons Taksa and Puskala conquered the Gandhara

country. The cities of Taksasila and Puskalavati were ruled by the two sons of Bharata. Chandrakanta and Angadiya were ruled by the two sons of Laksana named Candraketu and Angada. Kusa and Lava were rulers of southern and northern Kosala respectively. Satrughna, Rama's younger brother, installed his two sons Suvahu and Satrughati as kings of Mathura and Vaidesa kingdoms respectively.

In the Mahabharata, the mentioned is made out sixteen celebrated kings (sodasa-rajika) some of whom belonged to Ayodhya, namely Mandhatr, Sagara, Bhagiratha, Ambarisa, Dilipa and Rama Dasarathi. In the Mahabharata mention is also made of Iksvaku, Kakutstha, Yuvanasva, Raghu, Nimi and others. The pious Dirghavajna was the king of Ayodhya when Yudhisthira ruled and performed his Rajasuya Sacrifice. Divakara was a king of Ayodhya who was the contemporary of Senajit, king of Magadha. Both of them were contemporaries of Asimakrsna. Iksvaku, one of the nine sons of Manu Vaivasvata reigned at Ayodhya who had two sons, Vikuksi-sasada and Nimi. From the former was descended the great Aiksvaku dynasty of Ayodhya generally known as the solar race.

The Iksvakus, Aiksvakus or Aiksvakas are the titles of the solar race. Iksvaku was so called because he was born from the sneeze of Manu. The Puranas give a list of the kings of Ayodhya.

The Ramayana genealogy, according to Pargiter must be treated as erroneous and the Pauranic genealogy is to be accepted. The Puranas say that there were two

Dilipas, one father of Bhagiratha and the other father or grandfather of Raghu, but according to the Ramayana, there was only one Dilipa, father of Bhagiratha and great-grandfather of Raghu. According to the Ramayana, Raghu was the father of Kalmasapada and Aja is placed twelve generations below Raghu but the Puranas make Aja son of Raghu. The Raghuvamsa supports the Puranas that Aja was the son of Raghu. The Ramayana makes Kakutstha son of Bhagiratha and grandson of Dilipa but the Puranas say that he was the son of Sasada. The Mahabharata supports the Puranas. The Raghuramsa also supports the Puranas in saying that from his time the kings had borne the title of Kakutstha and that Dilipa was his descendant.

From Dasaratha to Ahinagu there is general agreement. After Ahinagu, most of the Puranas give a list of some twenty kings Paripatra to Brhadbala agreeing in their names though some of the lists are incomplete towards the end.

The Aiksvaku genealogy of Ayodhya mentions the following kings :- (1) Prasenajit who was the contemporary of Matinara; (2) Yuvanasva II, Mandhatr who married Sasabindu's daughter named Bindumati Citrarathi, (3) Purukutsa and (4) Trasadasyu.

Jahnu of Kanyakubja married the grand-daughter of Yanvanasva, that is, Mandhatr.

The Talajanghas attacked Ayodhya and drove the king Bahu from the throne. Mandhatr of Ayodhya had a long war with the Druhyu king Aruddha or Angara and killed him.

www.vadaprativada.com

Subahu, son of the Cedi king Virabahu and Rtuparna king of Ayodhya, were contemporaries. Jamadagni allied himself with the royal house of Ayodhya for he married Renuka, daughter of Renu.

Sumitra was the last of the Iksvaku kings in the Kali age who was contemporary with the Buddha. The royal house of Iksvaku sank into oblivion at the time of this king.

The kings of Ayodhya were connected with the Vasistha family. The Vasisthas were their hereditary priests. The earliest Vasistha was the famous priest of Ayodhya in the reigns of Trayyaruna, Satyavrata-Trisanku and Hariscandra. The next great Vasistha was the priest of Ayodhya in the time of Hariscandra's successor Bahu who was driven from his throne by the Haihaya-Talajanghas aided by the Sakas, Kambojas, Yavanas, Paradas and Pahlavas from the north-west but Vasistha maintained his position.

Mitrasaha Kalmasapada Saudasa, king of Ayodhya had the fourth noted Vasistha as his priest. The fifth was priest to Dilipa II Khatvanga and the sixth was priest to Dasaratha and his son Rama. King Kalmasapada Saudasa beguiled by a Raksasa offered Vasistha human flesh as food and was cursed by him.

Iksvaku obtained Madhyadesa and was the progenitor of the solar race, with its capital at Ayodhya.

The kingdom of Ayodhya rose to very great eminence under Yuvanasva II and especially his son Mandhatr. The latter married Sasabindu's daughter Bindumati. He was a very famous king, a Cakravartin and a Samraj and extended his sway very widely. Mandhatr or his sons carried their arms south to the river Narmada. The supremacy of Ayodhya waned and the Kanyakubja kingdom rose into prominence under its king Jahnu. The Haihayas overcame Ayodhya. The foreign tribes settled there after Ayodhya was conquered.

Ayodhya rose to prominence again under Amsumant's second successor Bhagiratha and Bhagiratha's third successor Ambarisa Nabhagi.

Of the Manva or solar kingdoms that existed originally three remained, those of Ayodhya, Videha and Vaisali. These three Manva kingdoms were not dominated by the Aila stock. The earliest Angirasas were connected with Mandhatr, king of Ayodhya, and the eariliest Angirasa Rsi was connected with Hariscandra, king of Ayodhya.

Dasaratha called in the help of the rustic Rsyasruga from Anga. The eastern and southern kings and kings of the distant Punjab were invited to Dasaratha's sacrifice at Ayodhya. Ayodhya and the Vasisthas had no association then with the brahmanically elite region as Pargiter points. Out. The Kathasaritsagara refers to the camp of Nanda in Ayodhya.

In Buddhism we find that there was a king of Ayodhya named Kalasena whose city was surrounded by ten sons of Andhakavenhu (Andhakavenhudasaputta dasabhatika) who uprooted the trees, pulled down the wall, captured the king and brought his kingdom under their sway. The city of Ayujjha was governed by the descendants of king Arindama.

In Jainism we find that Prasannajita, a king of Ayodhya, give his daughter named Prabhavati in marriage to Parsvanatha.

Ayodhya seems to have been included within the kingdom of Pusyamitra Sunga. An inscription found at Ayodhya mentions the fact that Pusyamitra performed two horse-sacrifices or asvamedhas during his reign. According to a spurious Gaya plate, Ayodhya was the seat or a Gupta jayaskandharara or 'Camp of victory,' as early as the time of Samudra Gupta. Some coins of Pura Gupta have on the reverse the legend. "Sri Vikramah," which may be a shorter form of the full title 'Vikramaditya'. Allan identifies him with king Vikramaditya of Ayodhya, father of Baladitya, who was a patron of Buddhism through the influence of Vasubandhu. It may be assumed on the basis of this identification that the immediate successors of Skanda Gupta had a capital at Ayodhya probably till the rise of the Maukharis."

It was also sought to argue that mere inscription or other things are not conclusive to make a final opinion since in similar kind of historical building the tempering of inscription or travelling of inscription etc. have been noticed. In this regard reference was made to Exhibit J-29 (Suit-4) (Register 35 Page 237), photocopy of "Archaeological Survey of India report of Tours in the Central Doab and Gorakhpur in 1874-75 and 1875-76" by A.C.L. Carlleyle Vol. XII consisting of frontispiece, Index, Introduction and pages 24, 25, 26, 27 and Plate II, III, IV and V of the said book. On page 24, it deals with the details of City of Sambhal near Moradabad and in particular that part where it deals with a mosque constructed therein claims to be constructed on a Hindu temple of Hari Mandir and this is supported by an inscription fixed thereat. It says:

> "The old city of Sambhal is situated on the Mahishmat Nadi, in the very heart of Rohilkhand. In the Satyug its name is said to have been "Sabrit," or Sabrat, and also Sambhaleswar. In the Tretayug it was called Mahadgiri, and in the Dwapur, Pingala. In the Kaliyug it received its present name of Sambhala, or in Sanskrit Sambhala-grama. To the south-east of the city is Surathal Khera, which was called after Raja Surathal, a son of Raja Satyavana, of the Lonar race. Surathal Khera measured 1,200 feet in length from north-east to south-west, by 1,000 feet in breadth. Close to the south-south-west side of it there is another large khera, with a village on it called "Raja Sadun-ka-khera," or "Sadungarh," probably Satun or Sataun, for Satyavan.
> There are also many other smaller mounds between the two places. The two kheras of Surathal and Sadun together evidently once formed one large city. Another ancient place named Amrama-pati Khera is situated on the right bank of the Sat river, and near the village of Alipur.
>
> About a mile to the north-west of the last place, there is another mound called Chaudreswar Khera.
>
> Gumthal Khera, which is situated about 2 miles to the south-east from Surathal Khera, measures about 1,600 feet in length from east to west, by about 1,000 feet in breadth from north to south.

Sambhal and Chandausi.

The principal building in Sambhal is the Jami Masjid which the Hindus claim to have been originally the temple of Hari Mandir*. It consists of a central domed room upwards of 20 feet square, with two wings of unequal length, that to the north being 50 feet 6 inches, while the southern wing is only 38 feet 1 ½ inches. Each wing has three arched openings in front, which are all of different widths, varying from 7 feet to 8 feet.*

The Muhammadans ascribe the erection of the building to the time of the Emperor Babar, and point to an inscription inside the masjid, which certainly contains the name of Babar, but which the Hindus assert to be a forgery of late date. At or on the back of this slab, they say that there is the original Hindu inscription belonging to the temple. Several Musalmans of Sambhal confessed to me that the inscription containing Babar's name was a forgery, and that the Muhammadans did not get possession of the building until about the time of the mutiny, or a little before it, say about 25 years ago. That they took possession of the building by force; and that there was then a trial about the case in Court before the Judge of the district, and that the Muhammadans gained the case mainly by means of the forged inscription, and also by all the Muhammadans joining together and hearing false witness against the Hindus who were in minority.

In the forged inscription of Babar in the Hari Mandir at Sambhal, it may be observed that the name of Babar is wrongly given. In the inscription I read as follows:

Bani Aina Ilm o Amal

Shah Jamjah Muhammad Babar

ےا نبی انبیءہ علم و عمل	شام جم جاہ محمد بابر

But the real name of this king was "Shah Jahir-ud-din-Muhammad Babar."

The fine dome of this building is probably unique of its kind. It is a clear hollow shell from the keystone down to the ground. Its shape is very much like the hollow of the inside of a huge thimble. The interior shape of the dome is ovoid, or like the half of an ovoid ellipse rotated on its axis. The dome is built of brick, and it is said to have been rebuilt (as it now is) by the famous Prithvi Raja, who appears to have been a great benefactor to Sambhal. The circular dome stands upon an octagon, and the octagon upon a square.

The walls of the central square Hindu temple would appear to have been built with large bricks ceased with stone, but the plaster with which the Muhammadans have coated the walls conceals the material of which they are made; and I can only say that, on examining several spots where the plaster was broken. I found that in some places stone wax exposed. I believe that the Muhammadans stripped off most of the stone, especially such as bore traces of Hinduism, and made a pavement of the stones, turning the sculptures downwards. I observed traces which showed that the walls had once been much thicker when the stone casing was on. Underneath the outer steps of the outer court I dug out some fragments of sculpture in reddish sandstone, one of which was the upper portion of a

The Muhammadan wings added to the building, in order to turn it into a masjid, are built of small bricks, that is, whenever the walls happened to be bare of plaster. I found that the bricks were small and set in mud mortar. There is a clear and distinct difference between the old Hindu work and the modern Muhammadan work, and the old Hindu temple is at once distinguishable from the Muhammadan additions.

The square Hindu temple would have had originally only one doorway in the east wall, about 8 feet in width, but the Muhammadans cut four more doors, each 6 feet wide, two in the northern and two in the southern wall of the square temple, in order to communicate with the aisles of the side wings which they added.

[The inscription in the masjid which the Hindu denounce as being forged appears to me to be quite genuine. The text is as follows:-

3668. Sri Jain placed before us Exhibit J-24 (Suit-4) (Register 35 Page 273) which is photocopy of "The Monumental Antiquities And Inscription In The North Western Provinces And Oudh" published by Indological Book House, Varanasi in 1969. This very book itself is book No. 94 with the Court. The Exhibit contains the frontispiece, Index, Preface and pages 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 20, 21, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 179, 182, 184, 185, 186, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313. Sri H.S. Jain, learned counsel has placed reliance on pages 296 and 297 (Register 35 Pages 341-343) of the said book:

> "According to the Ramayana, the city of Ayodhya was founded by Manu, the progenitor of all mankind. In the time of Dasaratha, the father of Rama, it was fortified with towers and gates, and surrounded by a deep ditch. No traces of these works now remain, nor is it likely, indeed, that any portion of the old city should exist, as the Ayodhya of Rama is said to have been destroyed after the death of Brihadbala, after which it lay deserted until the time of Vikramaditya of Ujjayini, who, according to tradition, came in search of the holy city, erected a fort called

Ramgarh, cut down the jangal by which the ruins were covered and erected 360 temples on that spots sanctified by the extraordinary actions of Rama. The Vikramaditya of this story, General Cunningham takes to be Chandragupta II, of the Imperial Gupta dynasy, A.D. 395-415, whose rule certainly extended to Ujjayini, as his inscriptions have been found at Sanchi and Udayagiri Bhilsa.

There are several very holy Brahmanical and Jains temples about Ayodhya, but they are all of modern date and without any architectural pretensions whatever; but there can be no doubt that most of them occupy the sites of more ancient temples that were destroyed by the Muslamans. Thus Ramkot, or Hanuman Garhi, on the east side of the city, is a small walled fort surrounding a modern temple on the top of an ancient mound. This fort is said to have formerly covered a large extent of ground and according to tradition, it was surrounded by 20 bastions, each of which was commanded by one of Rama's famous generals after whom they took the names by which they are still known. Within the fort were eight royal mansions, where dwelt Dasaratha, his wives, and Rama, his deified son. The name Ramkot is certainly old, but the temple of Hanuman is not older than the time of Aurangzib. Ram Ghat, at the north-east corner of the city, is said to be the spot where Rama bathed, and Svargadvaram, also called Ram Darbar, on the north-west, is believed to be the place where his body was burned. Treta-ke-Thakur is famous as the place where Rama performed a great sacrifice, and which he commemorated

by setting up there images of himself and Sita. Close by is the Lakshmana Ghat, where his brother Lakshmana bathed, and about one quarter of a mile distant in the very heart of the city, stands the Janmasthanam, or "birth-place temple," of Rama*. Almost due west, and upwards of five miles distant is the Guptar Ghat, with its group of modern white-washed temples. This is the place where Lakshmana is said to have disappeared, and hence, its name of Guptar, from gupta, "hidden or concealed." Some say that it was Rama who disappeared at this place, but this is at Variance with the story of his cremation at Svargadvaram.*

There are five Digambara temples at Ayodhya which were built in Samvat 1981, in the time of Shuja-ad-daulah, to mark the birth-places of five Tirthamkaras, viz., Adinatha, Ajitanatha, Abhinandanatha. Sumatinatha, and Anantajit, who are said to have been born at Ayodhya. The temple of Adinatha is situated near the Svargadvaram on a mound, known as Shah-Juran-Ka-tila, on which there are many Musalman tombs and a masjid. According to the local Musalman tradition, Makhdum Shah Juran Ghori, who came to Audh with Shahab-ad-din-Ghori, destroyed the ancient temple of Adinatha and erected on its ruins the Musalman edifices which gave to the mound the name by which it is still known. Besides these five temples of the Digambaras there is a sixth temple of the Svetambaras, dedicated to Ajitanatha, which was built in Samvat 1881.

It is locally affirmed that at the Musalman conquest there were three important Hindu temples at Ayodhya:

these were the Janmasthanam, the Svargadvaram, and the Treta-ke-Thakur. On the first of these Mir Khan built a masjid in A.H. 930, during the reign of Babar, which still bears his name. This old temple must have been a very fine one, for many of its columns have been utilized by the Musalmans in the construction of Babar's Masjid. These are of strong, close-grained, dark-coloured, or black stone, called by the natives kasauti, "touch-stone slate," and carved with different devices; they are from seven to eight feet long, square at the base, centre and capital, and round or octagonal intermediately. On the second and third Aurangzib built masjids, which are now mere picturesque ruins. A fragmentary inscription of Jayachchhandra of Kanauj, dated Samvat 1241, and recording the erection of a temple of Vishnu, was rescued from the ruins of Aurangzib's Masjid, known as Treta-ke-Thakur, and is now in the Faizabad Museum."

3669. Exhibit J-26 (Suit-4) (Register 36 Page 423) is photocopy of "The Indian Antiquary A Journal of Oriental Research" by Sir Richard Carnac Temple, Vol. XXXVII, 1908 published by Swati Publications Delhi, 1985 containing frontispiece and pages 191 and 192. It shows that in the area of Kashmir also similar activities took place and Buddhist temple made a mosque as is evident from the following:

"At first sight this text should make it appear that there were Bhottas among the subjects of the Kashmir Kings. This is not probable, for Ladakh as well as Baltistan where independent possessions during the 16th century. But the trade between the Punjab and Yarkand, through Kashmir and Leh, was probably carried on without any interruption and this trade brought many Ladakhis and Baltis to Kashmir. They had there not only a rest-house of their own, but apparently also a Buddhist place of worship. There is a masjid below the castle hill of Srinagar, which is still known as the Bodo Masjid, and that it was formerly a Buddhist temple is shown by the fact that behind the white-wash on the walls the picture of Buddhist saints are to be found. This is well known to all Ladakhis."

3670. Pursuant to the excavation conducted by B.B.Lal some photographs as well as his comments were published in the book of ASI i.e. :

(a) Exhibit E2/1 (Suit-5) (Register 37 Page 5) is photocopy of Plate No. XLIX and Plate No. L published in "Indian Archaeology 1976-77-A Review" edited by B.K. Thapar, Director General, ASI published, by ASI in 1980.

3671. Considering a lot of material, some of which

discussed above, as well as relevant facts, it was found expedient by this Court to have a scientific investigation at the disputed site but without disturbing the position of the "makeshift structure" in respect whereto a status quo order was operating in various proceedings including the suits.

3672. What lie underneath? This question is of extreme complication ranging in a period of more than 500 years' of history. No clear picture emerges from various history books etc. In fact, the contemporary record did not answer the issues, one or the other way, with certainty but some record, authored after about 200 years i.e., 18th Century, state about existence of temple, its demolition and the construction of the disputed building, while some well known historians dispute it and some history books are silent. The case of muslim parties was that the mosque was constructed on an unoccupied, vacant land.

3673. Extraordinary situations demand extraordinary steps and strategy. In the peculiar circumstances, this Court decided to appoint an Expert body for scientific investigation, well recognized in the field of archaeology/history and ordered ASI to go for excavation at the site in question and submit report. The question formulated for ASI, was "whether there was any temple/structure which was demolished and a mosque was constructed on the disputed site".

3674. The details of ASI proceedings, we have already mentioned above. We have also mentioned about the objections filed on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit 4), defendant no.5 (Suit 5) and defendants no. 6/1 and 6/2 (Suit 3) but details thereof are skipped so as to be discussed at appropriate stage. Here is that.

3675. During the course of the excavation by ASI, a large number of objections/complaints were filed by the parties to the Observers (Two Judicial Officers of the Cadre of Higher Judicial Service) appointed by this Court. Subsequently, most of the contents of those objections since have resulted in the objections which the parties have filed before this Court against the report of ASI, therefore, we find it appropriate to consider in brief those documents also, as that will not only give a complete picture of the proceedings but will also be helpful to determine and adjudicate upon the objections taken by the parties against the final report of ASI.

3676. Between 14th April, 2003 to 26th July, 2003, thirty four such objections were filed out of which nineteen were filed through Sri Zaffaryab Jilani, Advocate; two through Mohd. Saleem, Advocate; two by Sri Mohd. Hashim (one of the plaintiff of Suit-4); four through Sri A.A. Siddiqui, Advocate; four through Sri Mustaq Ahmad Siddiqui, Advocate; two by Sri R.L.Verma, Advocate and one by Haji Mehboob (one of the plaintiff of Suit-4). In nutshell thirty two objections were filed on behalf of muslim parties and two on behalf of Nirmohi Akhara.

3677. The first complaint is dated 14th April, 2003 submitted by Sri Mohd. Hashim and Mahmood Ahmad, plaintiffs in Suit 4 through their counsel Sri Mohd. Salim, Advocate. It is addressed to the Observers and says that as per the order dated 26th March, 2003 and 10th April, 2003 of this Court, ASI was supposed to keep in seal 'Bones' and 'Glazed ware' in regular manner but they have failed to do so and this is disobedience of the Court's order. The two Observers obtained comments from the in-charge, ASI team, and, put in the following note dated 14th April, 2003:

''प्रस्तुत प्रार्थनापत्र में अंकित आपत्तियों के सन्दर्भ में भारतीय पुरातत्व सर्वेक्षण (A.S.I.) के टीम प्रमुख श्री बी0आर0मणि का अभिमत प्राप्त किया गया। श्री मणि ने बताया कि विभिन्न ट्रेंचेज से प्राप्त अस्थियों (Bones) को सील करने में उन्हें यह व्यवहारिक कठिनाई है कि सीलबंद अस्थियॉ स्वमेव कुछ दिनों उपरान्त नष्ट हो जावेंगी इसके अतिरिक्त उन्हें उक्त अस्थियों को सीलबंद करने में कोई कठिनाई नहीं है। उन्होंने वह भी बताया कि प्राप्त अस्थियों की संख्या एवं लंबाई संबंधित पंजी में अंकित करके उन्हें रखने में भी उन्हें कोई कठिनाई नहीं है।

"The opinion of Sri B.R. Mani, the in-charge of the team of Archaeological Survey of India (A.S.I) was obtained in context of the objections contained in the present application. Sri Mani has contended that the practical problem in sealing the bones obtained from various trenches, is that the sealed bones would de-generate automatically after a few days. Besides this, he has no other problem in sealing the said bones. He has also contended that he has no difficulty in maintaining and entering the number and length of the bones obtained, in the concerned register.

So far as the question of sealing the glazed wares is concerned, Sri Mani has contended in this behalf that in the details of trenches, they are being normally entered in the concerned pages. Since glazed wares are not antiquities, as such they are not being sealed at present. He has no objection in sealing them from now on. He has also contended that all the glazed wares discovered so far, are safe and their details are there in concerned registers."(E.T.C.)

3678. The objection dated 15th April, 2003 is again by the same two persons complaining that remains lying on the western side of the Babri Mosque are being removed without marking numbers and this act of ASI is contrary to the Court's order. The two Observers obtained comments from Sri B.R.Mani, Team Leader of ASI and mark following note dated 15th April, 2003:

''इस प्रार्थना पत्र पर भारतीय पुरातत्व सर्वेक्षण (A.S.I.) टीम लीडर श्री बी. आर.मणि का अभिमत प्राप्त किया गया। उन्होंने बताया कि ट्रेंचों में पड़े समस्त निर्णाण के अवशेष खण्डों की वीडियोंग्राफी, स्थिर फोटो ग्राफी करानें तथा उनका मोटे तौर पर रजिस्टर में विवरण अंकित करने में उन्हें कोई आपत्ति नहीं है तथा वे इस हेतु सहमत हैं। जहां तक अवशेष खण्डों पर संख्या डालने का प्रश्न है, इसके संबंध में उन्होंने व्यवहारिक कठिनाई बतायी तथा यह कहा कि अवशेष खण्ड़ों की ईंटें काफी जीर्ण शीर्ण दशा में है अतएव यदि वह ईंटें जिनपर संख्या डाली जावेगी यदि निकाल गयीं तो शिलाखण्डों पर संख्या डाले जानें का कोई प्रयोजन नहीं रह जावेगा। उन्होंने यह भी बताया कि संख्या डाले जाने पर उनसे इनके संरक्षण की भी अपेक्षा की जा सकती है जो उनके लिये व्यवहारिक रुप से संभव नहीं होगा।''

"The opinion of Sri B.R. Mani, the team leader of Archaeological Survey of India, was obtained on this application. He has contended that he has no objection in carrying out videography and still photography of the remains of all the constructions lying in the trenches and in broadly getting their details entered in the registers and that he agrees to it. So far as the question of numbering the remains is concerned, he has stated about the practical problems in this behalf and has contended that the brick of the remains are in very dilapidated state, hence if the bricks, which are numbered are removed, then no purpose would be served by numbering the stone blocks. He has also contended that after numbering them, their preservation can also be expected, which will not be practically possible for him." (E.T.C.)

3679. The complaint dated 7th April, 2003 (it appears that this complaint is wrongly dated and it ought to be 7th May, 2003 since in the complaint itself there is a reference of Court's order dated 10th April, 2003 hence it cannot be 7th April, 2003) is submitted by Sri Mohd. Hashim In Person, to the Observer complaining that the human bones, found in Trench ZG1, has been covered with soil without recording on the pretext that due to the objections of Muslims, it was not proceeded though no written objection was submitted by the Muslim parties and therefore, the bones recovered from Trench ZG1 as also from Trench F9 and G9 be directed to be recorded. The two Observers, after receiving comments from Sri Chandrabhan Mishra, Deputy Superintendent, the then incharge of ASI team, submitted its report as under:

*''इस प्रार्थना पत्र में वर्णित आपत्ति के संबंध में भारतीय पुरातत्व सर्वेक्षण दल के उपस्थित स्थानीय प्रभारी श्री चन्द्रभाल मिश्र उप अधीक्षण पुरातत्व विद से अभिमत प्राप्त किया गया। श्री मिश्र ने यह सहमति दी कि उनको ट्रेंच सं0 ZG1 व पूर्व में ट्रेंच सं0 F9, व G9 में प्रकट तथा वाद में आपत्ति करने पर उसे पुनः मिट्टी से दबाया गया अस्थियों को अभिलिखित करने में कोई आपत्ति नहीं है। श्री मिश्र ने यह भी बताया कि ट्रेंच सं0 F9, G9 व ZG1 में पूर्व में जो अस्थियां व अस्थियों के

अवशेष प्रकट हुये थे, उनके संबंध में वाद के पक्षकार श्री हाजी महबूब अली द्वारा गंभीर आपत्ति की गयी थी जिसके कारण इन अस्थियों को ट्रेंच से न तो बाहर निकाला जा सका और न ही उन्हें अभिलिखित किया जा सका, अपितु उन्हें छायांकन के पश्चात उसी अवस्था में मिट्टी में दबा दिया गया था।''

"The opinion of Sri Chandrabhal Mishra, Deputy Superintendent Archaeologist and the local in-charge of Archaeological Survey of India, was sought on the objections contained in this application. Sri Mishra has consented that he has no objection in recording the bones, which were earlier found in Trench no. ZG1 and F9 and G9 and subsequently buried under soil on raising of objection. Sri Mishra has also contended that the plaintiff's representative Hazi Mahboob Ali had raised serious objections regarding the bones and bone remains found in Trench No. F9, G9 and ZG1, due to which these bones could neither be taken out of the trench nor were they recorded and after being photographed, they were covered by soil in the same stage*."*

3680. Complaint dated 3rd May, 2003 was submitted by complainants through Sri Mushtaq Ahmad Siddiqui alleging that the procedure of putting seal on bags is not full proof and needs further modification by obtaining signatures of the parties on the seals put in by ASI. The team leader Sri B.R. Mani, ASI informed the two Observers that there is no objection in obtaining signatures of the parties or their advocates on the paper seal, put on the bags. Accordingly, the two Observers in their note dated 6th May, 2003 requested ASI to proceed accordingly.

3681. The next letter is by Sri Mohd. Hashim, one of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) on 16th May, 2003 against the nomenclature of various artifacts recorded during excavation and says:

''खुदाई से प्राप्त सामग्री को जिस प्रकार संज्ञा दी जाती है उससे उलझाव पैदा हो सकता है। एक जली मिटटी का टुकड़ा एक कुर्सी मेज तथा किसी अन्य वस्तु का पाया या कोई और अंश हो सकता है वह किसी पशु, घोड़े, हाथी की टांग भी हो सकती हैं उसे तुरन्त संज्ञा देना उचित नहीं लगता संक्षिप्त वर्णन गोल, लम्बा, चौड़ा टेढ़ा, मेढ़ा उत्कीर्ण आदि दर्शाकर इससे बचा जा सकता है।

अतः श्रीमानगण से प्रार्थना है कि नियमानुसार वास्तविक व स्पष्ट आकृति प्राप्त होने पर ही उसे उचित संज्ञा दी जाने की व्यवस्था की जाय।''

"Confusion can flow from the manner in which the articles found from excavation, are named. It can be a piece of burnt soil, a table chair and the leg or any other part of some article. It can be the leg of any animal, horse, elephant. It does not appear proper to immediately give it a name and this can be avoided by describing it briefly as round, long, wide, irregular, engraved etc.

It is not proper to name any broken, incomplete and un-clear figurine, as a human or animal figurine only on basis of imagination.

Hence, it is prayed that provision be introduced according to rules to give proper names only when actual and clear figurines are discovered."

3682. Apparently this complaint is mischievous and worthless. The ASI experts identify such item/artifacts which ordinary people cannot. If only clear items were to be named, no

3683. A much more detailed complaint along with six sketch diagrams is submitted on 21st May, 2003 by Sri Haji Mahboob one of the defendant (Suit-3). It says that in Trench G2, digging has been made in such a way so as to create squarish structural base instead of a floor. This is tried to be explained by six sketch diagrams out of which three mention dates as 16th May, 2003, one 18th May, 2003 and two 20th May, 2003. The observers sought report from ASI officials. Sri A.R.Siddiqui, who at that time was incharge of ASI team, explained the matter whereupon following note was put by two Observers on 21st May, 2003:

> "Enquiry was made from the incharge archeologist Sri A.R.Siddiqui with regard to the objections submitted by means of this application. He has given his views which are as under-
> 1. All the members of A.S.I. Team are performing their duties as per normal excavation rules and archeological ethics.
>
> With regard to Trench G2, here also, digging of the trench has been done accordingly and each detail has been mentioned on the daily report.
> 2. No violation of the archeological rules have been done in any trench including G2.
> 3. The brickbats are still visible in the trench G2, which can be examined any time.
>
> 4. Entire area of Trench G2 has not been excavated hence objection in this regard is premature*. Recording and photography of exposed area has been done.*

www.vadaprativada.com

Photography of the entire trench will be done after the excavation is complete.

5. No enquiry has been made from Trench Supervisor Mr. S.K.Sharma as alleged in para 6 of his objection.

No other view was expressed by Mr. A.R. Siddiqui with regard to other points raised through this application."

3684. We have examined day to day register of ASI of 16th May, 2003 in respect to Trench No.G2. It says:

Digging closed at 48 cm

Floor 1 removed (3 cm in thickness); Floor-2 20 cm in thickness also removed. Floor with brickbats paving removed

It also appears that a bone of 35 cm was found besides one Glazed Tile fragment, terracotta. These proceedings are duly signed besides others by Sri Haji Mahboob also on 16th May, 2003 itself.

3685. The 18th May, 2003 proceedings in day to day register of Trench G2 mentions:

"Operation Area: 227 x 370 (EW) in the northern side

Digging closed at 63 cm.

Floor 2 removed. A pillar base on plan.

Pottery: Red ware."

3686. Similarly, on 20th May, 2003, the following is mentioned in day to day register of Trench G2:

"Operation Area: Same

at 73 cm. Both the floors removed after recording and a brick paved floor noticed just below pottery*; Red ware, black slipped ware."*

3687. The proceedings of 18th May, 2003 and 20th May, 2003 are also duly signed by Sri Haji Mahboob.

3688. We have also perused site note book no.45 wherein recording of the proceedings pertaining to Trench G2 from 16th May, 2003 to 20th May, 2003 is noted at page 51 to 54. The Trench Observer Sri S.K.Sharma has recorded the proceedings as under:

"Date – 16-05-03

3689. Thereafter, it appears that further digging in G2 Trench was made by Z.Ali, Assistant Archeologist and his notes in Site Note Book 32 (Page 21 to 49) are for the period 17th July, 2003 to 2nd August, 2003.

3690. Mohd. Hashim Ansari submitted complaint dated

22nd May, 2003 to the Observer stating that Trench H4 and 5 on western side should further be excavated and white chabutara in Trench L8, be also excavated otherwise muslims shall treat as if the entire activities are for political gains and to harass the muslims.

3691. After obtaining comments from Sri A.R.Siddiqui, incharge/Deputy Superintendent, Archeology, the two observers endorsed the following comments:

''आपत्ति के सन्दर्भ में श्री ए0आर0सिद्दीकी, प्रभारी उप अधीक्षण पुरातत्वविद उत्खनन स्थल का अभिमत प्राप्त किया गया। उन्होंने यह अभिमत दिया कि–

(1) टेंच सं0 H4, H5 के पश्चिम तरफ की भूमि के उत्खनन के संबंध में मामला माननीय उच्च न्यायालय के समक्ष विचाराधीन है। माननीय उच्च न्यायालय के आदेश के अधीन इन ट्रेंचों में उत्खनन कार्य सम्पादित किया जायेगा। टेंच सं0 L8 में भी आवश्यकता होनें पर उत्खनन कार्य किया जावेगा।

(2) कंकरीट चबूतरे बाले ट्रेंच की खुदाई हो रही है।''

"The opinion of Sri A.R. Siddiqui, in-charge/Deputy Superintendent Archaeologist Excavation Site, was obtained in context with the objections. He has given the opinion that:-

(1) The matter of excavation of the land in west of Trench Nos. H4, H5 is pending before Hon'ble High Court. The excavation in these trenches would be carried out under the orders of Hon'ble High Court. The excavation in Trench No. L8 would be carried out on requirement.

(2) The trench with concrete platform is being excavated."

3692. Next is a letter dated 28th May, 2003 of Sri Jilani informing the observers that some information/photographs has been leaked out to media by ASI people and therefore, the member of the team, who has made such disclosure to media, be immediately removed. This allegation was denied by Sri C.B.Mishra, Dy. Superintendent Archaeologist/Incharge ASI team and he declined to take action against the member of ASI since none is indulged in alleged activities. A note to this effect has been made by Sri H.S.Dubey, H.J.S. (Observer) on 29th May, 2003 on the complaint itself.

3693. To the same effect is the complaint dated 28th May, 2003 submitted by Sri Jilani on the photographs of an inspection alleged to have been found in Trench J3 whereupon again comments were obtained from Sri C.B.Mishra, Incharge Archeologist. Thereafter Sri Dubey, Observer recorded the following note on 29th May, 2003:

> "In the light of the objections submitted through this application an enquiry was made from the Incharge Archeologist excavation, Sri C.B.Mishra Dy. Supt. Archeologist. Sri Mishra has given his views which are as under-
> 1. So far as photograph of the inscription of Trench No.J3 is concerned no photograph of the inscription has been prepared so far. Only print art of the digital camera photography has been prepared and shown to the nominees/parties present on 4.5.2003. Signatures of the parties or their counsel have not been obtained on this print out.
> 2. Photograph of the inscription published in the "Out-Look" of June 2, 2003, issue is not the actual and accurate photograph of the inscription found in J3, but it has been prepared with the aid of computer and is dissimilar from the point of letter formation and size of the stone, which is embeded in the aforesaid trench and till date has not been taken out of the trench.

www.vadaprativada.com

3. No screen was even used by the A.S.I. Team for projecting the picture of the disputed inscription.

4. Photograph/estampage of the inscription published in June 2, 2003 issue of 'Out Look' is not available with the A.S.I. And no photograph/estampage has ever been supplied by any member of A.S.I., to Sri Sandeepan Deb Managing -Editor of the "Out-Look", or to any other person."

3694. Complaint dated 28th May, 2003 was made by Sri Jilani alleging entry of unauthorized persons at the excavation site. In this regard Observer obtained comments from the concerned Magistrate who was responsible to allow entry to Authorized Persons only. After receiving his comments, the Observer recorded as under:

"Information of this application was given to Authorised person. An enquiry was also made from the manas Bahawan Magistrate. Authorised persona nd Manas Bhawan Magistrate informed that no entry-pass was issued to Sri Sandipan Deb and he was not nominee of any party. They also informed that Mr. Sandipan Deb was never permitted by them to enter the excavation site and observe the excavation work. Instructions were given to Authorised-Person for not permitting entry of any one, how so ever high he may be, in the excavation area, who is not covered by the orders of the Hon'ble High Court. Same instructions were also given to manas Bhawan Magistrate."

3695. Sri Jilani, vide letter dated 31st May, 2003, sought

permission to watch excavation work of Trench F-3 disallowed by security personnel on 30th May, 2003. We have seen the day to day register of 30th May, 2003. At the end of the proceedings, it contains signatures of four persons which included Haji Mahboob, one of the defendant in Suit-3, who had also appeared as witness, PW-2 on behalf of the plaintiffs (Suit-4). In fact on 29th May, 2003 also it appears that only four persons had signed the day to day register, which included the names of Sri Haji Mahboob and Mohd. Hashim Ansari, who are also plaintiffs in Suit-4. It is thus incorrect that parties or their representatives were not allowed to watch excavation work. It also cannot be said that any alleged discrimination was made by the authorities concerned for watching excavation work by the parties, their nominees or their representatives. Further, digging of Trench F3 commenced on 30th May, 2003 being a new Trench, and day to day register dated 30th May, 2003 contains the following note:

New Trench (2.50 mt x 1.90 mt)"

3696. The above complaint was made on 31st May, 2003. The proceedings of 31st May, 2003, as is evident from day to day register, shows presence of seven persons, who have signed proceedings on page 218 which included Sri Haji Mehboob as well as Sri Jilani. The excavation observations pertaining to Trench F3 on page 216 in day to day register dated 31st May, 2003 are as under:

> "Operation area (2.50 mt x 2.50 mt) today extended towards south and west. Digging started from .40 mt and closed at the depth of 1.63 mt from Dmt Surface. A L shape wall running west to east and South to North has been found made of Calerall, stone and sand stone block. The lime plaster over the wall partly damaged is noticed. Carved stone block contain two courses is also found in the section facing south."

3697. The Observer Sri H.S.Dubey obtained comments from the Authorized Person and made his observations as under:

"This objection was submitted at 11.10 a.m. today. Before information of this application could be given to the Authorised-Person, at about 12 Noon, message of Authorised Person was received through Nodal-Officer-Excavation site, RJB/BM, to the effect that Authorise-Person has no objection in the observation and watching of the excavation of Trench F3 or any other Trench by the parties, their counsels and nominees. It was also informed that no discrimination could be done on the basis of being Hindu or Muslim, in regard to the watching of the Trenches. Thus there is no necessity to take further step in this regard. After receipt of this application at about 12.10 p.m. Parties, their counsels, nominees visited the Trench F3. Thus the matter ends."

3698. The letter dated 7th June, 2003 is signed by several persons including Sri Jilani requesting Observer to ensure arrangement of waterproof Shamiyana over the entire area of Trenches to protect from damage due to water pouring etc.

3699. A much detailed complaint has been filed on 7th June, 2003 by Sri Jilani, Sri A.A. Siddiqui, Sri Haji Mehboob and Mohd. Hashim against the procedure followed by ASI Team in excavation. Allegations are made that in certain trenches i.e. G2 and ZF1, the brickbats randomly scattered over the excavated area were selectively removed by the Trench Supervisor to create a visual impression that the brickbats were confined to only a portion of the excavated area and that is how the structural bases have been discovered. It is said that these two trenches were monitored from 16th to 20th May, 2003 and 29th to 30th April, 2003 respectively. Lastly, it is complained that this kind of activities may have been followed in certain other trenches i.e. F10, F9, G9, F8, G8, F7, F6, G5, G2, F1, G1, H1, ZG1 and ZH1. To appreciate the complaint properly, we reproduce its contents hereunder:

> "Excavation procedures, in general, comprise of two aspects: a) diggiing in layers in trenches and b) recording through drawing and photography. It is the accuracy and transparency with which the above are done that will eventually impact on the interpretation of what is unearthed. This applies not only to structures but also to artifacts. However, it is precisely the lack of accuracy and transparency in relation to both structures and artifacts that marks the ongoing excavations at Ayodhya.
> The Progress Report up to April 24, 2003 submitted by the ASI makes note of "squarish/circular structural bases having brickbats at the base with two rectangular blocks of calcrete stone over three or four courses of brickbats ... the same type of structural base, with a sandstone block at the top having encasing of sandstone slabs/pieces, on its four sides, were found in the northern side also." The excavation of two such structural bases was closely monitored in Trenches G2 and ZF1*.*
> A close observation of the excavation and recording

was done of Trench G2 from May 16 to May 20, 2003*. It was found that brickbats randomly scattered over the entire excavated area were selectively removed so as to create a visual impression that the brickbats were confined to only a portion of the excavated area. An examination of the section even now reveals the fact that brickbats lay in the entire layer below Floor 1. When Floor 2 was dug through, once again a whole layer of brickbats was exposed which is still visible on the floor of the trench. Similar observations were made in* Trench ZF1 from April 29 to April 30, 2003*. Floor 1 was exposed at 40 cm bsl, Floor 2 at 57 cm bsl and Floor 3 at 80 cm bsl, all floors being lime-surkhi floors. Floor 1 was reached on April 29, 2003 that was cut through on April 30, 2003 exposing a complete brickbat layer. But during excavation, when a stone was observed as protruding out of the brickbats, the brickbats in the area immediately near the stone were left in place in a squarish shape while the rest of the brickbats were thrown. On April 30, 2003, when Floor 2 was cut through, the same kind of brickbat layer was exposed beneath it. This brickbat layer is easily seen even today by observing the south-facing section in* Trench ZF1 (see Fig. 1).

A more accurate recording in both cases would have shown lime plaster and mortar above the brickbats as these are part of the same floor. Lime-surkhi floors appear to have been laid over a combination of stone blocks and brickbats. The stones are places at intervals, in some cases quite randomly (as evident from F6-see Fig.2), with intervening spaces filled with brickbats, mud and brick

It is also apparent that this floor construction technique continued through successive phases of floor construction. At an early stage, at a depth of roughly 1.5m, resting on a brick-jelly filling, is structural base (henceforth sb) No. 5 in Trench F8 (see Fig.3). The same construction of brickbats underlying calcrete blocks is noticed here. This method of construction continued into the last building levels as seen in the case of sb No. 13 and also No. vi in Trench G2 (see Fig. 4). So also is the case in Trench F6 where a rectangular sandstone slab, two calcrete blocks, bits of broken floor and a smaller sandstone piece in a tilted position were recovered lying in the northwestern part of the trench just under the top floor. Stones were also used as fillers and leveling mechanisms (apart from forming part of foundation walls) as evident from the sandstone blocks that extend over almost 4m in the northern part of the trench (see Fig. 2).

These kinds of structural bases have been indentified in Trenches F10, F9, G9, F8, F7, F6, G6, G5, G8, G2, F1, G1, H1, ZF1, ZG1 and ZH1 (see No. 1-21 in Fig. 4). It appears that in the above-mentioned trenches too, brickbats were selectively removed in order to create an inaccurate visual impression of circular/squarish structural bases as revealed by a section study.

An examination of the sections of many of these trenches reveals that brickbats underlay the floors just as observed in the case of G2 and ZF1*. At the same time, it is disconcerting to note that brickbats have been removed* from the sections of various trenches: the south-facing section of G8/G9 baulk, north-, south- and east-facing sections of F1*, north- and south-facing sections of* G1*, north-facing section* H1 and east-facing section of the H1/H2 baulk, south- and west-facing sections of ZF1*, east- facing section of* G2 and east-facing section of F9*. This is surprising as the sections of lower levels below 2 m bsl of Trenches F8, G7 and J5/J6 are left with large bricks and potsherds protruding while in the upper levels (roughly above 2 m bsl), brickbats are often pulled out or chipped off level with the section.* This is also the case with human bones found at a depth of 1.30 m in Trench ZG1 that have been cut off in the section.

Inaccurate recording of artifacts recovered in excavation is equally worrying as this will impact on the eventual interpretation of the archaeological evidence. More importantly, the dating of structures largely depends on artifactual evidence found in a particular stratigraphical context. If there are inaccuracies in the reporting of artifacts, through selective collection, the dating of structures will also be inaccurate*. Methods of taking depth measurements of structures and artifacts, for example, are unsatisfactory as no spirit level is used to ensure that the measuring tapes are absolutely horizontal. Second, sorting is carelessly done for the excavation of the upper levels (roughly 2 m and above); very often what is picked up is what appears to strike the fancy of the labourers. On May 2, 2003, in* Trench ZH1*, an area covering 4 x 0.5 m up to a depth of 0.5 m was dug through*

and the soil thrown away without sorting. Bones from a human skeleton too were mostly thrown away. This situation contrasts strongly with the excavation of the lower levels (below 2 m) where sieving was done for Trenches J3 and G7*. At the same time, it is intriguing to note that* very careful sorting and collection was done for the upper levels of Trench G5*.*

*There appears to have been a selective collection of artifacts with the labour instructed to collect particularly moulded bricks, sculpted stone fragments and terracotta figurines. These last are all seen as contextually recovered while others such as Islamic glazed pottery, glazed tiles and animal bones are regarded as part of fill or dump or from a pit, and in many cases are thrown away. In the most recent such case (from May 24-27, 2003), the dump (about 1.5 m deep) over the top floor in Trench G5 yielded in a 2.5 x 4.0 m area 26 sandstone slabs and blocks that were collected and individually photographed. In contrast, the 61 calcrete blocks and pieces, out of which 8 were dressed blocks were all thrown away, save two blocks. The calcrete blocks were significant pieces of evidence from the relative quantity recovered as well as the plaster and mortar on them that indicates that they were used in constructing the walls of the Babri Masjid. Bricks that would also have been used in the walls of the mosque were thrown away while modern fresh bricks, without morter or plaster, (moulded with the number ZKR33) had been collected.*

Other inaccuracies can be pointed out taking as an example just two days (May 21-22, 2003) out of over two months of excavation. Trench J1 was reported to have been excavated up to a depth of 1.06 m on May 21, 2003 and 1.45 m on May 22, 2003. Yet, a glazed tile reported from the trench on May 22, 2003 was said to have been found at 0.65 m. The above was not reported as recovered through section scraping. The depth recorded for F8 on May 21, 2003, was 2.70 m and on May 22, 2003 at 2.65 m*. With each subsequent dig, the depth of a trench is supposed to increase while* here the reverse seems to be taking place suggesting inaccuracy in measurements*.*

These kinds of inaccuracies are also reflected in the Progress Report (up to April 24, 2003) submitted to the Lucknow Bench of the Hon'ble High Court. The physical description of the structural bases, indicating uniformity in their construction, is imprecise. In most of the structural bases, brickbats are not placed in courses but are random, in many cases in a tilted position. The height of brickbats varies from 5-55 cm even within the same so-called structural base. Brickbats do not only lie under the stone but even over as in sb No. 11 and 12 in F7 and sb No. 2 in F10. Diameters range from 1.10 m in sb No. 9 to 1.90 in sb No. 12. What is also averred as two rectangular blocks in each structural blocks is not always the case as seen in Trench G1 where sb No. 19 has four pieces of broken and undressed calcrete of varying shapes and sizes. Sizes of stones vary in most of the structural bases; for example, sb No. 15 has three large calcrete slabs (70 x 15 cm; 65 x 20 cm; one with width 20 cm, length unknown). Sb No. 11 in F7 has two calcrete slabs (55 x 20 cm; 55 x 25 cm) and sb

No. 10 has two sandstone blocks (55 x 25 cm; and a partially visible piece, 55 x at least 10 cm). Sb No. 12 in F7 has five pieces, four somewhat rounded calcrete blocks and a small sandstone piece in the center. Allthe larger pieces are roughly 30 x 20 cm. In fact, the shape of structural bases varies very often from square to rectangular to circular to oval.

As mentioned earlier, the Report claims that similar structural bases have been found in the northern area as well. However, this is not the case*. The* structural bases recovered in the north (No. a-j in Fig. 4) appear to have been part of a separate much later period structure*. These cover at least an area of 10 x 10 m. In the northern area are four clearly identifiable floors (including the top floor) and these sandstone structural bases are embedded in Floor 1 (see Fig. 1) and hence were contemporary with Floor 1. It appears that these sandstone bases had a calcrete block underneath. The impression being created by the ASI is of a brickbat base under the calcrete block. However, the brickbats underneath are only part of Floor 2 construction. Structural bases No. a-j are clearly differnt from No. 1021 not only in physical description but also in the sizes of the stones used. All the sandstones here measure 46 x 43 x 9 cm. This kind of uniformity is not the case with sb No. 1-21.*

While No. a-j appear to be structural bases, No. 1-21 are clearly not so. In the case of No. a-j the dressed and sometimes polished sandstone slab with the casing would have been visible with the supporting calcrete block under the floor and hence the latter would not have been visible. However, this does not appear to have been the case with sb No. 1-21. In the case of sb No. 8 in Trench F8 (see Fig. 3) and No. 11 in F7, for example, brickbats overlie the calcrete blocks and the whole is visible over the floor to which they are supposed to be contemporary. It clearly indicates that these cannot have been structural bases as this portion (brickbats and calcrete blocks) should logically have been under Floor 2. It also means that brickbat-cum-calcrete construction is post-Floor 2. It also means that brickbat-cum-calcrete construction is post-Floor 2. Further, sb No. a-j have no brickbats between the sandstone and the calcrete and this is not the case with sb No. 1-21. The brickbats overlying the calcrete blocks in sb No. 1-21 would have made the entire structure extremely unstable and incapable of supporting any superstructure. Brickbats would in fact get crushed under the weight of any superstructure. Moreover, if sb No. 1-21 were supposed to be structural bases, then surely those of circular shape would have been made of better and wedge-shaped bricks. Instead, what are found are brickbats very often of jagged shape (see Fig. 5), obviously achieved while being carved out during excavation.

That there is a problem with the interpretation of these structural bases is apparent from Trenches E6 and F6. What has been made out to be a structural base in Trench F6 appears to have been, on subsequent excavation, to be only part of an east-west running wall (see Figs. 6 and 7).

It is requested that it may kindly be ensured that a more accurate recording of structures, artifacts and depth measurements, of structures and artifacts, be maintained and the fictitious and manufactured structural bases being sought to be created in Trenches F10, F9, G9, F8, G8, F7, F6, G5, G2, F1, G1, H1, ZF1, ZG1 and ZH1 be kindly not labeled as structural bases and that No. 1-21 be got dismantled."

3700. Sri H.S.Dubey, Observer obtained comments from Sri B.R. Mani, Superintendent Archeologist, who was incharge of excavation site and his views have been noted down on 8th June, 2003 as under:

"The views of Incharge excavation site Sri B.R. Mani Supt. Archeologist were taken on this objection. Sri Mani expressed the following views:

1. There seems to be a calculated effort to defame the A.S.I. And demoralize it's team member by making statements through media and also through applications like the present one submitted by one of the parties in the case. A.S.I. being the premier institution of archaeology in the country has always been famous for accuracy and scientific approach in exploration and excavation work. For the first time a large scale excavation in a time bound manner in the presence of contesting parties, their advocates and nominees has been assigned to the A.S.I. by the Hon'ble Court for which two observers are also appointed. Under such circumstances there cannot be any lack of transparency and accuracy in relation to both structure and artifacts in digging and recording by the most

experienced and expert excavators of the Country.

2. It is totally wrong to say that brickbats were selectively removed to create in accurate visual impression on structural bases. On the other hand in loose and fallen brickbats were removed and well laid brickbats were left at their position while digging which have given circular/squarish shapes of pillar bases in several courses, often topped by huge stone blocks.

3. It is not understood that the allegation is made about dating of structures when the final report itself has not yet been released*. The recording of artifacts is perfect and as per approved principles of excavation, the depth are being taken for which each and* every trench Supervisor is using Spirit-levels which are provided to them, mostly attached with their tapes, which is perhaps not noticed by the parties putting allegations*.*

4. The collection of artifacts having decoration, designs, sculpted stone fragments, terracotta figurines, glazed tiles etc. are being made to suggest the concerned evidence. The feat usless material of universal type of not selected as archaeology finds and not sealed.

5. The materials found are being preserved after recording their find either in a particular layer or in dump or fill, in respective of their nature. They may be glazed pottery or tiles or animal bones, particularly the last one which are usually found in pits and not as groves*. These materials are being photographed, their drawing are being prepared and many of them being antiquities are sealed besides bones and glazed tiles.* Nothing of this sort is thrown away. Construction pattern of Babri Masjid is known very well for which collection of evidence is not required. Modern bricks have not been collected and nothing of archaeological importance has been thrown away.

6. It is again informed that no structural base has been created which has been observed by everyone and structural remains are being brought to life and cannot be dismantled as desired by the party concerned as it is against the principles of excavation and archaeological norms.

No other view was expressed by Sri Mani, with regard to this objection."

3701. We have also examined the above complaint from the record. The excavation of Trench G2 commenced on 16th May, 2003. The recording of the proceedings by Sri S.K.Sharma, Trench Supervisor has already been mentioned above. This digging continued under the supervision of Sri Sharma for four days i.e. 16th May, 2003, 17th May, 2003, 18th May, 2003 and 20th May, 2003. On all these four days, as per day to day register, the parties or their nominees, as the case may be, were present and had signed the said register as under:

3702. No such complaint that the Trench Supervisor or ASI people are making excavation in a different way was reported, if they were so watched by the above complainants continuously. It does not appear that any of these complainants is a technical person. On 21st May, 2003, on the basis of four days excavation of trench G2, Haji Mahboob, defendant in Suit-3 submitted complaint dated 21st May, 2003, which is appended with six sketch diagram. Haji Mahboob, in his own oral statement, has admitted that he is not a technical man. Obviously, the said complaint must have been prepared by someone else who had not taken the responsibility nor the name of such person has been disclosed. It is a bit surprising that upto four days of digging, when Haji Mahboob and Mohd. Hashim Ansari were throughout present and signed day to day register, but did not find anything wrong. However, a well technically advised complaint was made on the very next day i.e. 21st May, 2003. Thereupon the Observers obtained comments from Sri A.R.Siddiqui, Incharge Archeologist on that very date and placed his note on record. After more than fifteen days thereafter, complaint dated 7th June, 2003 was prepared with a similar kind of allegations but now in respect to some more trenches. It is also accompanied by a large number of technical sketch diagrams.

3703. The two witnesses PW-29 Dr. Jaya Menon and PW-

32 Dr. Supria Varma claim to have made the complaint of creation of pillar base by ASI people to the muslim parties. On page 79, PW -32 Dr. Supriya Varma has said:

> "These complaints were filed by Dr. Jaya Menon and me. These complaints were handed over to muslim parties and their counsels."

3704. PW-32, Dr. Supriya Verma was present at the site on the following dates:

(a) 5th April, 2003 to 12th April, 2003, (b) 11th May, 2003 to 31st May, 2003, (c) 22nd June 2003 to 27th June, 2003 and (d) 8th July 2003 to 19th July, 2003

3705. PW 29 Jaya Menon has given the period when she was present at the site, in para 2 of her affidavit, as under:

(a) 26th April, 2003 to 2nd May, 2003, (b) 20th May, 2003 to 31st May, 2003 (c) 22nd June, 2003 to 27th June, 2003 and (d) 19th July, 2003 to 26th July, 2003

www.vadaprativada.com

3706. Therefore, at Trench G2, between 16th May, 2003 to 19th May, 2003, according to the own admission, PW 29 was not present. Similarly at trench ZF1, PW 32 was not present (29.4.2003 and 30.4.2003). PW 29 in para 13M(i) of the affidavit under Order XVIII, Rule 4 has asserted that she observed Trench ZF1 from 29th to 30th April, 2003, noticed creation of pillar base and made a complaint.

3707. The Site Note Book no. 30 maintained by Sri A.R.Siddiqui, Trench Supervisor show at page 24 that digging of Trench ZF1 commenced on 29th April, 2003 and on that date digging could be made up to the depth of 40 cm. The note on the Site Note Book 30 dated 29th April, 2003 regarding Trench ZF1 is as under:

"This trench ZF 1 is also measuring 4 x 4 Mtrs. But its half of the part towards northern side is occupied by the barbed wire fencing and flower trees. So the only southern portion of the trench could be possible for excavation i.e. 4 x 2 Mtrs*.*

After cleaning the debries and brushing the surface the digging work in this trench has been started from the 0 cm depth up to the depth of 40 cms. At the same depth a floor made of lime and surkhi exposed towards western side of the trench. At the same time a brick wall exposed running towards west-east attached with the southern section of the trench resting on lime floor. The width of the brick exposed wall was 40 cms.

a glazed tile piece of blue colour T.C. Red ware and bones."

3708. On 30th April, 2003, the digging commenced at the depth of 40 cms. and closed at 65 cms.. The note of the Trench Supervisor Sri Siddiqui is as under:

"After digging up to the depth of 65 cms a brick structure or so called pillar base foundation was exposed almost at the centre of the trench measuring 100 x 100 cms. At the same depth and same level a floor made of lime Surkhi was also exposed on either side of the brick structure which is the earlier one or if both these were constructed at the same time so what was the purpose of building of both these structure as there is no co-relation between the two with each other.

Finding : glass bangle pieces

Red ware T.C.

Bone pieces"

3709. We may note here the proceedings of 1st May, 2003, 2nd May, 2003 and 3rd May, 2003 of Trench ZF1 also, as under:

Digging again started in this trench at the depth of 65 cms. After reaching to the depth of 75 cms. again a floor made of lime and Surkhi was also discovered on the western side attached with the section upto the almost half of the trench.

At the same time and same depth a wall made of bricks also exposed in the northern section running from west to east direction of about 200 x 55 cms. area.

However again the exposed floor removed for further digging. The last depth of this trench was 80 cms.

thus the layer making in this trench could be ascertained as under

A Layer (1) at the depth of 40 cms in the shape of lime surkhi floor

C Layer (3) at the depth of 75 cms in the shape of lime surkhi floor

After removal of baulk a floor made of lime and surkhi exposed partly in ZF.1 and partly ZE-1 trenches measuring 342 x 170 cms. the floor exposed running towards west east direction attached with the southern section at a depth of 75 cms.

course of digging just at 08 cms below the lime floor at a depth of 83 cms a brick wall with lime plaster exposed in this trench extending up to the next trench i.e. ZE.1. The wall was 55 cms wide while the length was 7.40 mtrs resting on a brick bats.

Further digging was continued up to the depth of 90 cms where again Floor (4) made of brick exposed on both the sides of the brick structure called pillar base foundation*. This earlier exposed pillar base structure is measuring 118 x 102 cms. Thus in this trench No. ZF.1 the stratigraphic context may be ascertained as under:*

Layer (1) i.e. floor (1) at the depth of 40 cms.

Layer (2) i.e. floor (2) at the depth of 65 cms.

Layer (3) i.e. floor (3) at the depth of 75 cms.

Layer (4) i.e. at the depth of 90 cms.

3710. The day to day register mentions following for the same period, as above, regarding Trench no.ZF1:

Digging started at 25 cm & closed at 40 cms.

A lime surkhi floor exposed on plan, partly damaged in the central half. A brick wall towards south running east-west.

Pottery: Red ware, slipped black ware" (Page 110)

"Trench ZF 1

3711. The day to day register on all the five days, as above, has been signed by the parties or their representatives but none of the above two witnesses have signed it. The two witnesses did not remain at Ayodhya from 1st June to 21st June, 2003. Therefore, we do not find any occasion for them to play any role in preparation of the complaint dated 7th June, 2003 or that might have been prepared by them by 31st May, 2003 but submitted on 7th June, 2003. We do not find anything on record to show that besides these two, anyone else assisted the complainants in preparing the objections since only these two have claimed on it.

3712. Now, the careless manner in which the complaints are made may be seen. On internal page three, in last paragraph, the complainants say that the depth recorded for trench F8 on May 21, 2003 was 2.70 m. and on May 22, 2003, it was found 2.65 m. It is complained that instead of increasing, the depth has gone decreasing. Had it been so, the complaint would have been absolutely correct. However, from perusal of Site Note Book No.44 maintained by Sameer Deewan, Trench Supervisor, on page 39 we find that the digging of trench F8, on 21st May, 2003, started at 220 cm depth and closed at 260 cm. On 22nd May, 2003, page 41 of the aforesaid site note book shows that the digging started at 260 cm and closed at 265 cm. The complainants instead of 260 cms. have mentioned 270 cm which showed that either they have deliberately tried to misguide the authorities or the complaints lack bona fide. This laxity is strengthened from the fact that in para 8(A) of the affidavit, PW 29 has said that on 2nd May, 2003 in Trench ZH1 area covering 4 x 0.5 metre dug upto a depth of 0.5 metre and soil was thrown without any sorting.

3713. PW 32 on page 212 of statement has said:

> "The Trenches G-2 and F-3 were excavated in my presence."

3714. The Site Note Book No.16 pertaining to Trench F3 maintained by Sri Sujeet Nayan, Trench Supervisor, shows that digging of Trench F3 started on 30th May, 2003 and continued till 19th July, 2003. A pillar base was found on 5th June, 2003. Page 25, site note book says:

> "A squarish brick structure (and in a "middle portion" scored out) seems to be a pillar base was noticed

3715. Admittedly, PW 32 was not present at the site from 1st June, 2003 to 21st June, 2003 and therefore, her claim that the excavation was made in her presence in Trench F3 as such is not correct. The correct position is that excavation of Trench F3 started when she claims to be at the site but on the date when pillar base was found, she was not present at the site. On page 211 about the objection dated 7th June, 2003 she said:

"I have clearly mentioned about the structural basis (which was later prescribed as pillar bases) in my objections dated 7th June, 2003, I do not know as to when the trenches referred in para 3 of objections dated 7th June, 2003 were excavated*. Since I was not present at the time of excavation of above referred trenches, I cannot exactly disclose as to when these trenches were excavated."*

3716. PW 32 also said that the objection dated 21st May, 2002 was also her's, as is evident from page 212:

"It is wrong to suggest that except the objections dated May 21, 2003 and 7th June, 2003, I have not prepared any other objection for the party I represented. It is correct to say that my objections of May, 21, 2003 related to trench G-2 alone*. It is completely wrong to say that no irregularity had been committed as mentioned in the objection dated 21st May, 2003, vis-a-vis, the irregularity during excavation in trench G-2 and it is also wrong to say that there was no occasion to point out any irregularity."*

3717. From the texture and the over all facts and circumstances, some of which we have already discussed, it appears to us that as soon as underneath structures started appearing, the complainants, in consultation with their alleged experts, engaged in preparing a kind of anticipatory ground to assail the ASI people, their proceedings and report. What was submitted on spot does not show that it was a simultaneous preparation of something which was actually observed and found objectionable by the persons present thereat.

3718. PW 30, who claims to remain present at the site of excavation from March to August 2003 (para 2 of the affidavit), has said on page 118:

> 'यह सही है कि अयोध्या की खुदाई में अदालत के आदेशों के अनुसार सभी पक्षकार एवं उनके नामिनी की उपस्थिति में ही कोई मजदूर या ए0एस0आई0 टीम का कोई सदस्य उत्खनन क्षेत्र में जा सकता था। खुदाई के समय अदालत द्वारा नियुक्त पर्यवेक्षक उपस्थित रहते थे। .... खुदाई के समय मेरे साथ मुस्लिम पक्ष के एक, दो, तीन एक्सपर्ट – नामिनी रहते थे।'' (पेज 118)

> "It is true that in the Ayodhya excavation, under the orders of the court, any labourer or any member of the ASI team could go to the excavation site only in the presence of all the parties or their nominees. Court-appointed supervisors used to be present at the time of excavation. ... At the time of excavation, I used to be accompanied with one or two or three experts or nominees from the Muslim side." (E.T.C.)

3719. PW 16, Suraj Bhan, visited the site of excavation for three days in June 2003 and has admitted that consistent with the GPR survey anomalies, ASI has discovered certain walls, pillars, floors. He stated :

> ''जी0पी0आर0 सर्वे ने जो एनामलीज हिन्ट की थी, उनमें से कुछ पर उत्खनन में वाल्स, पिलर्स और फ्लोर्स तो मिले थे,'' (पेज 153)

www.vadaprativada.com

"at some places in respect of which anomalies were hinted in the G.P.R. survey, walls pillars and floors were discovered in the excavation" (E.T.C.)

"मेरी दृष्टि में ए0एस0आई0 की रिपोर्ट में जो आलोचना न किए जाने वाली चीज़ थी, वह यह थी कि उन्होंने बाबरी मस्जिद के नीचे कई दीवारें, फर्श और कुछ पिलर बेसेज़ खोज निकाले हैं, यह साक्ष्य है।" (पेज 199)

"In my opinion, the ASI Report had a feature not amenable to criticism*. It was that they (the excavators)* have discovered many walls and floors and some pillar bases beneath the Babri mosque, and all these constitute evidence." (E.T.C.)

3720. We find it a bit surprising that the two experienced experts i.e. PW-16 and 24 of plaintiffs (Suit-4) visited the site in June, 2003 yet they were not taken into confidence by disclosing full facts pertaining to the alleged creation of pillar bases.

3721. Trench F10 was taken up for excavation on 18th May 2003 by the Trench Supervisor Z. Ali. Site notebook no. 9 from pages 37 to 45 deals with Trench F10 which was excavated on 18th, 20th, 21st and 22nd May, 2003 Sri Z.Ali found floors and brick structures which he mentioned in detail. The day to day register dated 18th May 2003 at page 178 says:

Digging closed at 10 cm.

Squarish brickbats alignments noticed on plan

Pottery: Red ware."

3722. Similarly further details of other three days are on pages 183, 187 and 191. They are also duly signed by the representatives of the parties which do not include either PW 29 or PW 32.

www.vadaprativada.com

3723. In the complaint, about Trench F10, the only averment is:

> "Brick bats do not only lie under the stone but even over as in SB No. 11 and 12 and F7 and SB No. 2 in F10."

3724. This is the only reference of Trench F10 mentioned in the aforesaid complaint. Thereafter, in the concluding part it has been included with the allegation that structural bases are being sought to be created in trenches. The site notebook no. 9 on page 37 shows that after initial excavation a floor was exposed and in order to go deep the floor was removed in the north half. It is just below the floor, a single course brick alignment partly squarish shape was noticed at 10 cm depth which was below the floor. Then again further structure was found on 20th May, 2003 going further deep, i.e., from 10 cm to 52 cm.

3725. We find no reason to doubt the correctness of the above record. There does not exist any other reason to infer that there could have been any occasion for the Trench Supervisor, Sri Z. Ali to create any pillar base on his own and if so why.

3726. Trench F9 is mentioned in the complaint with a general statement that brick bats have been removed from the sections. Amongst other, Trench F9 is also mentioned.

3727. Site notebook no. 18 contains the details of excavation of Trench No. F9 under the Trench Supervisor, Sujeet Narayan (Assistant Archaeologist). The work started on 8th April, 2003 and on the first day, digging was made up to the depth of 25 cm. Further digging was made on 9th April, 2003 from 25 cm to 55 cm, and on 17th April, 2003 from 55 cm to 80 cm. On page 6 of the notebook, discovery of a pillar base at the depth of 50 cm is mentioned on 9th April, 2003. PW 29 obviously was not present when the above digging took place though PW 32 was present at the site as claimed by her. There is no averment however by her that she witnessed anything wrong in Trench F9.

3728. In the day to day register dated 9th April, 2003, brief detail of the work of Trench F9 is mentioned at page 39 to 41. The register has been signed by nine persons which included Mohd. Abid, Mahfooz Ahmad, Khalid Ahmad Khan. We find no reason as to why after almost two months this kind of complaint was made when at the relevant time nothing of this sort was found by any party particularly when nine persons have signed day to day register showing that it was highly watched at that time.

3729. Moreover GPR survey indicated anomaly at the depth of 0.5 meter and ASI actually found pillar base in Trench F9 at such depth which conform the said anomaly. PW 32 Dr. Supriya Verma has admitted that she is totally unaware of the GPR report and has not even gone through it. On page 133/134 she has shown her unawareness with GPR survey report. On page 132 she said "such so called pillar bases appearing in the section were not created in my presence but from the close study of the section, I could say that there were created pillar bases." This is purely imaginary and that too without giving reasons in support of such an opinion.

3730. In order to give weight to her statement she says that "pillar base shown in the baulk of F2 G2 was created in my presence and I lodged complaint against ASI observations. It was created between 16th to 20th May, 2003. Besides me, Mohd. Abid

was also present at the time of aforesaid pillar base being created. This pillar base and pillar base no. 21 was created during aforesaid period of 5 days."

3731. Sri Abid on page 156 has said that he has seen only one person creating pillar bases in respect to whom a joint objection was given to observer though the complaint was not signed by him. The person concerned was some Sharma. On his complaint the observer also came to the site. His statement is:

> ''मैंने अपने जो बयान में कहा है कि पिलर बेसेज़ काटकर बनाये गये हैं, वह ए0एस0आई0 के सभी लोग नहीं करते थे। मैंने अपनी मौजूदगी में एक साहब को बनाते हुए देखा था उनके बारे में ज्वाइन्टली आब्जेक्शन आब्ज़र्वर्स को दिया था। वो साहब का नाम शायद शर्मा जी था। उस एतराज़ पर हमारे दस्तख़त नहीं हैं। बल्कि वह हाजी महबूब साहब या ज़फ़रयाब जीलानी साहेब आदि के दस्तखत से दाख़िल किया गया था। यह पिलर बेस ट्रेंच नं0 जी–2 के आस–पास था, पर मुझे तारीख़ और समय अब याद नहीं है। मैंने आब्ज़र्वर्स को जाकर बताया था कि वहॉ पर पिलरबेस बनाये जा रहे हैं। दोनों आब्ज़र्वर्स चेम्बर में बैठे रहते थे और वहीं जाकर दोनों को बता दिया करता था। मेरी शिकायत पर आब्ज़र्वर्स मौके पर गये थे। यह मुझे पता नहीं कि आब्ज़र्वर्स साहब ने इस न्यायालय को इस संबंध में रिपोर्ट दी थी या नहीं। पिलर बेस बनाने के दौरान ही अर्थात् प्रासेस के दौरान ही मैं आब्ज़र्वर्स साहब को वहॉ ले गया और दिखाया था। मुझे नहीं मालूम कि आब्ज़र्वर्स साहब ने ए0एस0आई0 वालों से कुछ कहा या नहीं। मैं जब आब्ज़र्वर्स साहब के साथ मौके पर गया तो आब्ज़र्वर्स साहबान वहॉ खड़े हो गये और वहीं खड़े रहे।'' (पेज 156)

> *"The fact stated by me in my statement that the pillar bases have been carved out, was not done by all the ASI people. I had seen one gentleman do the same in my presence. I had given a joint objection to the observers regarding him. That gentleman was probably known as Mr. Sharma. Said objection does not bear my signature and instead had been filed under the signature of either Hazi Mahboob or Zafaryab Jilani etc. This pillar base was near the Trench No. G2, but I do not recollect the date and time now. I had gone to the observers and told them that pillar bases were being carved. Both the observers used to remain seated in the chamber and I used to tell both of them over there. The observers went to the spot on my complaint. I do not know whether the observers had submitted a report in this behalf to this Court, or not. I had taken the observers to that place during the creation of pillar bases, i.e., during the process and had shown it to them. I do not know whether the observers told something to the ASI people, or not. When I visited the spot alongwith the observers, they stopped there and stood there." (E.T.C.)

3732. Now this statement of Sri Abid does not corroborate statement of PW 32 inasmuch as she has not said anything about such complaint to Observer and his coming to the concerned place etc.

3734. Trench F6 was supervised by Gajanan L. Katade. The excavation commenced on 29th April 2003 on which date PW 32 was not present at site. It continued on 1st May 2003, 2nd May 2003 and 3rd May 2003. The pillar base is said to have been discovered on 01.05.2003. In day today register four persons have signed the report on page 122. Nothing has been said against the above Trench Supervisor as is evident from the statement of Mohd. Abid.

3735. Trench G9 though has been mentioned in the complaint alleging that the same was created but on page 25 DW 6/1-2 Mohd. Abid has admitted that there was no disturbance in the pillar base shown in plate 38, Vol. II, ASI report, which is pillar base no. 45, Trench G9. He says:

> ''प्रश्नः— क्या आप जब मौक़े पर थे तो प्लेट नं. 48 में छायांकित कथित पिलरबेस ऐज़ ईट इज़ ऊपर की सतह खोदने के बाद निकला।
> उत्तरः— इस कथित पिलर बेस के ऊपर लाइम सुर्ख़ी मौजूद थी और इसके ऊपर फ़लोर था इसलिए पिलर बेस नहीं कहा जा सकता हैं
>
> "Question:- Whether the alleged pillar base appearing in Plate No. 48, had been recovered as it is on excavation of the upper surface, in your presence at the spot?
>
> Ans. Lime-'Surkhi' were present over this alleged pillar base and a floor existed above it, due to which it cannot be called pillar base.
> It is correct to say that after removal of the floor, it was appearing similar to the one appearing here. It is wrong to say that concrete or sand stone bases have been found in all the alleged pillar bases, as found in plate 48. The alleged pillar base appearing in plate 48, was found in the same form and it had not been cut." (E.T.C.)

3736. We may mention at this stage that there is a self contradiction in the statement of expert witnesses of Sunni Board and other muslim parties. While DW 6/1-2 on page 25 has not disputed the correctness of pillar base in Trench G9 as shown in page 48, Vol. II of ASI report, PW 29 Jaya Menon on page 230 has said:

"The Plate No. 48 shows some structure but the same is not pillar base. I do not know what it is."

3737. Similarly in the complaint the pillar bases in Trench ZF1, ZG1 and ZH1 have been alleged to be created by ASI people but PW 32, Dr. Supriya Verma on page 120 has admitted the pillar bases forming part of Z series:

"The pillar bases which are acceptable to me form part of Z series of trenches*. The area of the Z series of trenches was surveyed by the GPR survey team but I am not hundred percent sure as to whether they had covered that area or not."*

3738. The pillar base in Trench ZH1 has been admitted to be there and correct by PW 29 on page 203 where she said:

"Plate no. 36, 37, 38 of the ASI report were shown to the witness who stated that all these photographs are INSITU photographs of pillar bases. These pillar bases were found in the north of dispute site. In my opinion these are the pillar bases*."*

3739. Plate no. 36 is pillar base no. 13 Trench ZH1 while plate No. 37 and 38 are pillar bases no. 1 and 5 of trenches ZH 3/ZH 2. The above discussion, therefore, shows that in respect to most of the pillar bases which are mentioned in the above

complaint one or the other witnesses have said otherwise.

3740. There are three complaints of 8th June 2003, two by Sri A.A. Siddiqui and one by Sri R.L. Verma Advocates. The two complaints of Sri Siddiqui are about omission of recording of a glazed ware recovered from Trench F3 on 6th June, 2003 by the Trench Supervisor, Sujeet Narayan Singh and rest one is about some newspaper reports. Sri R.L. Verma had complained against stoppage of excavation in Trench F4 and G4. Complaint dated 05.06.2003 is by Sri Hazi Mahboob about the visit of Sri S.P. Gupta at the site but non mention of his name at the entry point. Complaint dated 07.06.2003 is by Sri Jilani for taking protective measures. The complaint dated 10.06.2003 in fact is not a complaint but a letter requesting the Observer asking ASI to inform about the trenches where excavation has completed so that his experts may enter the same and obtain necessary information. Then again the complaints dated 11.06.2003, 28.05.2003, 28.05.2003 are in respect to some news paper reports etc. The complaint dated 13.06.2003 is for arranging water proof tents for protection of trenches. The letter dated 08.06.2003 is about an inquiry pertaining to samples sent to various laboratories. Then letter/complaint dated 15.06.2003 of Sri Jilani is for ensuring the observances of principles of excavation by ASI team in preparation of report. It says:

> "With reference to the orders of the court regarding maintenance of Transparency of the excavation work and digging to be done on the basis of the principals governing excavation, it is submitted that setting up Section Labels, indicating stratum numbers, on the key/important sections, was imperative and in the initial stages of digging this practice was even adopted but, for the reasons best known to the ASI Team, this practice was not only abandoned but even the labels put earlier were removed making it almost impossible for our Nominees and Experts to check and observe the strata, specially with reference to the numbering of layers vis-a-vis the pottery kept in the pottery yard.

It may also be relevant to mention that sketch plans of the features (walls etc.) uncovered during excavation and sketch of sections of certain key trenches should also be accompanied with any report filed by the ASI, whether progress report or any other report, and in future this essential component of the report should not be omitted.

It is therefore requested that the ASI Team Leader may kindly be instructed to observe the aforementioned principles of excavation so that transparency may also be maintained in the excavation work and the digging/excavation may be completed and report may be submitted in accordance with the order/orders of the Court."

3741. Thereupon the Observer has made the following note, after obtaining views of Sri Hari Manjhi ASI team leader at that time:

"The views of the ASI team leader Shri Hari Manjhi on the objections raised in this application/objection are as follows:

The ASI has been following the transparency in the excavation work right from the beginning and the work is being carried out strictly on the principle of excavations.

There is nothing known as section labels as mentioned in the application dated 15.06.03 by the learned advocate. The layer labels and with them only the photograph of the trenches and their section are taken. All the sectional photographs contain layer labels and as such it is wrong to say that layer labels have not been put up on the sections. Due to wind, rains and other factors the labels have fallen and damaged. They have not been removed. Any trained excavator and archaeologist does not require the layer labels for study the strata and he can study the stratigraphy on the basis of his own knowledge. It is strange that the experts nominated by the party are finding it "almost impossible", "to check and observe the strata". Relevant sketch plans of the features (walls etc.) would be definitely included in the final report and to far as periodic progress report is concerned they are not required as essential feature of the report.

As the ASI team is following the principles of excavation/perfectly and observing full transparency in the work no instruction is required to be given to the team leader in this regard."

3742. The complaint dated 21.06.2003 by Sri M.A. Siddiqui is in respect to certain media reports. The complaint dated 21.06.2003 by Sri M.A. Siddiqui is for requesting ASI people to notice the existence of plaster on the walls in trench F1, F6, F8 and F9. The letter dated 01.07.2003 of Sri R.L. Verma is not a complaint but actually it is an objection against the complaint dated 07.06.2003 and 29.06.2003 submitted on behalf of muslim parties alleging that there is an attempt to put

barrier and hurdle in the free functioning of ASI whithout there being any substance.

3743. Next is the complaint dated 28.06.2003 signed by several persons including Sri Jilani, Mohd. Afzal, Hazi Mahboob etc. as a supplementary objection to that of dated 07.06.2003. It requests that apart from the pillar bases ZH2/ZJ2 baulk other reported structures be not labeled as pillar base and be dismantled. Here complaint is in respect to Trenches G8, J1, H9 and H10.

3744. There are three more complaints of the same date. The second complaint dated 28.06.2003 by Sri Jilani and others is in respect to pillar base G5 and next one is with respect to the stratification in Trench G8.

3746. So these are the total complaints. The substantial one are dated 21.05.2003, 07.06.2003 and 28.06.2003. Broadly we have seen and considered the same by perusing record and find no basis. It thus appears that these complaints were a brainchild of two experts PW-29 and 32 who could not support the same during cross examination. This is really unfortunate. As admitted by these two witnesses, they were partisan and interested, yet it was expected from the renowned Experts that they shall tender opinion objectively but here we found it lacking.

3747. Now we proceed to those objectives which were filed before us after ASI report. Such objections/additional

(a) Objection dated 8.10.2003 filed by plaintiff no.1 (Suit-4). The prayer made in the objection is to reject the ASI report dated 22.08.2003.

(b) An additional objection dated 3.2.2004 was also filed by plaintiff no.1 (Suit-4). It was filed on the ground that initially, only four out of ten video cassettes were displayed and unless all the video cassettes are displayed to the parties alongwith other concerned material, complete objection may not be filed. In the circumstances, while permitting all the cassettes/C.Ds to be made available to the party/parties concerned, they were also permitted to file additional objections. The prayer for rejection of ASI report was reiterated in the additional objections.

(c) Objection dated 6/8th October 2003 filed on behalf of defendant no.5 (Suit-5) Mohd. Hashim praying for rejection of ASI report and in particular, Chapter X thereof, and further to direct ASI as under:

"(i) to make a tabulation of all the bone pieces, glazedwares and glazed tiles found during excavation in the manner the other finds have been tabulated, indicating the layer, trench, pit or dump with a comparative table of the other artefacts as well.

(ii) to place the whole situation of the entire spot on one sheet at one surface by making use of different inks as regards the structures, the floors, the walls with other materials found/noticed by the ASI during the course of excavation and if it is found difficult it may be done on the 5 sheets as the ASI has itself indicated to have partitioned the area in 5 blocks and below the same the necessary notes enabling the reader to get whole thing at one look instead of jumping through different chapters, figures, plates or appendixes."

Defendant no.5 (Suit-5) also filed a supplementary objection dated 16.2.2004.

(d) Plaintiff no.9 (Suit-4) filed objection dated 8/9thOctober 2004 praying for rejection of ASI report. Plaintiff no.9 in para 2 of objection adopted objections filed by other plaintiffs and raised his objection in addition thereto. In para 8 of his additional objections, plaitniff no.9 also adopted the additional objections filed by plaintiff no.1 (Suit-4).

3748. There are several replies filed by other parties to the objections/supplementary objections referred to above but we find it unnecessary to refer in details at this stage.

The Nature, Status and Scope of challenge to ASI Report

3749. Order XXVI, Rule 10A of C.P.C. empowers the Court to issue a commission where the question involving a scientific investigation is involved and the Court is of the opinion that it would be convenient to have a commissioner appointed to enquire into such question and file report. The procedure of commission, as contained in Order XXVI rule 10, has been made applicable vide sub-rule 2 of Rule 10A. Order XXVI, Rule 10 and 10A of C.P.C. read as under:

"Rule 10. Procedure of Commissioner- (1) The Commissioner, after such local inspection as he deems

necessary and after reducing to writing the evidence taken by him, shall return such evidence, together with his report in writing signed by him, to the Court.

(2) Report and depositions to be evidence in suit- The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report) shall be evidence in the suit and shall form part of the record; but the Court or, with the permission of the Court, any of the parties to the suit may examine the Commissioner personally in open Court touching any of the matters referred to him or mentioned in his report, or as to his report, or as to the manner in which he has made the investigation.

(3) Commissioner may be examined in person-Where the Court is for any reason dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner, it may direct such further inquiry to be made as it shall think fit.

Rule 10A. Commission for scientific investigation- (1) Where any question arising in a suit involves any scientific investigation which cannot, in the opinion of the Court, be conveniently conducted before the Court, the Court may, if it thinks it necessary or expedient in the interests of justice so to do, issue a Commission to such person as it thinks fit, directing him to inquire into such question and report thereon to the Court.

(2) The provisions of rule 10 of this Order shall, as far as may be, apply in relation to a Commissioner appointed under this rule as they apply in relation to a Commissioner appointed under rule 9."

3750. A bare reading of Rule 10A of C.P.C. shows that a

discretion is vested in the Court to get any scientific investigation conducted only if it thinks necessary or expedient. It is only when the Court is of the opinion that scientific investigation may help it in extracting truth. The report of Commissioner appointed to make investigation together with the evidence enclosed therewith is an evidence in the suit. The parties having grievance, have two kinds of remedies. Firstly, they can file an objection to the report and secondly, they can also lead evidence to show that what has been said in the report is not correct.

3751. In Vembagounder Vs. Pooncholai Gounder AIR 1996 Madras 347 the Court took the view that before asking parties to lead evidence on merit, if an objection has been raised to the report of Commissioner, it ought to be considered and decided.

3752. In this case also parties have raised objections against the report and were to be decided by this Court, but then it was found that the nature of objections raised by the parties is such that unless the parties are allowed to lead evidence, as several factual aspects were involved, the decision on objection cannot be taken. Therefore, a detailed order was passed on 03.02.2005 directing that ASI report shall be admitted as an evidence but the objections raised by the parties shall be considered and decided at the time of final hearing by which time the evidence etc. would stand completed.

3753. In Amena Bibi Vs. S.K. Abdul Haque AIR 1997 Cal. 59 the Court said that acceptance of Commission's report as an evidence does not mean that parties are precluded from challenging the report. The report of the commissioner is not binding on the Court. It may accept the facts arrived at by the commissioner or may not accept his conclusion or vice-versa as held in Bibhuti Bhushan Vs. Sadhan Chandra AIR 1965 Cal. 199 and Sankar Kumar Vs. Mohanlal Sharma AIR 1998 Orissa 117.

3754. There is no requirement in law nor the reading of rule 10 or 10A C.P.C. which shows that unless the Commissioner is examined as a witness, his report cannot be treated to be a substantive evidence. None of the parties in this case has opted to examine the commissioner touching on any of the matter in the report submitted by ASI. In fact the detailed objections filed by the parties, particularly the plaintiffs (Suit-4), do not suggest that the entire report and finding are incorrect or perverse but what has been argued vehemently is that the conclusion drawn by ASI in its report in the penultimate paragraphs and chapter is wrong and should be ignored or rejected. However, allegations of bias or mala fide are also levelled and in case those allegations are found substantiated, it may result in vitiating the entire report.

3755. Sri P.N.Mishra, learned counsel for the defendant no.20 (Suit-4) supporting ASI report contended:

A. The report of ASI is an elaborate document and the persons comprising excavation team of ASI were working directly under the control and direction of this Court. Their integrity is unquestioned and as such the said report is entitled to be accepted in its entirety as an expert scientific report under Order XXVI Rule 9, 10 and 10A read with Section 75 C.P.C. as well as Section 45 of the Evidence Act.

B. Section 75(e) of C.P.C. is part and parcel of Part III titled as 'incidental proceedings' whereunder the order can be passed by this Court to carry out excavation work and submit report to this Court. The report having been submitted in compliance thereof is a scientific report and an expert opinion under Section 45 of the Evidence Act. It is reliable and admissible being valuable piece of evidence.

C. The A.S.I. Report is result of incidental proceeding which is in aid of the final proceedings. The report has to be relied on to do complete and ultimate justice.

D. A.S.I. is a reputed institution. Integrity of its team members cannot be questioned hence its report must be accepted as it is.

E. There are only wild allegations that the ASI people acted under the hands of the then BJP Government and Minister concerned but the same has not been substantiated by giving cogent evidence. The plaintiffs had several opportunities to make applications before this Court impeaching the integrity of the ASI but as the opportunity has not been availed of and no such thing was done. It is only when the report was submitted to this Court which goes against the plaintiffs (Suit-4) i.e. some of the defendants of other suits, the objections making reckless allegations have been filed therefore are liable to be rejected.

F. The plaintiffs, their experts, nominees, advocates have participated in excavation proceedings and the excavation proceedings were conducted in their presence and observance. It was also supervised by the Observers appointed by this Court. In these circumstances any challenge to the ASI report on the ground that the excavation has not been done faithfully and correctly cannot be accepted and the objections are liable to be rejected.

G. Since no party made an application for examination of ASI Archaeologist/Experts, there is no occasion for them to assail the report since it amounts to acceptance.

3756. He has also relied on some of the authorities of the Apex Court and High Courts which we may refer in brief since the principles laid down therein cannot be doubted.

3757. Chandan Mull Indra Kumar & Others Vs. Chiman Lal Girdhar Das AIR 1940 PC 3 says that it is not safe for a Court to act as an expert and to overrule the elaborate report of a Commissioner whose integrity and carefulness are unquestioned, whose careful and laborious execution of task was proved by his report and who had not blindly adopted the assertions of either party.

3758. In Vareed Jacob Vs. Sosamma Geevarghese 2004(6) SCC 378 the Court said that "incidental" and "ancillary" proceedings are taken recourse to in aid of the ultimate decision of the suit and any order passed therein would have a bearing on the merit of the matter. "Supplemental proceedings", however, mean a separate proceeding in an original action in which the court where the action is pending is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction in the interest of justice. Supplemental proceedings may not affect the ultimate result of suit and a supplemental order can be passed even at the instance of the defendants.

3759. In G.L. Vijan Vs. K. Shankar. 2006 (13) SCC 136 in the context of incidental and ancillary power, the Court said:

"11. Such a supplemental proceeding is initiated with a view to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated. Supplemental proceedings may not be taken recourse to in a routine manner but only when an exigency of situation arises therefor. The orders passed in the supplemental proceedings may sometimes cause hardships to the other side and, thus, are required to be taken recourse to when it is necessary in the interest of justice and not otherwise. There are well defined parameters laid down by the Court from time to time as regards the applicability of the supplemental proceedings.

13. The expression "ancillary" means aiding; auxiliary; subordinate; attendant upon; that which aids or promotes a proceeding regarded as the principal.

14. The expression "incidental" may mean differently in different contexts. While dealing with a procedural law, it may mean proceedings which are procedural in nature but when it is used in relation to an agreement or the delegated legislation, it may mean something more; but the distinction between an incidental proceeding and a supplemental proceeding is evident.

3760. In Harihor Misra Vs. Narhari Setti Sitaramiah AIR 1966 Orissa 121 in para 4 the Court said :

"Rule 10 of O. 26 does not make the report of the Commissioner as concluding the question of valuation. On the contrary, the rule gives clear indication that the report of the Commissioner is only one of the pieces of evidence

amongst other evidence to be led by the parties for determination of the issue on valuation of the suit. When the parties file no objection to the Commissioner's report, the court rightly accepts the report. Its acceptance by itself does not, however, mean that parties are precluded from challenging the evidence of the Commissioner and the witnesses examined by him or by giving any other evidence to countermand the effect of the Commissioner's report. "

3761. Following the above decision, Calcutta High Court in Amina Bibi (Supra) said:

"Thus, from the underlying principle emerging from the above cases, it is manifest that the party objecting to the Commissioner's report can lead best possible evidence at the time of hearing to countermand the report even if the same was accepted earlier. The Court on taking the comprehensive view decide the point at issue and arrive at right conclusion I do not find at this stage any justification to interfere with the findings of the learned trial court order accepting the Commissioner's report."

3762. In Bandhua Mukti Morcha Vs. Union of India AIR 1984 SC 802 in para 14 it was held:

"It would be entirely for the Court to consider what weight to attach to the facts and data stated in the report of the Commissioner and to what extent to act upon such facts and data. But it would not be correct to say that the report of the Commissioner has no evidentiary value at all, since the statements made in it are not tested by cross-examination."

3763. In para 81 of the said judgemnt the court said:

"Interference with the result of a detailed and careful report so submitted should be made only for cogent and compelling reasons. In a case where an elaborate report is filed by the Commissioner, whose integrity, credibility and carefulness are not questioned, whose careful and laborious execution of his task is proved by the report itself, interference will be made only in exceptional circumstances, in cases where convincing evidence contra is available before Court."

3764. In Sharda Vs. Dharampal 2003 (4) SCC 493 the Court held that the primary duty of the Court is to see that truth is arrived at. It also held that in certain cases scientific investigation by the experts in the field is not only to be found leading to the truth of the matter, but may also lead to the removal of misunderstanding between the parties.

3765. There are some other authorities which are basically on the question that the report of the Commissioner cannot be rejected or ignored only on the ground that the Commissioner was not examined as witness or that in the absence of any allegation against the integrity and impartiality of the Commissioner the report must be admitted. These are not relevant for our purposes for the reason that there is no challenge to the ASI report on the ground that the members of the team of ASI have not been examined. So far as the second part is concerned, general allegations of bias have been levelled and they have to be considered and investigated.

3766. Sri Jilani referred to one part of his objection i.e., bias and mala fide of ASI in order to buttress his submission for rejection of the entire report but rest of his objections pertain to individual findings/interpretation of finds and artefacts and, therefore, basically travel into the realm of credibility of the evidence and not the mere procedural irregularity.

3767. The allegations of bias, lack of impartiality against ASI have been made in general in the objections filed by the plaintiffs (Suit-4), but perusal thereof makes it clear that no individual in particular or the group of persons as such has been named in respect of the said allegations. When an act of officials is challenged on the ground of bias etc., certain well established principles have to be observed.

3768. We may refer to State of Bihar and Anr. Vs. P.P.Sharma 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222. The Court in para 50, 51 and 52 said:

> "50. Mala fides means want of good faith, personal bias, grudge, oblique or improper motive or ulterior purpose. The administrative action must be said to be done in good faith, if it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not. An act done honestly is deemed to have been done in good faith. An administrative authority must, therefore, act in a bona fide manner and should never act for an improper motive or ulterior purposes or contrary to the requirements of the statute, or the basis of the circumstances contemplated by law, or improperly exercised discretion to achieve some ulterior purpose. The determination of a plea of mala fide involves two questions, namely (i) whether there is a personal bias or an oblique motive; and (ii) whether the administrative action is contrary to the objects, requirements and conditions of a valid exercise of administrative power.

51. The action taken must, therefore, be proved to have been made mala fide for such considerations Mere assertion or a vague or bald statement is not sufficient. It must be demonstrated either by admitted or proved facts and circumstances obtainable in a given case. If it is established that the action has been taken mala fide for any such considerations or by fraud on power or colourable exercise of power, it cannot be allowed to stand.

52. Public administration cannot be carried on in a spirit of judicial detachment. There is a very wide range of discretionary administrative acts not importing an implied duty to act judicially though the act must be done in good faith to which legal protection will be accorded. But the administrative act dehors judicial flavour does not entail compliance with the rule against interest and likelihood of bias. It is implicit that a complainant when he lodges a report to the Station House Officer accusing a person of commission of an offence, often may be a person aggrieved, but rarely a propone publico. Therefore, inherent animosity is licit and by itself is not tended to cloud the veracity of the accusation suspected to have been committed, provided it is based on factual foundation."

3769. In CEAT Ltd. Vs. Anand Abasaheb Hawaldar & Ors. 2006 (3) SCC 56 the words "favoritism" or "partiality" came to be considered. In para 11 to 16 the Court held:

"11. ....the Legislature has consciously used the words 'favoritism or partiality to one set of workers' and not differential treatment. Thus, the mental element of bias was necessary to be established by cogent evidence. No

evidence in that regard was led. On the contrary the approach of the Industrial Court and the High Court was different. One proceeded on the basis of breach of assurance and the other on the ground of discrimination. There was no evidence brought on as regards the pre requisite i.e. favoritism or partiality. favoritism means showing favour in the matter of selection on circumstances other than merit. (per Advanced Law Lexicon by P.Ramanatha Aiyar, 3rd Edition, 2005). The expression 'favoritism' means partiality, bias. Partiality means inclination to favour a particular person or thing. Similarly, it has been sometimes equated with capricious, not guided by steady judgment, intent or purpose. favoritism as per the Websters' Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary means the favouring of one person or group over others having equal claims. Partiality is the state or character being a partial, favourable, bias or prejudice.

12. According to Oxford English Dictionary "favoritism" means - a deposition to show, or the practice of showing favour or partiality to an individual or class, to the neglect of others having equal or superior claims; under preference. Similarly, "partiality" means the quality or character of being partial, unequal state of judgment and favour of one above the other, without just reason. Prejudicial or undue favouring of one person or party: or one side of a question; prejudice, unfairness, bias.

13. Bias may be generally defined as partiality or preference. It is true that any person or authority required to act in a judicial or quasi-judicial matter must act

"If however, 'bias' and 'partiality' be defined to mean the total absence of preconceptions in the mind of the Judge, then no one has ever had a fair trial and no one ever will. The human mind, even at infancy, is no blank piece of paper. We are born with predispositions and the processes of education, formal and informal, create attitudes which precede reasoning in particular instances and which, therefore, by definition, are prejudices." (per Frank, J. in Linahan, Re. F 2d at p 652).

14. It is not every kind of differential treatment which in law is taken to vitiate an act. It must be a prejudice which is not founded on reason, and actuated by self-interest - whether pecuniary or personal.

15. Because of this element of personal interest, bias is also seen as an extension of the principles of natural justice that no man should be a judge in his own cause. Being a state of mind, a bias is sometimes impossible to determine. Therefore, the courts have evolved the principle that it is sufficient for a litigant to successfully impugn an action by establishing a reasonable possibility of bias or proving circumstances from which the operation of influences affecting a fair assessment of the merits of the case can be inferred.

16. As we have noted, every preference does not vitiate an action. If it is rational and unaccompanied by considerations of personal interest, pecuniary or otherwise, it would not vitiate a decision.

3770. In a case where mala fide or bias is substantiated by cogent material the act of the authority, howsoever high it may be, shall immediately get tainted and vitiated in law but mere dissatisfaction or displeasure of an individual or group of individual's perception about something cannot be a yardstick to hold, an otherwise valid act or report of an authority, invalid.

3771. In People's Union for Civil Liberties Vs. U.O.I. 2005(5) SCC 363 the Court in para 11 and 12 observed :

> "11. ....if public displeasure or perception were to be the yardstick to exclude people from holding constitutional or statutory offices then many such posts in the country may have to be kept vacant.
> 12. Then again what is the yardstick to measure public perception. Admittedly, there is no barometer to gauge the perception of the people. In a democracy there are many people who get elected by a thumping majority to high legislative offices. Many a times public perception of a class of society in regard to such people may be that they are not desirable to hold such post but can such a public opinion deprive such people from occupying constitutional or statutory offices without there being a law to the contrary? There is vast qualitative difference between public prejudice and judicial condemnation of an institution based on public perception."

3772. In Kumaun Mandal Vikas Nigam Ltd. Vs. Girja Shankar Pant 2001 (1) SCC 182 explaining the concept of bias the Apex Court said:

> "10. The word "bias" in popular English parlance stands included within the attributes and broader purview of the

word "malice", which in common acceptation means and implies "spite" or "ill-will" (Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, 5th Edn., Vol. 3) and it is now well settled that mere general statements will not be sufficient for the purposes of indication of ill-will. There must be cogent evidence available on record to come to the conclusion as to whether in fact there was existing a bias which resulted in the miscarriage of justice.

32. Lord Hutton also in Pinochet case 16 observed:

"There could be cases where the interest of the Judge in the subject-matter of the proceedings arising from his strong commitment to some cause or belief or his association with a person or body involved in the proceedings could shake public confidence in the administration of justice as much as a shareholding (which might be small) in a public company involved in the litigation."

www.vadaprativada.com

33. Incidentally in Locabail [Locabail (U.K.) Ltd. v. Bayfield Properties Ltd. 17] the Court of Appeal upon a detail analysis of the oft-cited decision in R. v. Gough 18 together with the Dimes case 19 Pinochet case 16, Australian High Court's decision in the case of J.R.L., ex p C.J.L., Re 20 as also the Federal Court in Ebner, Re 21 and on the decision of the Constitutional Court of South Africa in President of the Republic of South Africa v. South African Rugby Football Union22 stated that it would be rather dangerous and futile to attempt to define or list the factors which may or may not give rise to a real danger of bias. The Court of Appeal continued to the effect that everything will depend upon facts which may include the nature of the issue to be decided. It further observed:

"By contrast, a real danger of bias might well be thought to arise if there were personal friendship or animosity between the Judge and any member of the public involved in the case; or if the Judge were closely acquainted with any member of the public involved in the case, particularly if the credibility of that individual could be significant in the decision of the case; or if, in a case where the credibility of any individual were an issue to be decided by the Judge, he had in a previous case rejected the evidence of that person in such outspoken terms as to throw doubt on his ability to approach such person's evidence with an open mind on any later occasion; or if on any question at issue in the proceedings before him the Judge had expressed views, particularly in the course of the hearing, in such extreme and unbalanced terms as to throw doubt on his ability to try the issue with an objective judicial mind (see Vakuta v. Kelly23); or if, for any other reason, there were real ground for doubting the ability of the Judge to ignore extraneous considerations, prejudices and predilections and bring an objective judgment to bear on the issues before him. The mere fact that a Judge, earlier in the same case or in a previous case, had commented adversely on a party-witness, or found the evidence of a party or witness to be unreliable, would not without more found a sustainable objection. In most cases, we think, the answer, one way or the other, will be obvious. But if in any case there is real ground for doubt, that doubt should be resolved in favour of recusal. We repeat: every application

must be decided on the facts and circumstances of the individual case. The greater the passage of time between the event relied on as showing a danger of bias and the case in which the objection is raised, the weaker (other things being equal) the objection will be."

34. The Court of Appeal judgment in Locabail 17 though apparently as noticed above sounded a different note but in fact, in more occasions than one in the judgment itself, it has been clarified that conceptually the issue of bias ought to be decided on the facts and circumstances of the individual case — a slight shift undoubtedly from the original thinking pertaining to the concept of bias to the effect that a mere apprehension of bias could otherwise be sufficient.

35. The test, therefore, is as to whether a mere apprehension of bias or there being a real danger of bias and it is on this score that the surrounding circumstances must and ought to be collated and necessary conclusion drawn therefrom — in the event however the conclusion is otherwise inescapable that there is existing a real danger of bias, the administrative action cannot be sustained: If on the other hand, the allegations pertaining to bias is rather fanciful and otherwise to avoid a particular court, Tribunal or authority, question of declaring them to be unsustainable would not arise. The requirement is availability of positive and cogent evidence and it is in this context that we do record our concurrence with the view expressed by the Court of Appeal in Locabail case17."

3773. In State of Punjab Vs. V.K.Khanna 2001 (2) SCC

330 it was decided that the test is whether there is a mere apprehension or there is a real danger of bias and it is on this score that the surrounding circumstances must and ought to be collated and necessary conclusion drawn therefrom. The court in para 8 and 8 said:

> "5. Whereas fairness is synonymous with reasonableness- bias stands included within the attributes and broader purview of the word "malice" which in common acceptation means and implies "spite" or "ill will". One redeeming feature in the matter of attributing bias or malice and is now well settled that mere general statements will not be sufficient for the purposes of indication of ill will. There must be cogent evidence available on record to come to the conclusion as to whether in fact, there was existing a bias or a malafide move which results in the miscarriage of justice....In almost all legal enquiries, "intention as distinguished from motive is the all- important factor" and in common parlance a malicious act stands equated with an intentional act without just cause or excuse."
> *"8. 3774. Since some general but serious allegations have been levelled against ASI regarding manner of excavation, interpretation and assessment, though not substantiated, but we shall examine all these aspects minutely since it is not a matter where we should leave even an iota of doubt in the mind of any party. Rather we intend to consider all the possible angles in the matter so that there may not remain a grievance that one or other aspect, howsoever minor it is, has escaped consideration of the Court.

3776. Since William Jones is referred as the point of commencement of ASI, some facts throwing light on his profile would be ancillary but important. Born on 28th September' 1746 in London, William Jones studied Arabic, Hebrew and also

acquainted himself with French and Italian. In 1764, he entered University College, Oxford and continued his study of oriental literature. He learnt Persian and Arabic by the aid of one “Syrian Mirza”, whom, it is said, he discovered and brought from London. He added to his knowledge Spanish, Puertagese and Chinese also. In 1766, he obtained a fellowship. When King Christian VII of Denmark visited England in 1768 bringing with him a “Light of Nadir Shah” in Persian, Jones was requested to translate the manuscript in French. This translation appeared in 1770 with an introduction containing a description of Asia and short history of Persia. In 1771, he published a Dissertation “Sur Law Literature Orientale” defending Oxford scholars against the criticism made by Anquetil du Perron in the introduction to his translation of the “Zend Avesta”. In the same year, i.e. 1771 appeared his Crammer of Persian language. He then studied law and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1774. Appointed Commissioner in Bankruptcy in 1776 made Judge of Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, then “Fort William” and was Knighted in 1783. He arrived in India sometime in 1783 (probably in December) and founded in January' 1784, the “Bengal Asiatic Society”. He remained its President till his death. In India, he studied Sanskrit. In 1789, he completed his translation of “Shakuntala” of Kalidasa. He also translated the collection of fables titled as “Hitopadesa”, “Geet Govind” and considerable portion of “Vedas”; besides editing the text of Kalidasa's poem “Ritusamhara”. He undertook in 1788, task of compiling a digest of Hindu and Mohammedan law, which he could not complete since died on 27.4.1794, but got published “Ordinance of Manu” and some items with respect to

3777. This biography apparently shows his mettle but there existed something more. In "Asiatic Researches" Vol-I, first published in 1788, recently republished in 1979, pages 234-235, we find the following comments of Sir William Jones:

> "As to the general extension of our pure faith in Hindustan there are at present many sad obstacles to it . . . . . We May assure ourselves that . . . . . Hindus will never be converted by any mission from the Church of Rome, or from any other Church; and the only human mode perhaps, of causing so great revolution, will be to translate it to Sanskrit . . . . . Such chapters of the prophets, particularly of Isaiah, as are indisputably evangelical together with one of the gospels, and a plain prefatory discourse, containing full evidence of the very distant ages, in which the predictions themselves, and the history of the divine person (Jesus) predicted, were severally made public; and then quietly to disperse the work among the well educated natives."

3778. He wrote an essay "On the Gods of Greece, Italy and India" in 1784 running in about 47 pages, which had the following comments:

> "Since Gods of all shapes and dimensions may be framed by the boundless powers of imaginations or by the frauds and follies of men, in countries never corrected; but when features of resemblance, too strong to have been accidental, or observable in different systems of polytheism, without fancy or prejudice to colour them and improve the likeness . . . . . It is my design, in this assay, to point out such a resemblance between the popular worships of the old Greeks and Italians and that of the Hindus."

"Rama and Crishna, must now be introduced, and there several attributes distinctly explained. The first of them, I believe, was the Dionysus of the Greeks."

"The first poet of the Hindus was the great Valmic, and his Ramayan is an Epick Poem . . . . . Comparison of the two poems (the Dionysus and the Ramayan) would prove Dionysus and Rama to have been the same person; and I incline to think that he was Rama the son of Kush, who might have established the first regular Government in this part of Asia." (emphasis added)

3779. About "Manu", Jones writes:

"This epitome of the first Indian history . . . . . though whimsically dressed up of a form of allegory, same to prove a Primeval tradition in this country of the universal deluge described by Moses and fixes consequently the time when the genuine Hindu chronology actually begins."

"We may suspect that all the 14 Menus are reducible to one, who was called Nuh by the Arabs and probably by the Hebrews; though we have disguised his name by an improper pronunciation of it. Some mere relation between the 7th Menu and Grecian Menos may be inferred."

3780. He further said:

"The whole crowed of God and Goddess of ancient Rome and modern Varanes (Varanasi of India) mean only the powers of nature, expressed in a variety of males and a multitude of fanciful names."

"Be all this as it may, I am persuaded that a connection subsisted between the old idolatrous nations of Egypt, India, Greece and Italy, long before they migrated to their several settlements."

3781. This shows the approach, real motive and attitude with which the learned gentleman appears to give boost to the Indian literature. However, one must feel indebted to him for the reason that he and others like him gave birth to a local cadre of historians, academicians etc. to explore and research with sheer nationalistic instinct. Moreover, ultimately we got an institution which has been able to protect commendably a lot of ancient monuments and has also resulted in discovery of cultural wealth of this country.

3782. Going back to our study about ASI, the research work, it claimed, resulted in collection of a large number of manuscripts of Hindu scriptures as also antiquities and other remains in the office of Asiatic Researches. A museum was established at Calcutta in 1814 where the above collection housed. Similar Societies were also statrted at Bombay (Mumbai) in 1804 and at Madras (Chennai) in 1818. In 1800 Dr. Francis Buchanan (a Physician) was appointed by Marquis of Wellesley to survey Mysore. Dr. Buchanan was also required to undergo a survey of Provinces subject to Presidency of Bengal by the Governor General in Council in 1807. This area of survey constituted parts of the present day Bihar and Uttar Pradesh. He was engaged to survey the monuments and antiquities in the area of survey. At that time it was East India Company which had commenced its transmission into a Ruler

from its initial position of a Merchant. Dr. Buchanan was required to collect information upon the general topography of each District; the conditions of the inhabitants, their religious customs; the natural productions of the country; fisheries, forests, mines and quarries; the state of agriculture; the condition of landed property and tenures; the progress made in the arts and manufactures; the operation of commerce, and every particular that can be regarded as forming an element in the prosperity or depression of the people.

3783. To provide protection to antiques, monuments etc. the first legislation came in the form of Bengal Regulation, XIX of 1810 which empowered the Government to intervene in case of risks to monuments. In 1833 "James Prinsep" became Secretary of Asiatic Society. He was assisted by "Alexander Cunningham", a Second Lieutenant of the Bengal Engineers. They planned for an organization “Indian Archaeological Survey” and placed their proposal before the British Government in 1848. However, this attempt failed. After take over of reign by the British Government from East India Company, it appears that a fresh proposal was submitted by "Alexander Cunningham" which drew attention of Lord Canning who sanctioned a scheme of survey in Northern India and appointed "Alexander Cunningham" as the first Archaeological Surveyor with effect from December 1861. Cunningham’s survey stretched from Gaya in the East, to Indus, in the northwest, and from Kalsi in the north to Narmada in the south between 1861 to 1865. In this survey, it is said that Cunningham proceeded in the footsteps of Chinese traveller (pilgrim) Hieun Tsang and also submitted his report.

3784. In 1863, Act No. XX of 1863 was passed which empowered the Government to prevent injury to and preserve buildings remarkable for their antiquity or for their historical or archaeological value. Lord Lawrence, however, abolished the archaeological survey in 1866 bringing to a sudden halt of the archaeological survey in Indian Sub-continent. Some minor work with respect to the state of archaeological style of India in Bombay, Madras, Bengal and the Northwestern Provinces continued but the revival of archaeological survey saw the light of the day in 1871 when it was revived as a distinct department of the Government. A. Cunningham was appointed as Director who assumed charge in February 1871. He was provided with three assistants J.D. Beglar, A.C. Carlleyle and H.B.W. Garrik. A new journal "Indian Antiquary" was also started in 1872. Cunningham got published "Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum" which contains inscriptions of connected epigraphical material and pursuant to his suggestion the Government appointed J.F. Fleet as Government Epigraphist in January 1883 for deciphering and interpreting the inscriptions.

3785. The Indian Treasure Trove Act, 1878 was promulgated to protect and preserve the treasure found accidentally but had archaeological and historical value. This legislation was treated to be a landmark for confiscation and safety of treasures and antiquities found during chance digging. In 1878 when Lytton observed that conservation of ancient monuments be not left exclusively to the charge of the Provincial Governments and should be brought under the purview of the Government of India, it resulted in appointment of Major H.H. Cole as Curator of ancient monuments in 1881

with an aim to assist the Provincial and Central Government in all matters related to conservation of monuments. A. Cunningham retired in 1885 followed by Burgess who was appointed Director in March 1886. Besides others, during his period, a new publication “Epigraphica Indica” started in 1888 and he got 20 volumes published of which seven formed part of Archaeological Survey of India, New Imperial Series. He suggested to abolish the post of Director General and to divide the entire country into two Circles which caused a lot of chaos and confusion. In 1895 the Government of India requested the Asiatic Society to bear the responsibilities of publication of survey report which it refused. Later on, a proposal was made for creation of five Circles with an Archaeological Surveyor as Head at Bombay with Sind and Berar ; Madras and Coorg ; Punjab, Baluchistan and Ajmer; Northwestern Provinces and central Provinces ; Bengal and Assam and to make provision for pension to those who joined survey department before that date. The said proposal was accepted in May 1899.

3786. John Marshall was appointed as the new Director General in 1901 and the entire Survey Department was centralized vesting power with the Director General of A.S.I. by Lord Curzon. Marshall started new series of publication, namely, Annual reports of the Director General which contained the works and research activities carried out by the Survey Department. A separate branch for Arabic and Persian in Epigraphy was also created and Dr. Ross was appointed for this purpose in 1904 Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904 (Act no. 7 of 1904) was promulgated to provide effective preservation and authority over the monuments particularly those which were in the custody of individual for private ownership. The strength of the organization thereafter continued to increase by addition of Archaeological Chemist and Deputy Director General in 1917 and 1918. John Marshall relinquished the post of Director General in 1928 succeeded by H. Hargreaves and since thereafter this organization has continued with credit of making several discoveries, explorations and excavations of National and International repute. After the country achieved its independence in 1947, the Act no. 31 of 1947 "The Antiquities Export Control Act, 1947" was enacted to regulate export of antiques through Director General, ASI. Under the constitution which the people of India gave to themselves on 26.1.1950, the Archaeology was given due importance which is reflected from Entry 67 of List 1 ; Entry 12 of List 2 and Entry 40 of List 3 Seventh Schedule which read as under :

"67. Ancient and historical monuments and records, and archaeological sites and remains, declared by or under law made by Parliament to be of national importance."

List-2

"12. Libraries, museums and other similar institutions controlled or financed by the State; ancient and historical monuments and records other than those declared by or under law made by Parliament to be of national importance."

List-3

"40. Archaeological sites and remains other than those declared by or under law made by Parliament to be of

3787. The Government of India also enacted "The Ancient and Historical Monuments and Archaeological Sites and Remains (Declaration of National Importance) Act" in 1951 (Act no. LXXI of 1951). All the protected ancient monuments already notified under Act no. VII of 1904 were redeclared as monuments and archaeological sites of national importance under Act no. LXXI of 1951. Another 450 monuments and sites of part B States were also added. Some more monuments and archaeological sites were also declared as of national importance under Section 126 of the States Reorganization Act 1956.

3788. Later on some more enactments came into existence, i.e., Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Sites and Remains Act, 1958 and Antiquities and Art Treasures Act, 1972. The former repealed Act no. LXXI of 1951 and the later repealed Act no. XXXI of 1947. Under the aforesaid legislations ASI and its Director General and other Authorities have been entrusted several statutory duties/obligations and powers besides the power of granting license for private individuals (natural or juristic) to undertake excavation work in the country.

3789. The above discussion beyond doubt shows that ASI is an organization under the Government of India and satisfies all the requisites to be termed as a "Department of the Central Government". Admittedly it is working under the Ministry of Culture and Human Resources. By all means ASI therefore, represents the Government of India being a Department thereof and in law, can be presumed to be an expert body of the Government on the subject.

3790. The disputed site or the disputed building was not notified/declared as a Protected or Preserved Monument under the above enactments and the learned counsel for the parties neither could dispute it nor could show otherwise.

3792. Now back to the objections, the substantive objections to the very credibility of ASI report and its functioning are by the plaintiffs (Suit 4) and defendant no. 5 (Suit 5). These objections were considered by this Court but vide order dated 3.2.2005. It held that objections can suitably be considered and appreciated after giving liberty to the parties to adduce relevant evidence and thereafter decide at the time of hearing.

3793. We propose to refer ASI report as well as the objections of the parties aforementioned and the relevant evidence (favour and against) in order to appreciate the genuineness thereof and to decide whether ASI report can be relied upon as an evidence wholly or partly in consideration of the aforesaid issues which are of prime importance to both the sides.

3794. The first allegation is that the ASI has prepared its report with prejudiced mind and one-sided presentation of evidence. It is under the pressure of the then BJP Government at the Centre (para-1 of the objection of plaintiff no.1 (Suit-4). The rest of the objections are under the headings "Archaeological evidence of 'massive structure'"; "The pillar bases are real and no myth as alleged"; "The alleged circular shrine"; "The Divine Couple and other architectural Members"; "Inadequacies of the stratigraphy"; "Terracotta figurines—Relevance of"; "Glazed wares and Glazed Tiles "Pottery"; "Bones"; "inscriptions"; and lastly "Other contradictions and discrepancies". We shall reproduce details at the relevant stage.

3795. In the objections filed by defendant no.5 (Suit-5) great stress has been laid on who wrote Chapter X. Para 2 thereof shows that he has proceeded by assuming that the disputed structure “indisputably” was raised in 1528 though the record shows that this fact itself is an issue and has to be adjudicated upon by this Court. Therefore, the question that it is an “indisputable fact” does not arise. About the identity of figurines and artefacts, defendant no.5 (Suit-5) says that they are not confined to only Hindus but Ayodhya was also an important religious centre for Muslims known as “Khurd Mecca” having graves of two sons of Adam i.e., Ayyub and Sheesh and also that of Buddhist, Jains and Shaivites. The terracotta, human and animal figurines are used and played by children of all irrespective of religious inclination, particularly during festivals like Diwali etc. but ASI has ignored this aspect. The divinity to any such figurine would not come unless there is deification by observing prescribed rituals i.e., Pran Pratishtha. Rest of the objections are basically in line with what has been said by plaintiff no.1 (Suit-5). Similar is the position to the objections filed on behalf of plaintiff no.9 (Suit-4).

3796. One thing however is clear. Though the report of ASI on certain aspects including technical has been criticized by the Experts of Muslim parties but in general, what emerges, some undisputed facts, i.e. admission on the part of the objectors on many aspects, which are :

(i) A lot of structural and construction acitivities existed at the disputed site going back to the level of Shunga and Kushan period.

(ii) The exact number of floors, pillar bases and walls noted by ASI though objected but the very existence of several floors, walls, and pillar bases beneath the disputed stricture is not disputed.

(iii) The structure below the disputed structure was sought to be explained as Kanati mosque or Idgah. There is no suggestion that the structure below the disputed building was of non-religious nature.

(iv) Some of the constructions or artefacts are sought to relate to Jains or Buddhist but here also it is not the case that it was Islamic in nature or non religious.

(v) Though allegations of lack of independence in professional style etc. is sought to be supported from the alleged misinterpretation or wrong interpretation or omission or contradictions and discrepancies in some part of the report but no one of ASI team, individual or group has been named or shown to have worked in a manner lacking integrity, independence etc. (except where two nominees of Muslim side i.e. Dr. Jaya Menon (PW 29) and Dr. Supriya Verma (PW 32) reported creation of pillar bases in Trench G2 vide complaints dated 21.5.2003 and

3797. 28 witnesses, i.e., PW 1 to 28 on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-4) were examined between 24.07.1996 to 14.05.2005. The rest of four witnesses, i.e., PW 29 to 32 were examined between 28.09.2005 to 27.03.2006, i.e., against ASI report. Two witnesses were examined again i.e. PW 16 from 20.03.2006 to 28.07.2006 and PW 24 from 05.12.2005 to 04.01.2006 i.e. after ASI report. Similarly, on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-5) 16 witnesses, i.e., OPW 1 to 16 were examined between 22.11.1999 to 21.07.2003. After the submission of ASI report three witnesses, i.e., OPW 17 to 19 were examined between 17.08.2006 to 05.12.2006. Defendant no. 1 (Suit-4) got all his three witnesses, i.e., DW 1/1 to 1/3 examined from 22.07.2003 to 21.08.2003 and did not produce any oral evidence after ASI report. Plaintiff (Suit-3) got his 20 witnesses, i.e., DW 3/1 to 3/20 examined from 29.08.2003 to 30.11.2004 and he also did not produce any witness either in support or against ASI report. Defendant no. 2/1 (Suit-4) got three witnesses, i.e., DW 2/1-1 to DW 2/1-3 examined from 01.12.2004 to 09.03.2005 and none was in respect to ASI report. DW 13/1 (Suit-4) got examined three witnesses, i.e., DW 13/1-1 to 13/1-3 from 10.03.2005 to 05.05.2005. Out of these three witnesses the statement of Mahant Awadh Bihari Das Pathak, DW 13/1-2 remained incomplete and, therefore, has to be excluded and cannot be read in evidence. Similarly, defendant no. 17 (Suit-4) examined sole witness DW 17/1 from 09.05.2005 to 17.05.2005; defendant no. 20 (Suit-4) got examined four witnesses, i.e., DW 20/1 to 20/4 from 25.05.2005 to 23.11.2005. Its fifth witness DW 20/5, Jayanti Prasad Srivastava deposed statement to support ASI report and was examined from 15.01.2007 to 23.03.2007. Defendant no. 6/1 (Suit-3) produced two witnesses, i.e., DW 6/1-1 and 6/1-2 who were examined from 29.08.2005 to 29.09.2005.

3798. Thus plaintiffs (Suit-4) produced eight witnesses called 'experts' (Archaeologist) to assail ASI proceedings, observations interpretations and findings. Similarly, plaintiffs (Suit 5) produced three witnesses, and defendant no.20 produced one witness in support of ASI report.

3799. We would refer hereat first that part of statements of the plaintiffs (Suit-4)'s Experts where they have concurred with ASI report and will find out the extent of consensus:

3803. PW 31, Dr. Ashok Dutta has assailed the ASI report only in respect to pillar bases by means of his affidavit dated 20.1.2006. However, while agreeing that underneath the disputed structure there exists earlier structure, he said in para 19 and 20 of the affidavit that the periphery region of the mound was inhabited by Islamic cultured people and the site was continuously occupied by Islamic cultured people right from the time of Sultanat period and the structure associated with this level belong to Islamic culture. Regarding the affidavit, he says on page 67:

"I have gone through the report submitted by ASI, and on the basis of my personal observation I filed my affidavit in examination in chief in the court. The affidavit filed by me is my observation report." (Page 67)

3804. The following aspects in the proceeding and report of ASI has not been disputed by him:

"Human animal figurines in terracotta and stones were found from disputed site also. ... It is correct to say that terracotta figurine were recovered during excavation and have been shown in the report of the ASI. " (Page 75)

"The floors which have been shown in this figure are correct as four floors were found from excavation and the floors as shown in figure 23-A may be similar as this figure is the replica of floors found in the excavation" (Page 90)

Wall no. 16 appears to be about 50 meters in length, where as wall no. 17 is approximately 35-40 meters if the measurement as done by ASI is correct. I have seen wall no. 17 on spot but I have not taken its measurement. The measurement shown by ASI in this figure 3B appears to be correct because it will be presumed that them measurement given by ASI is correct." (Page 249)

3805. In cross examination, PW 31 has concurred with the periodization of ASI except that of period VI :

> "I agree with the suggestion that the stratigraphy is it self a scientific mode of periodization. I agree with the periodization given by the ASI of period 1 from 6th to 3rd century B.C., period 2 is from 2nd to 1st century B.C., period third is from 1st to 3rd century A.D. and period 4 from 4th to 6th century A.D. The ASI has fixed period 5 from 7th to 10th century A.D. and period 6 has been fixed by ASI from 11th-12th century and period 7 is from 12th to the beginning of the 16th century A.D. It is true that in chapter 3 the ASI has given periodization on the basis of dynasty, Stratigraphy as well as on the basis of century wise but no stratigraphical sequence has been followed by the ASI. Moreover they have used both centurywise as well as dynasty wise periodization. Volunteered that gross mistake of periodization is in the period 6 which is shown as medieval sultanate-period starting from 11th- 12th century A.D. when they were non existent*. This shows that the Stratigraphy was not followed properly. The ASI people had not done the carbon dating of different samples found from different level to support their periodization." (Page 254)*

3806. The parts of statement of PW 32 Supriya Verma, which shows agreement on some aspects of ASI report are:

> "It is correct that the ASI in its report has shown it as a Ram Chabutara because a larger platform on the top of it was existing and known as Ram Chabutara. The ASI has also in its report said that this platform was a Vedi." (Page

"It is correct to say that from the findings of ASI, it is established that there was some structure beneath the floor of disputed site and I also concede that there was some structure beneath the site in dispute." (Page 131/132)

"However, I agree that the three floors were found." (Page 134)

"All the three floors no. 2 to 4 are attached with wall no. 16. Wall no. 16 is the same wall which is just below the wall no. 5. Undisputedly, wall no. 5 was that of the disputed structure. It is correct to say that below wall no. 16 is there wall no. 17. Yes, it is correct to say that ASI has shown a circular shrine which according to me is Buddhist Stoop." (Page 135-136)

"It is correct to say that this wall 22 lies below the foundation of wall 16 in west-side. This goes to show that wall no. 22 is earlier to wall 16. Wall no. 25 runs in north south direction which is situated in the east of the disputed structure. Wall No. 26 is earlier to wall no. 25. Just below wall no. 26 is wall no. 27 which is running in north south direction with a slight angle. The period of wall no. 27 has been indicated by ASI as Kushan period. I also date this wall to Kushan period. Huge calcrete blocks are attached to wall no. 28. It is in trench J-3. ASI has dated it to Shunga period and I agree with this conclusion. Shunga period can be dated between 2nd B.C. and 1st B.C. century. Kushan can be dated between 1st century A.D. to 3rd century A.D. Wall no. 16, 18-A, 18-B and 18-C are more or less contemporary." *"I agree with the finding of the ASI regarding existence of the structure underneath the disputed structure but I disagree with the interpretation arrived at by ASI. I do not agree with the procedure followed by ASI. "As far as plans are concerned except those concerning the pillar bases I agree with the rest of the plans given in the ASI report." (Page 151)

"These animal figurines which are shown in plates 129 to 135 were recovered during excavation by the ASI." (Page 162)

"It is correct to say that the disputed structure was not constructed on the virgin land." (Page 168)

"Yes, in the foundation of the disputed structure, a few decorated stones were used which were found during excavation."(Page 171)

"From walls 16 to 28, except wall 18-D are the walls underneath the disputed structure." (Page 137)

3807. PW 24 though had disputed the several artefacts found at different level by ASI stating that they were not found therefrom, but PW 32 has contradicted on page 107 and said :

"I have no doubt about the depths of the antiquities mentioned in ASI report."

3808. Now we start with our journey of adjudicating the objections raised against the ASI's report and findings, in the light of the evidence adduced by the parties and the arguments of learned counsels.

3809. Initially the case set up by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) was that the building in dispute was constructed at a place where neither there existed any Hindu religious structure nor the place in dispute was place of worship nor there exist any evidence to show birth of Lord Rama thereat. However, when the excavation proceedings progressed, a marked change in the approach of plaintiffs (Suit-4) became evident. Some of the Archaeologist, who also deposed later in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-4), against ASI report, tried to set up a new case that there appears to be an Islamic religious structure existing beneath the disputed building or that there existed an Islamic religious structure when the disputed building was constructed. The suggestion was that it could be either an Idgah or a Kanati Masjid wherein only one long wall on the western side was constructed with a niche. The consensus appears to be amongst the eight experts of Muslim parties, more or less accepting the existence of a structure beneath the disputed structure. The above approach that the earlier structure was a Islamic religious structure excludes the possibility of a non religious structure at the disputed site beneath the disputed structure. It narrows down our enquiry to the question whether such structure could be an Islamic religious structure or non Islamic structure i.e. a Hindu Religious Structure.

3810. In the pleadings, specific case of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) was about non existence of any temple or building on the disputed site when the building in dispute was constructed. Subsequently, parties have not sought for any amendment in the pleadings and there is no case or suggestion even till date, in the pleadings that there could have been or there was any possibility of existence of an Islamic religious structure at the time when the disputed structure was constructed and it is after demolition of such earlier structure the subsequent one was constructed.

3811. On the contrary, besides plaintiffs (Suit 5), defendant no.13 (Suit 4) had also pleaded that there existed a temple which was demolished and thereafter the disputed structure was constructed and the structure of the earlier demolished temple can be found beneath the disputed structure. It is in this context the OPW-9 had deposed that on excavation of the disputed site these facts can be fortified.

3812. The entire process of excavation and submission of report has been completed by ASI in a record period of about six months and ten days'. It commenced its work on 12th March 2003 and submitted report on 22nd August 2003. The report is in two Volumes. First consists of text of report and Second contains various plates (photographs) of the finds, excavated site, trenches etc. The report has been submitted by Sri Hari 3815. The complex nature of the job, time constraint, functioning constraint, continuous observance by a huge number of persons, disrupted peace and calm atmosphere of functioning in a matter which requires serious concentration, were some of the features in which this body, not habitual of, but worked. This is admitted by ASI as is evident from Chapter I, "Introduction", under the heading "Objections and Methodology" and "Constraints" which reads as under :

"Objectives and Methodology

The High Court ordered the Archaeological Survey of India to excavate the site attesting the statement of the GPR Survey that the exact nature of anomalies/objects has to be confirmed by systematic truthing such as provided by

archaeological trench. Thus excavations at the disputed site were taken up with this objective only.

The excavation at the disputed site of Ayodhya is of a very special nature though with the limited but defined objective. All precautions by the Archaeological Survey of India under the High Court's direction were taken to plan it in such a way that the work could be taken up and completed as per the directions of the High Court. In planning the excavation, it was decided to adopt the latest technique of layout of trenches where limited spaces are available and therefore in place of general practice of lay out of 10x10 m. squares divided into four quadrants of 4.25x4.25 m. separated by 0.50 m. baulk all around, the change in the practice was made by fixing pegs at a distance of every 5 m in both north-south and east-west directions with cutting area of 4x4 m in leaving 0.5 m baulk all around which in contiguous trenches effectively left a space of 1.0 m in between two cuttings for the easy movement of archaeologists and labourers. One meter wide baulk was specially provided, considering the fact that due to modern fillings and debris the trench may not collapse due to earth pressure in a most sensitive area.

To avoid any confusion and for better understanding by even laymen, instead of the X, Y and Z areas of traditional layout, it was decided to put the initial reference peg Al at the north-west corner of the site and accordingly A, B, C, D etc. letters were put to denote trenches in the west to east direction and numerals 1,2,3 4 etc. attached with them in the north to south direction. Only at later stage to expand the excavated area in the north the Z area was included with this setup and layout of trenches. The entire area under excavation was designated as AYD-1 to differentiate it with other mounds in the nearby localities.

Full attention was given to the report and GPR Survey drawing submitted by the Tojo-Vikas International (Pvt.) Ltd and accordingly decision was taken to start excavation at first to the north of Ram Chabutra and also to its adjoining area where greater signals had been detected by the GPR Survey*. As the work of excavation required to be completed at a time bound programme, the archaeological* documentation including drawing and photography of the structural remains, pottery and antiquities were arranged to be done simultaneously. Samples of plaster, floors, bones, charcoal, palaeo-botanical remains were also collected for scientific studies and analysis. Trenches were also laid in the entire disputed area on all sides excepting the area of the makeshift structure where Ram Lala is enshrined along with its periphery at a distance of 10 feet from Ram Lala as specified by the High Court. The excavation work was planned in phased manner in particular areas as per significant signals for anomalies pointed out by the GPR Survey*.*

The entire proceedings of excavation and recording of structures and antiquities were documented by still and video cameras as per the directions of the Hon'ble High Court.

Constraints

On the directions of the Hon'ble High Court, Archaeological Survey of India has excavated ninety trenches in a limited time of five months, soon after which the excavation report in required to be submitted within fifteen days. This is an unprecedented event in the history of one hundred and forty two years of the existence of the Survey. All through the period of excavations at the disputed site favourable as well as adverse criticism has been encountered in the press and the media. In view of the very sensitive and important issue involved, Archaeological Survey of India did not react or clarify the position as per the orders of the Hon'ble Court.

Throughout the period of excavation the team had to work under close presence of advocates, parties and their nominees involved in the title suit. As per the instructions of the High Court in order to maintain transparency, all the excavated material including antiquities, objects of interests, glazed pottery and tile and bones recovered from the trenches were sealed in the presence of advocates, parties and nominees and kept on the same day of their recovery in the strong room provided by the Authorised Person (The Commissioner of Faizabad Division) to the excavation team for the specific purpose which again was locked and sealed everyday when it was opened. Thus the time available for their documentation, study, photography, drawing and chemical preservations was limited to just a few hours only and that too not in the case of material recovered from the trenches towards closing of the work for the day. The Hon'ble High Court allowed the study,

documentation and preservation of the material after opening the seals in the presence of advocates, parties or their nominees and again putting them under seal in their presence. Work was often affected and delayed due to formalities involved in securities checks and such other administrative requirements.

Working condition worsened at the onslaught of the monsoon from June onwards when the entire site was covered with multi-coloured waterproof sheets creating heat and humidity besides total darkness in a number of deep trenches. Monkeys started damaging the sheets as a result of which several layers of the sheets were spread over bamboo and wooden poles. They created further darkness. Photography was also affected due to bad light and natural colours were not easily obtained as the multi-coloured sheets reflected their colours on the surface and sections. Much difficulty was felt for the stratigraphical observations particularly for determining layers. These factors slowed the process of ongoing work. However, the Authorised Person was asked by the High Court to provide sufficient light and air in the covered area for further work. The excavation team had to lower electric lights several meters deep in the trenches where work was continuing at further deep levels. Grill barricading and poles fixed on baulks of traenches throughout the area made normal movements difficult. One team member fell down and fractured his hand and leg while others including some casual labourers received electric shocks by touching pedestal fans fixed on baulks. In spite of all such

In the task of synthesizing and analyzing the enormous data that excavation produced every care has been taken to avoid mistakes, however, due to voluminous data coupled with time constraint some typing errors may have inadvertently crept in the report."

3816. It is also mentioned at page 12 of the report that initially, excavation team of ASI consisted of 14 Members but it was enlarged at later stages to a total of 53 Members including two team leaders. Since ASI in this particular case proceeded on the report of GPR survey, carried out under the orders of this Court, it had the benefit of site information to some extent which obviously made it convenient to decide the working stretch with better certainty than that of a case of unknown excavation site. This is what has been said in Chapter II (Cuttings):

*"The benchmark denoting 108.48 m above the Mean Sea level was fixed at the spot on the stone slab, which represents the place where the outer eastern gateway of the disputed structure once stood. The 108.0 m contour at the site clearly suggests the region, which covered the core area of structural activity (Fig.1). Though the surrounding ground level still contains the cultural deposits and debris accumulated for centuries, the contour map itself suggests that the deposits at the site are no less than 8.0 m. Radar signatures of foundation and the different levels of stratigraphy shown in the GPR Survey had already suggested that anomalies mapped are not all

contemporaneous and they appear in different stratigraphic contexts noticed between the depths of 0.5 to 5 m (Fig.2)

In view of the above indications from GPR Survey followed by the contour survey, full precautions were taken for archaeological investigations through excavations planned in such a way that most of the area of strong amplitude and ringy signals, strong dipping reflectors, discontinuous anomaly alignments and scattered anomalies could be covered in the excavation trenches which were laid out in the form of 5 x 5 m grids with 4 x 4 m of cutting line instead of larger trenches as already explained in the previous chapter. This was planned to take up excavations to be completed in accordance with the time bound programme with the intention to cover maximum GPR indications as per the directions of the High Court and also in order to simplify the layout with lesser chances of erosion of sections and easy movement on baulks.

The area covered under GPR Survey comprises 132 trenches, which were all laid out, though many of them do not contain anomalies. Trenches having no anomalies were avoided and they were taken up for excavation only when some structural alignments were found to be traced in them. Five trenches in the northern area were excavated though that area was not covered by the GPR survey but was essential for excavation for exposing the buried structural remains. In total a number of 90 trenches were partly or fully excavated*.*

The entire site was divided into five areas – a) the eastern area, b) the southern area, c) the western area, d) the northern area and e) the raised platform. Excavations in all these five areas were taken up in phased manner (Fig.3) for better understanding the nature of structures and cultural deposits.

The Eastern Area

Excavations were taken up first in the eastern area where the eastern enclosure wall alongwith remnants of a gateway was noticed below whtich lie floors and walls of earlier phases (Pls. 1-2). The central part of the platform, locally called Ram Chabutra was noticed in this area constructed in five stages. The area is presently enclosed by barricaded gangway from three sides through which the visitors move. Seventeen trenches fully or partly, twelve within the above area and five outside the gangway within outer barricade towards east were taken up for excavation in J,K and L series. The main features exposed in this area include fourteen extant courses of reused brickbats and calcrete stone blocks in the enclosure wall with a part of 2.12 m in the middle of the wall suggesting the entrance doorway which was topped by marble slabs and the floor levels consisting of lime and cement floors by marble dedicatory slabs of the second half of the twentieth century. Some elongated hearths and a furnace of late Mughal period were found (Pl.3). The enclosure wall was constructed over the lime floor connected with the disputed structure and therefore, it seems to be a later addition. The lime floor has a platform, sloping towards east and a step to descend on the floor. Below the lime floor

www.vadaprativada.com

a brick paved floor having large squarish burnt bricks was encountered running further to the north beyond the outer barricade. Towards west of the brick floor another pavement attached to it divided by a brick-on-edge pattern was found which is composed of brickbats. Another lime floor has been noticed below this pavement. These floors were damaged during construction or enlargement of the Ram Chabutra which is located abutting them on the southern side. In trench J3 excavations were conducted upto the depth of 10.85 m when natural soil was found*.*

The Southern Area

Twenty-three trenches were partly or fully excavated towards the south of the raised platform, party covering it (Pl.4). This area covered the southern part of the disputed structure alongwith its southern enclosure wall moving towards west. Towards east the extended part of the Ram Chabutra was encountered abutting the floor of the courtyard of the disputed structure. Parts of the northern and western walls and their foundation and the foundation of the southern and eastern sides built of calcrete stone blocks of the disputed structure were exposed which were found resting directly in the west over a 1.77 m wide brick wall of earlier period, the lower part of which has decorated stone blocks and calcrete stone foundation and over 50 pillar bases arranged at regular intervals connected with the lime plastered brick wall through a floor. The core of the wall of the disputed structure was filled with brickbats. The pillar bases comprise some courses of brick bats in squarish or circular formations

over which two to five calcrete stone blocks are kept, possibly below sand stone blocks as found in the northern area, though only one decorated sand stone block was found in this area. Further below the above mentioned brick wall another brick wall was noticed on the top of which decorated stone blocks were found used. In the levels further down brick structures were noticed in trenches E8 and F8, though their full plan could not be exposed. At two points, below the pillar bases, traces of earlier pillar bases were also found in trenches F8 and F9 which were connected with the second floor below the floor with which most of the other pillar bases were connected. The brick wall mentioned above was found badly damaged on the southern side, possibly for taking out its bricks*. This wall was found extending in the northern side of the raised platform. A brick shrine, circular on its outer and squarish on its inner plan with a rectangular projection for entrance in the east and a chute on its northern side was found below the levels of above mentioned walls. Due to steep slope in the area further south of the trenches, it was not possible to excavate there.* The natural soil was reached in G7 at the depth of 10.84 m, which was confirmed by digging further upto the depth of 13.20 m (Pl.5).

Trenches laid out towards west of the raised platform on the slope represented by B and C series of trenches fall under the western area*. During 1976-77 excavation in a trench gave the chronological sequence of* the site. The area was covered with fallen masonry blocks and stones of the disputed structure. In order to have a thorough probing to locate and study the anomalies indicated in the GPR Survey, the area was first of all cleared of the accumulated fallen material, the huge chunks of which weighing several tones were lifted with the help of a crane and stalked in the closeby area with out breaking them as emotions of many people are attached with them (Pl. 6). After cleaning the area (Pl.7), excavations in parts of nineteen trenches were conducted mainly to verify the anomalies mentioned in the GPR Survey. At some places remains of a brick wall having nearly fifty courses were seen, particularly in the northern side. In the rest of the trenches mostly accumulated debris was found resting over earlier levels or structures (Pl.8).

The Northern Area

The area towards norths of the raised platform has the barricade with gate and is more often used by the priests and the security forces (Pl.9) Twenty-one trenches were fully or partly excavated in this area*. The massive brick wall located in the southern area was noticed running in north-south direction in this area and* below its level another wall was also found as seen earlier in the southern area. The top three floors and pillar bases attached with the top floor were exposed (Pl.10). The interesting feature of the pillar bases in this area was that over the calcrete stone blocks these bases were given proper finishing by providing squarish stone blocks of sand stone encased with four upright stone pieces placed on the four sides for giving support to the pillar at the base in order to avoid any movement. The stone blocks project a little above the floor.

The squarish brick pavement noticed in a number of trenches in the eastern area was found extended in the northern area in northeastern part in trenches K1, ZK1 and ZL1 below the lime floor connected with the disputed structure. The eastern enclosure wall was traced in this area in K1 and was found turning towards west in ZK1. A drain of recent origin was noticed alongwith flight of steps leading to the site from the northern road, which is no longer in use at present.

The Raised Platform

After the demolition of the disputed structure, nearly 1.5 m to 2.0 m of structural debris has accumulated over central and northern part of the erstwhile structure. The makeshift structure is also located on it. The High Court allowed excavations by order dated 05 March 2003 on this raised platform with the condition that archaeologists shall not disturb any area where the idol of Shir Ram Lala is existing and approximately 10 feet around it and they shall not affect the worship of Shri Ram Lala and thus, status quo as regards His Puja and worshippers' right of Darshan shall be maintained.

Excavation partly in ten trenches on the raised platform was taken up besides part of the four trenches of southern area, which fall under the raised platform. It was feared that if the excavation in the trenches on raised platform was done, the modern brick walls enclosing the makeshift structure already having cracks may collapse (Pl.11) and the mound on which Shri Ram Lal is existing may also be damaged. In view of taking all the required precautions the High Court on 22 May 2003 directed the Chief Engineer, P.W.D. to remain present at the time of excavation and to ensure and make necessary arrangements so that no structure is affected. While excavations the P.W.D. provided G.I. sheets and wooden planks against the exposed sections to avoid erosion of debris and stones and packed the cavities with sand bags. Brick structures, floors and pillar bases were found below the floors and the walls of the disputed structure on the raised platform as well.

Confirmation of G.P.R. Survey

As ordered by the Hon'ble Allahabad High Court, Lucknow Bench, Lucknow, the Archaeological Survey of India invited the Tojo-Vikas International (Pvt.) Limited, New Delhi to undertake the G.P.R. Survey at the disputed site at Ayodhya. The final report on GPR Survey submitted on 17 Feb 2003 concluded that the 'GPR Survey reflects in general a variety of anomalies ranging from 0.5 to 5.5 meters in depth that could be associated with ancient and contemporaneous structures such as pillars, foundations walls slab flooring, extending over a large portion of the site. However, the exact nature of those anomalies has to be confirmed by systematic ground truthing, such as provided by archaeological trenching.

The report further mentions that the accuracy of depth is normally within # 5%, 10% for homogeneous

strata while X-Y accuracy could be and the measurements of Georadar are based on the returning signals by a dielectric constant change in addition to other limitations of the GPR Survey. The report also mentions that the anomalies are of different types like discrete anomaly such as pillar or wall foundation ; ringy signal indicating some kind of floor or platform structure made of concrete, bricks or stone slabs; rubbles of heterogeneous material or reworked materials from its original stratigraphy; the mounds containing the buried collapsed dwellings etc.

A word of caution was also included in the report that not all hyperbolas shaped radar anomalies correspond to pillars and wall foundation.

Keeping in view these parameters, the Archaeological Survey of India conducted the excavation at the disputed site at Ayodhya between 12th March 2003 to 07th August 2003 to verify the anomalies. Spread over the disputed site, 184 anomalies indicated by the GPR Survey fell in 82 trenches. For the sake of convenience, these anomalies were numbered in the ascending order depending on their depth in each trench where they were indicated and the anomalies shown in between the baulks were also included to the nearest excavation trenches.

Among 184 anomalies, 39 of them were confirmed during excavation at the specified depth and location where they were shown and 74 were not found in spite of digging up to the required depth*. In view of the importance of the structures found at the upper levels than the depths indicated in GPR Survey,* another 27 anomalies could not be located. It was not possible to verify the remaining 44 anomalies as their location restricted the probing due to either non availability of sufficient space like raised platform or the presence of gangways, barricades, pathways and trees etc. for conducting the excavation.

3817. In the trenches no. B1 to B9, C1 to C9, L1 and L2 no anomaly was found though indicated in GPR survey. Trenches no. D3, D10, E3, E5, F5, G3, G4, H3, H8, J10, K9, K11 and L11 were not excavated due to area restriction on account of various reasons namely, gangway, pathway, fencing, barricading stone post and raised platform (make shift structure). In several other trenches excavation to some extent was made, but not proceeded further due to area restriction or for the safety of make shift structures etc. despite finding one or more anomalies as indicated by GPR survey.

SI No. 23. Trench No. ZE1: The GPR Survey indicated the anomalies at the depths of 0.6 and 2.0 m. The trench was excavated upto a depth of 2.55 m. The first anomaly was not found at the specified depth and location. A step like structure of stone and brick at 0.45 m that goes down to 1.90 m. was found where the second anomaly was shown.

Sl No 24. Trench No.E1: The GPR Survey indicated the anomalies at the depths of 0.5 m. and 1.0 m. The first anomaly was not found at the specified depth and location. However, a wall oriented north south was found at a depth 0.95 m. where the first anomaly was shown. The second anomaly was also not found at the specified depth and location. However, a brickbat pavment was found at a depth of 1.32 m. where the second anomaly was shown.

Sl No. 25. Trench No. E2: The GPR Survey indicated the anomalies at the depths of 1.50 and at 2.50 m and another anomaly in the form of an alignment at the depth of 2.50 m. The trench was excavated upto a depth of 2.70 m. The first anomaly was not found at the specified depth and location. However, a rectangular stone pillar base was found at a depth of 1.80 m where the first anomaly was shown. The second anomaly and the other anomaly of an alignment were not found at the specified depth and location. However, a stone pavement was found at a depth of 1.60 m where the alignment was shown. In view of the importance of the exposed structure, further excavation was not conducted to the required depth were the alignment was shown.

Sl No 28. Trench No. E8: The GPR Survey indicated anomalies at the depths of 0.7 and 5.2 m. The trench was excavated upto a depth of 3.54 m. The first anomaly was not found at the specified depth and location. However, a lime surkhi floor and a wall oriented east west were found respectively at the depths at 0.80 and 2.15 m where the first anomaly was shown. An important structure was found where the second anomaly was shown. In view of the importance of the exposed structure, further excavation was not conducted to the required depth where the anomaly was shown.

Sl No 29. Trench No. E9: The GPR Survey indicated the anomaly at a depth of 1.0 m. The trench was excavated upto a depth of 1.44 m. A floor with a pillar base was found at a depth of 0.60 m where the anomaly was shown. In view of the importance of the exposed structure, further excavation was not conducted up to the required depth where the anomaly was shown.

3819. Next comes the stratigraphy and chronology for periodization of site/trenches with respect to layers, finds, artefacts etc. ASI has divided the deposits into nine cultural periods based on the strength of combined and corroborative evidence of pottery sequence, structural remains and other datable finds etc. Chapter III Vol.I, of the Report deals with it, and says:

Stratigraphy and Chronology

Excavation at the disputed site of Ayodhya has

yielded a continuous cultural sequence contained in the total deposition of about 10.80 m. Although the 10.80 m thick deposit can be divided into 9 cultural periods on the strength of combined and corroborated evidences of pottery sequences, structural remains and other datable finds, several disturbances cannot be discounted. It, therefore, becomes pertinent to refer to the nature and behaviour of the mound and the processes of accumulation of deposits, before venturing into the details of the stratigraphy of the site.

Excavations have made it amply clear that the site had seen successive structural activities which began from the middle of the Kushan level at the site. The brick and stone structures that were raised in Kushan and the succeeding periods of Gupta and post-Gupta times have added heights to the mound. To build further structures upon the earlier debris the later people added a deposit of earth excavated from the periphery of the mound, which belonged to the much earlier cultural periods. This is true for the rest of the structural phases also.

Existence of different structures at the site at different levels, in different orientation and in different formations, which has been evidenced from the excavation, has resulted in the differences of layers in different pockets of the site.

The C^{14} determination of the charcoal samples from the early levels (Periods I to III) provide dates which start from the last centuries of the second millennium B.C., which do not conform to the evidence gleaned from stratigraphy and ceramic tradition. However, they indicate

early settlement of the site, which was not found in the two trenches sunk down to the natural soil (see Appendix-I)

Based on the act of correlating and synthesizing of various layers identified at different depths of all the excavated trenches, an account of the stratigraphy and chronology, as ascertained, is detailed below (Figs. 19, 20 and 22).

Period – 1*(Northern Black Polished Ware Level)*

The earliest people to settle at the site used Northern Black Polished Ware (NBP ware) and other associated ware (Grey ware, Black slipped ware and Red ware) which are diagnostic ceramics of a period from sixth to third century B.C. In the limited operation areas in this level no structural activity of the period was noticed except reed impressions on burnt clay. The total accumulation of deposit of this period is about 1.00 m in trench G7 represented by layer 17 and 18 and a pit sealed by layer 18 (however, the material from this pit has been registered as those from layers 19, 20 and 21) and about 1.70 m in trench J3 represented by layers 12, 13 and 14. Besides the pottery, this level yielded broken weights, fragments of votive tanks, ear-studs, discs, hopscotches, a wheel made on disc, a broken animal figurine (all in terracotta), an iron knife (broken), glass beads, bone point etc. However, the most significant find from the level is a round bezel in greenish glass with legend 'sidhe' in high relief in Asokan Brahmi on the obverse while the reverse is plain (Rg. No. 778).

Period – II (Sunga Level)

Frequency of NBP sherds, however, decreases considerably in the upper levels of the period and finally it almost disappears from the horizon in layer 16 of G7 and layer 11 of J3, which marks the beginning of the Sunga level (circa second-first century B.C.) at the site. This level attests its presence with a deposit averaging in thickness to 1.60 m represented by layers 13, 14, 15 and 16 in trench G7 and by layers 9, 10 and 11 in trench J3. It is in this period that the site witnessed first structural activity in stone and brick, as noticed in J3. The level is represented by terracotta objects comprising human and animal figurines, bangle fragment, ball, wheel and a broken sealing with only 'sa' letter in Brahmi extant (Rg. No. 701), a saddle quern and part of a lid in stone, a glass bead, a hairpin and an engraver on bone and an ivory dice, besides the period pottery of the level.

Period – III (Kushan Level)

*Pottery of the previous period continues in the deposit of Kushan level (circa first-third century A.D.) which accounts for an average total thickness of 1.50 m recorded in layers 9, 10, 11 and 12, and in layers 7 and 8 in* trenches G7 and J3 respectively. Period-III is rich in pottery, typical of the period, however, in the number of antiquities the period is deficient. In trench J3 a huge kiln was noticed in the lower levels which accounted for much of Kushan deposit in this particular trench as well as for the deficiency of other artifacts. In trench G7, however, the limited area yielded animal and human figurines, bangle fragment and a portion of votive tank all

in terracotta, a hairpin in bone, a bead in glass and an antimony rod in copper. In trench J5, though the regular stratified deposit was not encountered in the operation area, the eastern section yielded a record of regular deposition and almost all the structural activity at the site. A massive brick construction, running into 22 courses above excavated surface, is noticed at the bottom of J5-J6 which belongs to this period. The Kushan period certainly gave a spurt to construction of structures of large dimensions which attest to their public status. Besides, the same trench provided evidence for a stone structure, nature of which is not very clear.

From this period onward, tradition of stone and brick constructions is very much in vogue at the site and each successive period added some structures to the site increasing the height of the mound.

Period – IV (Gupta Level)

Almost 2 m thick deposit, represented by layer 7 and 8 in G7, by layers 9 and 10 in J5-J6 and layers 7 and 8 in trenches E8 and F8*, above the remains of the preceding period belong to* Gupta times *(circa fourth-sixth century A.D.), the presence of which is attested mostly by terracotta figurines typical of the period and of course by* a copper coin (3.75 m, layer 8, G7, Rg. No. 1030) bearing image of king on the obverse and garuda standard in upper register and legend 'sri chandra(gupta)' in lower register on the reverse. The structures which appear above those of Kushan, some times using the Kushan wall itself, as in J5-J6, belong to this period. Structures of this period

www.vadaprativada.com

have been exposed in trenches E8, F8, G7, J5, J6 and K6*. It is interesting to note that the deposits that go with these structures contain earlier material as well.* It appears that to raise the level plain, earth excavated from the nearby area of the mound is utilized at this level. Among the pottery too majority of wares and shapes belong to earlier periods, only a few sherds are of the period concerned.

Period – V (Post Gupta – Rajput Level)

The period is marked by the appearance of the knife-edge bowls and other types which belong to the period from seventh to tenth century A.D. In this period also structural activities were witnessed in numerous phases in trench E8 and F8. A circular subsidiary shrine belonging to the late level of this period was exposed in trench E8-F8 (Fig 24 and 24A). Among the pottery assemblage Kushan type is more frequent than the period pottery. Other finds also include earlier material like Kushan pestles and terracotta figurines of Sunga-Kushan type. The total deposit assignable to this period is about 90 cm represented by layers 5 and 6 in trench G7, by layers 7 and 8 in trenches J5-J6 and by layers 5, 5A and 6 in trenches E8-F8.

Period – VI (Medieval-Sultanete Level)

A thick floor made of brick-crush floor appears, on the circumstantial evidence, to have been attached to a wide and massive looking north-sourth oriented brick wall (No.17) markedly inclined to east (noticed in trenches D7 and E2-E1, F1 and ZF1) which was the major

www.vadaprativada.com

structural activity of the period (circa eleventh-twelfth century A.D.). Another wall in same orientation has been noticed in G2 and ZG1 at a depth of 180 cm which is sealed by layer 6A in G2. The red brick-crush floor is noticed extending in a large area of the mound covering trenches E8, F8, G7, J5 & J6 with varying thickness. At the same level, in trench G5, calcrete stone blocks have been noticed in formation which may be of large dimension. Since not many trenches have been excavated to that depth, it would be premature to speak about the nature and behaviour of the structure, however, the structural activity appears to have lived a short life. In trench G2 from the same level (layer 6) were collected several knife-edge lipped lamps in red ware with soot/burnt marks at the lips. Total deposit of this period, as ascertained in trench G7, is 70-74 cm belonging to layers 3, 3A and 4, layers 5 and 6 in J5-J6, layers 3 and 4 in E8-F8 and layers 5, 6 and 7 in tr. G2.

Period – VII (Medieval Level)*

Period VII is marked by structural activities in three sub-periods A, B & C which together lasted from the end of the twelfth to the beginning of the sixteenth century A.D. In sub-period-A, a massive wall (no. 16) in north-sourth orientation was constructed, the foundation trench of which cuts the red brick-crush floor of the previous period. A new style of construction is noticed in this period, however, in a limited area. Level of the mound was raised considerably by the material excavated from the vicinity to lay a floor of lime mixed with fine clay and brick-crush,

over which a column-based structure was built (evidence of pillar bases are available in trenches F9, F8 and G7). This floor is traced within a thin wall enclosed area with N/S wall forming the back and covering trenches ZE1 to ZH1 in the northern area to E6 and to H5-H6, which in the second phase, was extended southwards up to G10 at a slightly elevated level out side the wall.

In the sub-period B, the area enclosed by the thin wall is found earth filled and is over-laid with a brick-bat paving on top of which is laid a layer of rammed brick jelly as bedding to the 4-5 cm. thick floor of lime mixed with grit and fine brick nodules which runs over the broken/leveled wall. The finished surface is leveled at par with the southward extension of the earlier floor. Another thin wall which is erected resting over the earlier floor makes an enclosure which is slightly smaller. This floor also extended in the eastern area in trenches J4-J5-J6 and in the northern area it is found to the limits of the mound itself is found cut attached to this floor must have been some brick structure within the raised platform area as the deposit above it contains a lot of brick debris in the central part which can be witnessed in the northern section of E6 and in the western section of H4-H5. In the same period, to the east of J4-J5-J6 where the floor was bound by a flat row of bricks-on-edge, pavement of large square bricks was provided as an open court-yard to the floored complex, which extended upto the junction of trenches of K-series and L-series in the east and in the north upto ZK1 beyond which it is stopped by a lime floor. There is a circular depression specially made by cutting the large brick pavement (Pl.67), having the diameter of 1.05 m with a rectangular projection of 0.46 x 0.32 m towards west. It is interesting to note that the circular depression comes in the centre of the pavement if the central part is calculated on the basis of extant length of wall 16 or wall 17 and longitudinal length of the alignment of pillar bases from north to south. Thus, suggesting it as a place of importance. Besides, the circular depression faces the central part of the disputed structure over which 'Ram Lalla' is enshrined. Bricks measuring 50x50x8 to 10 cm, 50x47x8 cm and 40x40x6 cm were used in the pavement as specially made floor titles.

In sub-Period C, when the surface of the earlier floor (Floor No.) is weathered enough (as witnessed in the combined trenches H4-H5) to be replaced, debris of the brick (and stone) structures was leveled to attain height. In this deposit foundations to support pillars or columns were sunk which were overlaid with a 4-5 cm thick floor which had a grid of square sandstone bases for pillars projecting out, only a few still survive. Floor around most of the pillar bases is found broken with pillar base foundations in much disturbed condition. This floor is the most extensive on the mound, which is found spreading from the north-south wall of the sub-Period A in the west and is found broken with the mound towards north as well as south, while in the eastern part it has been damaged by the later structural activities. (Fig. 23 and 23A).

Total deposit of the period is approximately 50 to 60

cm thick which includes layers 1 and 2 in almost all the trenches except those in the eastern area where the deposit was disturbed by the construction in the later periods and in the northern area where the floor of the period VII-C remained exposed and under use till late. In the northern area layers 2 and 3 belong to this period. The three floors of this period were not found in all the trenches uniformly. At some places due to differential coverage area of the floor itself while at some other places due to destruction or decadence one of these was found missing. During excavation in different trenches they were named according to their occurrence from 1 onwards. The relative levels can be seen in the cross sections of the mound and in the schematic cross section of the mound.

Period – VIII (Mughal Level)

Structural activities of this period are limited only to the raised platform and the area immediately adjacent to it particularly in the south and the eastern area covering trenches E2 – G2 in the north to E7 – G7 in the south. This period through two successive floors, which account for total thickness of about 23 to 25 cm, not only registers the two continuous phases of the structure but also document at least two horizontal expansion of the fore-court from the simple apron flooring to terraced platform towards the eastern side*.*

The floor of the previous (Period VII-C) is found cut by the stone block (mostly calcrete) foundations of the disputed structure (mosque). However, the north-south wall of the Period VII-A is retained as foundation for the back wall. Inside the foundation and in the immediate from part a layer of rammed earth is laid which is then overlaid with rammed deposit of grey coloured kankars and a thin layer of ashy deposit which contains riverine shells burnt white. The total deposit accounts for a thickness of about 20-25 cm, which acts as soling for the first floor of the Mughal period inside as well as out side of the structure to a short distance to the east forming an apron floor. The apron floor which extends out to the east for 4.45 cm is provided with an edge-wall of brick to withstand the stress of stepping. The edge wall rests on the floor of the Period VII-C.

In the next phase another floor of lime mixed with brick nodules and some grit is laid over the earlier floor after it was duly chiseled for grip. This floor extends from inside the structure out to the east. In this phase the apron wall is converted into an extended platform, which exceeds the apron by almost 4.00 m. An edge-wall is provided on north, east and south which uses chiseled calcrete stone blocks and some carved sandstone blocks as well.

An interesting feature of the layer sandwiched between the floors of this period and the last floor of the preceding period is that it contained least amount of pottery and other material, apparently much care and effort was taken for leveling the deposits before laying the floor and sinking the foundation of the structure. No deposit, definitely contemporary to this period, exists on the mound presently*.*

Period – IX (Late and Post Mughal Level)

In this period two successive floors were laid,

another platform was added to the east forming a terrace and subsequently two successive enclosure walls were erected, one around the first platform of the structure and the other encompassing the second terrace and adjoining areas to the north and south of the structure covering an area under trenches ZE1-ZK1 in the north to E8/E9-K8/K9 in the south.

In this period to attache a terraced platform to the east of the existing one, deposits of the earlier periods were excavated and removed, in which the floor of the period VII-C was cut and destroyed from the eastern area. Slightly later, a partition wall was added attached to the first terrace platform along with a small step in the centre. And then was added another floor inside the structure which ran out on the now enclosed platform and abutted to the partition wall. Some times later an enclosure wall was added to the entire complex without any foundation which rested over the existing floor, which was provided with two gates, larger one to the north and a smaller one to the east. Sometimes around this period dead bodies were buried in the north and south of the disputed structure which have cut the top floors and which are sealed by layer 1.

This period has not been very fortunate in preserving the representative deposits of the period in primary context, as immediately after or even during this period the site was subjected to various damaging digging activities. Whatever contemporary material is shown in the plates has been gleaned from the deposits dumped in the various large pits.

The accumulation above the floor of the period VII-C in the northern area is a very recent one and so is the deposit in the eastern area below the modern brick paving.

Finally a floor of cement was laid inside the structure which was painted over with arch-patterned blocks in bichrome. A brick paving was laid in the eastern part over which were laid inscribed (in Devanagri script) memorial marble slabs.

After the construction of the disputed structure at the site, practically no deposition, except that of floors, was allowed to settle. Most of the deposit in the northern area is post 1992. The site, thus, has stratified cultural material only from the first seven periods, while the last two periods are only represented by structural activities."

3820. For determining stratigraphy/periodization, ASI has given due credit to the disturbances in strata and has also explained its recording method :

"Disturbances in Strata

After the construction of the structures of Mughal period directly above the Floor of the Period VII-C, much disturbances have taken place at the site, some of which were for accommodating fresh construction while others were apparently aimless destruction to either retrieve bricks and other material or for no reason at all, which not only have disturbed the deposits but also have raised problems in understanding the site.

Huge pits have been excavated at different locations of the site, the purpose of some could be discerned while some others still remain a mystery.

Multiple pits in J5-J6 are understood as dug for the construction of the enigmatic structure at the place remembered in tradition as 'Ram Chabutra', but the successive digging of pits in the same spot has obliterated the earliest pit line that could have dated the construction of the first phase of this structure. Similarly, another huge pit was excavated in J3-J4, the purpose of which could not be discerned by the data available at hands. During excavation in trench J3, however, the same could not be identified, as the pit was larger than the operation area and the pit line was not available, which was later confirmed in trench J4, and the material, therefore, from the trench has been marked as those from layers 1 to 6 but in effect it belongs to the pit and the layers are superficial.

It becomes important to note that both the pits in trenches J3-J4 and J5-J6 respectively are excavated down to some what equal depth and filled I with similar material. It may not be surprising at all if some of the potsherds and other finds from the two pits match to the broken ends.

Another huge pit was excavated damaging lower strata down to the depth of 1.70 m in trenches G6, G7, G8, G9 and H6 (confirmed and many more) for constructing the last and extended phase of the 'Ram Chabutra'. Several smaller pits were dug into the floor of the Period VII-C, where it remained open to the surface or was covered with a superficially thin accumulated deposit. These, pits are filled back by simple earth and the purpose of them becomes difficult to explore. In the northern area the deposition above this floor was used as a burial ground. Several graves, of course without any grave stones to indicate, were encountered during excavation*. Similarly in the south, the same floor which is found repaired by overlaying it with a new one in Period IX, probably during the construction of the second terrace in the eastern area, is found to have been used for burying the dead, apparently in this period only. Pits for all these graves have been cut into the top soil and are found seal by only humus. In the northern area these graves have disturbed the floor of the Pd. VII-C.*

Trench E8 and E8 have been badly damaged by pits dug in the last period and also by burrowing creatures. In trench E8 some amount of wall robbing has also been noticed in the south-western corner. There has been some digging activity in and along the baulk between trenches E8 and F8.

Another huge digging exercise is witnessed in area falling in trenches K6-L6 to K8-L8 and beyond to south, which was taken up some times in the Late/Post Mughal period with certain vengeance and resolution that propelled the diggers to cut and remove the layered structure built of lime concrete and calcrete stone blocks. In trenches K7 and K8, which fell in the centre of the pit, the material from the deposit were labeled as those of layers from 1 to 8, which fell in the centre of the pit, the material from the deposit were labeled as those of layers from 1 to 8. The pit later was confirmed, on the basis of the combined evidences gathered from tenches J5-J6, K6, K7

and K8, to have been sealed by layer 3. The material already registered as those from layers 4 to 8 is actually from the pit and has been treated in the same way. Similar is the case with the material from layers 2 to 6 in trench J3.

During the excavation several objects were encountered with though of recent origin were documented and recorded among antiquities with equal details and definitions like the camera lens from trench ZE1 and the pendants in whitish metal from D6 and D7.

Recording Method

Northern area, eastern area and the southern area being more or less in the same level plain showing marginal difference of about 10 to 15 cm, all the recordings in the excavation were made taking the surface as the zero level in the areas where the floor of the disputed structure were not found*. While in the raised platform area all depths were recorded from the floor of the disputed area."*

3821. Criticising this periodisation, Plaintiffs (Suit-4) in its objection dated 08.10.2003 in para 8, has said:

"8. INADEQUACIES OF THE STRATIGRAPHY :-

8.1. That an essential requirement in an excavation report is a chapter that describes, one after the other, the main strata or levels found in the excavation, their nature (soil texture, colour, etc.) and contents. For example in H.D. Sankalia and S.B. Deo, Report on the Excavations at Nasik and Jorwe, Poona: Deccan College, 1951, Chapter Two, entitled "Strata and Structures" contains on pp. 9-19 a description of all the strata in the different excavated areas of the site. Earth colours, textures, the presence of charcoal or ash, the slope of the strata, their depth, etc. are described. So also, in M.K. Dhavalikar et al., Excavations at Inamgagaon, Pune: Deccan College, 1988, Chapter 7 on "Cuttings and Stratigraphy" describes the 16 layers of the site (pp. 121-125). Even through Inamgaon was occupied only in the chalcolithic period and is not a multi-period site like Ayodhya, there is information on each of the 16 layers of the mound in this chapter. Veerapuram is a site on the Krishna river in Andhra Pradesh, with neolithic, megalithic (iron age), early historic, and early medieval (AD 300-400) levels. For this site too, the excavators have given a description of each of the 15 strata. See T.V.G. Sastri, M. Kasturi Bai, and J.V. Prasada Rao, Veerapuram: A type Site for Cultural Study in the Krishna Valley, Hyderabad: Birla Archaeological and Cultural Research Institute, 1984, pp. 15-19. But there is no such section, leave alone a chapter, in the Ayodya report. There are serious consequences of this lacuna in basic excavation and recording procedure. Moreover, the descriptions in Chapters II (Cuttings), III (Stratigraphy and Cuttings) and IV (Structures) very rarely allude to the drawn sections presented in the report while Sections present, in a sense, an "X-ray" of the history of a mound. It is on the basis of sections that the sequence and history of a mound is constructed.

8.2. That it may also be pointed out that, the descriptions given in the report are not always matched by the sections. The reverse is also true. The text does not state the periods

to which the following layers belong:

(i) Trench J3: layer 6 with the inscribed stone (Figure 22):

(ii) Trenches ZE1-ZF1: Layers 4 to 6 (Section Facing South, West- East (K-L); and

(iii) Trench E7: Layers 3 to 6 (Section Facing South, West- East (E-F).

8.3. That the text mentions (p.40, pp. 68-69) a red brick crush floor of Period VI, attached to Wall 17, and states (p.40) that this floor can be traced in Trenches E8 and F8, G7, J5 and J6 and ZF 1. It is seen in the east section of G1. As regards trench G7, we see this red floor in Photograph No. V, and we find a floor marked "Floor 4" in the Section Facing South, West-East (E-F). But as regards E8, the Section Facing South, West-East (C-D) marks (or numbers) Floors "1" and "2" only: which, the text indicates, belong to later periods, layers 3 and 4, below "Floor 2", are assigned to Period VI on p. 41. As for J5 and J6, the Section Facing South, West East (E-F) indicates, "Floor 2" below layer 4, at a lower level, a very thick layer or flooring of brickbats.

The same problem is faced as regards ZF1: the Section Facing South, West-East (K-L), does not mark or number or floors in the layers 1 to 6. Layers 4 to 6, are not assigned to any of the periods of the sequence. ZF 1, was found to have been dug down 1 m against the north section, in which some broken bricks can be seen, but these are not the same as the red brick-crush floor. Thus the numbering of floors and other details are not according to the

stratigraphy and the report is full of confusion.

8.4. That chapters, II, III, and IV mention the actual layer numbers, in specific trenches, assigned to Periods I to VI. For instance, to Period VI, which lies below the "massive structure", belong the following (pp. 40-41).

layers 5, 6, 7	in Trench G2;
layers 3, 3A, 4	in Trench G7;
layers 5, 6	in Trench J5 and J6; and layers 3, 4	in Trench E8 and F8.

However, the text fails to mention which particular layers, in these and other trenches, pertain to Period VII (pp. 41-43), which very stratum is claimed to represent the alleged massive pillared hall. We could assume that in the published sections either one or two layers above those listed for Period VI would pertain to the so called "massive structure". Also, on page 42 is given the confusing information that the period is represented by

"... layers 1 and 2 in almost all the trenches except those in the eastern area where the deposit was disturbed ... and in the northern area where the floor of the period VII-C remained exposed and under use till late. In the northern areas layers 2 and 3 belong to this period. The three floors of this period were not found in all the trenches uniformly."

We can only assume that in the southern area it is layers 1 and 2 (with Floors "2" and "3" as marked on the Section Facing South, West-East (E-F) that represent this allegedly significant period, and, by default, that noting but the mosque floor lies over it. Significantly, and as stated above, we are not told the periods to which layers 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Trench E7 are assigned.

If G2 whose layers 5, 6 and 7 belong to Period VI, is counted as one of the "northern" trenches and layers 2 and 3 belong to Period VII as the paragraph quoted above indicates, to which period can we assign its layer 4? If it is counted as one of the "southern" trenches (where, the para quoted above says, layers 1 and 2 belong to Period VII, to which period do layers 4 and 3 belong? With no section drawing of G2 available, we are none the wiser. In the Schematic Cross Section of the Disputed Mound and the Tentative Periodization of the Disputed Site, in fact, no layer below layer 3 is mentioned in the relevant column.

Thus we see the consequences of the serious inadequacy of the report, mentioned above. Nowhere does the report tell us the content / colour / texture of the northern layers 2 and 3, or the southern layers 1 and 2. No evidence is cited to show that layers 1 and 2 in the south of the mound are contemporary with layers 2 and 3 in the north of the mound. The paragraph on P. 42 of the report, quoted above, remains without substance.

8.5. That below "Floor 1", obviously belonging to the mosque, we except to see, in the sections and plans of the various trenches, a sequence of 3 floors, presumably from "Floor 2" downwards to a "Floor 4" of Period VII with a Floor 5 belonging to Period VI. But nowhere is there any section showing Floors numbered "4" (which we expect, from the text, to be the lowest floor of the alleged "massive structure" of Period VII) or "5" (which we would expect to

On p. 42 the text mentions the most extensive floor of the mound, assigned to Phase C of Period VII, but fails to state what number has been assigned to it in the relevant trenches.

In Photograph 24 of Trench E7, we see a floor marked "Floor 3" at the bottom of the trench, uniformly touching the remnant plaster on the east face of the western wall, within the South Chamber of the mosque. The acceptable inference would be that this "Floor 3", about 1 m below surface, belonging to the so called "massive structure", is actually in functional relationship with the brick-course levels of the north-south wall on the west.

Below Floor 3, which is very approximately 1 m below surface in various trenches (as seen in several sections), a floor is marked "4" in the Section Facing South, West-East (E-F), as also in Trench G7 (see also Photograph 5). This floor 4, however, is shown as lying between layers 4 and 3A in the section (between layers 3 and 4 in the photograph). These layers 3 and 4, the text tells us (p.41), belong to the earlier Period VI. Thus "Floor 4" in this section cannot belong to Period VII or the "massive structure". Moreover, this floor is quite different from the floors that lay above it in the west section of G7, as evident in Photograph # 5. Thus it would be "Floor 3" that belonged to Period VII, which means that in this trench only two floors, 3 and 2, may possibly be assigned to that Period.

In Photograph # 53, "Floor 4" is mentioned in the caption as the "first" floor associated with the north-south wall. It is shown at the base of the excavation. The trench is without number in both photograph and caption. The floor at the base of the trench lies several (30-40?) centimeters below what is marked "Floor 1" on the section. Moreover, the section labels above this floor mark only layers 3 and 2, with "Floor 1" between these layers.

The only other mention of "Floor 4" is in the hypothetical isometric reconstruction of the mosque and 'temple' in Figure 23A. This is only a suggested reconstruction.

True, it is said (pp. 42-43) that the numbering of the floors of Period VII differs from trench to trench. Yet the question still remains as to which section in the report shows phases A to C of Period VII and their three floors, whatever the numbers assigned to them. As pointed out earlier, the report nowhere states the nature and content of the layers distinguished as VIIA, VIIB and VIIC.

In stratigraphic terms, then, the characteristics and content of the 3 phases of "Period" VII as given in the text of the report, are thrown in doubt by lacunae and inconsistencies. Lacunae include not only an absence of 3 sequential floors in the sections of the relevant layers, but also the absence of information as to the content of the strata below those assigned to Period VII in Trench E7, one of the more important on the mound as it contains an undisputed part of the mosque, the South Chamber.

8.6. That a simple stratigraphic principle is that no*

wall can be accurately dated vis-a-vis floors, unless we can see from which level the foundation trench for the western wall was cut, and which floor seals (or runs over) that vertical foundation cut (running close along the wall). A wall can be used, even raised higher, in periods after it was originally built. If a floor runs right up to a wall, with no gap or interruption between them, we assume that the wall and floor are functionally related, i.e. that they belong to the same building; it may be that the floor was laid after the wall was built, but not vice versa. The stratum to which the first construction of the wall dates, is indicated by the level from which the cut was made for its foundation. That cut, in its turn, will be dated by the floor or surface that lies immediately above the cut, or, in the jorgon, the floor/surface that seals the cut. The report does not state which layer or floor seals the so-called foundation trench mentioned on p. 41 and p. 69.

Photograph no. 52 (Trench E8) purports to show a cut, indicating the date of the massive west wall, in the north face of the trench, but (a) this face or section (technically, the "Section Facing South") shows an animal burrow sloping away from the west wall towards the east. The burrow cuts the second floor from the top, and also the red crush floor below it. From the level of the latter, the red stratum, a cut goes down vertically, but is too far (about 75 cm) from the west wall to be appreciated as its foundation trench cut.

Besides, (b) there is no "proof" because in the photograph the cut in the floor at the bottom of the trench

(this floor lies several centimeters below what is marked "Floor 2" on the section in the photograph) is neither close to, nor parallel to, the line of the wall, and does not therefore indicate the edge of a trench dug to make a wall.

In Photograph 55 of Trench ZE1 we see labels marking "Floor 1" and Floor 2" in the section, and a floor (without number) at the base of the excavated area below, but there is no cut visible in the trench section close to the east face of the north-south running wall. The upper and lower floors run right up to the east face of the wall. Thus we cannot say that either of these floors was earlier than, and cut to make room for, the upper courses of the north-south wall. The same observation follows from the Section Facing South, West-East (K-L), pertaining to Trench ZE1, east of Wall #5A.

So too no cut is visible in the Section E-F, Facing South, in E7 inside the South Chamber of the mosque. All that we have in this is a sequence of surfaces or strata below "Floor 3" coming straight up to the western wall in E7. There is no cut line, vertical or sloping, near the vertical edge of the wall."

3825. PW 16, Prof. Suraj Bhan filed his affidavit dated 20.03.2006 in support of the objections filed on behalf of plaintiff 1 (Suit-4) against ASI report. He says that the ASI has misrepresented the true nature of the structure, floors and pillar bases underlying the Babri-Masjid ruins. With respect to stratification, PW 16 in para 5 says that though the stratigraphy of each trench is claimed to be finally co-related with the general sequence of culture at the site, the ASI having failed to give a list of layers and periods trench-wise for facilitating the testing of the conclusions of the excavators has distorted the facts and gave wrong findings with regard to structure 3 and 2. PW 16 asserted that a concordance ought to have been provided in the report. The conclusions drawn by ASI were alleged to be bound and it says that they have adopted a defective methodology and biased assumption (vide para 4 of the affidavit). Then general allegations in para 14 has been made that the report, on the whole, lacks scientific rigour, objectivity and professional integrity and such trend and tendency in Indian Archaeology may pose a serious challenge not only to the world of historians but also to those citizens who are interested in truth and nothing but the truth. In his cross-examination PW 16, however, said:

'' In case of the excavation done by A.S.I. at the disputed site, its recording as well as stratification was not properly done. That is why a final opinion cannot be given without verifying the gaps(wide divergences) of the A.S.I. report from the data or record.'' (E.T.C.)

''Generally, scholars are in agreement on the use of some terms such as N.B.P.W., Shunga, Kushan, Gupta. But the term like 'post-Gupta-Rajpoot era' is not in vogue. The term 'Early Medieval – Sultanate' is also not in use. In the afore-said chart, the Mughal period is shown separately from the medieval period. It is also not in vogue because the Mughal period is only a part of the Medieval Period.''

''परन्तु जो इस रिपोर्ट में त्रुटि नजर आ रही है, वह यह है कि उन्होंने कुछ कूशियल साक्ष्य को प्राप्त करने अथवा उसका विश्लेषण करने मे कमजोरी दिखाई है तथा गलत निष्कर्ष निकालने के लिए कुछ साक्ष्यों को जरूरत से

"But an error perceptible in this report is that they have shown weakness in obtaining some crucial evidences or in analysing them and have given too much stress on some evidences so as to infer wrong findings and have not made any critical analysis of them. On the other hand, some other vital materials, which hold special significance to this problem, have been either ignored or suppressed, so that they may be able to establish their preconceived findings. I take these very methods to be faulty and term these presumptions as biased." (E.T.C.)

" It is correct to say that stratum is often better identified only in the presence of light. Besides, it can be better done by looking at the strata from a close range and by using one's archaeological knife for their identification. But one may have an impression as to difference in strata even by looking from a distance and also by looking at photograph and sectional drawing. From the sight of a photograph, many times it is known how much propriety and how many lacuna are there in the stratification done in a particular excavation. The soil texture of strata and their colour often gets reflected in the photograph too. (Himself stated) A pit etc. can be identified very easily." (E.T.C.)

"It is better that periodization is done numerically and on political and economic grounds. Several dynasties and several royal lineages will be covered in this chronological order. But periodization based on several royal lineages has many limitations. The ASI in its report has not proceeded with the reckoning of time merely on the basis of royal lineages. It has given the name of NBPW period on the basis of archaeological materials and those of medieval period, later or post Mughal periods etc., on historical basis. The ASI, in this report, have certainly given the names of Kushan period, Shunga period, Gupta period, later Gupta period, Rajpoot period and Mughal period, which are related to dynasties/royal lineages or cover such dynasties/royal lineages. But the report contains certain conclusions in which no line of separation is seen "In the total excavation period, I stayed there for three days. . . . . ASI may have carried out recording in the trenches during the excavation. However, to the best of my knowledge recording of glazed ware, glazed tiles & bones was not carried out properly for about one month from the beginning of excavation till the order of court. I had only studied the stratography of trenches and archaeological remains and had partially seen the drawing being made there but had not seen the trenches note book & daily register. I did not see any excavator writing the site note book at the site. I know that Supervisor's note book & antiquity register etc. have been prepared but I have doubt that the Supervisor has written the dairy at time of excavation. I also have doubts about the antiquity register that it has not been written in the manner it should have been written and appears to have been prepared subsequently according to requirement of court. This doubt is my own and I have also gathered information in this behalf. This information was given to me by Dr. Mandal, Mr. Thakran, Shirin Ratnagar and many other persons who were present there. When I looked at it, I found that the recording was not in the manner, as is done in usual excavation. To the best of my knowledge, out of the said three persons from whom I received the information, Mr. Thakran must have stayed at the disputed site for a long duration. . . . . In the period of my stay at the excavation site, I came to know that after the excavation,

the antiquities were entered in the evening in the daily register and probably signatures were also obtained. I did not see the Supervisor's note book being written, which is written by the Supervisor at the trench and instead at time of my visit to the trench I used to find some of the Supervisors sitting a side the trench. From this, it appeared to me that all the Supervisors were not equally serious excavators." (E.T.C.)

"It is correct that the excavation at the site has been carried out by both vertical and horizontal methods. The horizontal and vertical excavation was carried out in excess of the required excavation, in order to comply with the court order. . . . . .However, it was not the intention of the court to go deep to natural soil in trench J-3 & G-7 and arbitrarily making the survey older than the earlier period 1000 BC by Carbon-14 method. appendix.

Question- Has the ASI made any mention about the said four samples in its report or not?

Answer- It must have been mentioned, but it should have been written in appendix.

Question- You have not studied the trench and layer, with which the samples given in this appendix are related to, due to which you are unable to give a specific reply regarding the result of C-14 and are only stating about the appendix being incomplete. What you have to say in this behalf?

3830. Prof. D. Mandal, P.W. 24, while commenting upon the ASI report, has said that the form in which ASI has excavated the site at Ayodhya does not appear to be justified for the reason that only vertical excavation in some of the trenches was sufficient for achieving the object and horizontal excavation at such a large scale was not only unrequired but misuse of the available resources. He has made comments based upon the information, which he received from the personal visit at the site of excavation firstly from 10.6.2003 to 15.6.2003 and thereafter from 27.9.2003 to 29.9.2003; the ASI report containing two volumes and day to day register maintained by the ASI officials during the course of excavation.

3831. Sri Mandal's comments in his affidavit pertaining to stratigraphy/periodisation are:

"6. यह कि ए0 एस0 आई0 रिपोर्ट में प्रतिपादित स्तरीकरण एवं कालक्रम

www.vadaprativada.com

से मैं सहमत नहीं हूँ। इस सम्बन्ध में अभिसाक्षी निम्न तथ्य प्रस्तुत करता है :–

A– इस विषय के दो पहलू हैं। दोनों महत्वपूर्ण हैं।

(i) पहला स्तरीकरण, दूसरा कालक्रम। दोनों में पहले का महत्व अधिक है। क्योंकि कालक्रम का निर्धारण प्रधानतः स्तरीकरण पर निर्भर करता है, न कि इसके विपरीत। ए0 एस0 आई0 रिपोर्ट में "Stratigraphy and chronology" नामक अध्याय में स्तरीकरण से सम्बन्धित तथ्यों का नितान्त अभाव है। पूरा का पूरा अध्याय कालक्रम के ब्योरे से भरा है। वह भी प्रमाणित तथ्यों पर आधारित नहीं। उल्लेखनीय है कि उत्खनन से प्रकाश में आये स्तरों की संख्या तथा उनके नामकरण मात्र से ही स्तरीकरण का वास्तविक अर्थ में निर्धारण नहीं हो जाता।

(ii) सारगर्भित स्तरीकरण के लिए सम्बद्ध स्तरों के प्राकृतिक विशेषताओं (physical features) तथा अन्तर्वस्तुओ (contents) का विधिवत वर्णन एवं व्याख्या अत्यन्त आवश्यक है। इसमें प्रत्येक स्तर का रंग (Colour) गठन (texsture), संरचना (composition) तथा अन्तर्वस्तुओं का विस्तृत विवरण नितान्त अपेक्षित है। इन्हीं तथ्यों की व्याख्या के आधार पर किसी पुरास्थल के जमाव के इतिहास (depositional history) की रचना की जाती है। इससे कई गूढ़ तथ्यों पर प्रकाश पड़ता है। जैसे क्या अमुक पुरास्थल के सभी जमाव पुरातात्विक हैं? अथवा क्या उनमें से कुछ प्राकृतिक जमाव (natural deposit) भी हैं ? यदि उनमें से कुछ प्राकृतिक हैं तो उनका प्रकार क्या है? जैसे, क्या वे जल निर्मित है (water borne) या वायु निर्मित (air borne) आदि आदि। रिपोर्ट में इन तथ्यों का पूर्ण अभाव है। स्तरीकरण के सन्दर्भ में उनके किसी भी स्तर के रंग, गठन, संरचना आदि के विषय में कोई सूचना नहीं है। जमाव के इतिहास की तो कोई चर्चा ही नहीं।

B- (i) मुझे अपनी निरीक्षण अवधि के दरमियान उत्खनन से प्रकाश में आये सेक्शन (Section) का, जमाव के इतिहास की दृष्टि से, अध्ययन करने का अवसर मिला। पुरातत्व का विद्यार्थी होने

(ii) स्तरीकरण रिपोर्ट के अनुसार यहॉ कुल मिलाकर 18 परतों का जमाव प्रकाश में आया है। साथ में कुछ परतों से जुड़े हुए पिट (Pit) भी हैं। 18 परतों का यह जमाव प्राकृतिक मिट्टी (natural soil) पर स्थित है। ए0एस0आई0 के विद्वानों ने पूरे जमाव को पुरातात्विक जमाव (archaeological deposit) माना है। यह तथ्य रिपोर्ट के इस कथन से स्पष्ट "Excavation at the disputed site of Ayodhya has yielded a continuous cultural sequence contained in the total deposition of about 10.80 m." (ASI Report, Vol.I p.37) इस निष्कर्ष से हमारा मतभेद है। हम इस जमाव को मुख्यतः दो कोटि में विभाजित करते हैं:– पुरातात्विक (archaeological) एवं प्राकृतिक (natural)। सुविधा के लिए पुरातात्विक पुनः दो भागों में विभाजित किया जा सकता है– (a) बसावटी (habitational) तथा (b) गैर बसावटी (non-habitational)। यहॉ गैर बसावटी का तात्पर्य भरती–जमाव (filling deposit) से है।

(iii) रंग, गठन तथा संरचना (colour, texture and composition) के आधार पर 18 परतों में दो प्राकृतिक जमाव (natural deposit) की कोटि में आते हैं। G7 नामक ट्रेंच (जिसे सुविधा के लिए Index trench कहा जा सकता है) में इन परतों का प्रतिनिधित्व Layer No. 4 का उपरी हिस्सा तथा Layer No. 6 करते हैं। यहॉ इस बात का उल्लेख कर देना आवश्यक है कि रिपोर्ट मे Layer 4 की सही पहचान नहीं की गयी है। वस्तुतः इस परत में दो विभिन्न प्रकार के जमाव मिले हुए हैं। इसका उपरी भाग प्राकृतिक (natural) तथा निचला भाग पुरातात्विक

(iv) Layer 4 का उपरी भाग तथा Layer 6, दोनों मुख्यतः जल निर्मित (water borne) जमाव हैं। रंग, गठन तथा सरंचना के आधार पर वे सिल्ट (silt) कोटि के जमाव प्रतीत होते है। सिल्ट का निर्माण जल प्रक्रिया पर आश्रित है। Layer 6 का रंग हल्का धूसर गठन चिकना किन्तु सख्त तथा संरचना में बालू तथा कीचड़ (sand and mud) का समिश्रण प्रतीत होता है, इसमें यदा कदा सीप (shell) तथा सम्भवतःघोघा (snail) आदि के अवशेष भी दिखाई देते हैं। (उल्लेखनीय है कि riverine shell मिलने का उल्लेख रिपोर्ट के पृष्ठ संख्या 43 पर भी है। यह Period VIII के भरती जमाव (filling deposit) के सन्दर्भ में है। भरती जमाव में पूर्व कालीन मिट्टी का उपयोग हुआ है)। उल्लेखनीय है कि इस जमाव में बसावटी सामग्रियों का नितान्त अभाव है। यह साक्ष्य भी इस तथ्य का द्योतक है कि यह पुरातात्विक जमाव नहीं है।

(v) Layer 4 का उपरी भाग वाला जमाव, रंग, गठन एवं संरचना की दृष्टि से पुनः दो भागों में विभाजित प्रतीत होता है– उपरी तथा निचला भाग। निचला भाग रंग, गठन, एव संरचना में Layer 6 के लगभग समान है। किन्तु उपरी भाग में कुछ महत्वपूर्ण अन्तर दिखाई देता है। यह गहरे धूसर रंग का है। इसकी गठन अपेक्षाकृत ढीली (loose) है। इसका गहरे धूसर रंग का होना सम्भवतः इस तथ्य का द्योतक है कि इसके निर्माण में वनस्पति (vigtation) की विशेष भूमिका रही है। इस बंजर–सतह (sterile level) को प्राचीन हयूमस (ancient humus) नाम से सम्बोधित किया जा सकता है। किसी सतह पर इस प्रकार का जमाव उस सतह का लम्बे अर्से तक वीरान रहने के पश्चात ही होता है। उल्लेखनीय है कि इन दो परतों का जमाव इस पुरास्थल के उन सभी ट्रेंच में मिले हैं जिनमें इन स्तरों तक उत्खनन किया गया है।

(vi) उपलब्ध तथ्यों के आधार पर इसमें दो राय नहीं कि सिल्ट जमाव वाले दोनों परतों का निर्माण बाढ़ के फलस्वरुप हुआ। Layer 6 वाले बाढ़ के तत्काल पश्चात यहॉ आबादी का प्रमाण उपलब्ध है

(ix) मेरे अध्ययन के अनुसार इसका मुख्य कारण पुरास्थल को बाढ़ से सुरक्षा प्रदान करना प्रतीत होता है। प्राप्त साक्ष्यों से यह विदित होता है कि पुरास्थल प्रारम्भ से ही बाढ़ प्रवृत्त (flood prone) रहा है। इस सम्बन्ध में उल्लेखनीय है कि इस स्थल के पश्चिम में श्री B.B.Lal महोदय द्वारा की गई खुदाई में प्रारम्भिक ऐतिहासिक काल से "नदीकृत बालूं जमाव " (fluviatile sand bed) का अवशेष प्राप्त हुआ है (Indian Archaeology-A Review, 1976-77, p. 52)। स्थलाकृति सम्बन्धी साक्ष्य (topographical evidence) से भी इस समस्या पर प्रकाश पड़ता है। उल्लेखनीय है कि इस दृष्टि से प्रासंगिक क्षेत्र फ्लड प्लेन (flood plain) के

(ii) कालक्रम में सन्दभ्र में रिपोर्ट के अनुसार सभी कालों में सांस्कृतिक निरन्तरता (cultural continuity) है (ASI Report Vol.I, p.37)। पुरातत्व की दृष्टि से यह एक अत्यन्त ही महत्वपूर्ण निष्कर्ष है। रिपोर्ट के इस निष्कर्ष से हम सहमत नहीं हैं।

(iii) हमारे अध्ययन के अनुसार प्रथम चार कालों के पश्चात यह पुरास्थल एक लम्बे समय के लिए वीरान हो गया।

(iv) यहां मुस्लिम संस्कृति से सम्बद्ध ग्लेज़्ड वेयर का अवशेष सल्तनत काल से मिलना प्रारम्भ हो जाता है। इस काल का प्रारम्भ लगभग तेरहवीं सदी के प्रारम्भ से माना गया है। यहॉ चौथे काल (गुप्त काल) का अन्त छठी शताब्दी इसवी निर्धारित की गई है। इस काल के दूसरे बाढ़ जमाव के पश्चात ही हूयमस जमाव का साक्ष्य मिला है। इसके फ़ौरन ऊपर की परत से ग्लेज़्ड वेयर का साक्ष्य उपलब्ध है जिसकी तिथि लगभग तेरहवीं सदी है। ये तथ्य समुचित रुप से सांस्कृतिक अन्तराल का अकाट्य प्रमाण उपस्थित करते हैं। इन साक्ष्यों के आलोक में रिपोर्ट की यह

(v) ए0एस0आई0 द्वारा रिपोर्ट में प्रतिपादित पॉंचवा, छठा एवं सातवॉं काल मनमानी (arbitrary) साक्ष्यों पर आधारित प्रतीत होता है। इस सम्बन्ध में निम्न तथ्य प्रस्तुत हैं:–

Period V-

(a) पॉचवें काल को Post-Gupta-Rajput काल कहा गया है। रिपोर्ट के अनुसार G7 ट्रेंच में Layer 5 तथा Layer 6 इस काल का प्रतिनिधित्व करते हैं (ASI Report, Vol. I, Table after page 36; also page 40)

www.vadaprativada.com

(b) रिपोर्ट में इस काल की पहचान मुख्यतः Knife-edge bowl से की गई है। इसके आधार पर इसे सातवीं से दसवीं सदी के बीच रक्खा गया है। "The period is marked by the appearance of the knife-edge bowls and other types which belong to the period from seventh to tenth-century AD" (ASI Report, Vol I, p. 40)। उल्लेखनीय है कि Knife-edge bowl का उल्लेख Stratigraphy and Chronology के अध्याय में तो हुआ है, किन्तु Pottery के अध्याय में जहॉ इसका उल्लेख अपेक्षित था, कोई उल्लेख नहीं है। रिपोर्ट के figure 44 में अधिकांश bowls का रेखा चित्र प्रकाशित है किन्तु उनके वर्णन में किसी को भी Knife-edge bowl नहीं कहा गया है। ऐसे विशिष्ठ प्रमाण का न केवल रेखा चित्र, बल्कि छायाचित्र भी प्रकाशित होना चाहिए था। इसके बिना रेखाचित्र की प्रमाणिकता का मूल्यांकन सम्भव नहीं। उपलब्ध तथ्यों की विवेचना

(d) Layer 5 तथा 6 से प्राप्त सामग्रियों के आधार पर इस काल को Post Gupta-Rajput काल निर्धारित करना बिल्कुल मनगढ़न्त प्रतीत होता है। इस सम्बन्ध में उल्लेखनीय है कि Depositional History के आलोक में तो Layer 6 पुरातात्विक जमाव है ही नहीं। वस्तुतः तथा–कथित पाँचवां काल गुप्त काल का ही अंग प्रतीत होता है।

(e) रिपोर्ट में इस काल को Medieval Sultanate काल कहा गया है। इसकी तिथि 11th- 12th Century AD निर्धारित की गई है। उल्लेखनीय है कि रिपोर्ट में इस तिथि निर्धारण के आधार के सम्बन्ध में कोई साक्ष्य प्रस्तुत नहीं किया गया है। इस प्रश्न पर कि इस काल को Medieval-Sultanate क्यों कहा गया, रिपोर्ट पूरी तरह मौन है।

(f) रिपोर्ट में G7 ट्रेंच की परतों 3, 3 A तथा 4 को इस काल का समकालिक जमाव कहा गया है। किन्तु Depositional History के अनुसार Layer 4 का ऊपरी भाग तो पुरातात्विक जमाव है ही नहीं, इसका निर्माण तो बाढ़ तथा हयूमस जमाव के फलस्वरुप हुआ। फिर इसके पश्चात यह पुरास्थल लम्बे समय के लिए वीरान हो गया। उल्लेखनीय है कि इसके ऊपर स्थित सभी परतों से विभिन्न प्रकार के ग्लेज़्ड वेयर (glazed ware) तथा ग्लेज़्ड टाइल्स (glazed tiles) के अवशेष मिले हैं (See Appendix I, III) ऐसी स्थिति में Layer 3, 3 A तथा 4 की तिथि 11th-12th Century

AD निर्धारण करना किसी भी प्रकार युक्ति संगत प्रतीत नहीं होता।

(g) उपरोक्त तथ्यों के आलोक में Post Gupta-Rajput काल की तरह इस काल का भी कोई अस्तित्व नहीं लगता।

Period VII-

(i) रिपोर्ट के Structures नामक अध्याय में इस काल की तिथि निर्धारण के आधार पर कुछ तथ्य उपलब्ध हैं। रिपोर्ट के अनुसार इस काल में निर्मित दीवार नं0 16 (Wall No. 16) तथा वनस्पतीय मोटीफ़ (floral motif) से सुसज्जित एक अष्टभुजाकार शिलाखण्ड (Octagonal sand stone block) को मुख्य आधार के साक्ष्य के रुप में प्रस्तुत किया गया है (ASI Report, Vol I, pp. 52 and 56)

(j) रिपोर्ट में इस ईट निर्मित दीवार (wall 16) की समता सारनाथ के धर्मचक्रजिन विहार में स्थित एक विशेष ईट की दीवार से स्थापित की गई है। इस विहार का निर्माण गहड़वाल शासक गोविन्द चन्द्र की रानी कुमार देवी ने बारहवीं सदी में कराया था।

"6. That I do not agree with stratigraphy and chronology as laid down in the ASI report. In this behalf the witness

A- There are two aspects of this subject. Both are important.

(i) The first one is stratigraphy and the other one is chronology. Out of the two, the first one holds more importance, because chronological determination depends mainly on stratification but its contrary is not true. There is an utter absence of facts in relation to stratification, in the chapter "Stratigraphy and Chronology" in the ASI report. The whole chapter is replete with details about chronology, that too, not on the basis of verified facts. It is pertinent to mention that stratification cannot be done in a real sense, only on the basis of number of layers coming to light through excavation and their nomenclature.

(ii) For a meaningful stratification, it is very essential to make a proper description and explanation of physical features and contents of the concerned layers. In this process, an extensive description of colour, texture and composition of every layer as also their contents is absolutely necessary. The depositional history of an archaeological site is constructed on the basis of explanation of these very facts. It throws light on several abstruse facts, such as whether all the deposits on the said archaeological site are of archaeological nature or whether some of them are also natural deposits. If some of them are natural deposits then what is their type, such as, whether they are water borne, air

borne etc.? The report suffers from utter absence of these facts. It contains no information about the colour, texture, composition etc. of any layer in the process of stratification. It has no discussion on the depositional history.

B- (i) In course of my observation, I got an opportunity to study the sections which have come to light through excavation, from the view- point of depositional history. As a student of archaeology I pay obeisance to Trench G-7. The section of this trench tells the whole story of this archaeological site. It is an open book. Every layer of its is like pages of a book which can be read by anybody who is capable of doing so*. I put forward whatsoever I have been able to gather in a limited time by virtue of my ordinary capacity.*

(ii) As per stratification report, a deposit of total 18 layers has come to light here. Besides, there are also pits connected with some layers. This deposit of 18 layers is on natural soil. The ASI scholars have taken the whole deposit as an archaeological deposit. This fact is brought forth by a statement contained in the report which reads as "Excavation at the disputed site of Ayodhya has yielded a continuous cultural sequence contained in the total deposition of about 10.80 m." (ASI Report, Vol.I p.37). I disagree with this finding. We classify this deposit mainly into two categories: archaeological and natural. For convenience, archaeological category can be further divided into two parts: (a) habitational and (b)non-habitational. Here non-habitational means "filling deposit".

(iii) On the basis of colour, texture and composition, two of the eighteen layers come under the category of natural deposit. At the Trench G-7 (which can be called index trench for convenience), these layers are represented by the upper portion of Layer no.4 and the Layer no.6. Here it is necessary to mention that Layer no.4 is not correctly identified in the report. Actually, two different types of deposits have been discovered at this layer. Its upper portion is a natural deposit and its lower portion is an archaeological deposit.

(iv) The upper portion of Layer 4 and the Layer 6 are both mainly water borne deposits. On the basis of colour, texture and composition they appear to be deposits categorized as silt. Formation of silt depends on water process. The colour of Layer 6 is light grey; its texture is smooth but hard and its composition appears to be a mixture of sand and mud. Remains of shells and possibly of snails, etc. are also seen in it. (It is pertinent to mention that the discovery of riverine shell finds mention also on page no. 43 of the report. It relates to the filling deposit of Period VIII. The filling deposit contains soil of the early period). It is worth mentioning that there is an utter absence of habitational materials in this deposit. This evidence also suggests that it is not an

(v) The upper portion deposit of Layer 4, from the angle of colour, texture and composition, appears to be further divided into two parts- upper and lower parts. The lower part is almost similar to Layer 6 in respect of colour, texture and composition. It is of dark grey colour. Its texture is comparatively loose. Its being of dark grey colour perhaps suggests that vegetation has had a special role in its formation. This sterile level can be termed as ancient humus. This type of deposit is seen at any level only after that level having remained desolate for a long period. It is pertinent to mention that deposit of these two layers have been discovered at this archaeological site from all those trenches which have been excavated down to these layers.

(vi) On the basis of the facts available, it is beyond doubt that both the layers characterized as silt deposit came to be formed as a result of flood. Proof of habitation is available here after the flood-stemming deposit of Layer 6 but no clear proof of there being habitation for a long time is found at this place, after the flood-stemming deposit of Layer 4.

(vii) In this deposit having 18 layers, all layers, except for these two layers (the upper part of Layer 4 and the Layer 6), come under archaeological category. All the layers above the ancient humus and Layers 7 and 8 below the humus are categorized as filling deposits. All the remaining layers (layers 9 to 18)

(viii) A clear proof is found of having elevated the archaeological site in question through filling deposits. Its proof consists in the fact that mixed materials of different periods have been discovered from the concerned layers. In archaeology, this position is taken to be evidence of elevating the level. As per the evidences available, the process of heightening this sites starts right from Layer 8. This process continues upto Layer 1 with the exception of two layers (Layer 6 and the upper part of the Layer 4). The report also speaks of the level having been elevated many times but it has not thrown light on its reasons. It is an important question why there was necessity of repeated heightening of this archaeological site.

(ix) As per my study, providing protection to the archaeological site against floods appears to be the main reason for it. From the evidences discovered it transpires that the archaeological site has been flood-prone since the beginning. In this behalf it is pertinent to mention that remains of fluviatile sand bed belonging to the Early Historic Period have been discovered at the excavation carried out by Sri B.B. Lal in the west of this site (Indian Archaeology- A Review, 1976-77, p. 52). Topographical evidence also throws light on this problem. It is pertinent to mention that the region in question, from this point of

view, comes under flood plain. As per the report, ". . . . . the reason around the Ayodhya along the river comes under its flood plain. . . . . ." (ASI Report, Vol.I, p. 1). At the excavation carried out by Sri Lal, remains of ramparts and fortification wall constructed in the Early Historic Period have also been found from here. From the view point of protection against flood, this evidence is also very important. All these evidences clearly alludes to flood protection. Discovery of alluvial deposit from this place is the most important evidence out of these ones. A clear proof of fierce floods having occurred twice has been found from this place. The facts available give rise to a full possibility that necessity was felt for repeated heightening of this place only with a view to provide protection against the fury of flood. In course of this development, there was once a time when people had to abandon this place itself for a long period on account of flood. This fact is borne out by the evidence of humus deposit in the wake of flood.

(i) Chronology- This is the second aspect of the subject in question. In the report, deposit of 18 layers has been divided into the following nine periods: NBPW, Sunga. Kushana, Gupta, Post Gupta-Rajput, Early Medieval-Sultanate, Medieval, Mughal and Late and Post Mughal.

(ii) In reference to chronology, the report says that there

is cultural continuity in all the periods (ASI Report Vol.I, p.37). From archaeological point of view, it is a very important finding. We do not agree with this finding of the report.

(iii) As per our study, after the first four periods this archaeological sites became desolate for a long time. The continuity of periods came to be broken. In this behalf a clear proof of cultural intermission is available. The fourth period of chronology is the Gupta period. As per the report this period has been dated as 4^{th}*-*6^{th} century AD. As per my study, proofs are found of floods having occurred twice in this period. After the second flood people abandoned this place for a long time. This fact is evidenced by the fact that proof is found of there being humus deposit above this flood-stemming deposit. It is pertinent to mention that the remains of whichever culture is found after the humus deposit, belongs to the Islamic period. Discovery of remains of glazed ware, glazed tiles, animal bones and the floors made of lime and surkhi from the layers above the humus deposit are unassailable proofs of this fact. On analysis of the information collected from Day-to-Day Register, it is proved that from all the layers above the humus, remains of glazed ware and animal bones have been discovered details whereof are being given in Appendices I and II. In this very manner, the analysis of the information collected from the list of pieces of glazed tiles given in Chapter VI (pp. 164-172) goes to prove that remains of glazed tiles have been discovered from all the concerned layers above the humus deposit, in which respect details are being given in Appendix III.

(iv) Here we begin to find glazed ware associated with the Muslim culture from the Sultanate period. The beginning of this period is attributed to the beginning of around 13th century. Here the end of fourth period (the Gupta period) is attributed to the sixth century. Evidence of the humus deposit has been found only after the second flood-stemming deposit of this period. Evidence of there being glazed ware has been found from the layer immediately above it which is dated to around 13th century. These facts properly present unassailable proofs of cultural continuity. The conception of the report believing there to be cultural continuity here in all the periods does not appear to be true in light of these evidences. Actually the 18-layer deposit of this place should be divided only into in five cultural periods instead of nine ones. After the Gupta period, the Islamic period begins after a long interval. This fifth cultural period can be divided into many structural periods.

(v) Fifth, sixth and seventh periods as envisaged in the ASI report appear to be based on arbitrary evidences. In this behalf the following facts are presented:

Period V

(a) The fifth period has been termed as Post Gupta-

www.vadaprativada.com

Rajput period. As per the report, this period is represented by Layer 5 and Layer 6 at Trench G-7 (ASI Report, Vol.I, Table after page 36; also page 40).

(b) In the report, this period has been identified mainly with knife-edge bowls. On this basis this period has been placed between 7th to 10th century. "The period is marked by the appearance of the knife-edge bowls and other types which belong to the period from seventh to tenth century AD" (ASI Report, Vol. I, p. 40). It is pertinent to mention that knife-edge bowl certainly finds mention in the chapter titled Stratigraphy and Chronology but it finds no mention in a chapter on pottery where it was required to be mentioned. Figure 44 of the report carries diagrams of most of the bowls but in their description none of them has been called knife-edge bowl. Not only diagrams but also photographs of so special proofs ought to have been published. But for them, it is not possible to assess authenticity of diagrams. From the analysis of the facts available, it appears that this type of bowls have actually not been discovered from this so-called period.

(c) Among the materials discovered from the so-called Post Gupta-Rajput period, there is an utter want of such materials as coins, seals, ceiling, sculpture etc. which may be helpful in identifying this period in a conclusive manner. On the contrary, potteries from this period to the Gupta Period are found. Out of

these, lid-cum-bowl, knobbed lid, inkpot type lid etc. are worth mentioning. (ASI Report, Vol.I, Fig. 44).

(d) On the basis of the materials discovered from layers 5 and 6, dating this period as Post Gupta Rajput Period appears to be utterly fabricated. In this behalf it is worth mentioning that Layer 6, in the light of depositional history, is certainly not an archaeological deposit. Actually, the so-called fifth period appears to be a part of the Gupta period itself.

Period VI

(e) In the report, this period has been termed as Medieval Sultanate. It has been dated 11th-12th century AD. It is worth mentioning that no evidence has been presented in the report in connection with the basis of this dating. The report is completely silent over the question as to why this period has been termed as Medieval-Sultanate period.

(f) In the report, layers 3, 3A and 4 of Trench G-7 have been termed as contemporary deposits of this period. But as per Depositional History, the upper portion of Layer 4 which is certainly not an archaeological deposit, was surely formed as a result of floods and humus deposit. After that this archaeological site got depopulated for a long time. It is worth mentioning that remains of several types of glazed ware and glazed tile has been discovered from all the layers above it (See Appendices I & III). In such a situation, it does not appear proper in any manner to date

Layers 3, 3A and 4 as 11th-12th century AD.

(g) In the light of aforesaid facts, like Post Gupta-Rajput period this period too does not appear to have any existence.

Period VII

(h) In the report, it has been termed as medieval period. It has been dated between 12th to the beginning of 16th century AD (ASI Report Vol. I, p. 41). It is pertinent to mention that the concerned chapter (Stratigraphy and Chronology) is completely silent over the basis of this dating, whereas dating-related discussion is required to be there in this very chapter.

(i) In a chapter titled Structures in the report, some facts are available about the basis of dating of this period. Constructed in this period Wall No.16 and an octagonal sand stone block decorated with floral motif have been cited in the report as evidence of the main basis of dating (ASI Report, Vol, pp. 52 and 56).

(j) The report has established similarity of this brick-built Wall 16 with a particular brick-wall standing in Dharmachakrajin Vihar of Sarnath. Kumar Devi, queen of Gahadwal ruler Govind Chandra, had got this monastery built in the 12th century.

(k) The octagonal sand stone block of Ayodhya has been compared with a Sarnath Vihar-situated particular stone block decorated with floral motif. Similarity between these two has been established. On the basis of the similarity, Wall No. 16 has been attributed to the 12th century. On this very evidence, the beginning of the seventh period has been attributed to the 12th century, in the report." (E.T.C)

3832. The facts stated in affidavit, he (PW 24) admits to have based on Trench G-7, as is evident form page 287 and 293/294:

''मुख्य परीक्षा का जो शपथ पत्र प्रस्तुत किया है, वह प्रधान रुप से जी–7 ट्रेंच के अध्ययन पर आधारित है, क्योंकि ट्रेंच जी–7 में ही नेचुरल स्वायल तक जो स्तरीकरण के साक्ष्य उपलब्ध हुए हैं, वे किसी अन्य ट्रेंच में उपलब्ध नहीं हैं। ट्रेंच जी–7 को इस पुरास्थल पर हुए उत्खनन का इण्डेक्स ट्रेंच भी कहा जा सकता है। मेरी दृष्टि में ट्रेंच जी–7, इण्डेक्स ट्रेंच हो सकती है। इसके अतिरिक्त जिन अन्य ट्रेंचो में वर्जिन स्वायल तक उत्खनन हुआ है, वे ट्रेंचेज मेरी दृष्टि में उतने महत्वपूर्ण नहीं हैं।''(पेज 287)

''The affidavit of the examination-in-chief, is mainly based on study of Trench G-7 because the evidences of stratification found up to natural soil in Trench G-7, are not available in any other trench. The Trench G-7 can also be called the index trench of the excavation carried out at this archaeological site. In my view, the Trench G-7 can be the index trench. Besides it, the other trenches excavated up to virgin soil, are not that important in my view.''(E.T.C.)

''मैंने अपनी मुख्य परीक्षा के शपथ पत्र की धारा–6 (शपथ –पत्र के पेज–5 लगायत 17) में जो मत व्यक्त किया है, वह ट्रेंच जी–7 के अध्ययन पर आधारित है। यह कहना गलत है कि मैंने स्तरीकरण तथा काल निर्धारण के लिए ट्रेंच जी–7 के अतिरिक्त अन्य ट्रेंचो के अध्ययन की आवश्यकता नहीं समझी। मैंने अपने शपथ पत्र की धारा–6 में मैटीरियल, रियूज़ करने की बात कही है। जिस भी मैटीरियल के रियूज किये जाने को मैंने बताया है, वह मैटीरियल नान–इस्लामिक बिल्डिंग्स के मैटीरियल्स हैं तथा वे हिन्दू मंदिरों या बौद्ध विहार से संबंधित हैं। '' (पेज 293–294)

of the affidavit) of the affidavit of my examination-in-chief, is based on study of Trench G-7. It is wrong to say that for stratification and periodization, I did not consider it necessary to study other trenches besides Trench G-7. In para 6 of my affidavit, I have stated about reuse of material. Whatever material I have stated to be reused, is material of non-Islamic building and related to Hindu temples or Buddha Vihar."(E.T.C.)

3833. PW 24 D.Mandal treated trench G7 as the best trench, but PW-30 has a different view:

"The excavation at the disputed site in Ayodhya had commenced from J-3 in the north.

Question:- Do you have the information that trench J-3 is considered to be a very important trench out of the trenches dug out at the excavation site?

Answer:- In my opinion, all the trenches made for excavation are important because generally presence and absence of evidence are both important in archaeology."(E.T.C.)

3834. The witness, therefore, while not disputing the stratification/ chronology upto the period IV, i.e., Gupta period, has challenged V, VI and VII periods alleging it arbitrary. For period V, he has given two reasons, firstly that Knife-edge bowl

though referred in the Chapter of stratigraphy and chronology but no reference is given in the Chapter of "Potteries". Figure 44 showing sketched diagram of bowl does not justify the inference leading to a knife-edge bowl. According to PW 24, it appears that no such bowl was actually found. Secondly, according to him, the conclusive identity proofs like coin, seal, sealing, sculpture for determining post Gupta-Rajput period were not found. Only potteries of Gupta period were found like, lid-cum-bowl, knobbed lid, inkpot type lid etc. Period VI has been assailed on the ground that no reason or evidence has been mentioned to treat 11th and 12th Century A.D. as medieval Sultanate period. Besides above, from layer 4 in Trench G-7 different types of glazed wares and glazed tiles were found in all the levels. Hence, on the basis of layers 3, 3A and 4, the 11th and 12th century A.D. period is not justified to be determined. VIIth period termed as medieval from 12th to 16th century is also said to be silent with regard to any contextual material etc. Some of the structural evidence like wall 16 has been taken but its similarity and the reasons thereof are not correct. Similarly, it has also said that period VIII termed as "Mughal" is also based on conjectures and surmises and, in fact, period IX ought to have been treated as 5th period by terming it as "Islamic" period. Here what we find is PW 16 sought to make his statement with respect to history also claiming himself to be an authority, but when confronted, he claimed himself an 'Archaeologist'

''मै पुरातत्वविद हूँ। (पेज 188)

"I am an Archaeologist." (ETC)

''फील्ड आर्कियोलाजी के सम्बन्ध में मैं विशेषज्ञ हूँ। (पेज 136)

3835. However, when his opinion on history was challenged in the cross examination, he claimed that being an Archaeologist, he is Historian also:

''प्रश्न– पहली बार जब आप इस न्यायालय के समक्ष गवाही देने उपस्थित हुए थे जब आप एक पुरातत्ववेत्ता की हैसियत से आये थे या एक इतिहासकार की हैसियत से आये थे?

उत्तर– मैं पुरातत्ववेत्ता होते हुए इतिहासकार भी हूँ क्योंकि पुरातत्व एक ऐतिहासिक विज्ञान है इसलिए मैं जब कोर्ट के सामने पेश हुआ, इस विषय पर समग्रता से अपनी गवाही देने के लिए पेश हुआ था।''(पेज 352)

"Question- Your first appearance in this court to give evidence was as a archaeologist or historian?

Answer- Besides being an Archaeologist, I am also a historian because archaeology is a historical science and as such when I appeared before this court, I appeared to give my evidence on this topic in entirety." (E.T.C.)

''हर वर्थव्हाइल आर्कियोलाजिस्ट (पुरातत्ववेत्ता) इतिहासकार भी होता है और इतिहास एक व्यापक विज्ञान है पुरातत्व जिसका अंग है, मैं जब इतिहासकार के रूप में गवाही देने आया उसका यह तात्पर्य नहीं है कि मैं पुरातत्व के ज्ञान व विधि से वंचित होकर आया था।'' (पेज 353)

3836. The PW 24 sought to discredit other like report of Prof. B.B. Lal by saying :

"Prof. B.B. Lal is an Archaeologist, not a historian."(ETC)

The deposit of those 18 layers was found in Trench No. G-7. The deposit of 18 layers given by ASI in Trench G-7, is wrong. According to me 17 layers should have been mentioned in Trench G-7. In this trench, the ASI has wrongly shown Layer Nos. 3 & 3A. I had seen Trench G-7 after discovery of these layers, by that time excavation in this trench had been carried out up to about nine layers. The layers below Layer 9 in Trench G-7 are proper. I had seen it after publication of facts related to it in the ASI Report.

On basis of my personal knowledge, the layers below the Layer No. 9 are proper. The layers above Layer No.9 have not been properly identified. Had these layers been properly identified, then the deposit of 18 layers found at this archaeological site would not have been termed as such. Some archaeological deposit and some natural deposit is also claimed, which has not been given. Natural deposit is that deposit which totally lacks man-made remains and on its constitution, construction and contents it is established to be nature made. According to me, silt deposit was present here as natural deposit. After the silt, there was such deposit over there which was man made. The one in which man-made remains are found, will not be part of silt. This silt deposit was about 8-10 inches thick. Silt deposit was found there at two places, one in Layer-6 and the other in upper part of Layer-4. In its report, ASI has not all mentioned about the silt deposit. The silt deposit has been presented by the ASI as archaeological deposit.

Question: Should the ASI have shown the silt deposit as a separate layer ?

Answer: Yes.

It has not been done so by the ASI. Had the ASI shown this silt as a separate layer, then also this layer would have fallen under the 18 layers and there would have been no increase in the number of layers. The deposit of 18 layers given by ASI is correct, but its interpretation is not." (E.T.C.)

3838. The statement extracted above shows self contradiction and lack of clarity on the part of PW-24.

3839. PW 29, Jaya Menon, is co-author of the objections filed on behalf of PW 1 (Suit-4) against ASI report. It is for this reason that she was examined first before re-examination of PW 16 and 24. The affidavit of PW 29 is dated 28.9.2005 and her

cross examination was conducted from 29.9.2005 to 19.1.2006. PW 24 was examined second time when he was produced in respect to ASI report by filing his affidavit dated 5.12.2005 and the cross examination conducted from 5.12.2005 to 4.1.2006. So far as PW 16 is concerned, on third occasion his affidavit is dated 20.2.2006 and cross examination held from 20.3.2006 to 28.7.2006. It is for this reason probably that the periodization/ chronology vis-a-vis its co-relation with various finds and structures etc. found by ASI have been assailed in para 8 (from para 8.1 to 8.6) of the objections of plaintiff 1 (Suit-4). However, in her affidavit dated 28.9.2005, PW 29 has changed her stand and in para 4 and she says:

"4. That the ASI Report has problems with stratigraphy and chronology, which may be summarised as under:-

(A) That as many as 15 pieces of terracotta figurines of later periods were reported from earlier levels, an impossible situation if deposits were actually stratified. In fact, deposits from Gupta period onwards are not stratified and the material is all mixed up. This is a point that is not debated by the ASI and has been repeated several times through the Report.

(B) That there are clearly problems with the stratigraphy which is indicated by other inaccuracies. If one calculates the total depth of deposits in different periods from a single trench such as G7, it is clear that there are gaps. Specifically, in G7, there is 1 metre deposit for Period 1(NBP), 1.6 metre for

Period II (Sunga), 1.5 metre for Period III (Kushan), 2 metre for Period IV (Gupta), 0.9 metre for Period V (Post Gupta), 0.75 metre for Period VI (Early Medieval), 0.6 metre for Period VII (Medieval) and 0.25 metre for Period VIII and Period IX has not been indicated (as derived from Chapter III). This totals up to 8.60 metres of cultural deposits. According to the ASI, the total cultural deposit is 10.80 metre, which means that almost 2.20 metre is not accounted for. Not only this, Appendix IV, at the end of the book, mentions total depth dug for Trench G7 as 13.45 metre. Even if the ASI points out that the lower layers in G7 belong to a pit and we accept their depth for natural as 10.80 metre, it still means that there is a massive pit of about 2.65 metre depth, which is a trifle difficult to imagine. There could have been a fill as there is in Trench J3, but not a pit of such dimensions.

(C) That the ASI also mentions a continuous cultural occupation of the site. However, if we examine Plate 5 of the Final Report, a layer with no cultural material (termed in archaeology as a sterile layer) can be clearly seen, for example, below layer 4. The ASI has marked out this layer but has not numbered it. Sterile layers indicate periods when there was no habitation or occupation. These layers are ascribed to the Early Medieval/Sultatnate period (Period VI) in the tentative periodization of the site. There is then a possibility that there was no Early Medieval occupation and there was a gap between the Gupta and the Medieval periods. This had been noted as early as 1969-70 by a team of archaeologists from the Department of Ancient Indian History and Culture, of BHU, Varanasi, which had noted a desertion of the site between the Early Historic and Medieval periods. (By neglecting to indicate the sterile layers and their implications, the ASI is trying to project a continuous occupation of the site from the Early Historic to the Medieval periods. Neither the stratigraphy nor the artefacts, however, substantiate such a claim. There is a certain bias here, which again goes against the norms of archaeological objectivity, to force a certain interpretation on the material, that from the 10th century AD onwards the area was occupied by Hindu religious structures.)

www.vadaprativada.com

(D) That in the same context, the layering of fill deposits in J3, J4, J5, J6, K6, K7, L7, L8, J7, J8 was done to show continuous occupation in stratified contexts. It was only when complaints were made that these fill deposits were acknowledged but eventual registrations of artefacts from these deposits in the final Report were left uncorrected.

(E) That in archaeology, structures can be dated if there are special construction techniques or material, known specifically to have been used in a particular period, such as lime-surkhi from the end of the 12th century AD. Structures can also be dated on the basis of associated artefactual material coming from stratified contexts in association with the structures. But when the material is all mixed up from the Gupta period onwards, it is impossible to neatly slot structural remains into periods of post-Gupta, Early Medieval or Medieval levels*.*

(F) That in this attempt to force a particular interpretation on the material that cannot be substantiated, there is bound to be confusion and discrepancies. Confusion is clearly indicated by the manner in which floors are numbered at various places in the text. The same floor is given different numbers, some floors appear and disappear, their extent keeps changing and so forth.) The numbering of floors in association with so called "pillar bases", mentioned in the Table on pages 56-67 of the Final Report does not match with those in Fig. 8,9,10,11,12 and 13. On page 41, it is mentioned that the earliest floor extended in the eastern area up to the H series of trenches in sub-period VIIA. In sub-period VIIB, the next floor extended up to trenches J4-J5-J6. On page 42, it is indicated that in sub-period VIIC, the floor associated with the "pillar bases" is the most extensive on the mound. In Fig. 23A, however, Floor 4 (the earliest floor) is shown as extending all over the mound while Floor 3 and Floor 2 are more restricted, providing a completely contradictory picture.

(G) That the tentative periodization and schematic cross-

section of the mound that has been provided between page 37 and 38 of the Final Report does not provide a layer-wise description of all the trenches. For example, no information on layers has been provided for important trenches like E8, F8, F9, G8, G9 and G1. Even for trenches that have been mentioned in the diagrams, we have no indication of the layers below Floor 4 in important trenches like F3 and F4/F5. (There should have been a concordance of the layers of trenches from the north and south of the site.)

(H) That in some cases strata were marked in almost complete darkness within trenches such as G8. A study of stratigraphy within a trench requires careful examination of the sections to discern differences in colour and texture of soil. Obviously plenty of light is required for such a study. Even though there were arrangements for artificial light, very often this was not used as in the case of Trench G8 and yet strata were marked and antiquities registered as from particular layers."

3840. PW 29, this time has taken stand which substantially conforms to that of PW 24. In cross examination, she said :

"I agree with N.B.P.W., Mughal and late post Mughal periods but with the rest of the periods I do not agree. "According to me the terms for identification for periods in history and archaeology are different but not altogether different. . . . It is more or less correct to say that periodization on the basis of centuries is correct." (Page 193)

3841. A few thing, which we may say immediately to show apparent false allegations are that para 4(B) of the complaint said that according to ASI, the total cultural deposit is 10.80 metre but Appendix IV, at the end of the book, mentions total depth dug for trench G7 as 13.45. The complainant probably has not seen the report properly which says that the natural soil was found at 10.80 metre but the ASI people dug the trench further to find out and ensure the presence of natural soil and this fact they have also mentioned in the report. Similarly, PW-29 on the one hand stated that she agree with N.B.P.W., Mughal and late post Mughal periods, but do not agree for rest of the period (Page 71) while PW-24 has expressed his agreement with all other periods except 5, 6 and 7. Similarly, on page 70, PW-29 says that terminology and periodization are not most important while PW-24 has expressed a different view on page 186 and says stratigraphy is the backbone of any excavation. The statement of PW-29 on page 186 is contradictory to what she has said on page 182-183.

3842. PW 30 (Dr. R.C.Thakran), though assailed ASI report on the ground of lack of integrity and manipulated nomenclature etc. but its main stress is not that of wrong interpretation but she says that ASI has interchangeably used periods VI and VII according to convenience so as to co-relate the Finds, structural or otherwise, with a period which may give it a desired result. The part of objection with respect to periodization of PW 30, we have already noted above in para 535 from page 598 to 602. In the cross examination, however, he has said :

प्र0– स्तर– विन्यास अर्थात् विभिन्न स्तरों के निर्धारण (स्ट्रेटीफिकेशन आफ़ लेयर्स) का क्या आधार होता है?

"Question:- What is the basis of stratification of layers ?

Answer:- In stratification of any layer, the form of the material discovered in that particular layer and the type of soil inherent in the formation of its coats, work as main bases in archaeology.

In archaeology, whenever identification of a layer is carried out in course of digging, it is also necessary to know what the soil structure of that layer is, what its colour is, how hard it is and whether man made materials

are in it or not. All these facts are specially taken into account. Despite the afore-said bases being very important, it is not clear from layers themselves that these layers comprised of remains of the ancient time are different. For their identification, it is necessary for an archaeologist to separately identify them in accordance with rules of archaeology. The width of layers may be different which may be due to several factors." (E.T.C.)

"The periodization which ASI has done on the basis of layers, is correct, but the same, when based on nomenclature, is not correct, nor is it proper to name them (i.e. periods) on the basis of genealogies. There are mainly two methods of dating through periodization -

1. Relative method

2. Scientific method

Relative periodization may be based on stratigraphy and on the comparative analysis of the materials of the earlier culture. Absolute and scientific methods are one and the same .This method is also called chronometric. There are methods known as carbon-dating method, thermo-luminescence method, dedo -chronology dating method, etc. It will not always be correct to say that periodization carried out through absolute dating or scientific method

will be entirely correct. It is also not correct to say that scientific method of periodization will often be correct . The periodization carried out through stratification is also not cent percent conclusive . Periodization and comparative analysis through both the methods, may be considered to be almost correct . But they are not absolutely conclusive . It is wrong to say that in archaeology the periodization carried out through scientific method will certainly be conclusive , because the dating done through these methods is based on analysis done in laboratories ,of samples excavated in course of excavations . And while taking samples, proper care should be exercised, samples should be properly packed and they should be properly marked. And it is natural for samples to get absolutely influenced by natural forces." (E.T.C.)

Question:- Do you have the knowledge that the dating of several layers which ASI has in its report done in terms of centuries, is based on the result of Carbon-dating method applied to them ?

Answer:- It is perhaps correct but my opinion is that the division of time done on the basis only of Carbon-dating cannot be treated to be correct."(E.T.C.)

(Note: The statement of witness is contrary to what PW 24 has said as also this very witness has stated on page 351 and 352)

3843. PW 31 did not make any comment with respect to stratification but PW 32 has virtually towed the line as that of PW 24 and 29 in her affidavit. She has said in para 6 of her affidavit dated 27.3.2006 about stratigraphy as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

"That one of the most important concepts in archaeology is stratigraphy. "The law of superposition states that the book at the bottom of the stack was put there before, and is therefore older, than the one placed at the top. Sediments generally obey this principle as well as the archaeological materials they contain ... The essence of stratigraphic analysis is determining discrete, superimposed layers of features and then examining their contents." It was so stated by Clive Gamble in his book entitled as "Archaeology: The Basics", published by Routledge (London & New York) 2001. A true copy of the relevant extract of the aforesaid book is enclosed herewith as ANNEXURE No. 1*. An examination of the stratigraphy as indicated by the sections of various trenches at the site of*

www.vadaprativada.com

Ayodhya revealed the following three important features:

(i) That only the archaeological deposits of Periods I, II and III are stratified and hence found in a primary context, that is in their original place of use or discard.

(ii) That the deposits from Period IV till Period IX are not stratified and the material found is in a secondary context. In order words the archaeological deposits that have been described of Periods IV to IX mostly comprise of fill deposits brought from elsewhere for the purpose of construction in the Medieval Period. Hence this is not their original place of use or discard. The deposits from the Gupta Period onwards are not stratified is substantiated by the fact that as may as 15 pieces of terracotta figurines of later periods were reported from earlier levels, an impossible situation if deposits were actually stratified. The ASI was Stratifying the layers incorrectly was even pointed out through a complaint filed on 26.06.2003 regarding Trench G8*. In Trench G8, under the top floor are the brick courses of a wall foundation. Under these brick courses is a fill deposit. Neither the foundation nor the fill deposit can be ascribed a layer. It appears that this stratification was done on the basis of the calcrete and brick filling that lies to the east. However, this method of stratification is completely wrong. The calcrete and brick filling visible in trench G8 belongs to a single construction*

phase and cannot be ascribed separate layers. Moreover, the area that was excavated on 25th June lies to the west of the clacrete and brick filling. Thus, if stratification of the filling is wrong, stratifying a structure in relation to it is also incorrect. The whole principle behind stratification is to identify chronologically distinct phases. Thus, a brick wall of six courses of brick can not be ascribed six different layers. Similarly, six rows of calcrete alternating with brick, sandwiched with thick mortar, cannot be ascribed six different layers, the reason in both cases being a single construction phase.

(iii) That there is a possibility that there was no Early Medieval occupation and there was a gap between the Gupta (Period IV) and the Medieval Periods. If we examine Plate 5 of the Final Report, a layer with no cultural material (termed in archaeology as a sterile layer) can be clearly seen, for example, below layer 4. The ASI has marked out this layer but has not numbered it. Sterile layers indicate periods when there was no habitation or occupation. These layers are ascribed to the Early Medieval/ Sultanate Period (Period VI) in the tentative periodization of the site. A gap in occupation of the site between the Early Historic and Medieval Periods had been noted as early as 1969-70 by a team of archaeologists from the Department of Ancient Indian History and Culture, at BHU, Varanasi, and later in 1976-77 by Professor, B.B. Lal and his team from the A.S.I. The

ASI is trying to falsely project a continuous occupation of the site from the Early Historic to the Medieval Periods. Neither the stratigraphy nor the artefacts, however, substantiate such a claim. There is a certain bias here, which again goes against the norms of archaeological objectivity, to force a certain interpretation on the material, that from the 10th century AD onwards the area was occupied by Hindu religious structures.

In the same context, the layering of fill deposits in J3, J4, J5, J6, K6, K7, L7, L8, J7, J8 was done to show continuous occupation in stratified contexts. It was only when complaints were made that these fill deposits were acknowledged but eventual registrations of artefacts from these deposits in the final Report were left uncorrected."

3844. In her cross examination, however, she (PW-32) says:

"There is no period known as early medieval Saltanate period. I have not heard any period which is called as 'Early Mughal period'. I came across the 'Early Medieval Rajput Period' in the ASI report filed in this case. Process of periodization is based on certain features found in polity, society and economy. Stratification is based on discerning layers in sections that have formed due to either geological or human activities."(Page 31)

"I mean to say that ASI people have flouted the principles and methods of stratification, such as the fill deposit has to be reported as a fill deposit and a pit has to be reported as a pit but in the excavation in question, the ASI was wrongly

stratifying a pit and in the report they themselves have gone on record saying that pits in J-3 and also in K-7 and K-8 were wrongly identified as layers and they themselves admitted that pits were stratified and they have stated so in the report*." (Page 93)*

"Marking of different layer is done on the basis of soil colour, soil texture, compactness of the soil and cultural material." (Page 110)

"It is correct that several layers put together comprise one cultural period. Contemporary, layer means it is in relation to some other layers, e.g. Layer 14 in J-3 could be contemporary with layer 18 in trench G-7, both belonging to NBPW period. Similarity of number is not necessary because it may vary from trench to trench." (Page 111)

"Method of association in archaeology means associated cultural material in a layer. In a layer, so many different articles may be found, such as bangles, potteries, bones etc." (Page 112)

"I have learnt from the report of Prof. A.K. Narain that the entire Ayodhya is one site and stratification can be similar. In archaeology entire Ayodhya would be referred to as one site." (Page 130)

"'Stratigraphy' means a study of layers of different chronological periods indicating what comes earlier is at the bottom and what follows will be above it and so the sequences gets built up 'Early historic period' is a term used by historians to describe the period between sixth century B.C. and sixth century A.D. and 'medieval' is used by the historians for the period between 12th and 18th

centuries. The period between sixth century A.D. to 12th century A.D. is called 'early medieval period'. The medieval period has been further sub-divided into two periods, namely 'Sultanate period' and 'Mughal period'. There is no period like pre-Sultanate period." (Page 23)

"This chronological order was created by James Mill who wrote the book 'History of India in 1830. 'Filling' means that for the purpose of construction activities, a ground has to be levelled and while doing so, some earth is brought from outside to fill up the uneven ground. "(Page 23)

"...the whole issue of periodization in history and archeology is contested and debates are there."(Page 36)

Medieval-Generally 12th to 18th Century A.D.

www.vadaprativada.com

"As far as I know Century wise periodization is recognised under archaeology because certain diagnostic material do establish chronology in terms of centuries. Dynasty-wise periodization is a subject of historians although sometimes Archaeologists do follow it*. It is true that in excavation on the disputed site* the ASI has adopted all the three methods for the purpose of periodization*." (Page 125-126)*

"Volunteers that she does not agree with the periodization given by the ASI." (Page 126)

3845. PW 32 in general appreciated function of ASI:

"It is true that each trench was being supervised by an archaeologist. It is also correct to say that excavation was

www.vadaprativada.com

being conducted as per norms of grid system of excavation- which is one of the accepted system of excavation. It is correct to say that the excavation work was going on in presence of the parties and their nominees; and two judicial officers under the orders of the court were also supervising the excavation. So long I was there, the presence of the parties, their nominees and supervision of the judicial officers continued. Generally, for antiquities, it was three dimensional recording but for other finds, just a depth was recorded. Photography and Video recording of trenches and also of antiquities were also being done." (Page 121)

"It is true that at the site in dispute, excavations were made horizontally as well as vertically." (Page 123)

"It is correct to say that the ASI excavated up to the required depth." (Page 125)

"It is correct to say that for getting result in compliance of court orders excavation by horizontal and vertical methods were necessary which has been done by ASI. In this case only vertical excavation was not sufficient." (Page 147)

3846. From the statement of the six expert witnesses produced on behalf of plaintiff (Suit-4), we find that all of them are not unanimous in saying that the entire stratigraphy or periodization made by ASI is bad or incorrect or suffers with such material illegality or irregularity that the same deserves to be rejected, which would ultimately may result in rejection of the entire report itself. Their statements are also contradictory, vague, confused and based on more of conjectures.

3847. PW 16 on the one hand says that he has no objection to the categorization of period 1 to 5 (page 455), tried to dispute the ascertainment of period 6-7 (page 454), then on page 456 made some unclear statement by observing that period 7 should come after period six as Sultanate period. What appears to us is that in the ASI report the period 6 has been termed as "Medieval Sultanate" and period 7 as Sultanate but PW 16 wanted that period 6 should not be termed as "Sultanate" at all since it started in 13th century. He, however, suggested that in another manner period 6 ought to have started with 13th century if it is related with "Sultanate period".

3848. PW 24 on the contrary stated that after the first four periods there appears to be total dissolution for a long time and this has disturbed the continuity of the period. The 4th period (Gupta period) ended in 6th century and thereafter there is a gap of about 700 years since the further layer of natural deposition with the evidence of habitation appears to be related to 13th century hence total periodization instead of 9 ought to have been 5. He says that 5th, 6th and 7th period has been determined arbitrarily. The gap of 7th century to 12th century he has tried to justify on the ground of flood on account whereof the people abandoned the place for along time. However, on page 156 he himself admits that there is no evidence of any disastrous flood witnessed at Ayodhya between 600 AD to 1200 AD and further that there are evidence revealing that efforts were made to prevent such devastating floods. This shows that there had to be habitation otherwise who took steps for preservation of disastrous flood and why, if there was no habitation and the place stood abandoned. His statement on his own is ex facie contradictory, reflects on a total confusion to his part. Then he tried to justify his conclusion by stating on page 170 that all the finds were not discovered from the levels as claimed by ASI and that is why it could not have determined the period correctly. PW 16 has not disputed that the finds discovered by ASI were actually found by them. Then PW 29 says that except NBPW Mughal and late post Mughal period she disagree for the rest of the periods (page 71). She pointed out that the ASI had made some change in the nomenclature inasmuch as in the Chapter of stratigraphy, period six has been termed as Medieval Sultanate but in the subsequent chapter of result they have termed period 7 as medieval Sultanate and period 6 has been termed as early medieval period.

3849. PW 30 on his own evolved a different theory by suggesting that periodization made on the basis of carbon dating is not correct though the process of cabon dating has been appreciated by PW 16 and 24 both. PW 24 on page 170 has justified layer 5 and 6 as that belonging to early Medieval Sultanate period but then on page 271 disagrees with centurywise periodization made by ASI.

3850. Two more witnesses namely, Prof. Shereen F. Ratnagar, PW 27 and Dr. Sitaram Roy PW-28 were also examined by the plaintiffs (Suit-4). Both of them claimed to be Expert (Archaeologist). Both were examined before ASI proceedings. PW 27 basically sought to contradict Dr. B.B. Lal's observation about Ayodhya based on his excavation thereat made in 1976-77 and supported the book Exhibit 63 (Suit-4), ("Ayodhya: Archaeology after Demolition") written by Prof. D. Mandal criticising Dr. B.B. Lal's report with respect to Ayodhya.

3851. Exhibit 14 (Suit-5) (Register 20, pages 125-127)

contains two pages number 52 and 53 of Indian Archeology 1976-77- A Review. At Sl. No. 75, it talks of excavation at Ayodhya, District Faizabad conducted by Dr. B.B. Lal and Sri K.V. Soundra Rajan. It reads as under:

"75. Excavation At Ayodhya, District Faizabad.- In continuation of last year's work which was taken up under the project called 'Archaeology of the Ramayana Sites', excavation as resumed under Professor B.B. Lal of the Indian Institute of Advanced Study' Simla and Sri K.V. Soundra Rajan of the Survey, assisted by Sarvashri B. Narasimhaiah, Rambabu, M. S. Mani, R.K. Sehgal, J, C. De and A.K. Mishra of the Survey and Surya Kant Srivastava and R.N. Kaw of the Institute. The work was concentrated on two important sectors in the ancient part of the city, namely Ram Janma Bhumi mound and the open area to the west of Hanuman Garhi, besides a few trenches at Sita-ki-Rasoi.

The excavation revealed a fairly compact and working sequence for the antiquity of the place from its first settlement over the natural soil. This began with the use of the well-known Northern Black Polished Ware, in all its shades. At the lowest levels, alongside the Northern Back Polished Ware, were also found a few sherds of grey ware, painted with fugitive bands in black pigment along the rim or obliquely on the exterior. This is taken, on a consideration of the position of this ware at Sarvasti, Piprahwa, Kausambi, etc., as the very late and degenerate phase of the well-known Painted Grey Ware found at Hastinapura, Mathura, Ahichchhatra, etc. On the basis of

3852. The statement of PW 27, may not be relevant for the purpose of testing ASI report. But even otherwise we find that her deposition and opinion does not inspire confidence and it is short of the "expert's opinion" which may be termed "relevant" under Section 45 of the Evidence Act. She admits of having never visited the disputed site till she appeared as witness in these cases. She had written "introduction" to Prof. Mandal's book (Exhibit 63). From her cross-examination it is evident that she had no experience of field excavation.

"It is correct that in India I have not done any digging and excavation on my own." (page 52)

3853. She admits of writing things giving hypothetical sketches with respect to the disputed site:

"It is also correct that at pages 7, 8, 11, 12, 13 and 14 some sketches are given in my Introduction. Those sketches are purely by way of Introduction to the book as they are hypothetical. It is correct that from pages 16 to 69 is the book itself." (page 53)

3854. Merely on the basis of a photograph entire book and article etc. has been written. About her own work PW 27 says:

"It is substantially correct that I wrote my critique on the basis of the said sole photograph." (page 63)

3855. Her lack of knowledge about disputed site is evident from page 67:

"I am not absolutely certain of the area and extent of

www.vadaprativada.com

the disputed site at Ayodhya. I do not know in which part of Ayodhya the disputed site is located."

3856. Though she came to support the book written by Dr. Mandal criticising Dr. B.B.Lal's report but when specifically asked whether she agree with the report of Dr. B.B. Lal relating to Ayodhya on page 75 she says:

"I cannot say in terms of whether I agree or disagree with them."

3857. She (PW-27) also admitted that there is a possibility of some structure of the earlier period at the disputed site. On page 84 she said:

"It is correct to say that I do not rule out the possibility of any other structure of any other early period at the disputed site."

www.vadaprativada.com

3858. Similarly, PW 28, Dr. Sitaram Roy, a retired Director, Archaeology from the State of Bihar was also examined in 2002, i.e., before the excavation proceedings commenced. He tried to make a statement that according to his studies and as a student of Archaeology he can say that neither Ram Janam Bhumi temple nor any other kind of temple ever existed at any point of time, therefore, the question of construction of mosque after demolition of temple does not arise. He also tried to dispute stone inscription found in December, 1992 that the script therein is not of 12th century as is being claimed by other side. On archaeological evidence he can say that Lord Rama was not being worshipped at Ayodhya in 12th century and in 12th-13th century no temple of Lord Rama existed at Ayodhya. On the one hand he appeared as Expert (Archaeologist) and on the other hand he has tried to make various statements on History and other subjects.

3859. He tried to dispute the very factam of place of birth of Lord Rama in Ayodhya. This statement now goes against the stand of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) in view of the statement made under Order 10 Rule 4 in April 2009. This witness has no experience of field Archaeology as is evident from page 66. The credibility of the said witness, based on his archaeological conduct is tried to be dislodged by the defendants, in the following manner:

''यह कहना गलत है कि जब मेरी आर्कियोलाजिकल सर्वे आफ इंडिया में नौकरी हुई तो प्रो0 आर0एस0शर्मा उस सेलेक्शन बोर्ड में सदस्य थे। यह कहना बिल्कुल गलत है कि जब मैं बिहार सरकार में एक्सप्लोरेशन एंड एक्सक्वेशन में आफीसर के पद पर कार्यरत था तो कुछ मूर्तिया गायब हो गयी थीं। मैंने श्री धर वासुदेव सोहनी का नाम सुना है वह बिहार के लोकायुक्त थे। मेरे कार्यकाल में मूर्तिया गायब नहीं हुई थी। यह कहना बिल्कुल गलत है कि ''तथाकथित मूर्तियों के चोरी '' के बाद कोई सर्च पार्टी बनी थी और इस सम्बन्ध में मैं स्पष्ट करना चाहूंगा कि एंटीक्वीटी एण्ड आर्ट ट्रैजर्स एक्ट के तहत कोई भी प्राईवेट इंडिविजूअल अपने पास पुरा अवशेषों को निबन्धन कराकर रख सकता है। इसी के

Today I am drawing full pension.* The order for the aforesaid deduction from my pension was passed on the ground that I had not prevented Sohini Saheb from carrying away the antiquity*." (E.T.C.)*

3860. However for our purposes, we do not find the above facts relevant in any manner.

3861. PW-28 has admitted that Dr. R.S. Sharma has been his teacher and when he was selected for the post of Director Archaeology and Museum, Bihar by Public Service Commission Dr. R.S. Sharma was the Expert Member in the selection board. He also admitted his acquaintance with Dr. Sharma since 1953 when he was in Post-Graduation (page 83). His Article (Paper No. 199 C 2) was published in 1996 in a book where Prof. K.M. Shreemali of Delhi University was Editor.

3862. Supporting stratificaton/periodization made by ASI, Sri M.M.Pandey submitted that:

I. Archaeology provides scientific factual data for reconstructing ancient historical material culture, understanding Archaeology for the past is a multi disciplinary scientific subject and requires a team of workers for effective results. Excavation of ancient sites is one of the major works of Archaeologists. As it is a scientific discipline, it uses scientific methods in its working.

II. All Archaeological excavations are revealing and also at the same time destructive; revealing in the sense they yield unknown data like structures, antiquities etc, destructive that as one digs layer after layer, the upper layer have to be removed to go deeper and deeper to know more.

III. The area proposed to be excavated is divided into squares rising grid system and all available latest recording by documentation system, i.e., photography, video-recording etc. is done before starting excavation at desired and appropriate stages so that discovery of all structural remains and important finds to maintain a proper record for all future purposes.

IV. In archaeological context, layers (strata) are occupational and deposits caused by human and natural activities are generally distinguishable by their colour and texture as one digs.

V. Layers (strata) are important as they establish the relation between the structures and antiquities that help in establishing chronology provided the layer remained undisturbed.

VI. The thickness of a layer (stratum) also indicates the time span of activities and occupation..

VII. In some places long walls may pass through several trenches but these are easily seen through the layers, the baulk and are retain.

VIII. Archeological excavations and its methods have been referred in various books. According to the views referred to by Mr. Brain M. Faigan in his book styled as "In the beginning an introduction Archeology" as well as according to the famous archeologist who is considered to be father of Archeology Sir Mortimer Wheeler in his book "Archeology from the earth" have settled certain norms of excavation. According to them archaeological excavation work is a scientific investigation which is be conducted on sound research methodology.

IX. Here laboratory work also includes the process of writing report.

X. Detailed records and accurate measurement are the foundations of a sound, scientific excavation. Documentation (recording) throughout the excavation includes site diary, antiquity register and daybook. This day book records all events which have meticulously maintained in this case also. Moreover the day-today register has been duly signed by their advocates and expert nominees present on the spot in presence of Judge Observers.

XI. The antiquity Register is maintained to contain a special number of each small find, numbered with its level, trench number, depth below surface and additional information relating to the layer in which the object was found. This procedure provides a permanent record of significant artifacts which must be described individually in the final report and whose preservation is important. Lists of 'bag of finds' found during excavation are also recorded in this register; each bag, especially of common artifacts like pottery, animal bones, and stone implements receives a serial number which is recorded in a list in the

XII. Recording of Site Plan, structures and stratigraphic sections are equally important. Accurate plans provide a record of measurement and grid set up before excavation to provide a metrical framework for trenching. A system of redial coordinate measurements is used to record the position of horizontal features, with the radial lines forming an accurate network of reference points.

XIII. Three dimensional recording of major features and important artifacts is also a vital part of the excavation process. Many huts, pits or burial groups are important merely because of their association with other features or artifacts. Such information can be recovered only by 3-dimentional measurements, i.e. by recording the feature's horizontal and vertical coordinates with reference to the site grid.

XIV. In Archeology period of construction and stratigraphy is most important. Stratigrahpy is itself a scientific basis of periodization. It is based on Geological law of superimposition. Position of layers and their relation with structures is the basis for the same. Layers (strata) have to be worked out on the basis of texture, behaviour, colour, etc. It has to be seen whether the deposit is normal or flood deposit, layer (stratum) is disturbed or undisturbed, relationship of layer with structures, its contemporary deposit etc. For determination of age of the layer carbon dating is considered to be most scientific method. Periodization is done on the basis of finds that includes pottery, epigraphic materials, artifacts etc.

XV. A perusal of chapter 3 of the report makes it clear that ASI has adopted all the three methods of periodization and has based its report on sound archeological norms. It is well settled that periodization is done mainly in either of the three ways: - (1) Century wise (timeframe periodization) (2) Dynasty wise periodization (3) Layer (stratum) wise (Stratigraphically). The dating are of two types i.e. absolute dating and relative dating. The carbon dating is considered to be absolute dating being periodization by scientific investigation. Relative dating is base on stratigraphical observation. There may be variation in nomenclature of the periodization amongst the scholars but there may be no point of controversy in century wise periodization. However the report mentions about all the three methods in its reports as is evident from the report at pages 38, 39, 40, 41, 43 & 44 (volume 1).

XVI. To begin with, i.e. historically the year 1192 A.D., i.e. 12th century, is the end of the Hindu rule in Delhi when Prithviraj Chauhan was defeated by Muhammad Ghori in the 2nd battle of Tarain and Ghori appointed Qutabuddin Aibak as his nominee to look after the territory of Delhi which he did although formally he proclaimed himself to be the ruler (Sultan) only in 1206, after the death of his master. Thus, for all practical purposes, in Delhi the Sultanate started during the closing years of the 12th century A.D.

"Medieval Hindu India for Chapter 6, pp. 51-59 in his book "Cultural History of India", Oxford, 1975".

XVIII. On the basis of well established datable artifacts, cermacised and C-14 dates, the ASI report has followed the cultural sequence of Ayodhya as under:-

XIX. A perusal of the report submitted by ASI shows that the excavations were conducted by the ASI in a most standardized settled norms of excavations, Recording and writing of the reports were strictly followed. The excavations were conducted in vertical and horizontal manners by way of grid system of layout for excavation. Three dimensional recording were done and principal of stratigraphy was strictly followed. The Archaeological excavation being a scientific investigation was conducted on spot in accordance with settled norms. The trench supervisor's note book, diary, daily register antiquity registers were maintained regularly in presence of the parties. Three dimensional records were done and principles of stratigraphy were strictly followed.

XX. The objection of the plaintiffs that in view of the evidence drawn from the despositional history of the site there was no habitation at this site after Gupta Period for a long time. It was reoccupied after a long desertion in 13th century A.D.

XXI. In this connection it may be submitted that the source of this 'evidence drawn' can only be a figment of malicious mind. The Report mentions on page 271 para one:

"Another noteworthy feature is that it was only duing

www.vadaprativada.com

and after Period IV (Gupta level) onwards upto Period IX (late and post Mughal level) that the regular habitational deposits disappear in the concerned levels".

XXII. In the same para it further mentions:

"The area below the disputed site thus, remained a place for public use for a long time till the Period VIII (Mughal level) when the disputed structure was built".

XXIII. From where and on what basis 'a long desertion' is established and how the site is shown as 'reoccupied in 13th century A.D.' is neither clear not justified.

XXIV. The objection of the plaintiffs that essential requirement in an excavation report is a chapter that describes, one after the other, the main strata or levels found in the excavation, their nature (soil texture, colour, etc.) and contents. But there is no such section, level alone a chapter, in the Ayodhya report.

XXV. Periodization has been done on the basis of finds of a particular layer or set of layers that is on the basis of contents of the layers.

XXVI. The Chapter III covers all the salient points required for defining and study of layers and their respective periods.

XXVII. It is again the 'ostrich attitude' of the objector who wishfully do not want to acknowledge the existence of all these features in the Chapter IIII "Stratigraphy and Chronology" from pp. 37-47 in the Report.

XXVIII. The objection of the plaintiffs that descriptions given in the report are not always matched by the sections. The reverse is also true. The report does not states the period to which layer 6 of J3, layers 4-6 in ZE1-ZF1 And layers 3-6 in e7 belong.

XXIX. In this connection it may be submitted that on page 46 of Report in 5th line form top it is mentioned that the material marked those from layer 1 to 6 "belongs to a pit and the layers are superficial". So far as the period of the pit is concerned the data unearthed from the excavation is too scanty to determine, as the successive digging of pits for later construction in the same spot has obliterated the earliest pit line that could have dated the pit.

XXX. In any excavation report it is neither required nor possible to include each and every layer of every trench excavated while describing the stratigraphy of the site. However, in general walls 16 and 17 have been defined along with their associated layers to definite periods.

XXI. The objection of the plaintiffs that the numbering of the floors and other details are not according to the stratigraphy and the report is full of confusion.

XXXII. In this connection it may be submitted that confusion does not exist in the report rather it has been created out of lack of understanding of the subject and because facts are seen in isolation of one another and not in the right perspective. Archaeological evidences at any given site are found in different trenches and then they are put to gather to reach a meaningful conclusion. It is like

completing a jigsaw puzzle. Therefore, any description of it should be seen and read in the same way.

XXXIII. There is no single trench which has produced all the floors and layers. Evidence of different trenches has been shown in the Schematic Cross Section.

XXXIV. The objection of the plaintiffs that the text fails to mention which particular layers in these (Tr. G2, G7, J5-J6 and E8-F8) and other trenches pertain to Period VII.

XXXV. In this connection is may be submitted that since the layers of this period are not regular depositional layers rather are the filling material brought from out side to level the area as a preparatory to lay the successive floors, these floors have been described to belong to this period. The layers of fill, which are sandwiched between these floors, naturally become contemporary layers and therefore, have been defined as belonging to this period. The excerpt from page 42 of the Report is incomplete and should be read with the remaining part of the same paragraph which reads as:

XXXVI. As some places due to differential coverage area of the floor itself while at some other places due to destruction or decadence one of these was found missing. During excavation in different trenches they were named according to their occurrence from one onwards. The relative levels can be seen in the cross-sections of the mound and in the schematic cross section of the mound".

XXXVII. The confusion disappears as it never existed rather is a concocted one. The division of five areas of eastern, northern, western, southern and raised platform

are treated in Chapter II "Cuttings" which defines the limits of each area. Therefore, there is no need to "count" any trench in any area, rather it should be verified from the relevant chapter.

XXXVIII. In G2, a narrow strip (about 1 m wide) was excavated and in that small area with some top layer disturbances all the floors top floors (upto Fl.4) were found, since the dividing line for different periods is floors all the layers in between shall belong to the respective period, so the layer 3 and 4 also belong to the Period VII.

XXXIX. The objection of the plaintiffs that nowhere is there any section showing floors numbered "4" or "5" and no section shows a sequence of floors numbered "1" and "5".

XL. Prof. Dhaneswar Mandal, who was examined as PW 24 by the plaintiff as an archaeologist of pre-history, has been re-examined after submission of excavation report by the Archaeological Survey of India by the plaintiff Sunni Central Waqf Board to support the objections filed by them. It is pertinent to mention that Prof. Dhaneswar Mandal, who has written a book styled as "Archaeology after Demolition", had never visited the disputed site before writing the book. During excavation the disputed site was visited by him twice as stated by him in his examination in chief from 10.06.2003 to 15.06.2003 and from 27.09.2003 to 29.09.2003. The entire evidence given by Prof. Mandal makes it clear that the book was written by him on the basis of news published in newspapers, magazines, booklets, particularly paper 118/C. This fact has been admitted by him. Regarding excavations also he has very clearly stated that his observations are based on his own observations without any measurement or actual verification of the site. Prof. Mandal admits that he has no knowledge about the disputed site nor ever attempted to see the artifacts, inscriptions, etc., found at the time of leveling or excavation of the disputed site. Prof. Mandal in his statement has admitted that the process of excavation, i.e., grid system excavation was perfectly correct which is internationally accepted mode of excavation. He further admits the circular sign found during the excavation to be of Gupta period i.e. 4th-6th century AD which is undisputedly a non-Islamic construction of pre-Islamic era.

XLI. Dr R.C. Thakran was examined as PW 30 by SCWB in support of their objections against report of ASI, who, according to him, has not carried any excavation, rather during his masters degree course had attended some excavation at the sites of Mirzapur Karan ka Quila. The witness, in para 1 of his affidavit, has stated that he is involved in archaeological research since 1976 and had not excavated any site. The witness has given various details of the report in his examination in chief and annexed various documents but has failed to establish the same, rather the cross examination proved his statement to be false and baseless. The witness was in full agreement with the method of excavation, its marking, recording and listing. The witness stated that comparative study of archaeological finds was not possible on his part at the site and the witness could know about the alleged defects only after submission of the report. Regarding periodisation, the witness stated that periodisation from period 7th to 10th century A.D., as mentioned in page 40 period 5 in report of ASI is correct but the witness expressed his disagreement with the nomenclature only. According to the witness early medieval period started from 600 AD and continues up to 1200 AD. But at page 112 the witness admits that early medieval period may be termed as Rajput period. Further, contracting his own admission at page 113, the witness states that the medieval period starts from 600 AD and continues up to 1707 AD although further clarifies that period from 600 AD to 1200 AD is called early medieval period where as period from 1206 AD to 1526 AD is called Sultanate period and period from 1526 AD to 1707 AD is said to be Mughal period. Admitting existence of pillar bases at the disputed site, the witness states at page 116: "Maein us report mein likhi ish baat se sahmat hoon ki pillar bases patthar ke pedestal par tikey huwey thei....Maeine Ayodhya ki khudai ke dauran sabhi pillar bases ko dekha thaa. Usmein pedestal stones kahin par nahin haein, kewal Mata Sita ki Rasoi ki taraf kuchh pillar bases ke upar patthar paye gaye haein jo pedestal se bhinna haein." Regarding manufacturing of pillar bases the witnes stated: "Jabtak maein khudai sthal par raha aisa nahin hai ki ASI walon nein pillar base banaye hon, Baad mein agar unhone kuchh kiya ho to mujhe is baat ka gyan nahin hai.Yadi sabhi trenches mein lagatar videography ho rahi hon to pillar base banana sambhav nahin hai. " Regarding use of Chuna

www.vadaprativada.com

and Surkhi, the witness admitted the same being used in 7th-8th century and also in Gahadwal period. The witness supporting the third stand taken by SCWB regarding existence of old mosque/Idgah underneath the disputed structure stated at page 69: "Khudai ke dauran diwar ko dekhne se tatha ASI ke report dekhne se mujhe aisa laga ki Babri masjid ya uske poorva ke masjid/idgah banne mein jo material punah prayog mein laya gaya wah kahin aas paas se laakar istemal kiya gaya hai. The witness admitted existence of Kapot padi door jamb, lotus motif at the disputed site and has also stated that he has not seen any such thing in any mosque. The witness who is an atheist stated that: "Maein Ishwar ya devi devta mein astha nahin rakhta hoon." The witness admitted that he has no knowledge nor had ever studied about differences of masjid and idgah. At Page 187 the witnerss states: "Masjid wa idgah ke antar ke barey mein maine avashya suna hai, parantu iske barey maein maine adhyayan nahin kiya. Yah kahna sahi hai ki masjid wa idgah ke sambandh mein mainey sa-sapath apna bayaan mukhya pariksha ka prastut kiya hai ish vidha mein maein vishesh gyan nahin rakhta hoon.... Keval neemv ki diwar ko dekhkar uparokt donon antar bata pana mere liye sambhav nahin." The witness admitted existence of taakh or niches in temples. The witness at page 191 states: "Mandiron ki khudai ki reports mein animal bones paye jane ke barey mein maine padha hai." The witness admits importance of Kalash and floral motifs for temples and stated that it is used in temples only. The witness admits circular structure and wall belonging to

Gupta period. A perusal of the cross examination of the witness at page 356 to 360 makes it clear that the witness has no idea of the walls and has not identified the same in spite of filing detailed affidavit and going through the same. The entire cross examination of the witness makes it clear that the witness has no idea of excavation and has tried to support the objection of SCWB merely on the basis of some bookish knowledge as well as under some extraordinary circumstance.

XLII. At page 251, the witness (PW 31) admitted that the ASI had adopted all the three methods of periodisation and the carbon dating was a scientific mode which was considered to be absolute dating method. But according to the witness the Sultanate period was confined to 10th and 11th centuries only. The only objection against periodisation, according to the witness, was as stated by him at page 252: "I do not have any objection regarding periodisation of ASI in which they did not mention early Sultanate period from 10th to 11th century. In my opinion one of the objections regarding periodisation is the mention of early medieval Sultanate period, The periodisation should not be made on the basis of dynasty-wise." Regarding periodisation, the witness stated that he was in full agreement with the periodisation done by ASI but he was not agreeable to the periodisation of period 6 which is shown as medieval Sultanate period.

XLIII. The witness (PW-32) has categorically stated about her presence on the spot during excavation although so many things have been stated in her affidavit filed by

3863. From the above, it is evident that the entire chronology/stratification of ASI has not been condemned/ objected/criticized by Experts of Plaintiffs (Suit-4) but basically it is confined to 5, 6 and 7 period. PW 16 on page 54 stated that the determination of period 6 and 7 is contrary to the facts on the basis of pre-conceived ideas and have been antedated. On page 455 it says that he has no objection to the determination of periods 1 to 5. PW 24 does not dispute periods 1 to 4 but then has made comments against the periods 5, 6 and 7, as determined by ASI but then on page 170 in cross examination stated that layer 5 and 6 have rightly been shown belonging to early medieval Saltnat period and then on page 271 says that he does not agree with the century-wise periodization made by ASI and tried to explain the same on page 273-274, and, concluded that except period 5, 6 and 7 he agrees with rest of the determination made by ASI. PW 29 on page 71 while agreeing with N.B.P.W. Mughal and late post Mughal expressed for her disagreement with the rest of the periods. PW 30 without raising any serious objection with respect to periodization has said that the periods 6 and 7 have been mentioned in report by ASI interchangeably creating confusion. PW 31 remained silent with respect to stratification but PW 32, who is co-author of the objection filed by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) against ASI report,

claims that period 6 to 9 are not based on the deposits but the material found therein is a secondary context and therefore, the determination of the said period is not correct. These witnesses have given their different version in support of their opinion or understanding which are not in general harmony with each other and therefore, it cannot be said that all the witnesses have provided similar or common reasons against that part of stratification/chronology of the ASI which they have challenged. On the contrary, most of them admit that determination of stratigraphy/chronology can be done in one or more method which are well recognized and they are three (1) Dynasty wise, (2) Century wise and (3) Layer wise, and the ASI has followed all the three systems (PW 16 page 454, PW 24 page 269, PW 29 page 144, 150, 183, PW 30 page 351/352,)

3864. Sri Arun Kumar Sharma, OPW 18 has supported ASI report in its entirety. He retired in 1992 from the post of Superintending Archeologist from ASI. Having done M.Sc. in Physical Anthropology in 1958 from University of Sagar and Post Graduate Diploma in Archaeology in 1968 from Institute of Archaeology, Government of India, he served ASI Department for about 33 years and had the experience of exploration, excavation of archeological sites. Some of the excavation work he has undertaken has been detailed in para 5 and 6 of his affidavit. He has clearly averred that the three ways of periodization is well established in the field of Archaeology and the ASI has adopted all the three methods. Regarding 6 and 7 period determined by ASI, he has explained that suggestion by some of the witnesses that the medieval period in India must be co-related with Islam only is not correct and is not a universally accepted proposition. He has referred to the opinion of Ram Sharan Sharma, a Historian, recorded in his book "Perspectives in Social and Economic History of Early India" published in 1983 by Munshiram Manoharlal Publishers Pvt. Ltd., New Delhi, where on page 228 Chapter XVI the author says "

> "An important problem in the general history of India is that of transition from the ancient to the mediaeval. Certain dates such as AD 647, 711, 750, 916, 997, and 1206 have been suggested as landmarks in political history. But since politics was the preoccupation of a small section of society in early times, it has to be shown whether any of the above-mentioned dates or whether any other date or point of time is equally significant in the history of land system, crafts and commerce, polity, society, language, art, religion, etc. There has taken place a lot of discussion whether Harsavardhana's death in AD 647 marks the end of one and the beginning of another era in Indian history. The statement of Vincent Smith that the death of Harsavardhana set in the process of decline in Indian history has been ably refuted by a number of scholars, and especially by H.C. Ray. But for those who wish to investigate patterns of social and economic life, the real point to look for is not the presages of decline and prosperity but the nature of change in the existing way of life. If the change is of a fundamental nature, it should be regarded as heralding the advent of a new period. If it is a minor change it would not necessitate any new characterization of the period. Even the question of decline and prosperity has to be examined in relation to the process of change involved in it. We have to carefully consider how far the decline of the existing system of life shows symptoms of the rise of a new pattern of life. None of these points has been taken into account by V. Smith when he says that the death of Harsavardhana in AD 647 begins a period of decline nor by those who try to refute his theory.

On the grounds of dynastic and political history H.C. Ray suggests that AD 916 should be accepted as the line of demarcation between the two periods in the history of northern India. In his opinion: 'these may be called the ancient and the mediaeval periods; but it would be perhaps more reasonable to call them simply the Hindu period and the period of the Turks and Afghans.' A similar approach has been adopted by some other scholars. In the fifth volume of the History and Culture of the Indian People it is said at one place that ancient India came to an end in AD 997, and again, at another, that in Indian history the mediaeval factor was introduced in the thirteenth century. Both views are based on the assumption that the Muslim conquest ushered in mediaevalism in India. Does it mean that without the Muslim conquest there would have been no mediaevalism in India? Does it imply that the countries of Europe which escaped this conquest had no mediaeval period in their history? In Europe it is difficult to think of mediaevalism without feudalism, the origins and nature of which have to be examined in the case of India. In our opinion the beginnings of a feudal way of life can be sought in the age of the Guptas and Harsa, which marks a period of transition in the history."

3865. He has also referred to the opinion of another learned Historian A.L.Basham's book "A Cultural History of India" (first published in 1975) Oxford University Press (Eighth Indian Impression in 1992) contained in Chapter VI, titled as "Medieval Hindu India". While giving details of various Hindu kings ruling different parts of the country, even after Muslim invasion, Dr.Basham has observed that it is not that the entire Indian Continent got influenced by Muslims from 7, 8 or 9th century but from time to time different parts were ruled by different Hindu kings of great vitality.

3866. We have copy of the entire book of A.L. Basham, i.e., "A Cultural History of India" (first published in 1975) and 10th impression 2006 by Oxford University Press, New Delhi (Book No. 112). Sri Basham in Chapter VI which runs from page 51 to 59 has noticed that the Gupta Empire disappeared by the middle of 6th century. In the second half of 6th century, a city on Upper Ganga, before its confluence with Jamuna, Kanyakubja (later known as Kanauj), rose to prominence as the capital of the Maukhari kings. The city of Sthanvisvara, now Thanesar, in the watershed between the Ganga and the Indus, became the capital of a rising family of rulers descended from a certain Pushyabhuti. Gujarat and Malwa were in the power of the Maitraka Dynasty, founded by the general of the Guptas. In the Deccan the Chalukya Dynasty was gaining in strength, while in Tamilnadu the Dynasty of the Pallawas was also enlarging its boundaries. This is the pattern of Indian politics until the Muslim invasion. It further says:

> "The political history of India between the end of the Gupta Empire and the coming of the Muslims can be traced

in some detail from thousands of inscriptions which contain the genealogies and brief accounts of the reigns of kings, and in the panegyrics which form the preambles to records of land-grants, mostly to religious bodies-temples, monasteries, or groups of learned brahmans."

3867. In 7th century (606-47 AD) Harshavardhana gained control of Kanyakubja (Kannauj). After heirless demise, his empire also died with him. The subsequent period by Sri A.L. Basham is described as under:

"The succeeding period is very obscure and badly documented, but it marks the culmination of a process which had begun with the invasion of the Hunas in the last years of the Gupta Empire. The sixth and seventh centuries saw the rise of many new dynasties, small and great, in the northern part of the sub-continent. Few of these ruling families are to be found mentioned in sources from periods before the Guptas, and many of their genealogies begin with names which do not seem Sanskritic. These people appear to have been new-comers. Some of them may have been related to the Hunas. A new people, who began to make their presence felt towards the end of the sixth century, the Gurjaras, gave their name to the present Gujarat and founded several important ruling dynasties. Since place-names containing a similar element can be found as far to the north-west as Pakistan and Afghanistan, it is commonly suggested that the Gurjaras entered India in the wake of the Hunas. Their name has been linked with that of the ancient people of the south Russian steppes called Khazars, and with the Georgians (Gruz) of the

Caucasus. Other obscure tribes of Central Asians may also have followed the Hunas, and wilder peoples from outlying areas may have profited from the unsettled conditions to gain political control of important regions. In any case, new ruling houses arose in the post-Gupta period and many of their names survive to the present day as those of the Rajput clans.

Towards the end of the eighth century three of the recently arisen dynasties contended for Kanyakubja, by now the acknowledged metropolis of northern India. These were the Palas of Bihar and Bengal, the Rashtrakutas of the Deccan, and the Gurjara-Pratiharas, who controlled parts of Malwa and Rajasthan. The great city was for a time occupied by the Palas, whose Buddhist king Dharmapala drove up the Ganga valley and exacted tribute from many kings of the area. The Rashtrakuta Govinda III, whose policy of raiding the north, continued by his successors, was to have many repercussions, drove Dharmapala out, but was forced to return to his base owing to trouble at home. The vacuum was filled, very early in the ninth century, by Nagabhata II of the Gurjara-Pratiharas.

For about a hundred years the Gurjara-Pratiharas of Kanyakubja restored a little of the glory of the earlier empires. Under their greatest kings, Mihira Bhoja (c. 836-90) and Mahendrapala (c. 890-910), they received tribute from rulers from Gujarat to the borders of Bengal, and Muslim travellers were much impressed by the peacefulness and prosperity of their quasi-feudal empire. But their old enemies, the fierce Rashtrakutas from the Deccan, were constantly worrying them, and in about 916 Kanyakubja was again temporarily occupied by Indra III of the Rashtrakutas, whose lightning raids provided a foretaste of the similar attacks of the Marathas 800 years later.

Indra III soon returned to the south; but his effects were longer-lasting than those of previous Rashtrakuta raiders. Though the Pratiharas returned to their capital, they were humiliated and weakened, and their vassals ceased to respect them. Within a generation or two the greater vassals had thrown aside their allegiance, and were fighting with their former masters and among themselves. It was in these circumstances that Mahmud or Ghazni, in the early years of the eleventh century, carried out his seventeen raids on India; but though the Turkish raiders ransacked and destroyed palaces and temples, and returned to their headquarters in Afghanistan with immense caravans of riches and slaves, India resumed her traditional political ways as if nothing had happened.

The Turks overwhelmed the Sahi kingdom, which had controlled a large area of the north-west, from Kabul to Lahore. The rulers of this realm had also been Turks, but Turks who had adopted Hindu traditions, and who offered no serious threat to their neighbours to the east. The Ghaznavids also conquered the Muslim kingdoms of Sind, occupied by the Arabs early in the eighth century, whose chiefs had long ceased to trouble the hindu kingdoms on their frontiers. Thus the hindu states of the Gangetic basin and Rajasthan now had on their borders a young aggressive kingdom with new methods of warfare and with a religious ideology which might be expected to encourage aggression.

The most remarkable feature of the situation was that, as far as surviving records show, nobody whatever in hindu India recognised the menace of the Turks. The Ghaznavids made a few further raids, but these were far less impressive than those of Mahmud. The Turks were soon torn by internal strife and, though they continued to hold the Panjab, it must have seemed to the hindu politicians of the time that, like that Arabs before them, they would be contained indefinitely. Having no real historical tradition, the Indian memory, of earlier conquerors coming from the north-west-Greeks, Sakas, Kushanas, and Hunas-was so vague that it was quite ineffectual as a warning to the rulers of the time.

In the involved situation arising from Mahmud's raids, five larger kingdoms shared most of northern India between them, the Chahamanas (Chauhans) of Rajasthan, the Gahadavalas (Gahrwals) of Kanyakubja (Kanauj) and Varanasi (Banaras), the Chaulukyas or Solankis of Gujarat, the Paramaras (Parmars) of Malwa, and the Chandellas (Chandels) of Bundelkhand, to the south of the Ganga. These dynasties bore names which are among the best-known of the thirty-six Rajput clans. Their kings had already acquired something of the traditional Rajput character-gallant, extremely sensitive to points of honour, glorifying war, but war of a gentlemanly kind, intensely devoted to tradition, and quite incapable of serious co-operation one with another. The Palas, who governed Bihar and Bengal, had been quite untouched by Mahmud's invasions. Early in the twelfth century they were replaced by the Sena Dynasty, which reversed the Palas' traditional support of Buddhism and encouraged hindu orthodoxy. They seem to have played little or no part in the politics of the western part of India, where the five major kingdoms and numerous lesser tributary realms fought honourable among the themselves, basing their strategy and tactics on principles inherited from epics.

In 1173 Ghazni was captured by Ghiyas-ud-din, whose headquarters were Ghur in Afghanistan. From his new capital Ghiyas-ud-din turned his attention to India. His brother, Muhammad bin Sam, occupied the Panjab and deposed the last ruler of the line of Mahmud. Then in 1191 Muammad bin Sam attacked Prithviraja, king of the Chahamanas, the hindu ruler on his eastern frontier. Prithviraja, fighting on his own ground with a larger army, defeated Muhammad at Tarain, and he retreated. In the following year, 1192, Muhammad came again with stronger forces, and on the same field of Tarain Prithviraja lost the day, and the Ganga valley was open to the invaders. Before the century was over Turkish control was established along the whole length of the sacred river.

It is easy to suggest reasons why the Hindus were unable to resist the Turks, and many such suggestions have been put forward. In dealing with the question it must be remembered that the invasion of the Turks was only one of numerous attacks through the north-western passes which took place in historical times. The Aryans, by a process not fully known to us, gained control of the Panjab from the decadent Harappans. The Achaemenians of Iran occupied part at least of the Indus valley; Alexander's troops reached the Beas, but were compelled to retreat; in the second century B.C. the Greeks from Bactria occupied the Panjab; they were followed in the next century by the Sakas or Scythians; in the first century A.D. came the Kushanas, and in the fifth the Hunas. Mahmud's raids in the early eleventh century were precursors of the even stronger Turkish attacks of Muhammad bin Sam, which led to the protracted domination of most of India by Muslim rulers.

These were not by any means the last attacks from the north-west, however. Soon after the Turkish occupation, Mongol hordes swept into India and occupied much of the territory west of the Indus. In 1398 Timur, the great Mongol conqueror, sacked Delhi and raged through western India, causing tremendous carnage and destruction. In 1526 Babur the Mughal defeated the Afghan rulers of Delhi and occupied the country. In 1555 his son, Humayun, reconquered it from his base in Afghanistan. During the eighteenth century Persians and Afghans raided India in turn, both sacking Delhi before returning to their homelands*."*

3868. The above clearly shows that in the period of Mahmood Gaznavi raids and thereafter, the northern India was shared by five larger kingdoms namely, Chauhans (Rajasthan), Gahadavalas (Kannauj and Banaras), Chalukyas or Solanki (Gujarat), Parmaras (Malva) and Chandellas (Bundelkhand). The said dynasties have been titled by learned author as one of "the best known of 36 Rajput clans". The Palas, who governed Bihar and Bengal remained untouched by Mahmud Gazanavi's invasion but early in the 12th century they were replaced by Sena dynasty which reversed the Palas traditional support of Buddhism and encouraged Hindu orthodox religion. The Chauhans rule came to end with the defeat of Prithvi Raj Chauhan in 1192 AD by Mohammad Ghuri at Tarain leaving the Ganges valley open to invaders/foreigners. In 1206 AD Gaharwals (King Jai Chand) was also defeated by Ghuri.

The details of Maukhary, Pushyabhuti, Pratihar, Gaharwal etc. rulers have also been given in "Ayodhya Ka Itihas Evam Puratatva" (supra) (Book No. 141), Chapter-7, pages 81 to 105 which is a minute and detailed study on the subject and except some observations made therein based on 1992 inscriptions found at Ayodhya which for the time being we can exclude, the rest of the contents of the said chapter as such have not been shown inaccurate or incorrect, hence may be referred hereunder:

कन्नौज के मौखरियों में सबसे पहला राजा हरिवर्मा हुआ। ईशानवर्मा के हरहा अभिलेख में मौखिरियों की वंशावली हरिवर्मा से प्रारम्भ होती है। उसके पूर्वज संभवतः बिहार से यहां आए होंगे, क्योंकि बिहार के गया जिले के बराबर और नागार्जुनी पहाड़ियों से मौखरी राजाओं के तीन अभिलेख प्राप्त हुए हैं। इन अभिलेखों में तीन राजाओं के नाम मिलते हैं–यज्ञवर्मा, शार्दूलवर्मा तथा अनन्तवर्मा। अनन्तवर्मा को कोई उपाधि नहीं दी गई है किन्तु उसके पिता शार्दूलवर्मा को सामन्त चूणामणि कहा गया है। शार्दूलवर्मा के पिता यज्ञवर्मा को भी नृप मात्र कहा गया है। इस प्रकार छठी शताब्दी के प्रारम्भ में ये सामन्त मौखरी नरेश गया के क्षेत्र में शासन कर रहे थे। इसमें कोई सन्देह नहीं है कि गया के ये तीनों मौखरी राजा गुप्त सम्राटों के अधीनस्थ सामन्त थे, किन्तु इनका कन्नौज के मौखिरियों से क्या सम्बन्ध था, इस विषय पर कुछ कहना संभव नहीं है। अधिक–से–अधिक यही संभावना की जा सकती है कि गुप्त सम्राटों के निर्देश पर बिहार के मौखिरियों के वंश में उत्पन्न हरिवर्मा को कान्यकुब्ज अथवा कन्नौज में सामन्त के रूप में नियुक्ति मिली हो। हरहा के अभिलेख में हरिवर्मा को मात्र राजा कहा गया है तथा उसे आदि नरेश माना गया है। लेकिन इस अभिलेख से यह स्पष्ट नहीं होता कि मौखरियों ने अपना शासन कहां से शुरू किया था अथवा उनकी राजधानी कहां पर थी। राधा गोविन्द बसाक का यह मत है कि प्रारम्भ में मौखरियों ने अयोध्या से शासन किया था तथा बाद में अवन्तिवर्मा के काल में उन्होंने अपनी राजधानी कन्नौज को बनाया। मौखरियों की राजधानी कन्नौज में थी, इसकी सूचना हमें हर्षचरित से प्राप्त होती है जिसमें यह कहा गया है कि मौखरी रानी राजयश्री, जो हर्षवर्धन की बहन थी, मालवराज के द्वारा कन्नौज में ही बन्दी

मौखरियों ने अपनी राजधानी अयोध्या में क्यों नहीं बनाई होगी, इस संबंध में केवल अनुमान ही प्रस्तुत किए जा सकते हैं। पहली संभावना यह है कि गुप्त सम्राटों ने प्रारंभिक मौखरी सामन्तों को कन्नौज में स्थापित होने का निर्देश दिया हो और परम्परागत रूप में जब मौखरी अधिक शक्तिशाली हो गए और गुप्त साम्राज्य का अन्त हो गया तो भी उन्होंने लगभग उन्हीं कारणों से अपनी राजधानी अयोध्या में बनाने का विचार न किया हो जिनके कारण पुष्यमित्र शुंग ने मौर्य राजवंश का अन्त हो जाने के बाद अपनी राजधानी पाटलिपुत्र में नहीं बनाई।

उत्तर भारत में मौखरियों की शक्ति का पूर्ण उदय श्री ईशानवर्मा के समय में होता है। ईशानवर्मा के हड़हा पाषाण अभिलेख (श्लोक 13) में यह कहा गया है कि उसने आन्ध्रपति को जीतकर, शूलिकों की सेना को परास्त करके तथा गौड़ों का सम्बन्ध पृथ्वी से छुड़ाकर उन्हें समुदाश्रयी होने के लिए बाध्य करके, सिंहासन को अधिकृत किया था। इस प्रकार ऐसा लगता है कि ईशानवर्मा ने यह विजयें अपने युवराज काल में प्राप्त की थीं और इसी कारण उसके पिता के काल में लिखवाए गए जौनपुर अभिलेख में विन्ध्य और आन्ध्र के राजाओं को परास्त करने की जो बात कही गई है उसमें ईशानवर्मा का भी सहयोग था। जहां तक गौड़ों को परास्त करने की बात है उसके सम्बन्ध में विद्वानों की यह राय है कि मौखरियों ने यह अभियान अयोध्या के गुप्त सम्राटों की अधीनता में चलाया होगा। आदित्यसेन के अफसाढ़ अभिलेख में यह उल्लेख आया है कि जीवितगुप्त ने, वह भी गुप्तों का सामन्त रहा होगा, कदली वृक्षों की शाखाओं से आवृत्त समुद्र तटों पर रहने वाले शत्रुओं को परास्त किया था। सिन्हा ने तो यहां तक कहा है कि यह गुप्त शासक विष्णुगुप्त चन्द्रादित्य रहा होगा।

इस काल–खण्ड के इतिहास को लिखने वाले विद्वानों ने परवर्ती गुप्त राजवंश और पुष्यभूति राजवंश को मौखरियों के समान ही महत्व दे रखा है। फ्लीट ने सबसे पहले आदित्यसेन के अफसाढ़ अभिलेख का संपादन किया था और उन्होंने इस अभिलेख में प्राप्त परवर्ती गुप्त राजवंश के शासकों को मौखरियों का प्रतिद्वंदी राजवंश बताया। उसके बाद जितने भी इतिहासकारों ने परवर्ती गुप्त राजवंश के विषय में लिया है उन सभी ने इस मत को महत्व दिया है। लेकिन, वास्तविकता यह है कि अयोध्या के गुप्त सम्राटों के राजवंश के पतन के बाद कन्नौज के मौखरी राजवंश ने लगभग वही स्थिति प्राप्त कर ली थी जो गुप्त सम्राटों की थी। छठी शताब्दी के प्रारम्भ में परवर्ती गुप्त और पुष्यभूति राजवंशों की स्थिति छोटे–मोटे सामन्तों जैसी ही थी। अयोध्या के इतिहास के सम्बन्ध में विचार करते समय यह बात प्रमुख रूप से कही जा सकती है कि मौखरी राजवंश के गृहवर्मा के राज्यकाल तक कोशल उनके शासनान्तर्गत बना रहा। कुछ विद्वानों ने परवर्ती गुप्त शासकों को मगध से उद्भूत हुआ माना है जिससे यह धारणा बनती है कि संभवतः कोशल भी किसी समय परवर्ती गुप्तों के अन्तर्गत रहा होगा। किन्तु यहां यह बता देना आवश्यक है कि छठी शताब्दी ई0 में परवर्ती गुप्त राजवंश राजस्थान के मालव जनपद की स्थानीय और सामान्य शक्ति थी। आदित्यसेन का अफसाढ़ अभिलेख सातवीं शताब्दी में लिखवाया गया था जिस समय वह मगध का एक महत्वपूर्ण शासक बन गया था। उसने इस अभिलेख में अपने पूर्वजों का विवरण दिया है जिसमें अपने पूर्व के सात राजाओं का उल्लेख किया है। आदित्यसेन का अफसाढ़ लेख उन महत्वपूर्ण लेखों में है जिन्हें प्रारम्भ से ही गलत संदर्भ में समझा गया है। उल्लेखनीय है कि अभिलेख में आदित्यसेन अपने पूर्वजों को साधारण 'नृप' अथवा 'श्री' आदि नाम से ही अभिहित करता है जिससे उनके सामान्य स्थानीय शासक होने की बात मानी जानी चाहिए। कुछ स्थानों पर उसके पूर्वजों के मौखरी राजवंश के साथ प्रतिद्वंद्विता और प्रतिस्पर्धा की बात कही गई है। अफसाढ़ अभिलेख के आठवें श्लोक में यह कहा गया है कि आदित्यसेन के चौथे पूर्वज कुमारगुप्त ने राजाओं में चन्द्रमा के समान श्री ईशानवर्मा की सेना को मंदराचल पर्वत की भांति विमथित (मथ) कर दिया था। किन्तु इस युद्ध का क्या परिणाम हुआ यह नहीं बताया गया है। लेकिन अगले ही श्लोक में यह अवश्य

मौखरी राजवंश का शासन इस क्षेत्र पर कम–से–कम अवन्तिवर्मा और उसके पुत्र गृहवर्मा के समय तक चला। इतिहासकारों का ऐसा अनुमान है कि हर्षवर्धन ने गृहवर्मा की हत्या के बाद कन्नौज का शासन स्वयं संभाल लिया था और इस प्रकार कन्नौज के मौखरियों का वंश समाप्त हो

गया था। ह्वेनसांग ने भी यह उल्लेख किया है कि शत्रुओं का दमन करने के बाद कन्नौज के मंत्रियों ने हर्ष से कन्नौज का शासन संभालने का अनुरोध किया था। इसके अतिरिक्त हर्ष की विजयों और कामरूम के शासक भास्करवर्मा के साथ हर्ष के दौत्य सम्बन्ध की बात को ध्यान में रखते हुए यह स्वीकार करना पड़ेगा कि कुछ समय के लिए अयोध्या तथा कोशल क्षेत्र भी, हर्ष के साम्राज्य का अंग बन गया था। यह भी संभव है कि हर्ष ने कन्नौज को केवल अपनी गतिविधियों का केन्द्र मात्र बनाया हो। लेकिन, मौखरी राजवंश का विनाश हो गया था यह स्वीकार नहीं किया जा सकता। नालन्दा से प्राप्त एक मुहर में अवन्तिवर्मा के पुत्र के नाम का उल्लेख हुआ है जिसके नाम का केवल प्रथम अक्षर 'सु' पढ़ा जा सका है। कुछ विद्वानों ने इस 'सु' को 'सुचन्द्रवर्मा' मानने का सुझाव दिया है। यहां यह उल्लेखनीय है कि इस मुहर में अवन्तिवर्मा के पुत्र गृहवर्मा का कोई उल्लेख नहीं है। बहुत संभव है कि गृहवर्मा के बाद अवन्तिवर्मा के दूसरे पुत्र 'सु' ने राज्य किया हो। आर्यमुजुश्रीमूलकल्प में 'गृह' के बाद 'सुव्र' के शासक होने की बात कही गई है। 'सु' के बाद मौखरी राजवंश का इतिहास पुनर्निर्मित करना कठिन कार्य है। कुछ विद्वानों ने पूर्णवर्मा को मौखरी राजा माना है तथा ह्वेनसांग भी उसे अशोकराज का अंतिम उत्तराधिकारी मानता है। पूर्णवर्मा या तो मगध का स्वतंत्र शासक था अथवा मौखरी वंश का कोई उत्तराधिकारी था। 630 ई0 में नालन्दा की यात्रा करने वाले ह्वेनसांग ने पूर्णवर्मा को पूर्वकाल का राजा बताया है। कुछ विद्वानों ने यह भी सुझाव दिया है कि पूर्णवर्मा हर्ष द्वारा नियुक्त मगध का शासक था और उसकी मृत्यु के उपरांत ही माधवगुप्त हर्ष द्वारा मगध का शासक नियुक्त किया गया। इसी माधवगुप्त का पुत्र आदित्यसेन था जिसने अफसाढ़ का पाषाणखण्ड अभिलेख लिखवाया था। मौखरी वंश आदित्यसेन के समय में भी नष्ट नहीं हुआ था, इस बात की सूचना हमें नेपाल के जयदेव द्वितीय के पशुपति अभिलेख से प्राप्त होती है। यह अभिलेख नेपाली संवत् 157 (773 ई0) में तिथ्यांकित है। इसमें यह कहा गया है कि मगध के शासक आदित्यसेन ने अपनी पुत्री का विवाह मौखरी नरेश भोगवर्मा से किया था और इस भोगवर्मा की पुत्री वत्सदेवी नेपाल के लिच्छवी नरेश जयदेव द्वितीय की माता तथा शिवदेव द्वितीय की पत्नी थी।

आठवीं से दसवीं शताब्दियों के अयोध्या के इतिहास के विषय में कोई विशेष सूचना आभिलेखिक एवं साहित्यिक स्रोतों से नहीं मिल पाती। किन्तु उत्तर भारत के राजनीतिक इतिहास में कन्नौज का महत्व बना रहा क्योंकि गुर्जर–प्रतिहार राजाओं ने नवीं शताब्दी ई0 में कन्नौज से शासन किया था। नागभट्ट द्वितीय जो पहले गोविन्द तृतीय से पराजित हो चुका था, कन्नौज पर अधिकार करने के बाद अपने को सम्राट् घोषित करता है तथा 'परम भट्टारक महाराजाधिराज परमेश्वर' की उपाधियां धारण करता है। उसी के वंश में नागपाल के बाद रामभद्र तथा उसका पुत्र मिहिरभोज शासक बनता है। प्रतिहार काल में कन्नौज के प्रतिहारों के संघर्ष दक्षिण मे राष्ट्कूटों के साथ तथा पूर्व में बंगाल के पालों के साथ निरन्तर चलते रहे। मिहिरभोज के बाद उसका पुत्र महेन्द्रपाल शासक हुआ जिसकी शासन तिथि 885–915 ई0 तक मानी जाती है। महेन्द्रपाल के बाद भोज द्वितीय, तत्पश्चात महीपाल और उसके बाद महेन्द्रपाल द्वितीय और देवपाल शासक बनते हैं। देवपाल की अंतिम ज्ञात तिथि 948 ई0 है और उसने संभवतः 950 ई0 तक शासन किया। देवपाल संभवतः अन्तिम महत्वपूर्ण राजा था क्योंकि गहड़वाल राजा चन्द्रदेव के चन्द्रावती अभिलेख से यह ज्ञात होता है कि उसके पितामह यशोविग्रह ने देवपाल के वंशजों के नष्ट हो जाने के बाद बलपूर्वक कान्यकुब्ज पर अधिकार कर लिया था। यह एक विचार करने की

www.vadaprativada.com

अयोध्या के इतिहास की दृष्टि से गहड़वाल युग अत्यधिक महत्वपूर्ण है। यद्यपि इस समय भी अयोध्या के सम्बन्ध में अधिक आभिलेखिक अथवा साहित्यिक साक्ष्य उपलब्ध नहीं हैं फिर भी अनेक स्थलों पर ऐसे उल्लेख मिलते हैं जिनसे अयोध्या के इतिहास पर थोड़ा बहुत प्रकाश पड़ता है।

महीचन्द्र

यशोविग्रह का पुत्र महीचन्द्र का पिता था। इसका वर्णन भी गहड़वाल अभिलेखों में साधारण ढंग से एक विजयी राजा के रूप में किया गया है तथा यह कहा गया है कि उसका यश समुद्र के पार तक फैल चुका था। महाराजपुत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र के ताम्रपत्राभिलेख में उसे 'नृप' कहा गया है तथा यह बताया गया है कि उसने अनेक शत्रुओं पर विजय प्राप्त की थी। इस अभिलेख में उसे महीतल नाम दिया गया है। इस प्रकार इतिहासकारों का यह मानना है कि यशोविग्रह तथा महीचन्द्र दोनों ही सामन्त शासक थे और किसी बड़े राजा की अधीनता स्वीकारत करते थे। संभवतः इनका स्वामी कल्चुरि शासक लक्ष्मीकर्ण (1042–1070 ई0) था जिसका

www.vadaprativada.com

चन्द्रदेव गहड़वाल राजवंश का प्रथम प्रतापी राजा था। उसका पहला अभिलेख चन्द्रावती से मिला है और उस पर विक्रम संवत् 1148 (1090 ई.) की तिथि पड़ी हुई है। इस अभिलेख में उसे 'परम भट्टारक महाराजाधिराज परमेश्वर परमाहेश्वर निजभुजोपार्जित श्रीकान्यकुब्जाधिपत्य श्रीचन्द्रदेवविजयी' कहा गया है। इससे यह अनुमान लगाया जा सकता है कि 1090 ई0 के काफी पहले ही उसका शासन प्रारम्भ हो चुका था। प्रायः सभी गहड़वाल अभिलेखों में उसे काशी (वाराणसी), कुशिक (कन्यकुब्ज या कन्नौज), उत्तरकोशल (अयोध्या) तथा इन्द्रस्थानीयक आदि तीर्थों का पालन करने वाला कहा गया है। अधिकांश विद्वान् इन्द्रस्थानीयक को इन्द्रप्रस्थ अथवा दिल्ली ही मानते हैं। इस समय दिल्ली पर तोमरों का राज्य था और उसके बाद चाहमानों का शासन हुआ। तोमरों के किसी भी अभिलेख से इस बात की झलक नहीं मिलती कि दिल्ली पर गहड़वालों ने शासन स्थापित किया हो और तोमरों को अपदस्थ किया हो। फिर भी, चन्द्रावती अभिलेख में उल्लिखित इन्द्रस्थानीयक को यदि दिल्ली माना जाए तो यही स्वीकार करना पड़ेगा कि चन्द्रदेव तुर्कों के आक्रमण के विरुद्ध अभियान करते हुए दिल्ली तक पहुँचा होगा और उसकी रक्षा की होगी।

चन्द्रदेव ने किन परिस्थितियों में इस विस्तृत भू–भाग पर शासन प्रारम्भ किया, इसके विषय में कुछ संकेत महाराजपुत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र के बसाही ताम्रपत्राभिलेख से प्राप्त होता है जिसमें यह कहा गया है कि भोज की मृत्यु के पश्चात् तथा कर्ण की कीर्ति के अवशेष के नष्ट होने पर जब पृथ्वी कठिनाई में पड़ गई थी तो चन्द्रदेव ने उसकी रक्षा की। चन्द्रावती अभिलेख में यह भी कहा गया है कि उसने अपने उदार प्रताप से समस्त प्रजोपद्रवों को शान्त करके गाधिपुर आधिराज्य को अर्जित किया तथा शत्रुओं को विध्वस्त कर दिया।

वसाही दानपत्र लेख में उल्लिखित भोज की पहचान भोज परमार से की गई है जिसने 1000 से 1050 ई0 तक शासन किया था, तथा कर्ण की पहचान कल्चुरि शासक लक्ष्मीकर्ण से की गई है जिसने युद्ध में कई बार पराजित होने के बाद अपना सिंहासन 1073 ई0 के पूर्व अपने

पुत्र यशःकर्ण के लिए छोड़ दिया था। लक्ष्मीकर्ण की पराजयों के बाद अन्तर्वेदी में कोई शक्तिशाली प्रतिरोध न रह जाने के कारण तथा पश्चित से मुसलमानों के निरंतर होने वाले आक्रमणों के कारण प्रजाजनों में भय व्याप्त हो गया था। इसको शान्त करने का श्रेय चन्द्रदेव को प्राप्त हुआ। मुसलमान इतिहासकारों के उल्लेखों से यह ज्ञात होता है कि समकालीन गजनी के सुल्तान इब्राहिम ने (1059–99 ई0 तक) भारत पर कई बार आक्रमण किए थे। हबीबुस्सियर नामक इतिहास लेखक का यह कहना है कि 'उसने हिन्दुस्तान पर कई बार आक्रमण किया और हर बार विजयी होकर गजनी लौटा।' ऐसे में समय में चन्द्रदेव ने तुरुष्क आक्रमणों से इन देवतीर्थों की सुरक्षा करने के लिए तथा प्रजा में व्याप्त उपद्रवों को शान्त करने के लिए शासन अपने हाथ में ले लिया।

चन्द्रदेव के शासनकाल के चार अभिलेख उपलब्ध हैं जो विक्रमी संवत् 1048, 1050, 1054 में तिथ्यांकित हैं। चन्द्रदेव को वाराणसी से दिल्ली तक के क्षेत्र का स्वामी बनने के लिए कई युद्ध करने पड़े होंगे। गहड़वाल अभिलेखों में शत्रु को नष्ट करने वाला (क्रान्तद्विषन्मण्डलः) तथा उद्वत योद्धाओं के द्वारा फैलाए गए अन्धकार को नष्ट करने वाला (विध्वस्तोद्धतधीरयोधतिमिरः) कहा गया है। चन्द्रावती के विक्रम संवत् 1150 (1093 ई0) वाले लेख में उसे नरपति, गजपति, गिरिपति तथा त्रिशंकुपति को जीतने का श्रेय दिया गया है। इनके विषय में निश्चयपूर्वक कुछ विशेष नहीं कहा जा सकता। संभवतः यह कल्चुरि राजाओं की उपाधियां थीं अथवा ये सामन्तों के कुछ विशेष वर्ग थे।

चन्द्रदेव की सबसे महत्वपूर्ण उपलब्धि कान्यकुब्ज अथवा महोदय पर अधिकार करना रहा है। कन्नौज मौखरी काल से ही अन्तर्वेदी पर शासन करने वाले शक्तिशाली सम्राटों की राजधानी रही है। हर्ष और प्रतिहार सम्राट भी कन्नौज से शासन कर रहे थे। इसी कारण प्रायः सभी आधिकारिक गहड़वाल अभिलेखों में कान्यकुब्ज की विजय को दो बार संदर्भित किया जाता रहा है। ('श्रीमद्गाधिपुराधिराज्य समंदोर्विक्रमेण अर्जित' तथा 'निजभुजोपार्जित श्री कन्यकुब्जाधिपत्यं)। चन्द्रदेव के पौत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र द्वारा अपने पिता मदनपाल के शासनकाल में महाराजपुत्र के रूप में लिख्वाए गए बसाही अभिलेख में चन्द्रदेव के विषय में यह कहा

गया है कि उसने कान्यकुब्ज को अपनी राजधानी बनाया (कान्यकुब्जेद्राजा राजधानीमनिंदिताम)। प्रायः विद्वानों ने इस विषय पर विचार करने में अधिक समय व्यतीत किया है कि गहड़वालों की राजधानी कन्नौज में थी अथवा वाराणसी मे, और इस प्रकार की संभावनाएं व्यक्त की हैं कि पहले कन्नौज को राजधानी बनाया गया और बाद में उसे वाराणसी वापस ले आया गया क्योंकि विक्रम संवत 1101 के बसाही अभिलेख में चन्द्रदेव के द्वारा कान्यकुब्ज को राजधानी बनाने का उल्लेख आता है जबकि विक्रम संवत 1162 के कमौली अभिलेख में इसका कोई उल्लेख नहीं मिलता । यहां पर उल्लेखनीय है कि ये दोनों ही अभिलेख चन्द्रदेव की मृत्योपरांत उसके पुत्र मदनपाल के शासनकाल में महाराजपुत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र द्वारा लिखवाए गए थे। यह एक हास्यास्पद अनुमान मात्र है। वास्तव में गहड़वालों की मुख्य राजधानी वाराणसी ही रही होगी तथा कान्यकुब्ज उनकी द्वितीय राजधानी मानी जा सकती है और उसका कारण कान्यकुब्ज को परम्परागत राजधानी के रूप में प्राप्त प्रतिष्ठा को बताया जा सकता है। ऐसा लगता है कि कान्यकुब्ज में उस समय गाधिपुराधिपति गोपाल का वंशज सामन्त के रूप में शासन कर रहा था और समय–समय पर गहड़वाल नरेश कान्यकुब्ज में भी रहते रहे होंगे।

www.vadaprativada.com

गांगुली ने इस घटना को अपने तर्क का आधार बनाया है जिसके अनुसार गाधिपुराधिपति गोपाल के शासनकाल में एक बार पुनः मुसलमान सेना ने अन्तर्वेदी पर आक्रमण किया था। हबीबुस्सियर के अनुसार इस आक्रमण का नेतृत्व इब्राहिम ने स्वयं किया था। लेकिन सलमान के अनुसार

> ''भाग्य को चमकाने के लिए चन्द्रदेव ने मुसलमानों का साथ स्वीकार किया। प्रारम्भ में उसने महमूद के अधीन कन्नौज में हस्तिपाल के रूप में सेवा करना स्वीकार किया। लेकिन मुस्लिम सेना के प्रस्थान के तुरन्त बाद उसने बलपूर्वक कन्नौज पर अधिकार कर लिया और देश का शासक बन गया . . . . । चन्द्रदेव ने कन्नौज की राज्यसत्ता महमूद के समर्थन से इस शर्त पर प्राप्त की थी कि वह गजनी के सुल्तान को वार्षिक कर देगा। बारहवीं शताब्दी में मुसलमानों ने गहड़वाल प्रदेशों पर बार–बार आक्रमण किए। स्पष्टतः ये हमले चन्द्रदेव के वंशजो को सुल्तान को बराबर कर देने को बाध्य करने के लिए किए जाते थे।''

प्रारम्भ में केवल वे ही चार ताम्रपत्राभिलेख उपलब्ध थे जिनको महाराजपुत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र ने उत्कीर्ण करवाया था। इसके कारण विद्वानों में यह धारणा बलवती हुई कि संभवतः मदनपाल ने शासन ही नहीं किया था। और इस कारण यह अनुमान लगाया गया कि वह बीमार या अशक्त था। अतः शासन–सूत्र राजपुत्र गोविन्दचन्द्र को संभालना पड़ा तथा बसाही दानपत्र में उल्लिखित पुरोहित जागुक, महत्तक बाल्हन तथा प्रतिहार गौतम के समर्थन से दानपत्र निर्गत किए जाने लगे थे। और संभवतः शासन प्रबन्ध के लिए युवराज, रानी राल्हादेवी तथा पुरोहित प्रतिहार और महत्तक की एक समिति बनवाई गई थी। लेकिन बडेरा का ताम्रपत्राभिलेख 1926 में प्राप्त हुआ तथा 1941 में प्रकाशित हुआ जिससे यह निश्चित माने जाने लगा कि परमभट्टारक, परमेश्वर, परमामाहेश्वर श्रीमान् मदनपालदेव ने वास्तव में शासन किया था। लेकिन आश्चर्य की बात यह है कि किसी का ध्यान बंगाल एशियाटिक सोसाठटी के उस ताम्रपत्राभिलेख की ओर नहीं गया जिसमें मदनपाल को उन समस्त राजकीय उपाधियों के साथ प्रस्तुत किया गया है जिसका उल्लेख हम पहले कर आए है। इस प्रकार यह निश्चयपूर्वक कहा जा सकता है कि मदनपाल ने भी काफी लम्बे समय तक शासन किया होगा और अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में ही उसका राज्याभिषेक करा दिया गया होगा। उल्लेखनीय है कि चन्द्रदेव के काफी लम्बे समय तक जीवित रहा होने के कारण उसका पुत्र मदनपाल प्रौढ़ावस्था में ही शासक बना होगा।

कुछ विद्वानों ने यह अनुमान लगाया है कि मदनपाल के शासनकाल में तुरूष्क आक्रमणकारियों ने आक्रमण करके कन्नौज पर विजय प्राप्त कर ली थी और मदनपाल को बंदी बना लिया था। गोविन्दचन्द्र ने मुक्तिधन देकर मदनपाल को मुक्त कराया था। इस मत की प्रबल समर्थक रोमा नियोगी हैं जिनके तर्कों का संक्षिप्त विवरण इस प्रकार है।

रोमा नियोगी के अनुसार, बसाही दानपत्र में यह उल्लिखित है कि चन्द्रदेव ने कान्यकुब्ज को अपनी राजधानी बना लिया था (कन्याकुब्जे करोद्राजा राजधानीमनिंदिताम्)। उनका यह अनुमान है कि यह दानपत्र मदनपाल के शासनकाल में विक्रम संवत् 1161 में लिखवाया गया था, तथा विचित्र बात यह है कि कमौली दानपत्र में यह श्लोक नहीं मिलता यद्यपि अन्य सभी श्लोक वैसे ही मिलते हैं। वास्तव में कोई भी गहड़वाल लेख कान्यकुब्ज को राजधानी नहीं बताता। इस प्रकार उन्होंने यह अनुमान लगाया है कि 25 दिसम्बर 1104 ई0 (बसाही दानपत्र की तिथि) तथा 24 अक्टुबर 1105 ई0 (कमौली दानपत्र की तिथि) के बीच में किसी समय गहड़वालों को राजधानी कान्यकुब्ज को छोड़ना पड़ा होगा तथा गोविन्दचन्द्र को 1105 ई0 में नगर को पुनः प्राप्त करने के लिए युद्ध करना पड़ा। वे राहन दानपत्र में इसका कारण खोजती है जिसमें यह उल्लेख आता है कि असमान युद्ध के बार–बार होने के कारण हम्मीर को अपना वैर छोड़ना पड़ा (हम्मीरं न्यस्वैरं मुहुरसमरणक्रीड़या यो विधते)। उनके अनुसार, हम्मीर अथवा अमीर (मुस्लिम सेनापति) जो विक्रम संवत् 1166 के पूर्व गोविन्दचन्द्र द्वारा पराजित किया गया था, गजनी का सुल्तान मसूद इब्न इब्राहिम (तृतीय, 1099 से 1115 ई0) अथवा उसका कोई अधिकारी रहा होगा। तबकात–ए–नासरी के अनुसार, इस सुल्तान के शासनकाल में हाजिब तुधातगीन ने गंगा पार करके हिन्दुस्तान के उन क्षेत्रों तक जेहाद छेड़ा जहां

रोमा नियोगी ने मल्ही अथवा मल्हीर को मदन का अपभ्रंश माना है। वे कुछ लोगों के इस सुझाव का विरोध करती हैं कि यह मल्ही विक्रम संवत् 1176 में जारी किए गए दानपत्र का मदन रहा होगा। उनके अनुसार, मल्ही को हिन्द का शासक कहा गया है तथा कान्यकुब्ज को हिन्द की राजधानी बताया गया है। इस कारण पराजित राजा स्वयं गहड़वाल शासक रहा होगा। www.vadaprativada.com इस कारण पराजित राजा स्वयं गहड़वाल शासक रहा होगा। इस प्रकार वे यह परिणाम निकालती हैं कि विक्रम संवत् 1161–62 में गजनी के सुल्तान मसूद तृतीय की सेना का नूतृत्व करते हुए हाजिब तुघातगीन कान्यकुब्ज तक चढ़ आया और यदि कवि सलमान पर विश्वास किया जाए तो उसने गहड़वाल राजा मदनपाल को बन्दी बना लिया तथा प्रत्यर्पण राशि पाने के बाद छोड़ा।

यहां पर रोमा नियोगी के उपरोक्त सिद्धान्त में कई कमियां हैं जो हमारा ध्यान आकृष्ट करती हैं। बसाही के दानपत्राभिलेख में चन्द्रदेव के विषय में जो यह कहा गया है कि उसने कान्यकुब्ज को अपनी राजधानी बनाया वह किसी दूसरे संदर्भ में स्वीकार नहीं किया जाना चाहिए। वास्तव में समस्त गहड़वाल लेखों में चन्द्रदेव का वर्णन करते समय यह उल्लेख मिलता है कि उसने अपने बाहुविक्रम से कान्यकुब्ज का राज्य प्राप्त किया। बसाही दानपत्र लेख में इसी बात का उल्लेख ठीक उसी स्थान पर यह कहकर किया गया है कि उसने कान्यकुब्ज को अपनी राजधानी बनाया। यह एक सामान्य उल्लेख विभिन्न प्रकार की शब्द–रचना में नए श्लोक के रूप में बसाही दानपत्र में आता है। इसके आधार पर अनुमान

यद्यपि गोविन्दचन्द्र ने अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में ही शासन–सूत्र संभाल लिया था तथा उसको भी एक युवराज के रूप में महत्वपूर्ण अधिकार प्राप्त थे लेकिन वह अपने पिता की भांति अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में राजपद पर अभिषिक्त नहीं हुआ था। उसका पितामह चन्द्रदेव लम्बी आयु तक जीवित रहा। इस कारण उसका पिता काफी प्रौढ़ावस्था में ही राजा बन पाया होगा और बहुत संभावना इस बात की कही जा सकती है कि वह भी अपने शासनकाल में यौवनोचित तेजस्विता खो चुका रहा हो जिसके कारण गोविन्दचन्द्र को कुछ अधिक ही अधिकार प्राप्त रहे हों। इसकी सूचना राजपुत्र के रूप में जारी किए गए गोविन्दचन्द्र के दानपत्रों से मिलती है। गोविन्दचन्द्र की माता का नाम राल्हादेवी था जिसका उल्लेख विक्रम संवत् 1179 के कमौली ताम्रपत्राभिलेख में मिलता है। मदनपाल की एक अन्य रानी पृथ्वीश्रीका के विषय में भी हमको विक्रम संवत् 1164 के बहुवरा दानपत्र से ज्ञात होता है कि जिसे 'टेरी एण्ड कम्पनी' का दानपत्र भी कहा जाता है। किन्तु यह मूल लेख अब उपलब्ध नहीं है। गोविन्दचन्द्र गहड़वाल राजवंश का सबसे महान् शासक था। उसने लगभग आधी शताब्दी तक उत्तर भारत की राजनीति को प्रभावित किया। एक युवराज के रूप में अपने पिता के शासन–काल में ही उसने जो सफलताएं प्राप्त कीं उसके कारण उसे अभिलेखों में ''समस्तराजप्रक्रियोपेत'' कहा गया है। उसका औपचारिक राज्याभिषेक 1109 ई0 से 1114 ई0 के बीच में किसी समय हुआ होगा क्योंकि युवराज के रूप में उसका अंतिम राहन

गोविन्दचन्द्र ने युवराज के रूप में जब से शासन कार्य प्रारम्भ किया तभी से उसने अपनी प्रशासनिक प्रतिभा और सामरिक कुशलता का प्रदर्शन प्रारम्भ कर दिया था। यद्यपि उसने आसपास के राज्यों पर अपनी धाक जमा ली थी तथा अनेक राजवंशों को पराजित करके उनके राज्यक्षेत्र अपने शासन के अन्तर्गत शामिल कर लिए थे, फिर भी, उसकी सामरिक प्रतिभा का प्रदर्शन पश्चिम से होने वाले मुस्लिम आक्रमणों के प्रत्यावर्तन में दिखाई पड़ता है। कुछ इतिहासकारों ने यह दिखाने का प्रयास किया है कि गजनी के यामिनी सुल्तानों की सेना ने कान्यकुब्ज पर आक्रमण करके अस्थायी रूप से उस नगर को अपने अधिकार में कर लिया था और संभवत : गोविन्दचन्द्र के पिता मदनपाल को बन्दी बना लिया था। किन्तु पीछे हम यह देख आए हैं कि इस प्रकार की कल्पना में कोई सच्चाई नहीं है तथा मुसलमानों द्वारा कान्यकुब्ज पर आक्रमण, अधिकार तथा मदनपाल के बन्दी बनाए जाने के पीछे कोई तथ्यात्मक प्रमाण नहीं उपलब्ध हैं। इस कारण रोमा नियोगी का यह कहना कि यामिनी सुल्तानों द्वारा कान्यकुब्ज की पराजय से गहड़वालों को एक धक्का लगा था, उचित नही होगा।

इसे मदनपाल अथवा गोविन्दचन्द्र के शासनकाल में उत्कीर्ण किया गया होगा। दक्षिण भारत के बौद्ध भिक्षु श्रावस्ती (सहेत–महेत) में उपस्थित थे इसकी सूचना गोविन्दचन्द्र के वि0सं0 1176 के सहेत–महेत अभिलेख से प्राप्त होती है। इनमें एक भिक्षु चोल देश का था, दूसरा भिक्षु ओड्र देश (उड़ीसा) का था जिन्हें दान दिया गया था। इसके अतिरिक्त चालुक्य राजा सिद्धराज जयसिंह के एक राजदूत के काशी के राजा जयचन्द्र के दरबार में जाने का उल्लेख मेरूतुंग के प्रबन्ध चिन्तामणि में मिलता है। इसी प्रकार राजतरंगिणी से यह ज्ञात होता है कि गोविन्दचन्द्र के समकालीन कश्मीर के राजा जयसिंह से उसके अच्छे संबंध थे। रोमा नियोगी का यह कहना है कि 'यद्यपि गहड़वाल अभिलेखों में गोविन्दचन्द्र के समकालीन के समकालीन राजाओं के साथ राजनयिक संबंधो का कोई उल्लेख नहीं मिलता फिर भी समकालीन राजवंशो के अभिलेखों तथा अन्य साहित्यिक स्रोतों से प्रायः सभी महत्वपूर्ण पड़ोसी राजाओं के साथ मित्रता के सम्बन्धों के उल्लेख मिलते है। इस बात में कोई संदेह नही है कि उत्तर भारत में राजनीति के क्षेत्र में इस तीसरे गहड़वाल राजा को अत्यंत उच्च आदरणीय स्थान प्राप्त था।

एक अन्य अभिलेख से इसी क्षेत्र से एक अन्य राजा कीर्तिपाल देव के विषय में जानकारी मिलती है। लखनऊ संग्रहालय में संग्रहीत वि0सं0 1167 (1111ई0) के ताम्रपत्राभिलेख से ज्ञात होता है कि परमभट्टारक महाराजाधिराज परमेश्वर परमाहेश्वर श्री कीर्तिपालदेव ने एक दान दिया था जो परमभट्टारक महाराजाधिराज, परममेश्वर परमाहेश्वर श्री विक्रमपालदेव के पादानुध्यात थे तथा जिन्होने उत्तर समुद्र अथवा सिन्धु का स्वामित्व अपने बाहुबल से प्राप्त किया था। यह लेख विक्रम संवत 1167 के फाल्गुन मास के शुक्ल पक्ष द्वितीया, दिन शनिवार, को जारी किया गया था जो 11 फरवरी 1111 ई0 में पड़ता है। जिन ग्रामों का दान किया गया उनको दरद गण्डकी देश में स्थित बताया गया है। यद्यपि इस क्षेत्र की पहचान नही हो पाई फिर भी कीलहार्न का यह सुझाव है कि यह क्षेत्र बिहार में बहने वाली गण्डकी नदी की घाटी में रहा होगा। रोमा नियोगी का यह विचार है कि यह क्षेत्र गोरखपुर जिले के पूर्वोत्तर में पड़ना चाहिए जो इस समय देवरिया जिले का उत्तरी भाग है। रोमा नियोगी ने स्मिथ द्वारा कलकत्ता के इण्डियन म्यूजियम में वर्णित 'कीर्ति' लेख वाले कुछ सिक्कों को कीर्तिपालदेव का सिक्का माना है। उन्होने यह भी सुझाव दिया है कि दरद

....यहां यह बात भी उल्लेखनीय है कि गोविन्दचन्द्र के वि0सं0 1182 के कमौली ताम्रपत्राभिलेख में भी एक अल्हण का नाम आता है जिसके पुत्र कीठण ने इस ताम्रपट्ट लेख की रचना की थी। इस ताम्रपत्र में अल्हण को 'श्रीवास्तव्य कुलोद्भूत कायस्थ' कहा गया है।

लिखितस्ताम्ब्र (म्र) पट्टोऽयं कीठणेन नृपाज्ञयेति ।।15।।

इस प्रकार अल्हण के दो पुत्रों का उल्लेख मिलता है और यह दोनो ही साहित्यकार थे। भतीजा नयचन्द्र जो साकेत मण्डल का अधिपति था और जिसने रम्भामन्जरी नाटक की रचना की थी। एक पुत्र कीठण या 'कृष्ण' था जिसे कृष्णचन्द्र भी इस आधार पर कहा जा सकता है कि उसके दो अन्य भाइयो के नाम के अन्त में चन्द्र शब्द आता है और कीठण को कृष्णचन्द्र का अपभ्रंश मान सकते हैं। इस कीठण को गोविन्दचन्द्र के शासन काल में प्रचारित कमौली दानपत्र की रचना का श्रेय प्राप्त है। अल्हण का दूसरा और छोटा (कनियान) पुत्र आयुषचन्द्र था जिसने अयोध्या की प्रशस्ति की रचना की थी और इस प्रशस्ति ये यह भी संकेत मिला है कि वह इस समय स्वयं अयोध्या का राजा था। अयोध्या में प्रचलित एक परम्परा यह भी स्वीकार करती है कि इस क्षेत्र पर श्रीवास्तव वंश ने राज्य किया था।

. . रोमा नियोगी का यह मानना है कि गहड़वाल राज्य का अधिकांश भाग यथा, कान्यकुब्ज, बदायूँ, जौनपुर, चुनार, रोहतासगढ, वाराणसी तथा संभवतः अयोध्या भी मुस्लिम राजनीतिक प्रभाव क्षेत्र से बाहर थे।

गोविन्दचन्द्र के परिवार के विषय में भी हमको अभिलेखों अथवा अन्य स्रोतों से जानकारी मिलती है। गोविन्दचन्द्र की माता का नाम राल्हा देवी था। गोविन्दचन्द्र की चार रानियों के नामों के उल्लेख मिलते है। इनमें कुमारदेवी के द्वारा लिखवाई गई एक प्रशस्ति सारनाथ से प्राप्त हुई है। कुमारदेवी तिठि के चिक्कोर राजवंश के राजा देवरक्षित की पुत्री थी। देवरक्षित गौड़ के पाल राजा का सामन्त था। कुमारदेवी ने सारनाथ में बौद्ध भिक्षुओं को दान दिया था। गोविन्दचन्द्र के कमौली दानपत्र लेख से उसकी एक अन्य पट्ट महादेवी नयनकेलि का नाम मिलता है। इसके अतिरिक्त बागरमऊ दानपत्रों से एक अन्य पट्ट महादेवी गोसल्लदेवी का नाम मिलता है। एक चौथी रानी बसन्तदेवी के नाम का उल्लेख नेपाल के दरबार पुस्तकालय में संग्रहित अष्टसाहस्त्रिका प्रज्ञापारमिता नामक पाण्डुलिपि से ज्ञात होता है।

प्रायः ऐसा समझा जाता है कि गोविन्दचन्द्र के बाद से ही गहड़वाल शक्ति का पतन प्रारम्भ हो जाता है। गोविन्दचन्द्र ने राजसत्ता का उपयोग काफी समय तक किया। उसके शासनकाल का अन्तिम अभिलेख वि0सं0 9299 (1154 ई0) का है। ऐसा लगता है कि इसके शीघ्र बाद ही गोविन्दचन्द्र का देहान्त हो गया और उसका पुत्र विजयचन्द्र शासनारूढ़ हुआ। गहड़वाल राजवंश में यह परम्परा रही है कि अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में ही युवराज भी दानपत्र जारी करते थे। चन्द्रदेव के जीवनकाल में ही मदनपाल का राज्याभिषेक कर दिया गया था, इसका उल्लेख हम कर आए है। मदनपाल के शासनकाल में गोविन्द ने महाराज के पुत्र के रूप में दानपत्र जारी किए। इसी प्रकार गोविन्दचन्द्र के शासनकाल में उसके दो पुत्रों ने शासनपत्र जारी किए। युवराज आस्फोटचन्द्र ने भदैनी का दानपत्राभिलेख वि0सं0 1190 में जारी किया था। उसके बाद महाराजपुत्र राज्यपालदेव ने उनवल दानपत्राभिलेख वि0सं0 1201 में जारी किया था। ऐसा लगता है कि युवराज आस्फोटचन्द्रदेव का देहान्त वि0सं0 1190 के बाद किसी समय हो गया। सम्भवतः महाराजपुत्र राज्यपालदेव भी अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में ही दिवंगत हो गया था। गहड़वाल राजवंश में सम्भवतः केवल विजयचन्द्र ही एक मात्र ऐसा शासक है जिसको अपने पिता के जीवनकाल में दानपत्राभिलेख जारी करने का अवसर नही प्राप्त हो सका था।

www.vadapprativada.com

डॉ0 रोमा नियोगी ने जिस समय गहड़वाल राजवंश का इतिहास नामक पुस्तक का प्रणयन किया था तब तक वि0सं0 1217 के कण्डिनी

पृथ्वीराजरासों में चन्दवरदायी ने विजयचन्द्र द्वारा की गई कई विजयों का उल्लेख किया है जिसके विषय में इतिहासकारों को संदहे है। इसके अनुसार, विजयचन्द्र ने कटक (उड़ीसा) के सोमवंशी राजा मुकुन्ददेव को पराजित किया था तथा उसे इस बात के लिए बाध्य किया था कि वह अपनी पुत्री का विवाह उसके पुत्र जयचन्द्र से कर दे।

जयचन्द्र की इसी पत्नी से संयोगिता अथवा संयुक्ता का जन्म हुआ था जिसके बाद में पृथ्वीराज चौहान से विवाह हुआ। लेकिन इतिहासकारों का यह विश्वास है कि दक्षिण कोशल के सोमवंशी राजाओं को गंगो ने गोविन्दचन्द्र के शासनकाल के प्रारम्भ में ही परास्त करके उनका राज्य हड़प लिया था तथा मुकुन्ददेव नाम के किसी राजा का नाम उड़ीसा के इतिहास में नहीं मिलता। इसके उत्तर में यह कहा जा सकता है कि मुकुन्ददेव सोमवंशी राजाओं का कोई अल्पज्ञात उत्तराधिकारी रहा होगा क्योंकि यदि उसके अस्तित्व से ही इंकार कर दिया जाएगा तो पृथ्वीराज और संयोगिता की कथा का आधार ही समाप्त हो जाएगा जो पृथ्वीराजरासों का मुख्य विषय है। रासों में ही यह भी कहा गया है कि विजयचन्द्र ने दिल्ली के तोमर राजा अनंगपाल को हराया था। इसके अतिरिक्त पट्टनपुर के भोलाभीम को भी उसने हराया था। इस भोलाभीम की पहचान अनहिलपाटक के चालुक्य नरेश भीमदेव द्वितीय से की जा सकती है जिसके शासन का प्रारम्भ 1173 ई0 से होता है। इसके पूर्व उसके पिता चालुक्य कुमारपाल ने 1114 ई0 से 1173 ई0 तक शासन किया था। इस प्रकार इतिहासकारों का यह मानना है कि भीमदेव द्वितीय के शासनारूढ़ होने के तीन वर्ष पूर्व ही विजयचन्द्र का शासनकाल समाप्त हो गया था। लेकिन इस सम्बन्ध में यह कहा जा सकता है कि भीमदेव द्वितीय से विजयचन्द्र का संघर्ष उस समय हुआ हो सकता है जब भीमदेव युवराज था। उसका पिता चालुक्य कुमारपाल लगभग 59 वर्षो तक शासन करता रहा और बहुत संभव है कि उसके शासनकाल के अन्तिम दिनों में उसका पुत्र ही शासन कार्य देखता रहा हो।

नेतृत्व में 50,000 की सेना के साथ उसने दीन (धर्म) के दुश्मनों की सेना का सामना किया और उसे हराया। ऐसा कहा जाता है कि यह झड़प गहड़वाल सेना के सीमान्त प्रदेश की सुरक्षा में लगी टुकड़ी के साथ हुई होगी न कि उसकी मुख्य सेना से। कामिलउत्तवारीख में भी इब्न अथीर ने कुतुबुद्दीन के इस चढ़ाई का उल्लेख किया है जिसमें उसने अनेक को मार डाला था तथा बन्दियों और लूट के साथ घर वापिस आ गया था। जब जयचन्द्र को इसकी सूचना दी गई तो उसने अपनी सेना को एकत्र करके मुसलमानों के क्षेत्र में प्रवेश किया। गहड़वालों और मुस्लिम सेना के बीच चन्दवर के मैदान में युद्ध हुआ। इसमें जयचन्द्र स्वंय हाथी पर चढ़कर युद्ध का संचालन कर रहा था। फिरिश्ता के अनुसार कुतुबुद्दीन द्वारा चलाए गए एक तीर से जयचन्द मारा गया। इसके बाद भयंकर मारकाट हुई और तीन सौ हाथी जिन्दा पकड़ लिए गए। अस्नी के किले को लूट लिया गया, जहां पर गहड़वाल राजाओं ने अपने सोने–चॉंदी तथा रत्नों के भण्डार जमा कर रखे थे। बनारस, जो हिन्द देश का केन्द्र माना जाता था, भी लूट लिया गया और वहॉं पर लगभग एक हजार मन्दिर गिरा दिए गए और उनकी नींव के उपर मस्जिदें उठा दी गई। मुस्लिम इतिहासकारों ने यह सूचना दी है कि हिन्द के राजा और सामन्त अमीर के प्रति अपनी अधीनता जताने के लिए आगे आए। देश का प्रबन्ध एक विश्वस्त व्यक्ति को सौंपा गया जो लोगों को न्याय दे सके और मूर्तिपूजकों को दबा सके। लेकिन मुस्लिम इतिहासकारों ने इस व्यक्ति का नाम नहीं बताया है। बाद में कुतुबुद्दीन दिल्ली का राज्यपाल नियुक्त किया गया और दिल्ली में उसने अपनी राजधानी बना ली।

3870. The Sultanate and Mughal period is said to commence not in the entire part of India but initially at Sindh and thereafter gradually it increase to other parts. As such, therefore, it may not be said that with the advent of Sultanate period the territory of Oudh was ruled by Muslims. On this aspect also in Ayodhya Ka Itihas Evem Puratatva (supra) at Chapter-8, pages 109-113 some details have been given and the same may be referred as under:

> वर्षा के बाद मसूद ने अपनी सेना को अजुधन (अयोध्या) के विरुद्ध संचालित किया। यद्यपि उन दिनों वह स्थान व उसके आस पास धनी आबादी थी फिर भी बिना संघर्ष के उसे जीत लिया गया। मसूद अजुधन के मौसम से काफी प्रसन्न था और चूंकि यहां पर शिकार अच्छे मिलते थे इसलिए वह अगली वर्षा तक यहां रुक गया और उसके बाद दिल्ली गया।

सालार मसूद के आक्रमण का काफी प्रतिरोध हुआ और उसकी सेना के लोगों को जगह–जगह मार खानी पड़ी। लखनऊ फैजाबाद के पुराने मार्ग पर मसूद की तथाकथित कब्रों से इसकी सत्यता का ज्ञान होता है। महमूद की सेना का एक अन्य सेनानायक अहमद नियाल्तगीन भी था जिसे महमूद गजनवी ने पंजाब सूबे का अधिकारी बनाया था। ऐसा कहा जाता है कि उसने 1034 ई0 में बनारस को लूटा था। हन्स बेकर का कहना है कि या तो उसने अथवा उसकी सेना के किसी अन्य नायक ने इस अवसर पर अयोध्या पर आक्रमण किया हो सकता है। लेकिन हन्स बेकर के इस कथन को हम केवल उनकी शुभ कल्पना मात्र कह सकते हैं क्योंकि इसका कोई भी प्रमाण नहीं मिलता कि नियाल्तगीन की सेना के किसी सेनापति ने अयोध्या पर आक्रमण किया था। इसके अतिरिक्त लगभग एक ही वर्ष पूर्व सालार मसूद अयोध्या के निकट बहराइच में मारा गया था। वैसे, अहमद नियाल्तगीन के इस आक्रमण को भी हम मुस्लिम इतिहासकारों की 'गप' ही मानते हैं क्योंकि तवारीख–ए–सुबुक्तगीन में बैहाकी ने जिस तरह से इस घटना का वर्णन किया है वह बड़ा संदिग्ध सा लगता है और ऐसा ऐलता है कि नियाल्तगीन की सेना लाहौर से निकलकर अचानक बनारस पहुॅच गई और दोपहर तक लूटपाट करके नमाज के समय तक वापस लौट गई। बैहाकी का विवरण इस प्रकार है–

इस प्रकार नियाल्तगीन द्वारा बनारस की लूट की घटना बिल्कुल विश्वसनीय नहीं लगती।

महमूद गजनवी के अन्तर्वेदी (दोआबा) में इन आक्रमणों के बाद यहां पर एक शक्तिशाली साम्राज्य की स्थापना हुई। गहडवाल वंश के चन्द्रदेव अथवा चन्द्रादित्य देव ने जिस साम्राज्य की नींव रखी उसने लगभग एक शताब्दी तक अन्तर्वेदी की सुरक्षा की। चन्द्रदेव और उसके उत्तराधिकारियों के अभिलेखों से यह ज्ञात होता है कि गहड़वाल वंश के सभी राजाओं के तुरुष्क आक्रमणकारियों का सामना करके उन्हें बार–बार प्रत्यावर्तित करना पड़ा। कुमारदेवी के सारनाथ अभिलेख से यह ज्ञात होता है कि दुष्ट तुरुष्क–बीर से वाराणसी की रक्षा के लिए भगवान विष्णु को गोविन्दचन्द्र के रूप में अवतार लेना पड़ा जिसे लिए शिव ने प्रार्थना की थी। गोविन्दचन्द्र के राहन ताम्रपत्र से यह ज्ञात होता है कि गोविन्दचन्द्र ने असम युद्ध में हम्मीर को शत्रुता त्यागने के लिए बाध्य कर दिया था। बदायूँ के लखनपाल के एक अभिलेख से भी यह ज्ञात होता है कि उसके पूर्वज मदनपाल ने हम्मीर के दवेनदी (गंगा) की घाटी में आक्रमण को असंभव बना दिया था। गोविन्दचन्द्र के पुत्र विजयचन्द्र को भी हम्मीर की गतिविधियों को सफलतापूर्वक रोकने का श्रेय दिया गया है। दिल्ली–शिवालिक स्तम्भ लेख में विशालदेव को म्लेच्छों का नाश करने का श्रेय दिया गया है। इस प्रकार अन्तर्वेदी में मुस्लिम आक्रमणकारी लगातार प्रयास करते रहे और यहां के राजवंशों ने उनका प्रतिरोध भी समय–समय पर किया। इसका उल्लेख न केवल मुस्लिम इतिहासकार करते हैं बल्कि भारतीय राजाओं के अभिलेखों से भी इनकी सूचना मिलती है। इसके अतिरिक्त अयोध्या से अभी हाल ही में प्राप्त किए गए पाषण फलक अभिलेख से भी यह ज्ञात होता है कि गोविन्द चन्द्र के शासनकाल में किसी प्रकार का आक्रमण अयोध्या में हुआ था। 1193 ई0 में चन्दवर के युद्ध में जयचन्द्र के पराजित हो जाने के बाद मुसलमान सेनाओं ने वाराणसी को नष्ट किया था इसकी तो सूचना मिलती

1155 ई0 में सुल्तान नसीरुद्दीन की मां मलक–ए–जहॉ ने कुतलुग

सल्तनत काल में अवध को ही हिन्दुस्तान समझा जाता था। बलबन दिल्ली से अवध के मार्ग को निष्कण्टक बनाने के लिए प्रयत्नशील था। वह दो बाद दिल्ली छोड़कर कम्पिल और पटियाली में पांच–छह महीने ठहरा जिसमें लुटेरों और डाकुओं से दिल्ली से अवध का मार्ग साफ हो जाए। इसके लिए कई प्रयास भी किए गए। बंगाल में तुघ्रील के विद्रोह का दमन करने के लिए जाते समय वह अवध में ठहरा था तथा वहां पर सेना में काम आने वाले विभिन्न प्रकार के व्यक्तियों, यथा–घ ुड़सवार, पैदल, पायक, धनुर्धर, कहार, कैवानी, तीरन्दाज, गुलाम, नौकर, व्यापारी, दुकानदार, आदि को दो लाख की संख्या में एकत्रित कराया। लखनौती विजय के बाद बलबन ने बुगरा खान को वहां पर नियुक्त किया। राजधानी लौटने पर उत्सव मनाया गया तथा तुघ्रील के समर्थकों को मौत

मुहम्मद तुगलक का पूर्व नाम जूना खान था और यह कहा जाता है कि उसी के नाम पर जौनपुर बसाया गया था। बाद में जौनपूर में शर्की वंश का राज्य हुआ और अयोध्या उनके शासन के अन्तर्गत आ गई।''

3871. We may mention that the description of Salar Masud about his alleged attack on Ayodhya is incorrect and has been admitted by Sri T.P. Verma in his cross-examination before this Court also. We have already discussed this aspect while considering the issues relating to period of construction of the building. Rest of the historical events particularly the rulers and their periods substantially could not be shows incorrect by the learned counsels.

3872. What actually appears from the above books is that the twilight zone when Hindu rulers came to be dominated by Muslim rulers has been considered by some of the historians as the commencement of the medieval period which some has termed as early medieval and some as Sultanate period. With the advent of Mughal Rulers the term has been called medieval and that has been treated to be the end of the Sultanate period. It is in this context we find ASI has taken a mid way and termed 6th period as Medieval Sultanate, 7th as Medieval and have divided the same centurywise, i.e., 11th and 12th century as Medieval Sultanate, 13th to 16th century to be more precise upto 1526 AD to be medieval and thereafter Mughal. In fact for more clarity this division has been made. None of the alleged expert witness has shown the said classification or periodization of ASI wholly unknown to historians or perverse or something which could not have been said or conceived by a person well conversant in such matters.

3873. It brings us to the concept of periodization of Indian history-particularly for Northern India as Ancient, Medieval and Modern. By and large, in the present day usage, the Ancient Period ends in the 7th century A.D., after the rule of Emperor Harsh. Then starts the Early Medieval Period. It lasts till the end of the 12th century. It is followed by the Medieval Period which starts in the 13th century. In fact, the 11th and 12th centuries form the 'transitional stage', the stage between the Ancient and Medieval i.e. early Medieval period. Earlier, in the history books written in the first part of the 20th century, there was no concept of "Early Medieval", the "Ancient" ended in the 11th century and "Medieval" started in the 12th century. Thus there is absolutely no need of making sarcastic remarks against the Archaeological Survey of India, as the historians themselves have not been unanimous on this issue during the last one hundred years. Earlier, even "Hindu", "Muslim" and "British" were the designations of the three-fold division of Indian history.

3874. Many scholars have pointed out inadequacy of use of the term "Medieval" in Indian history since this is imposing the European concept on Indian history, the characteristic features of say British Mediaevalism which was never present otherwise in India. It is more systematic and precious to use centuries, like 11th, 12th, 16th, 20th in the present context instead of Ancient, Medieval and Modern. For this kind of division there are several Radiocarbon Dates from the site, the list of which is given in the Report. Periodization won't be a cut off feature like on-off electric current by a switch. It is the flow and merger of previous culture and power structure of the immediately following period. Any specific data is only suggestive of some event of significance which throws light both on the past and the next.

3875. Professor R.S. Sharma mentioned in his book "Perspective in Social and Economic History of Early India" on page 228-229 that an important problem in the general history of India is that of transition from the ancient to medieval, and certain dates such as AD 647, 711, 750, 916, 997 and 1206 have been suggested as landmarks in political history. But since politics was the preoccupation of a small section of society in early times, it has to be shown whether any of the above mentioned dates or whether any other date or point of time is equally significant in the history of land system, crafts and commerce polity, society, language, art, religion, etc. There has taken place a lot of discussion whether Harsavardhana's death in AD 647 marks the end of one and the beginning of another era in Indian history. The statement of Vincent Smith that the death of Harsavardhana set in the process of decline of Indian history has been ably refuted by a number of scholars, and especially by H.C. Ray. But for those who wish to investigate patterns of social and economic life, the real point to look for is not the presages of decline and prosperity but the nature of change in the existing way of life. If the change is of a fundamental nature, it should be regarded as heralding the advent of new period. If it is a minor change it would not necessitate any new characterization of the period, even the question to the process of change involved in it. We have to carefully consider how far the decline of the existing system of life shows symptoms of the rise of a new pattern of life. None of these points have been taken into account either by V. Smith when he says that the death of Harsavardhana in AD 647 brings a period of decline or by those who try to refute his theory.

3876. On the grounds of dynastic and political history H.C. Ray suggests that AD 916 should be accepted as the line of demarcation between the two periods in the history of northern

India. In his opinion: “these may be called the ancient and the medieval periods; but it would be perhaps more reasonable to call them simply the Hindu period and the period of the Turks and Afghans. A similar approach has been adopted by some other scholars. In the fifth volume of the "History and culture of the Indian People", it is said at one place that ancient India came to an end in AD 997, (the period subsequent whereto Mahmood Gazni invaded on the northern front) and again at another, that in Indian history the medieval factor was introduced in the thirteenth century. Both views are based on the assumption that the Muslim conquest ushered in mediaevalism in India. Does it mean that without the Muslim conquest there would have been no mediaevalism in India? Does it imply that the countries of Europe which escaped this conquest had no mediaeval period in their history? In Europe it is difficult to think of mediaevalism without feudalism, the origins and nature of which have to be examined in the case of India.”

3877. In "The History and Culture of the Indian People", Bhavan's Book University published by Bhartiya Vidya Bhavan Mumbai (first edition 1957), 5th Edition 2001, Vol. V, "The Struggle for Empire" in the foreword written by Dr. K.M. Munshi it is said that for over 2000 years, i.e., from before the days of King Janmejaya Parikshita, referred to in the Brahmanas, the culture of the dominant classes, developing in almost unbroken continuity, had brought large sections of the people within its fold. It was, however, disturbed on occasions, for instance by the raids of Alexandar; by the influx of the Bactrian Greeks, the Kushanas and the Sakas; by the invasion of the Hunas; by the Arab incursions in Sindh. But these inroads

were only temporary episodes; the vitality of the culture and social organisation found it easy to absorb most of the alien elements which were left behind in the country after they were closed. It was based on the faith that Bharatvarsha, in its ideal aspect often referred to as Aryavarta, was the sacred land of Dharma, 'the high road to Heaven and to Salvation'; where 'men were nobler than the Gods themselves; where all knowledge, thought and worship were routed in the Vedas, revealed by the Gods themselves; where the Dharmasastras prescribes the fundamental canons of personal life and social relations; where Chaturvarnya, the divinely-ordained four-fold order of society, embraced all social groups; where, whatever the dialect of the people, Sanskrit, the language of the Gods, was the supreme medium of high expression. 'The Dharmasastras' and by that is meant not only the Smritis beginning with the Manu-smriti, but the Mahabharata and Ramayana have played a very big role in the life of the country. Manu-smriti as the Dharmasastra of divine origin, has had an all-pervading influence from the time historical memory could reach back to moulding the mind and the life of men, not only in India but in the India beyond the seas, in Burma, Siam, Annam, Combodia, Jawa and Bali. With the Mahabharata and the Ramayana, it has provided a background of continuity to the social and moral life; modified customary laws of tribes and communities in different stages of civilization; and built up the Collective Unconscious of our people that subconscious source of integrative vitality which keeps a people together, leads them to feel and react as one in the face of certain circumstances, and provides the urge to collective action of a recurring character. Century after century,

the system, first formulated by the Manu-smriti, was accepted throughout the country, never by force of arms, less by royal fiats than the sanction implied in the belief that 'God gave it and the ancestors obeyed it'. It was found so acceptable because it had a revealing basis of reality: of a frank recognition of the temperamental inequalities of man; of the predominance of hereditary influences over environments; of the need for a synthetic framework for widely differing social groups in a vast country where culture have been staggered from not only region to region, but often from one group of villages to another. But then the year AD 1000 was fateful year for Bharatversha. The crucial age in Indian history began in AD 998 when the Turkish conqueror Mahmood captured Ghazni and thereafter invaded India for umpteen times. Generally it is believed that Mahmood invaded Indian territory for 17 times and his last visit was in AD 1027. He drove India on enormous wealth and destroyed much of its man power by repeated expeditions. This extortion of economic resources and man power told upon the future political destiny of India. Particularly the destruction of Shahi Kingdoms which barred the gates of India against foreign invaders dealt with a severe blow to its future independence. The inclusion of Punjab and Afganistan in the kingdom of Ghazni made Islamic conquest of India a comparatively easy process. The northern part of India, however, soon recovered. In Bihar area, i.e., Magadh, Tirabhukti and Mithila, sometimes around AD 1097 Nanyadev of Karnataka dynasty established his supremacy while Kannauj was taken by Gaharwala dynasty in the later part of the 11th century. After 1034 AD till 1068 AD we find no information about any military campaign by muslims against Hindustan. The cause might be the forceful dominant military power of Parmar Bhoj and Kalchuri Karn who led expeditions even into the heart of muslim territory of Punjab. Bhoj died about 1055 AD and Karn died about 1072 AD whereafter the military expeditions recommenced. Prince Mahmood, the Governor of Punjab plundered Kannauj and Kalanjar and invaded Ujjain between 1086 to 1090 AD. 42 inscriptions of Govindacharya's reign bearing dates extended from AD 1114 to 1154 proving that his kingdom extended atleast up to Banaras, Fatehpur and Kanpur districts on the south Kannauj, on the west Gonda and Gorakhpur, on the north Dinapur and Patna (Bihar) on the east. The last king in succession who live peacefully for about 2 decades was Jaichand but was defeated in the end of 12th century by Muizz-ud-din Muhammad Ghuri who came after conquering Delhi and Ajmer by defeating Prithviraj Chahmanas. Ghuri captured the fort of Asni in Fatehpur district where the treasure of the king of Banaras was deposited and then plundered Banaras city also. In 1197 it appears that Harishchandra son of Jai Chandra retained his power over Kannauj, Jaunpur and Mirzapur district resting his patron kingdom from the commands of muslims. He was, however, killed by Malik Nasiruddin Muhammad Shah the eldest son of Iltutmish in AD 1226 and the Kannauj was finally conquered by Iltutmish. It may be added at this stage that Muhammad Ghuri after his death was succeeded by Kutubuddin Aibak in 1206 AD who established the Turkish Sultanate in India at Lahore later transferred to Delhi. It is in this context that the Sultanate period is considered to have commenced in the first half of 13th century.

3878. Nothing is brought to our notice which may suggest anything otherwise in the historical background referred to above. We therefore find no reason whatsoever in the above background to hold periodization determined by ASI as mistaken.

3879. Moreover, we have no doubt in our mind that ASI, as a premier institution of this country, is responsible for the preservation, maintenance and discovery of ancient monuments and sites, as well as archaeological survey and excavation. They are experts of expert. No archaeologist in this country can undertake an archaeological expedition at a historical site of importance without permission or licence from ASI. The status enjoined to ASI which we have already referred, empowers it to control all these activities. The finds and researches as well as the determination and conclusion of any archaeologist or other expert in this field is not normally recognised unless it has been scrutinized by ASI and after approval it is also published in the regular journals of ASI. An individual at some point of time may be said to have acted with some kind of bias, legal or factual as the case may be, but to brandish the entire body or a large number of its officials who belong to different religions including Muslims also, that they have worked with preconceived notions is not only an irresponsible attitude to show some kind of pre-determined plan and scheme to atleast create a clout on a remarkable and excellent work ASI it has, otherwise performed. The result of a work, if it is not chewable to one or more, will not make the quality of work impure or suspicious. The self contradictory statement, inconsistant with other experts made against ASI of same party i.e. Muslim, extra

interest, and also the fact that they are virtually hired experts reduces trustworthiness of these experts despite their otherwise competence. The allegations, need much more material to substantiate. In the matter of stratigraphy/ periodization made by ASI, in the absence of anything to show that what they have said is improbable, ex facie fake or incorrect or that no person having adequate knowledge in the subject may have formed such opinion, we have no reason to disbelieve or discard it and instead accept version of interested and partisan expert witnesses who at times have made contradictory statements as we have already noticed to some extent above. We, therefore, find no force in the objection with respect to the stratification/periodization made by ASI.

Pillar Bases

3880. The next and the biggest objection is with respect to the pillar bases. We thus proceed to consider the same. A serious allegations of framing of certain structures in particular, i.e. certain pillar bases have been levelled by submitting objections dated 21.05.2003 and 07.06.2003 which we have already discussed in detail. Normally, it would have been suffice to mention at this stage that had there been any truth, the same could not have gone unnoticed by such a large number of persons present at the site particularly when two members of Higher Judicial Services were also present there as 'Observers' having been appointed by this Court. We have already noticed that two expert archaeologist, i.e., PW 16 and 24 who have given very long statements before this Court thrice and twice respectively, both of them visited the site in June 2003 and Dr. Mandal also visited again in Sept. 2003. Both of them admitted that in June 2003 they had no idea or information that any structure was manipulated by the members of Archaeological Team of ASI. However considering the seriousness and also the fact that in the Court, the stand is slightly different, we would go in further detail of these allegations.

3881. The ASI in Chapter IV commencing from page 48 has considered various structures it found during the course of excavation. For the time being we leave other structures and proceed with the pillar bases in respect whereto the reference is on page 55 and onwards. It says:

> "From the excavation it could be inferred that there were seventeen rows of pillar bases from north to south, each row having five pillar bases. Due to area restriction and natural barriers, the pillar bases in the central part occupied by the make-shift structure on the raised platform could not be located. Out of excavated fifty pillar bases only twelve were completely exposed, thirty five were partially exposed and three could be traced in sections only. A few pillar bases were noticed during earlier excavation after which a controversy took place about their association with different layers and their load bearing capacity. The present excavation has set aside the controversy by exposing the original the form of the bases having calcrete and stone blocks arranged and set in a proper manner over a brick foundation and their arrangements in rows including their association with the top floor of the structure existing prior to the disputed structure.
> The seventeen rows of pillar bases were constructed

along the north-south running brick wall (wall 16) on the west. The distance of the first pillar base in each row from the wall ranges from 3.60 to 3.86m. Seventeen rows of pillar bases could be categorised in three different groups on the basis of north-south distance which varies in different groups whereas east-west distance from centre to centre of each pillar base vary from 2.90 to 3.30m. Six rows of the pillar bases on north and south were at the equidistance which ranges from 3 to 3.30m. Central five rows consisting twenty five pillar bases show different equations-two rows on either sides of the central row were placed approximately at the distance of 5.25m. whereas the other two rows on either side of these three rows were at the distance of 4.20 - 42.5 m. From this it could be easily concluded that the central part of the pillared structure was important and special treatment was given to it in architectural planning.

In the southern area only one decorated sand stone was found over a pillar base while in the northern area many of the pillar bases were found topped by a plain sand stone block set over the brick bat foundation having calcrete blocks over them (Pl. 36). Top parts of stone encasings had a projection in the middle. In the northern area at a few places where the stone blocks were not found sand stone slabs were found over the calcrete blocks of the crick bat foundation of the pillar bases. The decorated octagonal sand stone block on pillar base32 having floral motif on four corners in trench F7 in the southern area is the unique example at the site (Pl. 39) which definitely belongs to the twelfth century A.D. as it is similar to those found in the Dharmachakrajina Vihara of Kumaradevi at Sarnath (Pl. 40) which belongs to the early twelfth century A.D. Seeing its cut or broken surface on one side its use as the base of a neighbouring pilaster (Pl. 41) attached with wall 16 in trench E6 cannot be ruled out."

3882. Thereafter the details of pillar bases have been tabulated showing a total number of 50 pillar bases in different trenches the relevant extract whereof is as under:

3883. The learned experts who have appeared before this Court rendering their opinion on behalf of muslim parties have sought to challenge this part of the report making serious allegations that most of the pillar bases have been created, actually they did not exist. This attack is led on front by PW 29, 32 and DW 6/1-2. These very Experts (Archaeologists) who have deposed their statements on behalf of muslim parties complaining about the manner in which the ASI have functioned in the above excavation have also said simultaneously something otherwise.

3884. PW 29, Jaya Menon on pages 177-178 and 179-180 has said:

> *"Excavation was conducted by a team of members of the A.S.I. It was supervised by two Judicial Officers throughout the excavation. Besides these observers, parties, their counsels nominees and experts were also present during excavation. Day to day register was maintained during excavation on day to day basis by ASI but so far as site note book is concerned I don't know about it. Day to day register was signed by parties or their nominees and Advocates regularly on day to day basis. Antiquity register was not maintained by ASI on day to day basis. "During excavation photography of trenches along with artefacts was being regularly done. There was three dimensional recording during excavation. Videography was regularly done but I do not know that videography of each and every trench was being dome or not. I have not seen the C.D. Of video recording prepared by the ASI. . . . . .I have seen the site note books prepared by the A.S.I. And submitted in the court. Site note books were prepared by the A.S.I. trenchwise on the basis of regular excavation at excavation site. It is correct that excavation conducted by the A.S.I. Was grid system of excavation. Vertical and horizontal excavation were some by A.S.I. At the site. . . . . .It is correct that for the compliance of the order of the court horizontal excavation was necessary on the spot. Vertical excavation by itself was not sufficient because both types of excavation were necessary. Both types of excavation had been conducted by the A.S.I. at the spot. A.S.I. has given it's report along with some plans and sections." (Page 179-180)

www.vadaprativada.com

3886. On the question of "Pillar Bases" Para 5 (5.1 to 5.16) contains the allegations and alleged irregularities, as under:

5. THE MYTH OF SO CALLED "PILLAR BASES":-

5.1 That the so called pillar bases are one or more calcrete stones resting upon brickbats, just heaped up, though A.S.I. claims that mud-mortar was also sometimes

used. In many of them the calcrete stones are not found at all. As one can see from the descriptive table on pages 56-67 of the Report not a single one of these supposed "pillar bases" has been found in association with any pillar or even a fragment of it; and it has not been claimed that there are any marks or indentations or hollows on any of the calcrete stones to show that any pillar had rested on them. The A.S.I. Report nowhere attempts to answer the questions (1) why brickbats and not bricks were used at the base, and (2) how mud-bounded brickbats could have possibly withstood the weight of roof-supporting pillars without themselves falling apart. It also offers not a single example of any medieval temple where pillars stood on such brick-bat bases.

5.2. That the Report's claim of these so called "pillar bases" being in alignment and their being so shown in infancy drawings (Figures 23, 23A and 23B), is not borne out by the actual measurements and distances; and there is indeed much doubt whether the plan provided by A.S.I. is drawn accurately at all, since there are enormous discrepancies between Fig. 3A (the main plan) and the Table in Chapter IV on the one hand, and the Report's Appendix IV, on the other.

5.3. That even those "pillar bases" that lie in the first north-south "row" on the west, lie at different distances from thick western wall: the distances varying between 3.60 and 3.86 m. The east-west distance between any two features (center to center) can vary from 2.9 to 3.3 m (difference of 40 cm) (p. 55) whereas in the north-south

direction there is greater variation between each feature and its neighbor: 3-3.3 m in the north and in the south, and about 5.25 m in the central area. The use of the term "rows", therefore, is incorrect.

5.4. That the entire manner, in which the A.S.I. has identified or created the so called " pillar-bases" is a matter of serious concern. Complaints were regularly made to the Observers appointed by the High Court that the A.S.I. was ignoring calcrete-topped brickbat heaps where these were not found in appropriate positions and selected only such brickbat heaps as were not too far-off from its imaginary grids, and there creating the so called "bases" by clearing the rest of the floor of brick-bats. In this respect reference may be made to the complaints dated 21.5.2003, 7.6.2003, 28.6.2003, 26.7.2003 and 2.8.2003 etc.

5.5. That the most astonishing thing, that the A.S.I. so casually brushes aside, relates to the varying levels at which the so called "pillar-bases" stand. Even if we go by the A.S.I.'s own descriptive table (pages 56-67), as many as seven of these so called 50 "bases" are definitely above Floor 2, and one is in level with it. At least six rest on floor 3, and one rests partly on Floor 3 and 4*. Since at least Floors 1 to 3 are even recognised by the A.S.I. to be floors of the Mosque, how can so many pillars be said to have been erected after the Mosque had been built, in order to sustain a so called earlier temple structure! Moreover, as many as nine so called "pillar bases"* are shown as cutting through Floor No. 3*. So, are we to presume that when the Mosque floor was laid out, the so called "pillar bases"*

were not floored over? It is thus clear that the said structures are simply not "pillar bases" at all, but some kind of loosely-bonded brickbat deposits, which continued to be laid right from the time of Floor 4 to Floor 1.

5.6. That the comparative stratigraphy of these 50 alleged bases also requires comment. The tabulation on p.p. 56 to 67 gives us the following data:-

2 bases (nos. 16, 26) were cut through Floor 4.

25 of them (from the Z- trenches in the north to the G10 and H10 trenches in the south) rested on Floor 4.

6 of them on Floor 3 (nos. 19, 21, 23, 24, 30, 37).

1 (no. 28) actually is said to rest "at the junction of Floor 3 and 4".

2 of them cut through Floor 3 (nos. 12, 15).

7 of them project above Floor 2 (nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 8 and 14).

We thus see that these 50 features belong to different floors and therefore could not all have been functional at the same time. They lack coherence as architectural features. It is irresponsible, therefore, to repeatedly refer to "rows" of these features, as has been done in the report.

Some of these features appear to incorporate all sorts of material: pieces of brick, small stones and brick pieces, long stone slabs, and D-shaped large stones, etc. This also leads to the inference that all these structures could not belong to any one period.

5.7. That even the table on pages 56-67 of the A.S.I.'s Report may not correctly represent the layers of the pillar

bases, since its information on floors does not match that of the Report's Appendix IV, which in several trenches does not attest to Floor No. 4 at all, which the said "pillar-bases", in many cases, are supposed to have been sealed by, or to have cut through or stand on!

5.8. That most of these so called pillar bases of the northern side comprise of sqaure sandstone slabs, perhaps resting on calcrete blocks (only one has been excavated that reveals the calcrete block). The inner dimensions of these pillar bases range from 48.5x43, 50x50, 47x46, 48x56, 49.5x49 and 51x51 cm. These dimensions are completely different from those of the pillars that have actually been recovered. The dimensions of the latter range from 21x21 to 24x24 cm. Thus, the pillars that could be said to have stood on the said northern pillar bases would certainly not be the black stone pillars, used in the mosque, or any other pillars of the same or similar type.

5.9. That the A.S.I.'s assumption is that the floor, with which are associated these so called pillar bases in the north, is the same as Floor 2 in the south. However, it cannot be definitely said that the floors in E2, F2 or G2 can be easily correlated with E1, F1 or G1 or with ZF1 or ZG1.

5.10. That the A.S.I.'s own information on the said pillar bases is highly confusing and marked with discrepancies. For example, in the tabulation of so called pillar bases in Chapter IV, 50 'pillar bases' have been described and have been illustrated in Fig. 3A. The number and the location of these 'pillar bases', however, do not tally with information

5.11. That, two 'pillar bases' are mentioned in H5, H10, G10 and ZH1 whereas only one in these trenches have been illustrated and described in the text. 'Pillar bases' in the L series of trenches and J2 have not been indicated in the Tabulation as illustrated above.

5.12. That on p. 55, distances between 'pillar bases' have been given, that in the east-west direction, center-to Centre distance was 2.90-3.30 m. However, the distance between 'pillar bases' 37 and 38 is 3.80 m. Similarly, these are not always in alignment as is the case with 'pillar base' 30 in Trench G6. 'Pillar bases' 37 and 38 in Trench F8 are also not in alignment with each other.

5.13. That the dubious nature of the 'pillar bases' is illustrated by the figures attached with the complaints. The collection of calcrete and brickbats at a lower level than the above has been ignored by the A.S.I. even though it resembles their so called 'pillar bases'. At times, walls were cut to make 'pillar bases' as in Trench F6. The confusion between walls and 'pillar bases' is apparent in Trenches E1 and E2. The same is the case with 'pillar base' 27 in Trench

5.14. That more serious problem has been created by giving Figs. 23A and 23B, showing the 'pillar bases' hypohetically. An incorrect impression is being created, by showing some 'pillar bases' where no structure was exposed at all and where no excavation was also done.

5.15. That there is an additional problem with the "pillar base" interpretation. Load carrying pillar bases require to rest on hard and resistant surfaces, on floor slabs or rammed floors of say 30 to 40 cm height, or else to be set into or enclosed in pits that are packed tight with filled material. The various sections in the report indicate that this is not the case (see, e.g., Figures 8,9,10 where the features appear to have only been set without packing into the ground, and interrupt the continuity of Floor 2, which is only a few centimeters thick, and lies over a stratum not said to be homogeneous earth filling, or of rammed earth. Thus the very use of the words "rows" and "bases" is incorrect and misleading. These features could in some cases represent a pile of unused bricks, broken or entire. In other cases, they may have been used to fill hollows or to raise the level of the mound. In yet other cases they could have been used to shore up a heavy wall or else to function as an apron for a building.

5.16. That the A.S.I. should have surely looked about for other explanations of these heaps of brickbats, before jumping to its so called "pillar base" theory. There was another clear and elegant explanation. When the surkhi-lime mortar bonded Floor No. 4 was being laid out over the mound, sometime during the Sultanate period, its builders much have had to level the mound properly. The hollows and depressions then had to be filled by brickbats topped by calcrete stones (the latter often joined with lime mortar) to fill them and enable the floor to be laid. When in time Floor 4 went out of repair, its holes had similarly to be filled up in order to lay out Floor 3. And so again when Floor 3 decayed, similar deposits of brickbats had to be made to fill the holes in order to lay out Floor 2 (or, indeed, just to have a level surface). This explains why the so called "pillar bases" appear to "cut through" both Floors 3 an 4, at some places, while at others they "cut through" Floor 3 or Floor 4 only. They are mere deposits to fill up holes in the floors. Since such repairs were at times needed at various spots all over the floors, these brickbat deposits are widely dispersed. Had not the A.S.I. been so struck by the necessity of finding pillars and "pillar bases" to please its masters, which had to be in some alignment, it could have found scattered over the ground not just fifty but perhaps over a hundred or more such deposits of brickbats.

3887. As we have already noticed, these objections were prepared by PWs-29 and 32 as they themselves have admitted in the affidavit filed by them supporting their stand taken in the objections. There are some difference in their statement. PW-29 (Jaya Menon) in her affidavit in para 13 says as under:

A. That the ASI's own information on so called pillar bases is highly confusing and marked with discrepancies. For example, in the tabulation of so called pillar bases in Chapter IV of the Final Report, 50 so called 'pillar bases'

have been described and have been illustrated in Fig. 3A. the number and the location of said 'pillar bases', however, do not tally with the information given in Appendix IV. The details have been provided in the Objections filed by the Sunni Central Board of Waqfs, UP dated October 8th 2003.

B. That Appendix IV in the Final Report mentions so called pillar bases in trenches L1, L2, L3 and L7 (page 17 of Appendix IV). Yet, Site Note Book No. 30 makes no mention of pillar bases in L1 (pages 76-85), L3 (pages 67-75) and L7 (pages 54-66). Nor are there any pillar bases mentioned in Site Note Book No. 24 for Trench L2, or Site Note Books No. 22 and 38 on the cutting of baulks between various trenches in the L series.

C. That a study of the Site Note Books brings out discrepancies from the information provided in the Final Report. site Note Books Nos. 37 and 21 for Trench G7 make no mention of recovering any pillar bases. however, the listing of so called pillar bases in the Final Report from pages 56-67 has records of so called pillar bases in Trench G7 (pillar base No. 26; pages 64-65) and in the G6/G7 baulk (pillar base No. 33; page 64). Appendix IV of the Final Report on page 10 mentions so called two disturbed pillar bases for Trench G7. It needs to be emphasized that the Site Note Books are the result of hte trench supervisor's observations and impressions. Interpretations may also form a part of Site Note Books. But, here, we find that trench supervisors make no mention of anything remotely like a pillar base but these suddenly appear in the Final Report.

D. That the so called pillar bases are not in alignment with each other as should be expected in a pillared hall. At the same time, anything that has been found out of line with their imagined alignment has been discarded as evidence. A complaint was also filed which noted that structure was exposed in the eastern part of J2/J3 baulk after excavating a platform. Since it did not fall in line with the ASI's pillar base in Trench J1 it was not considered as base. But in physical appearance, made of calcrete and brickbats, this structure resembles many of the ASI's so called pillar bases. It is clear that this structure indicates nothing but the manner in which the platform was constructed. This shows the bias with which the ASI was working and their selective use of evidence.

E. That is is clear that at times, walls were cut to make so called 'pillar bases' as in Trench F6 and thus there is in Appendix IV, a confusion between walls and so called 'pillar bases' in Trenches E1 and E2. The same is the case with the so called 'pillar base' in Trench H5. This is nothing but the southern part of Wall 18B.

F. That a more serious problem is showing the so called 'pillar bases' hypothetically in Figs. 23A and 23B. An incorrect impression is being created, by showing some so called 'pillar bases' where they do not exist.

G. That the ASI's assumption that the floor, with which are associated these pillar bases in the north, is the same as Floor 2 in the south, is baseless as there has been no concordance of trenches in the north and south.

H. That according to the Report (page 54), Structure 4

(the 'massive structure') "has survived through its nearly 50 metre long wall (wall 16) in the west and fifty exposed so called pillar bases to its east attached with Floor 2 or the floor of the last phase of Structure 4." However, several sections provided by the ASI (Figs. 6, 10, 16, Plates 21, 46) clearly show that the floor to which they were supposed to be attached sealed these so called 'pillar bases'. In Fig. 6, the 'pillar bases' has cut through Floor 3 (the floor associated with sub-period VIIB) and should have been attached to Floor 2. However, the section in Fig. 6 clearly shows Floor 2 intact over alleged 'pillar base' 31 which means the supposed sandstone block with orthostats and pillar could not have projected over Floor 2. This was the case also with so called 'pillar bases' in Trenches F2, G2 and G5.

I. That these so called "pillar bases" are too flimsy to have supported any load-bearing pillars. Made largely of brickbats, these are completely lacking in uniformity that would be expected if these were in reality pillar bases. Diameters vary from 1.10 m to 1.90 m. Brickbats are not placed in courses as should be the case, but are random, in many cases in a tilted position. The height of brickbats varies from 5-55 cm within a single base. Brickbats do not lie only under the stone but also over the stone as in Trenches F7 and F10. Brickbats make the entire structure unstable and would get broken if a weight was placed over them. If these really were rounded bases, originally they would have been constructed of wedge-shaped bricks instead of which we find brickbats of jagged shape.

J. That if these really were pillar bases, they should have had casings within which the pillar would have fitted. In contrast, we see real pillar bases at the Early Historic site of Sanghol. One notices that these are rectangular, made of large bricks neatly placed with a depression in the centre to set the pillar. These are all of uniform size, constructed uniformly and are accurately aligned, unlike in the case of Ayodhya. Three Photographs of these pillar bases of Sanghol were filed as Annexures Nos. 2, 3, and 4 alongwith the Additional objection of Sunni Waqf Board dated 3-2-2004.

K. That the northern area is the only area of the site where pillar bases have been found. These appear to have been part of a separate much later period structure. In an area of about 10 x 10 metre, these were embedded in Floor 1 and hence were contemporary with Floor 1. These pillar bases comprise of square sandstone slabs, of which only one has been excavated with a calcrete block. The inner dimensions of these pillar bases range from 48.5 x 43, 50 x 50, 47 x 46, 48 x 56, 49.5 x 49 and 51 x 51 cm. These dimensions are completely different from those of the black stone pillars that have actually been recovered with dimensions ranging from 21 x 21 to 24 x 24 cm. Thus, the pillars that would have stood on the said northern side pillar bases were certainly not the black stone pillars. These northern side pillar bases are the ones numbered 1-8, 13 and 14, by the ASI.

L. That barring pillar bases 1 to 8, 13 and 14, the ASI has created so called 'pillar bases' in the rest of the site.

Their creation has been actually observed during excavation and complained about. The deponent has personally witnessed the creation of so called " pillar bases" in Trenches ZF1, F3, F6, G5 and F2/G2.

M. (i) That observations were made of the creation of so called pillar bases in Trench ZF1 from 29th April to 30th April 2003. Floor 1 was exposed at 40 cm bsl, Floor 2 at 57 cm bsl and Floor 3 at 80 cm bsl, all floors being lime-surkhi floors. Floor 1 was reached on April 29th 2003 and was cut through on 30th April 2003, exposing a complete brickbat layer. But during excavation, when a stone was observed as protruding out of the brickbats, the brickbats in the area near the stone were left in a squarish shape while the rest of the brickbats were removed and thrown away. On April 30th 2003 when Floor 2 was cut through, the same king of brickbat layer was exposed beneath it. This brickbat layer can be easily observed by studying the south-facing section in Trench ZF1. A complaint was lodged about the creation of this so called "pillar base".

(ii) That the creation of a so called pillar base was observed in Trench G5 from 24th - 30th of May 2003. Under the Babri Masjid floor various alignments of brickbats were excavated. By the 28th of May 2003, brickbats in the north-western area were concentrated on because there were traces of mortar on these. The mortar was probably remnants from Floor1. By the 30th of May 2003, brickbats were left in a somewhat circular shape because a few small stone chips with traces of mortar on them were found. This whole contraption was made into a so called pillar base by selective digging and partial removal of brickbats. It appears that any co-occurrence of stone, even in the form of chips, and brickbats was made into a so called pillar base, as long as it is 3.30 m to 3.50 m away from the next. Any stones along with brickbats found out of this alignment was not made into a pillar base. A complaint was lodged during excavation about the creation of this "pillar base" also.

(iii) That the same situation of creation of so called pillar bases can be seen in Trench F3. The relevant excavation s took place from July 8th to 12th July2003. In this trench, part of the wall of the northern dome of the Babri Masjid is still standing. A sandstone slab was recovered in the north-western corner of the trench at 2.30 m bsl. On excavation, brickbats were found lying all over the trench and Floor 2 was partially seen below the brickbats at 3.08 m below surface level (bsl). On the 9th of July 2003, brickbats were selectively removed, leaving those only around the sandstone slab. Further excavation down to Floor 3 at 3.35 m bsl revealed a similar layer of brickbats under it. Finally the so called pillar base was created by heaps of brickbats that had been left in place around a sandstone slab while removing all the other brickbats in the rest of the trench. A complaint was lodged during excavation about the creation of this "pillar base".

(iv) That the construction of a so called pillar base was observed in Trenches F2/G2 from the 23rd to the 26th of July 2003. The loose deposit under the Babri Masjid floor was removed leaving brickbats in the north-eastern part of the

trench in a semi-circular shape. By the 24th of July, the entire area was cleared leaving brickbats in the eastern area and a small patch in the south-western part. What is important is that the eastern and western parts of the trench were excavated carefully with knife and brush unlike the rest of the trench that was excavated with a pick. This was because it was in the eastern and western portions that so called pillar bases had to be created, keeping their distance from those constructed in Trench G1. It must also be pointed out that in the clearing work, a collection brickbats and sandstone in the north-western part of the excavated area was removed because it did not fall in an expected alignment of so called pillar bases. This 'structure' had been objected to earlier in a complaint filed on 21st May 2003. By the 26th of July, brickbats in the south-western part were recovered along with sandstone chips. Digging under Floor 1 revealed brickbats in the entire area, but the south-eastern and south-western areas were excavated separately. It was very obvious that these were going to be made into so called pillar bases, even though brickbats had been found in the entire area. By 11.40 am, the area was cleared but further digging revealed the same king of deposit of brickbats, mud, and brick nodules. By afternoon, the so called "pillar base" in the south-eastern area was created by removing brickbats from its edges to give it a neat shape. Glazed were sherds were found at this level. The so called "pillar base" in the south-western part of the trench was cleared of brickbats of make it equal in size to its counterpart and a piece of broken floor sticking to it was removed. Very obviously, these so called pillar bases were created by selectively removing brickbats that lie under each floor. A complaint was lodged during excavation about the creation of this so called "pillar base".

N. That it was observed that, during excavation, brickbats were selectively removed so as to leave brickbat heaps around stone piece and blocks. (There were preconceived ideas about where so called "pillar bases" were to be carved out of brickbats. If no sandstone or calcrete blocks or slabs were noted, heaps of brickbats were left at intervals of 3.00-3.30 m.) A clear attempt was made to neaten the edges of so called "pillar bases" by removing brickbats to give rounded/squarish shapes. It appears that at the end of the excavation, when some so called 'pillar bases' were found obviously out of alignment, they were dismantled as in the case of the structure in the north-west of Trench G2.

O. That the sections of a trench provide us direct evidence of the brickbats layers that lay under individual floors. (It is also obvious that brickbats have been removed from the sections of many trenches: south-facing section of G8/G9 baulk, north, south, and east-facing sections of F1, north- and south facing sections of G1, north-facing section of H1, and east-facing section H1/H2 baulk, south- and west-facing sections of ZF1, east-facing section of G2 and east-facing section of F9.) In archaeology, whenever sections are made during excavation, protruding artefacts like antiquities or bricks, stone and brickbats are never scraped level with the section but are allowed to protrude. This provides a correct picture of the section and its cultural material. In the case of Ayodhya, the above-mentioned trenches show gaping holes from where brickbats have been removed.

P. That the so called "pillar bases" were only part of a floor construction technique. Each lime-surkhi floor was underlain with several layers of brickbats interspersed with stone blocks and slabs and other material as fillers. The intervening spaces were filled with brickbats, mud and brick nodules. Stones have also been used at the site as fillers (as seen from the Plates 4, 21, 30, 50 in the Final Report), levelling mechanisms and for raising walls and platforms and so forth.

Q. That it seems that originally the aim was to create the so called pillar bases all over the excavated area. 8 so called 'pillar bases' were carved out in the L series of trenches as can be seen by Appendix IV (page 17) of the Final Report. As pointed out, there is no mention of these in the individual Site Note Books of the L series of trenches. These were probably not included in the final tabulation or in Fig. 3B showing so called 'pillar bases' as they did not fit in which the ASI' plan of a so called temple with a large brick pavement in front. This brick pavement to the east was considered as the entrance of the massive structure and hence pillar bases would not have fitted into this plan further to the east."

3888. PW 32 (Dr. Supriya Verma) in her affidavit dated 27th March, 2006 has said:

A. That the northern area is the only area of the site where pillar bases have been found. In an area of about 10 x 10 m, these were embedded in Floor 1 and hence were contemporary with Floor 1. These pillar bases comprise of square sandstone slabs, of which only one has been excavated with a calcrete block. The inner dimensions of these pillar bases range from 48.5 x 43, 50 x 50, 47 x 46, 48 x 56, 49.5 x 49 and 51 x 51 cm. These dimensions are completely different from those of the black stone pillars that have actually been recovered with dimensions ranging from 21 x 21 to 24 x 24 cm. There is a pillar lying in the gully to the north of the mound that may have fitted on top of these pillar bases. Thus, the pillars that would have stood on the northern side pillar bases were certainly not the black stone pillars. These northern pillar bases are the ones numbered 1-8, 13 and 14, by the ASI.

B. That barring pillar bases 1-8, 13 and 14, the ASI has created 'pillar bases' in the rest of the site. Their creation has been actually observed during excavation was even and complained about. The deponent has personally witnessed the creation of "pillar bases" in Trenches G2, G5 and F3. Observations were made on the creation of "pillar bases" in Trench G2 from May 16-20, 2003, in Trench G5 from May 27-30, 2003, and in Trench F3 from July 8-12, 2003 and complaints were filed on May 21, 2003, June 28, 2003 and July 26, 2003 respectively. These complaints/objections were prepared by the deponent and Dr. Jaya Menon and were filed under the signatures of Muslim parties and their counsels.

C. That a close observation of the excavation and recording was done of Trench G2 from May 16 to May 20, 2003. It was found that brickbats randomly scattered over the entire excavated area were selectively removed so as to create a visual impression that the brickbats were confined to only a portion of the excavated area. An examination of the section will reveal the fact that brickbats lay in the layer below Floor 1. When Floor 2 was dug through, once again a whole layer of brickbats was exposed.

D.. That the so called "pillar bases" were only part of a floor construction technique. Each lime-surkhi floor was underlain with several layers of brickbats interspersed with stone block blocks and slabs and other material as fillers. The intervening spaces were filled with brickbats, mud and brick nodules. Stones have also been used at the site as fillers (as seen from the Plates 4, 21, 30, 50 in the Final Report), levelling mechanisms and for raising walls and platforms and so forth.

E. That during excavation, brickbats were selectively removed so as to leave brickbat heaps around stone pieces and blocks. If no sandstone or calcrete blocks or slabs were noted, heaps of brickbats were left at intervals of 3.00-3.30 m. It appears that at the end of the excavation, when some so called "pillar bases" were found obviously out of alignment, they were dismantled as in the case of the structure in the northwest part of Trench G2.

F. That the sections of a trench provide us direct evidence of the brickbat layers that lay under individual floors. It is also obvious that brickbats have been removed from the sections of many trenches: south-facing section of G8/G9 baulk, north-, south-, and east-facing sections of F1, north- and south-facing sections of G1, north-facing section of H1, and east-facing section of H1/H2 baulk, south- and west-facing sections of ZF1, east-facing section G2 and east-facing section of F9. (In archaeology, whenever sections are made during excavation, protruding artefacts like antiquities or bricks, stone and brickbats are never scraped level with the section but are allowed to protrude. This provides a correct picture of the section and its cultural material.) In the case of Ayodhya, the above-mentioned trenches show gaping holes from where brickbats have been removed.

G. That the ASI's own information on the so called "pillar bases" is highly confusing and marked with discrepancies. For example, in the tabulation of "pillar bases" in Chapter IV of the Final Report, 50 "pillar bases" have been described and have been illustrated in Fig. 3A. The number and the location of "pillar bases", however, do not tally with the information given in Appendix IV. The details have been provided in the Objections filed by the Sunni Central Board of Waqfs, UP on October 8th 2003.

H. That Appendix IV in the Final Report mentions so called "pillar bases" in trenches L1, L2, L3 and L7 (p. 17 of Appendix IV). Yet, Site Note Book No. 30 makes no mention of pillar bases in L1 (pp. 76-85), L3 (pp. 67-75) and L7 (pp. 54-66). Nor are there any "pillar bases" mentioned in Site Note Book No. 24 for Trench L2, or Site Note Books No. 22 and 38 on the cutting of baulks between various

I. That it seems that originally the aim was to create "pillar bases" all over the excavated area. Eight so called "pillar bases" were carved out in the L series of trenches as can be seen by Appendix IV. (p. 17) of the Final Report. As pointed out, there is no mention of these in the individual Site Note Books of the L series of trenches. These were probably not included in the final tabulation or in Fig. 3B showing "pillar bases" as they did not fit in with in the ASI's plan of a temple with a large brick pavement in front. This brick pavement to the east was considered as the entrance of the massive structure and hence so called "pillar bases" would not have fitted into this plan further to the east.

J. That a study of the Site Note Books brings out discrepancies from the information provided in the Final Report. Site Note Books Nos.37 and 21 for Trench G7 make no mention of recovering any so called "pillar bases". However, the listing of "pillar bases" in the Final Report from pp. 56-67 has records of "pillar bases" in Trench G7 (pillar base No. 36; pp. 64-65) and in the G6/G7 baulk ("pillar base" No.33; p. 64). Appendix IV of the Final Reprt on p. 10 mentions two disturbed "pillar bases" for Trench G7. It needs to be emphasized that the Site Note Books are the result of the trench supervisor's observations and impressions. Interpretations may also form a part of Site Note Books. But, here, we find that trench supervisors make no mention of anything remotely like a "pillar base" but these suddenly appear in the Final Report.

K. That the so called "pillar bases" are not even in alignment with each other as should be expected in a pillared hall. At the same time, anything that has been found out of line with their imagined alignment has been discarded as evidence. A complaint filed on 24th July, 2003 noted that a structure was exposed in the eastern part of J2/J3 baulk after excavating a platform. Since it did not fall in line with the ASI's so called "pillar base" in Trench J1 it was not considered as a base. But in physical appearance, made of calcrete and brickbats, this structure resembles many of the ASI's so called "pillar base". It is clear that this structure indicates nothing but the manner in which the platform was constructed. This shows the bias with which the ASI was working and their selective use of evidence.

L. That it is clear that at times, walls were cut to made so called "pillar base" as in Trench F6 and thus there is in Appendix IV, a confusion between walls and "pillar bases" in Trenches E1 and E2. The same is the case with the "pillar base" in Trench H5. This is nothing but the southern part of Wall 18B.

M. That a more serious problem is that of showing the so called "pillar bases" hypothetically in Figs. 23A and 23B. An incorrect impression is being created, by showing some 'pillar bases' where they do not exist.

N. That the ASI's assumption that the floor with which are associated these so called "pillar bases" in the north is the same as Floor 2 in the south is baseless as there has been no concordance of trenches in the north and south.

O. That according to the Report (p. 54), Structure 4 (the

'massive structure') "has survived through its nearly 50 m long wall (Wall 16) in the west and fifty exposed pillar bases to its east attached with Floor 2 or the floor of the last phase of Structure 4." However, several sections provided by the ASI (Figs. 6, 10, 16, Plates 21, 46) clearly show that the floor to which they were supposed to be attached sealed these "pillar bases". In Fig. 6, the "pillar base" has cut through Floor 3 (the floor associated with sub-period VIIB) and should have been attached to Floor 2. However, the section in Fig. 6 clearly shows Floor 2 intact over "pillar base" 31 which means the supposed sandstone block with orthostates and pillar could not have projected over Floor 2. This was the case also with "pillar bases" in Trenches F2, G2 and G5.

P. That these so called "pillar bases" are too flimsy to have supported any load-bearing pillars. Made largely of brickbats, these are completely lacking in uniformity that would be expected if these were in reality pillar bases. Diameters vary from 1.10 m to 1.90 m. Brickbats are not placed in courses as should be the case, but are randaom, in many cases in a tilted position. The height of brickbats varies from 5-55 cm within a single base. Brickbats do not lie only under the stone but also over the stone as in Trenches F7 and F10. Brickbats make the entire structure unstable and would get broken if a weight was placed over them. If these really were rounded bases, originally they would have been constructed of wedge-shaped bricks instead of which we find brickbats of jagged shape.

Q. That if these really were pillar bases, they should have had casings within which the pillar would have fitted. In contrast, we see real pillar bases at the Early Historic site of Sanghol. One notices that these are rectangular, made of large bricks neatly placed with a depression in the centre to set the pillar. These are all of uniform size, constructed uniformly and are accurately aligned, unlike in the case of Ayodhya. The deponent had visited the said site of Sanghol. District Ludhiana (Panjab) alongwith Dr. Jaya Menon and Dr. Suchi Dayal in 2004 and Dr. Jaya Menon and the deponent had taken the photographs of the said Sanghol site (3 of which have already been filed as ANNEXURES Nos. 2, 3 and 4 to the Additional objection dated 3-2-2004 filed by the Sunni Waqf Board against the A.S.I. Report.)

3889. After very careful consideration of the above as also the arguments advanced before us including ASI report, it appears to us that the report of ASI was sought to be criticized by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) as if ASI was supposed to satisfy them about its finding and not the Court. Several fanciful objections have been made just to multiply and add the list of the objections.

3890. Under the heading "The Myth of so called pillar bases", paras 5.12, 5.16, in a general way, all the pillar bases are sought to be discredited though a number of pillar bases, we have already demonstrated, are admitted by the experts of the muslim parties. Complaints in respect to some of the pillar bases, which were made on 21st May, 2003 and 7th June, 2003 have already been discussed above and that itself is sufficient to discard the objections of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) on this aspect.

However, we propose to throw some more light on the subject of pillar bases.

3891. In the cross examination, the Expert (Archaeologist) plaintiffs (Suit-4) have also said something about pillar bases. PW-16 (Surajbhan) said:

any figure like that of Yaksha engraved in the stones sustaining the weight of the pillars looking like those of temples.

Question:- Are engraved stones used as foundation stones while constructing any building ?

Answer:- As per the report these so called pillar bases were often said to be present on the floor and they have not been laid after digging up the base, nor was any other floor shown to be contemporaneous to them. Hence it will be taken to me only that if the structure above these pillar basis was a temple then the floor of wall no.16 or 17 was certainly their floor and there ought to have been an engraving in shape of symbol or design on them also, or else they will be giving an ugly shape to the building of the alleged large temple" (E.T.C.)

उत्तर– यह कहना सही नहीं होगा। क्योंकि तथाकथित पिलर बेसेज कई फ़र्शों के साथ दिखाए गए हैं, जैसा कि आइसोमेट्रिक व्यू वाले चित्र में भी साफ दीख पड़ रहा है, इसलिए इनके आधार पर बाबरी मस्जिद के पूर्व के भवन का आंकलन नहीं किया जा सकता और यही बजह है कि मैंने बाबरी मस्जिद की पश्चिमी दीवार के नीचे जो पश्चिमी दीवार देखी थी और उनके साथ फ़र्श जो मैंने देखे थे, उनके अतिरिक्त मुझे कोई और प्रमाणिक आधार नहीं दिखाई दिया, जो स्ट्रक्चरल फ़ेसेज अथवा कालों को निर्धारित करने में मदद कर सकता।'' (पेज 230–231)

"Answer:- Since I do not take many of the so-called pillar bases to be real ones, hence it is not possible for me to date such pillar bases. If any actual pillar base is shown in a picture and floor levels and cross section are also specified along with it, it will be possible for me to determine its antiquity. However, if the antiquity of the so called pillar bases is to be ascertain, I will tell about it after examining their floors and their relations to the cross section.

Question:- Even without having any study of these pillar bases, you have used the word 'so-called' in reference to them. What would you like to say in this regard?

Answer:- It will not be correct to say so, because the so called pillar bases have been shown with several floors, as are seen even in the picture having an isometric view. Hence, on the basis of this the building situated on the east of the Babri masjid cannot be assessed. This is the reason why I did not, except for the western wall and its accompanying floor, which I had seen below the western wall of the Babri masjid, see any other reliable basis, which could have been helpful in determining structural phases and their timings." "I do not agree with the report of the ASI that there is any pillar base in trench G-8. By saying that ASI people created pillar bases, I mean that while excavating, they removed brick bats selectively from some portion leaving the other portion to give shape of a pillar base and it is because of this reason that the shape of the pillar bases as also the size and depth vary from pillar base to pillar base. I do not agree with the suggestion that the pillar is round in shape and the brick bats set in regular courses and having two stone slabs in the middle. However, it is true that two concrete slabs are there in the middle. I do not agree with the ASI report that it is a pillar base." (Page 114)

"Since I do not accept that any pillar bases were found during excavation except in the northern area, I do not agree with ASI report that pillar bases were found in the area of the 39 anomalies having been pointed by the GPR survey report. The pillar bases which are acceptable to me form part of Z series of trenches. The area of the Z series of trenches was surveyed by the GPR surrey team but I am not hundred percent sure as to whether they had covered that area or not." (Page 120)

"Prof. Mandal has referred to the findings of pillar bases of Prof. B.B. Lal and he has contradicted Prof. Lal's theory of pillar bases." (Page 131)

"The ASI has reported about the existence of 50 pillar bases at one place and perhaps 67 at other place but according to me, the number does not seem to be correct as there is no consistency." (Page 131-132)

"I clarify that no pillar base was exposed by ASI. Rather it were floor bases that were exposed and partially cleared and partially it was left exposed and then labelled as so called pillar bases." (Page 132)

"An archaeologist can create pillar bases even in the section by pulling out brick bats from the section while excavating and preparing the section." (Page 132)

"Such so called pillar bases appearing in the section were not created in my presence but from the close study of the section, I could say that there were created pillar bases." (Page 132)

"It is wrong to suggest that it is not possible to create a pillar base in a section of baulk; rather it is very easy to do so. Pillar base shown in the baulk of F2 G2 was created in my presence and I lodged complaint against ASI observations. It was created between 16 to 20 May, 2003. Besides me, Mohd. Abid was also present at the time of aforesaid pillar base being created. This pillar base and pillar base no. 21 were created during aforesaid period of five days. I complained against the ASI to the observer about both the aforesaid pillar bases. The complaint was lodged in writing. I completely disagree with the suggestion that I am making a wrong statement to the effect that the aforesaid pillar bases were created by ASI.

I do not know whether the GPR report has revealed anomalies exactly on the spot where subsequently ASI has shown the pillar bases. I do not know whether ASI has indicated 22 pillar bases exactly on such spot where anomalies were shown in GPR report. No doubts the ASI has sketched a chart in its report indicating the places of pillar bases allegedly found on the spots on the anomalies.

Since I do not accept the very existence of pillar bases, I did not considered it necessary verify the genuineness of ASI report on the basis of GPR report." (Page 133-134)

"In the second line of para 14 of my affidavit I have used the words created 'pillar bases' because in my opinion and observation floor bases were cut and pillar base created. In my opinion barring pillar bases 1 to 8, 13 and 14, all other pillar bases were created by ASI. According to me this creation of pillar bases was right from the beginning of the excavations till the end of it. When I was at the site in April 2003 no pillar bases had been excavated when I returned to the site around 10th May 2003 some pillar bases had already been excavated from 10th May onwards I begin observing and between may 16th and 20th I found that pillar base was created in trench G-2 and on may 21st a complain was filed in this regard. Except the complaint which are mentioned in para 14 of my affidavit some other complaints were also filed by Dr. Jaya Menon."(Page 155-156)

"I do not agree with the suggestion that in plate 43 of the ASI report Vol. II pillar bases have been shown. In fact, the pillar bases asserted by the ASI are part of the floor base." (Page 165)

"As a matter of fact, they were crated before me. I did make complaint regarding creation of pillar bases by ASI. The complaints made by me were given to the Muslim parties, who passed it to the observers, present there."(Page 166)

3895. The ASI has discovered 50 pillar bases during

excavation out of which twelve were completely exposed, thirty five partially and three were traced in section. The pillar bases traced in section were F2, G2 in baulk (pillar base no.20), F8 F9 in baulk (pillar base No.40) and trench No.F8 F9 in baulk (pillar base no.41). Confirming GPR survey report, twenty pillar bases have been excavated in trenches no.E2, E9, F8, F9, ZG1, G2, G5, G8, G9, ZH1 and H5. In all these trenches, one pillar base each was discovered. Besides, in Trench F-6, three pillar bases, Trench G-2, two pillar bases and Trench H-1, two pillar bases have been found. Foundation of these pillar bases are circular, square, oval or irregular in shape. Pillar base no.3 shows square sandstone block with orthostats provided on its four sides, contemporary with floor 2. Multiple courses of brick bats set in mud mortar incasing rectangular blocks of calcrete stone fixed with lime mortar were provided as foundation to the pillar bases. Figure 3A shows alignment of pillar base and details of respective distances. The important feature pointed out is that there were seventeen rows of pillar bases from North to South, each row having 5 pillar bases. There is no North-South row of the West of wall 16 and17, as is being read and suggested by the aforesaid experts of plaintiffs (Suit-4). Though we are not agreeable to the allegation that some of them, or many of the pillar bases are created but even if, for a moment, we assume as claimed by three witnesses i.e. PW-29 Jaya Menon, PW-32 Dr. Supriya Verma and DW-6/1-2 Mohd. Abid that they sought G-2 and F-6 trenches wherein pillar bases were created by one Trench Supervisor S.K. Sharma and one more person, that will not be sufficient to belie and also cannot explain several other pillar bases found by ASI whereagainst no such complaint is there.

3896. Archaeology provides scientific factual data for reconstructing ancient historical material culture, understanding, archaeology for the past is a multi disciplinary scientific subject and requires a team of workers for effective results. Excavation of ancient sites is one of the major works of Archaeologists. As it is a scientific discipline, it uses scientific methods in its working. All archaeological excavations are constructive and also at the same time destructive; revealing in the sense they yield unknown data like structures, antiquities etc., destructive that as one digs layer after layer, the upper layer have to be removed to go deeper and deeper to know more and may cause destruction of the site for any future excavation at that place.

3897. The term "Archaeology" came to be considered by Apex Court in Joseph Pothen Vs. The State of Kerala AIR 1965 SC 1514 and in paras 13 and 14 it observed:

> "13. The Constitution itself, as we have noticed earlier, maintains a clear distinction between ancient monuments and archaeological site or remains; the former is put in the State List and the latter, in the Concurrent List.
> 14. The dictionary meaning of the two expressions also brings out the distinction between the two concepts. "Monument" is derived from monere, which means to remind, to warn. "Monument" means, among others,"a structure surviving from a former period" whereas "archaeology" is the scientific study of the life and culture of ancient peoples. Archaeological site or remains, therefore, is a site or remains which could be explored in order to study the life and culture of the ancient peoples.

The two expressions, therefore, bear different meanings. Though the demarcating line may be thin in a rare case, the distinction is clear."

3898. The Court also held that Ancient and Historical Monuments and Archaeological Sites and Remains (Declaration of National Importance) Act, 1951 apply to ancient and historical monuments referred to or specified in Part 1 of the Schedule thereto, which had been declared to be of national importance.

3899. In this case, ASI did not work on an unknown subject and site but was backed by a scientific investigation report of GPR Survey which is a well known scientific system used in such matters. The survey has pointed out a number of anomalies underneath. The actual excavation needed to confirm and verify those anomalies and their exact nature to avoid any doubt. Regarding Pillar Bases, a number of such anomolies were already pointed out by GPR Survey and ASI simply found the existence of pillar bases so as to confirm the anomalies pointed out by GPR Survey at those places. If we look carefully to GPR Survey, as also the pillar bases confirmed by actual excavation of ASI, a total number thereof we find comes to about twenty. They are:

3900. Interestingly, we find that in the two major complaints dated 21st May, 2003 and 7th June, 2003 submitted to the Observer when the excavation was going on, the allegations of creation of pillar base mainly were made in those very trenches where the GPR Survey has already detected anomalies in the form of pillar bases etc. The complainants were already to some extent aware of likelyhood of finding pillar bases in those trenches. Trenches No.F1, F6, F8, F9, G1, G2, G5, G8, G9, H1, ZG1 and ZH1 are in that very category. In other words, it can easily be appreciated that the mind of two experts instead of working for the assistance of the Court in finding a truth, tried to create a background alibi so that later on the same may be utilized to attack the very findings. However, this attempt has not gone well since some of these very pillar bases have been admitted by one or the other expert of plaintiffs (Suit-4) to be correct.

3901. Sri M.M.Pandey, learned Advocate appearing on behalf of defendant no.2/1 (Suit-4) while justifying ASI report in respect to the various pillar bases, submitted that centre to centre distance can not be measured correctly, except for those found completely topped by sandstone blocks and attached to floor. It is not possible to fix the point where the finished sand stone block would have been placed on top of the calcrete blocks. Two pillar bases that have been found in sections (Fig. 8 & 9) demonstrate vividly that the sandstone block was not necessarily placed in the centre of the calcrete block and brickbat foundation rather was shifted as per the requirement of alignment. Exposition of a structure that exists is done in an excavation. The question of creation of any structure including pillar base does not arise. Nothing was ignored during the excavation. Utmost care was taken to ensure that each and every find is documented and mentioned in the Report. No "calcrete topped brickbat heap" is either found or identified as pillar bases. Brickbats in the pillar bases are not heaped up rather they are carefully laid in well defined courses. It is to be remembered that pillar bases, except those found complete with sandstone blocks in the northern area whose existence and genuineness is admitted by Sunni Central Board of Waqf and its companion parties, are essentially the foundation part required to remain buried in ground. Once this fact is borne in mind then the picture may be clearly understood. When the floor of sub-Period VII B is "weathered enough to be replaced, debris of brick structures was leveled to attain the desired height. In this deposit foundations to support pillar or columns were sunk" to different levels. Floors 1, 1A, 1B and 1C belonged to the disputed structure (Period VIII & IX), Floors 2, 3 and 4 belonged to period VII and the brick-crush floor existed in the earlier Period VI. There appears to be some attempt on part of the plaintiff to twist the facts and mislead by creating some sort of confusion.

The transition from "calcrete topped brickbat heaps" through "brickbat heaps" to "some kind of loosely-bonded brickbats deposits" is very clear. The plaintiff at least accepts some sort of bonding in brickbats which cannot be in case of "heaps" (random deposit). This at best may be termed as self contradicting argument.. Floor (F1.2) around most of the pillar bases is found broken with pillar base foundations in much disturbed condition.: (p.42, 2nd para). The evidence of broken floor as above most of the pillar base foundations, completely finished pillar bases and the evidence of finished pillar bases partly excavated and partly visible in section when combined together, point to the fact that all these 46 pillar bases belonged to the one and the same period and were constructed in association of wall 16 and F1.2. The pillars that have actually been recovered are from the debris of the disputed structure. Further, nowhere in the report it is said or hinted at that these stone pillars were standing over these pillar bases. It is nothing but wilful negation of the evident fact, nothing more can be said in this regard. Layers of pillar bases are clear from the perusal of the report. The objections of the plaintiff regarding creation of pillar bases, distances and alignments and its interpretation one without any substance. It is well established in archaeology that walls can not be cut and shaped like pillar bases. The walls alleged to have been cut and shaped like pillar bases are at the maximum 0.55 m wide, whereas the pillar bases show much bigger dimension which prima-facie falsifies the objection of the plaintiff. The plaintiffs challenging the identity of pillar bases alleged that unused brick broken or entire have been used to fill hollow to raise the level of ground or to function apron for a building. In this connection it may be mentioned that a perusal of report shows that most of the pillar bases are attached with the floor 2, 3 & 4. If "hollow" is a synonym for foundation pit, then certainly it is a good explanation. But 'fill' would be wrong expression, as the brickbats are laid in defined courses. Raising of ground is done uniformly and throughout and not as if "a pile of unused bricks" or "to fill hollows". It is surprising to note that the "heavy wall" disappears without leaving any trace except the "pile of unused bricks" to "shore up". As "apron" for which building? Apparently all the objections tendered above are emanating from technically ignorant persons and willful attempt to mislead the Court. All the interpretations were reached after exploring all the possible explanations. ASI conducted excavation at the behest and orders of this Court as Court Commissioner and submitted its scientific Report to the Court and did not engage in creation and that too in the presence of judicial officers.

3902. The pillar bases traced on spot make 64 squares in between 17 rows of 5 pillar bases each. The seventeen rows of pillar bases were constructed along the north-south running brick wall (wall No. 16). The distance of the first pillar base in each row from the wall is 3.60 to 3.86 m. Seventeen rows of pillar bases could be categorized in three different groups whereas east-west distance which varies in different groups whereas east-west distance from the centre to centre of each pillar base vary from 2.90 to 3.30 m. Six rows of the pillar bases on north and south were at the equidistance which ranges from 3 to 3.30 m. Central five rows consisting of twenty-five pillar bases show different equations- two rows on either side of the central row were placed approximately at the distance of 5.25 in whereas the other two rows on either side of these three rows were at the distance of 4.20-4.25 m. The pillar bases are in alignment. The ASI unit report in figure 23B has given an isometric view of the pillar bases and in figure 23A the isometric view of the excavated site with different floors and pillar bases.

3903. The foundation of the pillar bases are circular, square, oval, or irregular in shape and the foundation has been filled with brick bats covered with orthostat which prima facie establishes its load bearing nature. It is also clear from the report that all the fifty pillar bases, more or less are of similar pattern except the orthostate position. The factual position is that the pillar bases of northern side which are admitted by the plaintiffs and other objectors to be pillar bases are undisturbed and unexposed whereas the pillar bases of the southern side are damaged and exposed but in any way there is no basic difference between the two. The isometric view is a geometrical drawing to show a building in three dimensions. The plan is set up with lines at an equal angle (usually 30^0) to the horizontal, while verticals remain vertical and to scale. It gives a more realistic effect than an axonometric projection, but diagonals and curves are distorted. The existence of pillar bases was challenged by the objectors on the ground that the distance between the pillar bases, the spot position is not common as such the same may not be considered pillar bases. In this connection reference may be given of plan of Ukha Mandir temple converted in to a Masjid published at surveyor general office Calcutta in 1877 in which square pillars were found with different angles and distances. Similarly in temple of Vishala Devi pillar bases of different sizes with different distances were found which too have been lithographed at the Surveyor General office Calcutta in July 1877. Examples of plan of Shiva Temple at Bastar, Shiva Temple at Shighanpur, Shiva Temple at Chindgaon, Shiva Temple at Chitrakoot, Shiva Temple at Narayanpur are relating to 10th Century A.D. may be given. A perusal of photographs of the pillar bases, videography and the time of excavation also falsify the allegations of the objectors regarding creation of pillar bases.

3904. A perusal of the report particularly at page 54 shows that all the 50 exposed pillar bases are attached with floor 2 dateable to 1200 A. D. and most of them are resting over floor no. 4 which has the earliest floor. The carbon dating report referred at page 69 of the report also proves that in a trench ZH-1 the date reported between floor 2 & 3 is between 900-1300 A.D. which prima facie makes it clear that floor 2 was not made after 1300 A.D. and not before 900 A.D. while floor 3 was made before 900 A.D. It is also clear from the report that all the pillar bases exposed are attached with the floors existing prior to the floor of disputed structure. Pillar base is reported from the same trench, i.e. ZH-1 along with the floor which confirms the association of floor 2/3 and pillar bases along with C^{14} date between floor 2 & 3 (S. No. 47 of pillar base in page no. 28). The same pillar base of ZH-1 was predicted as an anomaly in the GRP Survey. Therefore, it is clear that floor 4 which supports the foundation of pillar bases was the most extensive floor belong to period VII A (page 42 of the report & fig. 23 & plate 35). The timing of period VII-A is the beginning of 12th

3905. It is clear from the report that floor 4 which supports the foundation of pillar bases was a floor of a Temple. It cannot be the floor of Idgah or Kanati Mosque because pillars are always absent in Idgah so that maximum persons could be accommodated in minimum space for offering prayer.

3907. We find substance in the submission of Sri Pandey. We may also notice at this stage that though most of the pillar bases were excavated at earlier point of time but complaint thereof particularly about so called creation was made after much gap. To start with, the first complaint of 21st May, 2003 was confined only to one pillar base found in trench G-2 but a number of such pillar bases were included in the second complaint dated 7th June, 2003, when both the so called authors of the objections were not on the site. On the basis of record these details can be shown in the form of a chart as under:

3908. This chart would reveal that most of the pillar bases were found during excavation in the months of April and May, 2003 which could have cleared to anyone having an idea on the subject as to what inference those excavations is likely to cause. It appear that in these circumstances under the Expert's advice the complaints were made as a ground, so as to utilize later. It cannot be doubted that as and when the pillar bases have been excavated on that very day mentioned in the site notebook.

3909. We have very carefully perused the site note book, day-to-day register as also more than twenty five video cassettes as well as the photographs but find nothing unusual which may create any suspicion in what the ASI has said in respect to pillar bases in his report except minor typographical mistakes, which is quite understandable in the manner they have worked and with the pace with which have accomplished such a gigantic job, that too under unusual circumstances where they were constantly watched by huge number of persons and officials of the Court.

3910. We may reproduce at this stage some part of the statement of PW-29, 30, 31 and 32 again which would show that in general, the finding of ASI about pillar bases, was not found incorrect:

3911. PW-29 Dr. Jaya Menon- She said:

> "In my opinion 10 pillar bases were found in the northern side of the disputed site. All these 10 pillar bases

www.vadaprativada.com

on the northern side were beyond the disputed structure. ..." (Page 204)

"...I think one pillar base was found in the section in the northern part of the disputed site. I remember that one pillar base was identified by the ASI in the baulk of the trenches F2 and G2 and two so-called pillar bases were identified by the ASI in the baulk of trench F8 and F9 but according to me these were not actually pillar bases. ..." (Page 204-205)

"...approximately they are 6 in number. It does not appear on the perusal of figure 23 that some of the so called pillar bases from floor 3 have penetrated down to floor 4. Approximately 25 so called pillar bases have been shown in figure 23a as associated with floor 4 and floor 4a. I do not remember whether floor 2 and 3 were carbon dated by ASI from 900 to 1300 AD or not. In my opinion floor I is the floor of Babri Masjid which is approximately dated to the 16th century. Floor 2, floor 3 and 4 were associated with the pre Babri Masjid structure. I don't have separate dates for floors 2, 3 and 4 but approximately these floors may be dated from the end of the 12th century to the 16th century AD. According to me walls and structures prior to 12th century were found in excavation but no floor prior to 12th century was found at the site. According to me the oldest wall found in excavation was of first to third century AD. And the oldest structure found would be structure 5 which may be of 6th century AD." (Page 205)

3912. Dr R.C. Thakran (PW-30) admitting the existence of pillar bases stated that:

''मैं उस रिपोर्ट में लिखी इस बात से सहमत हूँ कि पिलर बेसेज पत्थर के पैडेस्टल्स पर टिके हुए थे। . . . मैंने अयोध्या की खुदाई के दौरान सभी पिलर बेसेज को देखा था। उसमें पैडेस्टल्स स्टोन कहीं पर नहीं हैं। केवल मात्र सीता की रसोई की तरफ कुछ पिलर बेसेज़ के ऊपर पत्थर पाये गये हैं। जो पेडेस्टल से भिन्न हैं। . . .जब तक मैं खुदाई स्थल पर रहा, ऐसा नहीं है कि ए0एस0आई0 वालों ने पिलर बेस बनाये हों, बाद में अगर उन्होंने कुछ किया हो, तो मुझे इस बात का ज्ञान नहीं है। यदि सभी ट्रेचेज में लगातार वीडियोंग्राफी हो रही हो, तो पिलर बेस बनाना सम्भव नहीं है।''(पेज 116/118)

'' . . .मस्जिद में जो पिलर बनाये जाते हैं, उनके लिए पिलर बेसेज की आवश्यकता होती है। उपरोक्त धारा 22 में इन पिलर बेसेज़ के सम्बन्ध में चर्चा की गयी है तथा पिलर बेसेज के ऊपर जो पिलर्स खड़े किये गये हैं, उनकी भी चर्चा है।'' (पेज 176)

"I agree with the fact mentioned in that report that the pillar bases rested on pedestals of stone ..... I had seen all the pillar bases in course of the Ayodhya excavation. Pedestal stones were nowhere in them. Only towards Sita Rasoi, above some pillar bases have been found stones, which are different from the pedestals.... As long as I stayed at the excavation site, it is not that the A.S.I men carved pillar bases; but if they did so later on, I do not have knowledge about that. If all the trenches are constantly being videographed, it is not possible to carved pillar bases." (Page 116/118)

"...For pillars to be carved in a mosque, there is requirement of pillar bases. The aforesaid para 22 discusses about these pillar bases and also about the pillars which have been erected above the pillar bases."(Page 176)

3913. Dr Ashok Dutta (PW-31) admitting the existence of

pillar bases underneath of the disputed structure stated as under:

"...Plate no. 82 and 83 of ASI report vol. II were shown to the witness who stated that stones slabs are possibly of black basalt with some decorative motifs can be seen in these plates. Black basalt is a kind of rock, which is igneous rock. ..." (page 109)

"...Learned cross examiner drew the attention of the witness towards paper no. 200 C-1 after seeing photographs no. 122 and 123 the witness stated that it appears to me from the photographs that the stones used in stole pillars is possibly black basalt. It appears that the pillars which are seen in paper 122 and 123 are similar to that as shown in plate 82 and 83 of ASI report vol. 2. ..." (page 110)

"...As an archaeologist at least I have that amount of knowledge to differentiate between mosque and temple. I don't have any idea whether this type of stone slabs having decorative motif were used in the mosque or not. In plate no. 83 there are flower designs on the stone slab lower part of this stone slab is not distinct and clear. After seeing plate no. 83 with the magnifying glass the witness stated that some objects are visible in this stone slab. They appear to be lower part of a figure. But whether it represents human being or any thing else is difficult to ascertain because the foot is shown in different way than the man. In the centre of this plate it gives an impression of a 'Ghat with flower'. I don't have any idea whether these type of decorative motifs are used in mosque. ..." (Page 110-111)

"...I know that the depiction of human and animal figures

is prohibited in the Muslim architecture.

So far I remember there was no figure of human beings on the black basalt pillars. ...” (Page 140)

“...I believe the theory of ‘Super imposition’. I believe that according to the theory of ‘super imposition’ creation of the pillar bases in the trenches is impossible but in certain cases some super imposition is found. ...” (Page 266)

3914. Dr Supriya Verma (PW-32) stated as under:

“16. That the so called “pillar bases” were only part of a floor construction technique. Each lime-surkhi floor was underlain with several layers of brickbats interspersed with stone blocks and slabs and other material as fillers. ...” (Page 12)

“...It was for the first time in the year 1989 in an article published in a magazine, namely, ‘Manthan’ that the existence of pillar bases was mentioned by him (Prof. B.B. Lal). ...” (Page 127)

3915. Prof. Suraj Bhan (PW-16) who visited the site for three days only, as mentioned by him at page-34, admitting the existence of pillar bases, stated as under:

“अयोध्या के इस स्थल पर बाबरी मस्जिद के ढांचे के तुरन्त नीचे वाले ढांचे के साथ वाले फर्श और पिलर बेस का एक साथ फोटो लिया जा सकता था बशर्ते कि इस दृष्टि से खुदाई की गयी होती। . . .” (पेज 227)

“विद्वान जिरहकर्ता अधिवक्ता ने साक्षी का ध्यान ए0एस0आई0 रिपोर्ट व्यूलूम 2 के प्लेट संख्या 42 पर आकृष्ट किया। साक्षी ने इसे देखकर प्रश्न किये जाने पर बताया कि इस प्लेट में दो ऐसे कन्स्ट्कशन हैं जो पिलर बेस

के रूप में मान लिये गये हैं, परन्तु इनको प्रमाणित करने के लिए क्रास सेक्शन ठीक से नहीं दिख पा रहा है।'' (पेज 228)

"The learned cross-examining counsel drew the attention of the witness to Plate no. 42 of the A.S.I. report, volume 2. After looking at this the witness on being questioned replied that in this plate there are two such constructions as have been taken to be pillar bases but cross section, capable of establishing them, is not properly seen."(page 228).

''एक दीवार को शायद काट कर जिसे पिलर बेस कहा जा रहा है शायद उसे बनाया गया है।'' (पेज 229)

"What is being termed as pillar base, is perhaps carved out from a wall."(Page 229)

''पिलर बेस हम उसे कहते हैं जो किसी स्तम्भ का आधार हों। सर्वे की रिपोर्ट के मुताबिक प्रो0 बी0बी0लाल के उत्खनन में पाये गये कन्स्ट्रकशन को इसलिए पिलर बेस कहा गया है क्योंकि उनके अनुसार उन पर तथाकथित मन्दिर के स्तम्भ खड़े माने गये थे।'' (पेज 232)

"We term as pillar base what is the base of any pillar. As per the survey report, the constructions discovered at the excavation carried out by Prof. B.B.Lal have been termed as pillar bases because the pillars of the so called temple, in his opinion, rested on them."(Page 232).

''प्लेट संख्या 46 के बारे में साक्षी ने इसे देखकर पूछने पर बताया कि मैंने यहॉ यह कहने का प्रयास किया है कि तथाकथित पिलर बेसेज पर न तो कोई सिम्बोलिक आकृतियॉ हैं और न ही उनके साथ एक भी पत्थर का स्तम्भ अथवा उसके टुकड़े मिले।'' (पेज 234)

"On being queried about plate no.46, the witness, after looking at the same, stated that here he had tried to say that there are no symbolic shapes on the so –called pillar bases and not a single stone pillar or its fragments were

"मुझे इस समय यह याद नहीं है कि उपरोक्त फिगर 3ए में दर्शित 50 पिलर बेसेज में से कितने मेरे निरीक्षण के समय एक्सपोज हो चुके थे। स्वयं कहा, इनमें से कुछ स्ट्रेक्चर्स उत्तर में, कुछ पश्चिमी भाग में तथा कुछ दक्षिण में स्ट्रेक्चर्स पार्टली या पूरी तरह एक्सपोज हो चुके हैं, जिन्हें पिलर बसे कहा जा रहा है। ए0एस0आई0 द्वारा प्रदर्शित पिलर बेसेज में एलाइन्मेन्ट तो दिखाई देता है परन्तु फिर भी इनमें अन्तर तो है ही और रिपोर्ट में भी यही लिखा गया है।" (पेज 464)

"At present I do not remember how many of the 50 pillar bases shown in the aforesaid figure 3A had been exposed at the time of my observation. (Stated on his own) Out of these structures, some have been partly or completely exposed in the north, some in the western part and some in the south, which structures are being called pillar bases. Alignment is certainly seen in the pillar bases shown by A.S.I., but they definitely have differences, and this very fact is written in the report."(Page 464)

"As of now, there is nothing to show whether these constructions were often meant to maintain the level of soil for floor making or for any other purpose.

Question- Whether any inquiry in respect of these pillar

Answer- I have formed my opinion on studying the report, visiting the site and by my interaction. I have not seen the diary of Supervisors or the Antiquity Register. There is no special reference of these in the report as well." (Page 470)

3916. Prof. Dhaneshwar Mandal (PW-24) who was again examined as expert witness after excavation by Sunni Central Waqf Board, appreciated the work of ASI and its methodology, but nowhere alleged anything against ASI or manufacture of pillar bases by them. Rather he admitted the existence of pillar bases and the reference of the same in the report. Prof. Mandal stated that:

''रिपोर्ट के अनुसार 50 तथा–कथित स्तम्भ आधारों (pillar bases) के नीव की पहचान की गयी है। उन्हें Floor 2 (या Structure 4 की अन्तिम अवस्था) से सम्बद्ध कहा गया है (ASI Report, Vol.I, p.54). इस कथन से यह स्पष्ट संकेत मिलता है कि उनका निर्माण Floor 2 के समय हुआ होगा। इस स्थिति में दोनों परस्पर समकालिक हुए। (पेज 118)

"According to the report, the foundations of 50 alleged pillar bases have been identified. They have been termed as attached to Floor 2 (or the last stage of Structure 4) (ASI Report, Vol.1,p.54). This statement clearly indicates that their construction would have taken place at time of Floor 2. In such situation both of them are mutually contemporary. " (page 118)

''पुरातत्व विज्ञान के अनुसार जिस सतह से यह खाई खोदी Pit जाती है वह उसके निर्माण काल का समकालिक माना जाता है। . . . . रिपोर्ट में लगभग 14 स्तम्भ आधारों का सेक्शन तथा प्लान प्रकाशित है।'' (पेज 118)

The verification of the pillar bases appearing in this isometric view given by the ASI, has not been done by me from the disputed site. The details of the structures found at the disputed site have been given by the ASI in Figure 3 and 3A of Volume 1 of its report. I agree that the structures found at the disputed site and mentioned in Figure 3 and 3A, are at the disputed site. In its report, the ASI has mentioned about four floors, with which I agree, but so far as the Floor 4A shown by ASI is concerned, I do not agree with the same because it has not been mentioned even at Page 37A(tentative periodisation of the disputed site at Ayodhya) of Volume 1 of ASI report. The Floor 1 is the floor of the disputed structure. The Floor 2 is anterior to the Floor 1, in which all the pillar bases and structures of the report have been shown. 3917. One of the objection with respect to the pillar bases is that nothing has been found intact with them saying that the pillars were affixed thereon. The submission, in our view, is thoroughly hollow and an attempt in vain. The other parties i.e. Hindus categorically claimed that the erstwhile structure was removed i.e. demolished so as to construct the disputed structure. If we assume other cause to be correct for a moment, in case of demolition of a construction, it is a kind of childish expectation to hope that some overt structure as it is would remain intact. There cannot be any presumption that the pillar

bases was remained intact along ancillary material. Whatever has been found that has to be seen in the context and not what is not found. All the things have to be seen carefully and nothing independently and in isolation. The pillar bases were detected by B.B.Lal also in 1976-77 when he made excavation on the western and southern side of the disputed site along with a wall structure. The Archaeologist said that the matter needs further investigation. It is thus further investigation which has infact fortified and explained the earlier structure also. The pillar bases in general were found during excavation in regular phases for columns constructed in a proper pattern with equal distance pattern in regular style. The calcrete stones were topped by sandstone blocks over which pillars must have rested. Brickbats were used in their foundation in the same manner as brick aggregates were used in foundation of walls. The brickbats course of the foundation rested under the ground. The question of falling apart of the brickbat foundation could not have arisen. The calcrete blocks topped by the sandstone blocks is capable of supporting pillar bearings, the load of the roof. Even if there is some minor variation in the measurement of the pillar bases that would not invite the approach of total rejection of something which is otherwise apparent from the existence of the above pillar bases. There may be a reason for having variation in the measurement of the pillar bases that the actual centre of the pillar bases could not have been pointed out since the top sandstone blocks are missing from most of them. Figure 3A in any case has been confirmed to be correct by most of the Experts (Archaeologist) of plaintiffs (Suit-4).

3918. In general, therefore, we do not find any substance

in the objections relating to pillar bases and the same is hereby rejected.

3919. The next objection is with regard to the Walls and Floors. This has been complained by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) under the title "Archaeological Evidence of Massive Structure" Para 4.1 to 4.14 in the objections dated 28.10.2003. It says:

> "4. ARCHAEOLOGICAL EVIDENCE OF "MASSIVE STRUCTURE":-
> 4.1 That the theory of a so called "massive structure" below "Babri Masjid" (P. 54), given by the A.S.I., is based mainly upon nearly 50m long wall (wall 16) in the west and the dumps of brick bats which it claims to be "pillar bases", to its east. According to the A.S.I. they found 17 rows of the so called pillar bases from North to South; each row having 5 pillar bases while actually they have referred to 50 only, out of which only 12 were said to be completely exposed, 35 were said to be partially exposed and 3 could be traced in section only. The A.S.I. also asserts that the central part of the pillared structure was important and special treatment was given to its architectural planning. The A.S.I. also claims that the so-called pillar bases found in these excavations have settled the controversy regarding association of these so-called pillar bases with different layers and load bearing capacity while the report fails to give any details about the actual regular layers and accurate depth of all these so called pillar bases. The remarks of the A.S.I about the central part of the pillared structure also seem to be without any evidence. On what basis the A.S.I. is saying that this part was important and

www.vadaprativada.com

special treatment was given to it in architectural planning, is also not evident from the report.

4.2. That the A.S.I. failed to take into account that any medieval temple in classical style would be expected to have a Central portion with thick internal walls to support a high superstructure like a Shikhara, while the Key Plan of Structures shows, in H1, two lengths of a narrow wall or two walls, each less than a metre long, with a gap of about 70 cm. Between them. No further information is given to convince us that there is an " exposed entrance" as stated on P. 69.

4.3. That the A.S.I. Report itself describes traces of inner walls having a width of 0.48 m to 0.55 m, attached with the earliest activities alongwith wall 16. These internal walls not only appear to be narrow and not more than two or three brick courses high, but also consisting of brickbats only. They are plastered over the sides and upper surface and it is difficult to infer that they were load bearing walls*:*

4.4. That regarding the said wall 16, an unexplained anomaly is that from the inner side its first phase of 10 courses is said to be plastered while on the exterior side plaster was provided in the second phase of its raising (four courses).

4.5. That no single example is offered by the A.S.I. of any temple of pre-Moghal times having such a lime–Surkhi floor, though one would think that this is an essential requirement when a purely Muslim structure is being appropriate as a Hindu one. Once this appropriation has occurred (page 41), we are then asked to imagine a "Massive Structure Below the Distputed Structure", the massive structure being a temple. It is supposed to have stood upon 50 pillars, and by fanciful drawings (Figures 23, 23A and 23B), it has been " reconstructed". [Though one may still feel that if was hardly "massive" when one compares Figure 23 (showing Babri Masjid before demolition) and Figure 23B (showing the reconstructed temple with 50 imaginary pillars!)] Now, according to the A.S.I.'s Report, this massive structure with "bases" of 46 of its alleged 50 pillars now exposed, was built in Period VII, the Period of the Delhi Sultans, Sharqi rulers and Lodi Sultans (1206-1526): This attribution of the alleged Grand Temple, to the "Muslim" period is not by choice, but because of the presence of "Muslim" style materials and techniques all through. This, given the distorted view of medieval Indian history, must have been a bitter pill for the A.S.I.'s, mentors to swallow; and, therefore, there has been all the more reason for them to imagine a still earlier structure assignable to an earlier time. Of this structure, however, only four alleged "pillar bases", with "foundations" attached to Floor 4, have been found; and it is astonishing that this should be sufficient to ascribe them 10th -11th century and to assume that they all belong to one structure. That structure is proclaimed as "huge", extending nearly 50 metres that separate the "pillar-bases" at the extremes. Four "pillar bases" can hardly have held such a long roof, and if any one tried it on them it is not surprising that the result was "short-loved" (Report, p.

269). All of this seems a regular part of the Mandir propagandist archaeology rather than a report from a body called the Archaeological Survey of India.

4.6. That the four alleged pillar bases dated to 11th -12th centuries are said "to belong to this level with a brick crush floor". This amounts to a totally unsubstantiated claim that surkhi was used in the region in Gahadavala times (11th - 12th centuries). No examples are predictably offered. One would have thought that Sravasti (Dist. Bahraich), from which the A.S.I. team has produced a linga-centred Shavite "circular shrine" of the said period for comparison with the so-called "circular shrine" at the Babri Masjid site, would be able to produce a single example of either surkhi or lime mortar from the Gahadavala-period structures at Sravasti. But such has not at all been the case. One can see now why it had been necessary to call this period (Period V) "Medieval-Sultanate" (p. 40) though it is actually claimed to be pre-Sultanate, being dated 11th - 12th century. By clubbing together the Gahadavalas with the Sultanate, the surkhi is sought to be explained away; but if so, the "huge" structure too must come to a time after 1206, for Delhi Sultanate was only established in that year. And so, to go by A.S.I.'s reasoning, the earlier allegedly "huge" temple too must have been built when the Sultans ruled!

4.7. That the way the A.S.I. has distorted evidence to suit its temple theory is shown by its treatment of the mihrab (arched recess) and taq (niche) found in the western wall, which it turns into features of its imagined temple. The absurdity of this is self evident and particularly so when the

inner walls of the niche are also found plastered, and the A.S.I. is able to produce no example of similar recess and niche from any temple.

4.8. That the structure denoted by wall 17 and a brick Crush floor in Period VI has not been allotted any number by the A.S.I. and the A.S.I.'s claims about the attribution of the walls and floors of " Periods VI and VII" to two successive temple structures can not be accepted. The A.S.I.'s report in this respect also is full of contradictions and other infirmities.

4.9. That the reason why would the western wall to be so massive (1.77 m) and the other walls so thin (0.48-0.55) is quite obvious. It should be noted that Wall 17 also was 1.86 m wide. Such wide western walls are a features of mosque construction and not of temples. Temple walls, in fact, are of uniform thickness. If, as the A.S.I. points out, the Babri Masjid used this Wall 16 as a foundation for its western wall, then this Wall 16 can only have been the foundation of the Babri Masjid itself. Moreover, no Hindu temple has a long continuously straight western wall-this is only a feature of the mosque in India. In the case of a temple, a plinth or raised platform would be required and the walls would be broken by offsets, providing a cruciform plan to the temple form. Moreover, the temple would have mandapas in front of the grabagriha (the sanctum santorum) and any at the side of the latter would be very small and insignificant in nature. According to Krishna Deva, "the main compartment of the temple are axially articulated." (See Temples of India by Krishna Dewa,

1995, Vol. I) In this case, as being suggested by the A.S.I., the central area now under the makeshift structure was the garbagriha and hence if so, the rest of the temple structure should have mainly projected towards the east, and not to such an extent to the north and south (as in Fig. 23A or 23B). The kind of structure as indicated in Fig. 23B indicates the pre-eminence of the western wall which can only be the case in a mosque.

4.10.That the foundation of the Babri Masjid has some decorated stone blocks along with plain sandstone and calcrete blocks and bricks. This is natural in the construction of a foundation where any available motley material would be used, as the foundation would not be visible. It has been pointed out by the A.S.I. (pp. 68, 269-70) that material, from the structure associated with Wall 17, was reused to make Wall 16. However, if this had been the case, decorated blocks would have been used for the upper portions of walls rather than in the foundation. To corroborate their statement of the reuse of decorated blocks, the A.S.I. gives the examples of the Dharmachakrajina Vihara of Kumaradevi of the 12th century A.D. at Sarnath. However, as can be seen in Plates 27-28, decorated blocks were used not for the foundations but in the enclosure wall of a vihara. Moreover, this structure was a vihara and cannot in any way be compared with a Hindu temple.

4.11. That it can also be pointed out here that Krishna Deva mentions (on P. 11) that a temple customarily has a vedibandha consisting of moulded courses. Even if the southern part of Wall 16 has not been excavated on its outer face to indicate the presence or absence of mouldings, we have the evidence of the outer face of Wall 16 in Trench ZE 1, to the north, where no mouldings are to be seen. This kind of a plain wall with nothing but niches on its inner face can only be a mosque/ Eidgah wall.

4.12. That On p. 68 are described two niches in the inner side of Wall 16 at an interval of 4.60 m I trenches E6 and E7. These were 0.20 m deep and 1 m wide. A similar niche was found in Trench ZE2 in the northern area and these have been attributed to the first phase of construction of the so called 'massive structure' associated with Wall 16. Such niches along the inner face of a western wall, are again characteristic of mosque/ Eidgah construction. Moreover, the inner walls of the niche are also plalstelred (as in Plate 49) which indicates that the plaster was meant to be visible. A temple niche (and if found, would be on the outer wall) would not be plastered if it were to hold a sculpture or a relief. In the first phase of construction, the supposed massive structure was confined to the thin wall found in Trenches ZE1-ZE1 in the north and E6-H5/H6 in the south (p. 41). How then does one explain the location of niches outside the floor area of the said massive structure ? This is typical of a mosque, which has a long, wide north-south wall, with niches at intervals on its inner face and there may be a small covered area in the center. Which would have narrow demarcating walls.

4.13. That according to the A.S.I. (p. 42), the massive structure in sub-period B collapsed and its debris of brick

and stone was levelled to attain height. " In this deposit, foundations to support pillars or columns were sunk which were overlaid with a 4-5 cm thick floor, which had a grid of square sandstone bases for pillars projecting out, only a few still survive."

If, as implied, the structure of sub-period B had collapsed and another floor constructed with another set of pillar bases, then these are not phases of construction of a structure but three separate structures. What is perhaps a more plausible explanation is that in the beginning of the 13th century, some Muslim structure was built with a well-polished lime surkhi floor. There was a low enclosure wall (0.40-0.50 m wide) demarcating the area from E6 to ZE! And extending east to the H series of trenches. Within this enclosure was probably a small central covered area of which the northern wall with a niche can be seen the Trench F2. This wall was narrower (0.35-40 m) thick. Probably this was wall structure only as can be seen by the narrow walls with no deep foundation. When this collapsed, the entire area was filled in with brickbats, stone slabs, calcrete blocks, brick nodules and mud to raise the level in order to construct the next lime-surkhi floor. This floor probably now functioned as an Eidgah or so as no structural activity has been observed in association. When this floor was degraded, another floor was raised, both floors being of poor quality.

4.14. That wall recesses or niches are observed in the mosque/ Eidgah structure in a highter stratum also (P. 53) but the report fails to discuss about the same.

3920. PW-29 (Jaya Menon) however in para 11 and 12 of affidavit on this aspect has said:

A. That the Period VI structure according to the ASI consisted of a 50 metre long wall and a brick crush floor, and had 4 (so called) pillar bases associated with it. However, nowhere are any specific (so called) pillar bases associated with the brick crush layer.

B. That the brick crush layer was not a floor but a levelling mechanism to level the area for the building of subsequent structures. This is because the brick crush layer can be seen to be of varying thickness in different trenches.

C. That Structure 4 to the ASI essentially seems to consist of a massive western wall and (so called) pillar bases and has been considered to have been a (so called) temple. The important point is why should the western wall have been so massive (1.77 metre) and the other walls so thin (0.48-0.55 metre)? Such wide western walls are a feature of mosque construction and not of temple construction. Temple walls, in fact, are of uniform thickness.

D. That the western wall of the Babri Masjid had a slight tilt towards the east which is a feature of the western wall of the mosques in India because of the direction of Mecca. If, as the ASI points out, the Babri Masjid used Wall 16 as a foundation for its western wall, then this Wall 16 could only have been the foundation of the Babri Masjid itself as it shows the same tilt. It should be noted that Wall 17, supposedly associated with the Period VI structure, also had this tilt and was 1.86 metre wide. Also, if Wall 16

and 17 were temple walls, why should they have had the same tilt towards the east?

E. That no Hindu temple has a log continuously straight western wall-this is only a feature of the mosque in India. In the case of temple, a plinth or raised platform would be required and the walls would be broken by offsets, providing a cruciform plan to the temple form. Moreover, the temple would have a linear alignment with mandapas in front of the garbagriha (the sanctum sanctorum) and any at the side of the latte would be very small and insignificant in nature. In this case, as being pointed out by the ASI, the central area now under the makeshift structure was the alleged garbgriha and hence if so, the rest of the temple structure should have mainly projected towards the east, and not to such an extent to the north south. The king of structure as indicated in Fig. 23B of the Final Report indicates the pre-eminence of the western wall which can only be the case in a Eidgah mosque.

F. That the foundation of the Babri Masjid has decorated stone blocks along with plain sandstone and calcrete blocks and bricks. This is natural in the construction of a foundation where any available motley material would be used, as the foundation would not be visible. It has been pointed out by the ASI (pages 68, 269-270) that material, from the structure associated with Wall 17, was reused to make Wall 16. However, if this had been the case, decorated blocks would have been used for the upper portions of alleged temple walls rather than in the foundation.

G. That temple walls customarily have mouldings on the outer face. The outer face of Wall 16 in Trench ZE1, to the north, is available to view where no mouldings are to be seen this kind of a plain wall with nothing but niches on its inner face can only be an Eidgah or mosque wall. On page 68 of the Final Report are described two niches in the inner side of Wall 16 at an interval of 4.60 metre in trenches E6 and E7. These were 0.20 metre deep and 1 metre wide. A similar niche was found in Trench ZE2 in the northern area and these have been attributed to the first phase of construction of 'massive structure' associated with Wall 16. (Such niches, along the inner face of a western wall, are again characteristic of Eidgah or mosque construction.) Moreover, the inner walls of the niche are also plastered (as in Plate 49) which indicates that plaster was meant to be visible.

H. That two Mughal coins were found in Trench K5 in layer 3 "below (sic) the brick pavement" and from layer 3 in Trench L7. According to the ASI, the brick pavement extended east from Trenches J4, J5 and J6 upto the junction of the K and L series of trenches. The pavement has been accorded great ritual significance by the ASI and has been dated to Period VII, i.e. Medieval/Medieval-Sultanate (end of 12th century to beginning of 16th century AD/ before AD 1526). (Final Report pages 41-42). However, if the brick pavement is pre-Mughal, it is impossible for later period (Mughal) coins to be found in a stratified context under it. Thus, clearly, the brick pavement cannot be of pre-Mughal date.

I. That the ASI's sections in Figures 5 and 19 of the Final Report make no mention of "the massive structure" (their so called temple) and only to "the disputed structure" (the Babri Masjid), which means the hypothesis of a temple was added at a later stage of the writing of the Report."

3921. Sri D.Mandal PW-24 has mainly confined his objection with regard to stratification. Sri Suraj Bhan -PW16 has made a general statement against the conclusion of ASI that underneath the disputed building there was a temple structure. PW 30 R.C.Thakran and 31 have not said anything about various walls excavated by ASI.

3922. The excavation of 28 walls by ASI virtually has been admitted by the experts of plaintiffs (Suit-4) i.e. PW-16 at pages 153, 199, PW 29 at Pages 146, 147, 158, 159, 163, 164 and 181. PW-32 Dr. Supriya Varma very categorically on page 137 has said:

"from walls 16 to 28 except wall 18D are the walls underneath the disputed structure."

''मैं यह मानता हूँ कि जहां–जहां जी0पी0आर0 तकनीक के द्वारा एनामलीज की तरफ इशारा है, वहां – वहां कुछ ठोस सब्सटान्स या वस्तु प्राप्त हुई हैं।'' (पेज 190)

"I hold that wherever anomalies have been alluded to through the G.P.R. technique, some solid substances or objects have been discovered." (E.T.C.)

3924. The ASI has discussed the walls and Floors as under:

"Excavations in trenches D6, E6, F6, D7, E7 and F7

www.vadaprativada.com

brought to light the remains of foundation wall and floors of the southern square chamber (Pl. 21, Fig. 4) of the disputes structure (structure 3) which internally measured 6.14 m in north-south and 6.10 m in east-west direction with its western wall (wall 5) measuring 3.0 m wide having five courses of calcrete blocks with occasional use of sand stone blocks as veneers filled in the core with brick-bats. There is a recess of 0.75 m depth and 2.10 m in length in the wall 5 in the inner side. Two decorated sand store blocks from an earlier structure, one having the damaged figure of a possible foliated makara-pra āla were found reused in the foundation of wall 5 on its outer face (Pls. 22-23). The wall 5 of the structure 3 was found resting directly (Pl. 24, Fig. 5) over an earlier plastered brick wall (wall 16) having a foundation of five to six courses of calcrete and sand stone blocks. Some of them reused from yet another earlier structure as they are decorated ones with foliage (Pls. 25-26) and other decorations. Similar nature of wide brick walls with plain and decorated stone members of earlier structures reused in their foundations (Pls. 27-28) have been noticed at the Dharmachakrajina Vihara of Kumāradevī, queen of Gahadwal ruler Govindachandra of the twelfth century A.D. at Sarnath exposed after excavation conducted in 1907 and 1908. The wall 16 has externally as well as internally plastered surface (Pl. 29) below the level of the twin floors of structure 3.

The southern foundation wall (wall 6) of structure 3 directly rests over two pillar bases of earlier period (PB 34 and PB 35) below its middle and south-eastern corner (Pl. 30). It has three courses of calcrete blocks and a width of 1.55 m with 0.15 m off-set and the length in east-west direction of 10.70 m out of which 4.0 m in south-west is disturbed and damaged. It takes a turn from south-eastern corner towards north forming wall 7 of the front side (eastern side) of the southern chamber of the structure 3. The wall 7 of structure 3 in front of its southern chamber rests over three pillar bases of the earlier period (PB 29, PB 32 and PB 35) which were attached through floor 2 of it to the wall 16 (Fig. 6). The width of wall 7 is 1.54 m and there was an entrance to the southern chamber in the middle of the wall having a gap of 2.65 m. There was a northern wall or wall 8 of the southern chamber of structure 3 measuring no less than 8.53 m in length and whose width could not be determined due to debris on the raised platform. Through wall 8 there was an entrance to the central chamber of the structure 3.

Due to close proximity of the Ram Lala on the raised platform, the central chamber could not be exposed fully, but only a small cutting of 3 x 2 m in between trenches F4 and F5 was made to collect more evidence and to verify the anomalies mentioned in the GPR Survey report and the floor of the central chamber was found besides earlier floors. In an area of 2.50 x 2.50 m in F3 also the same floors were encountered with parts of the inner faces of the southern wall (wall 10) and eastern wall (wall 11) of the northern chamber of the structure 3 (Pl. 31). Ten extant courses of calcrete blocks of wall 10 and eight courses of wall 11 were noticed with three such courses in the foundation.

Parts of the western, eastern and northern walls (walls 5, 11 and 12 consecutively) of the northern chamber of structure 3 were found in trenches E2, F2 and G2. Wall 5 at the north western corner seems to be 2.40 m in width made of reused bricks and brick-bats having two courses of calcrete and sand stone blocks in its foundation. This part is raised over the earlier brick wall (wall 16). Three courses of calcrete blocks were found in the foundation of the eastern wall (wall 11) of the northern chamber with its extended lime floor over it in the courtyard and floors 1 and 1A in the inner side with decorative coloured cemented surface painted with black and buff coloured arched rectangles pointing towards west, a feature of the mosque (Pl. 32). The width of wall 11 is 1.60 m and its two courses of calcrete blocks plastered from inside were found in trench F2. While laying the foundation of the wall, the pillar base 23 was cut as noticed in the baulk between F2 and G2.

The northern wall (wall 12) of the structure 3 has four courses of calcrete blocks in its foundation with one course of bricks above the last courses of foundation blocks. The wall over the foundation was plastered with 4 cm thick lime plaster. Width of the wall is 1.70 m and there is a recess in the middle of the wall, 0.70 m deep and 2.50 m in length. The total length of wall 12 is 8.38 m (Fig. 7) which in trench F2 rests just over the pillars base 22.

As mentioned earlier, remains of an outer wall was found in the section facing north in between trenches E10 and E11. Exact nature of the wall could not be studied, but it seems to be the wall enclosing the outer pathway which led to the back of the structure 3. In the western side the damaged wall (wall 14) was traced partly in trenches D6, D7 and D8 attached with a lime floor pathway. On the northern side similar wall (wall 15) running in east-west direction as noticed in the section facing south in the baulk between ZF1 and ZF2. The C14 date from the contemporary deposit of the foundation of the disputed structure is 450±110 BP (1500 ± 110 A.D.) which is quite consistant as determined from the charcoal sample from trench G6.

The Massive Structure Below the Disputed Structure

As stated earlier the disputed structure or structure 3 was found directly resting over an earlier construction, structure 4 (Pls. 33-34) which has survived through its nearly 50 m long wall (wall 16) in the west and 50 exposed pillar bases to its east attached with floor 2 or the floor of the last phase of structure 4 (Pl. 35).

A square sandstone block placed at the top and the orthostats provided on its four sides, contemporary with the floor 2 was the prima facie nature of the pillar base which primarily served as base for the pillar erected over it. Their foundations were circular or square or irregular in shapes made of brick-bat courses laid in mud mortar, most of them resting over floor 4, top of which was provided with sand-stone or calcrete blocks in lime mortar, these blocks were also encased with brick-bats and somewhere sandstone

chips were used to get the desired height and level." (Page 51-54)

"The wall 16 having its existing length around 50 m, with its unexposed middle part, is 1.77 m wide. Its ten lower brick courses are original and belongs to the first phase of its construction, but the upper six courses as seen in trenches E6, E7 and E8 are added at a later date- four courses during the second phase of construction and top two courses when its southern length outside the disputed structure was utilized in later constructions by reducing the width of the wall for the new structure along with the structure 3. It is also noticed that the first phase of wall 16 has been plastered in the inner side with lime plaster while on the outer side the plaster was provided in the second phase of its raising. There are a few square cavities at intervals on both the faces of the wall in the second phase which might have been used for providing reinforcement to the wall. At an interval of 4.60 m in the inner side of the wall 16 in its first phase of construction two recessed niches were found 0.20 m deep and 1.0 m wide along the face of the wall and 0.78 m wide at its deeper side with 0.02 m thick lime plaster in trenches E6 and E7. The niche in E6 was exposed while the niche in E7 was found attached with the E7-E8 baulk. A similar niche was found in ZE2 in the northern area with same dimensions (Pl. 49). All of these three niches were closed during the second phase of construction when the floor level was raised and wall was raised above the ten original courses. A band of decorative bricks was perhaps provided in the first phase of construction or in the preceding wall (wall 17) of which scattered decorated bricks with floral pattern were found reused in the wall 16. Walls 16 and 17 were found running on almost the same alignment in north-south orientation in trenches ZE1 and ZF1 (Fig. 14). Measurements of bricks of bricks of wall 16 comprise 22x14x5, 24x16x5.5, 26x17x5.5, 29x19x6 and 28x14x5 cm. Due to restrictions in an area of about 15x15 m comprising trenches D3 to F3, D4 to F4 and D5 to F5 forming the central part of raised platform, the precise arrangement of the central part of the construction below the level of the disputed structure and also the elevation of the super structure of the former construction cannot be ascertained. A layout plan of trenches showing index of various sections can be seen at a glance in Fig. 15.

The wall 17 which is a brick wall was found to be 1.86 m wide having the maximum of four courses in the northern area (Pl. 50) and six courses in southern area. It was found to be of the same length as that of wall 16, through having a slight deviation in its orientation in the cardinal direction. Thus, it runs in the lower level than that of wall 16, almost parallel to it in the northern area and comes out below the wall 16 in the southern area as noticed in trench D7 where in the northern part it is projected 0.74 m below wall 16 and in the southern part it is projected 1.07 m below wall 16 having provided decorated stone blocks on its top and also refixed in its veneer (Pl. 51), probably at the time of the construction of wall 16 to serve as its foundation. A thick floor of brick crush (Pl. 52) spread over a large area in northern and southern areas with varying thickness was found associated with wall 17. The floor was cut for foundation trench of wall 16 with which were associated three lime floors raising the ground levels in three different phases described earlier in chapter III. Amongst the three lime floors associated with this wall 16, the lowest was found in a limited area within the inner walls 18A, 18B and 18C. The upper two floors (Pls. 53-54, Fig 16) were found spread in the area along wall 16 and show signs of repair patch works (Pl. 41). Thus the evidence of three phases of the structure 4 suggests its long span of existence. The available C14 dates from the deposit between floors 2 and 3 in the trench ZH1 is 1040±70B.P (910±70 A.D.) having the calibrated age range of A.D. 900-1030. The early date may be because of the filling for leveling the ground after digging the earth from the previous deposit in the vicinity. A pavement no less than 29.25 x 6 m of large square bricks in the eastern area as described in chapter III is associated with the period.

Attached with the earliest activities along with wall 16 are traces of inner walls having a width of 0.48 m to 0.55 m having one exposed entrance to the east found in trench H1. The inner walls are attached with the wall 16 in the northern as well as southern areas. In northern area the inner wall (Pl. 55) or wall 18A runs to a length of about 15.0 m in east-west direction and takes a turn to south in trench ZH1 (Fig.8). It was traced upto a length of 6.0 m (wall 18B) after which due to the existence of the

barricaded gangway it was not possible to dig further. The two parallel running walls 18C and 18D were traced in trenches E6-F6, G6 and in E7 respectively. Traces of a retaining brick wall (wall 19) with eroded outer face were noticed in trenches ZE2, ZD2, C1 and C2.

Just below the levels attached with wall 16 and possibly associated with wall 17 are remains of brick structures located in parts of trenches ZH1 (P1. 56), G2, F3, G5, J5 (Pl. 57) and F8 in the forms of walls, platforms and brick foundations (structures 6 to 11 respectively). A structure of calcrete blocks with calcrete block flooring was found in trench G5 (structure 9). The exact nature and plan of these structures could not be studied due to existence of structures and floors of later phase resting above their levels. Some skeletons lid in north-south orientation with their faces turned towards west, which are apparently in Muslim graves excavated through the top floor and sealed by layer 1 were found in northern (Pl. 58) and southern areas." (Page 67 - 70)

"The wall 19A rests over a still earlier wall (wall 20) which is 0.62 m wide having damaged with which seems to be attached a brick floor to its north. The end of another wall (wall 21) attached with the section facing south in trench F8 was found whose length was traced upto 1.39 m where it goes in the section facing west. The minimum distance of this wall from the structure 5 at the corners of the walls is 0.51 m. Still another wall (wall 22) of six courses of bricks running to a length of 5.43 m in east-west direction and its western part going below the foundation of wall 16 (Pl. 62 was exposed along the section facing north with a passage, 0.55 m wide, between it and wall 19A (Pl. 63) seems to be an earlier wall than the structure 5. Parts of two more brick walls (walls 23 and 24) attached with sections facing east and west respectively in trench G7 belong to the same level. Although their width could not be confirmed as they were attached with the sections, the wall 23 was found to be a brick wall of six courses having broken length of 1.60 m. The wall 24 was noticed having only two extant courses, the corner of which was found attached with section facing west which is 0.75 m projected from the section.

Layer 5A has contemporary deposit of structure 5 below which lie walls 19A and 20 respectively datable to post-Gupta and Gupta periods. The layer below their working level is layer 7 from which the charcoal sample from trench E8 has been dated to 1810± 80 B.P.(or 140 ±80 B.C.) on C14 determination of which the calibrated age range is A.D. 90-340.

Two more walls noticed in J6 belong to the Gupta periods. The wall 25 (Figs. 19-20) runs in east-west direction having only four extant courses of brick-bats, the dimensions of which could not be seen as it was attached with the section. Same is the case of another earlier wall, wall 26 which also runs in east-west direction and which is made of 17 courses of broken bricks. 52 cm below the course of wall 26 was noticed wall 27 (Pl. 64) which seems to be a wall of the Kushan period having 22 courses of bricks of the size 38 to 41 to 43x25 to 27x5 to 7 cm running in north-south direction. The length of the wall in the trench is 3.90 m though it runs further on either sides. Attached with this wall was a floor like level having huge calcrete blocks (Fig. 21) which at one place had three such blocks resting one over the other. This construction also seems to be a large one and not an ordinary house complex. Working levels of Kushan period were noticed in the trench J3 (Pls. 65-66).

Structural activity of Sunga period is represented by a calcrete stone wall (wall 28) in the trench J3. It was not found in the two excavated trenches in the respective levels (Fig. 22) during NBPW period but can be inferred from the presence of brick-bats from both the Sunga and NBPW periods and reed impressions (Pl.68) from NBPW levels on burnt clay, the latter suggesting constructions of hut like structure of wattle and daub. Pictorial views of upper levels of excavated trenches showing conjectural representation of the disputed structure and deposit below it. Figs. 23-24 give a fair idea of the succession of structural activity at the site." (Page 71-72)

3925. Let us examine the manner of recovery of the walls and the inference which may be drawn.

3926. During excavations, in all 28 walls were traced as shown in Fig. 3A out of which wall no. 1 to 15 are either cotemporary to the disputed structure or belong to disputed structure. Walls no. 16 to 28 are earlier to the disputed structure and were found underneath the disputed structure. The details of the walls found in excavation and their relative position, with reference to the report, are as under:-

www.vadaprativada.com

Wall No 3 & 4	=	of 1856 (p.49 of the report)
Wall No 5	=	(3 m. wide & 6.10 m. in east-west direction is the foundation wall of the southern chamber of mosque towards west side and its north-south direction as foundation of southern chamber is seen in p.21) (p.51 & 52 of the report). Two decorated sand stone block from an earlier structure one having the damaged figure of the possible foliated maker-pranala were found resued in the foundation of Wall 5 on its outer face (pls. 22-23, page 52 of the report)
Wall No 6	=	It is a north-south direction wall which was a foundation wall of southern chamber or str. 3 (p.52 of the report)
Wall No 7	=	It is the extension of wall 6 in the eastern side, therefore it is also a foundation wall of the southern chamber of the mosque towards east (p.52 of the report)
Wall No 8	=	It is the northern wall of the southern chamber of the mosque.
Wall No 9	=	(8 m, in east-west direction) is the southern enclosure wall of the disputed structure (after 1526 A.D.) (p. 49 of the report)
Wall No 10	=	Southern wall of the northern chamber of the mosque (p.53 of the report)

Wall No 11	=	Eastern wall of the northern chamber of the mosque (p. 53 of the report)
Wall No 12	=	Northern wall of the northern chamber of the mosque (p.53 of the report)
Wall No 13	=	(is also like wall no. 9) i.e. wall of 1526 or after 1526 (p.49 of the report)
Wall No 14	=	South-north direction wall, present west of southern chamber (fir. 3-A) p.54 of the report.
Wall No 15	=	As wall no. 14 are present in west, like that wall no. 15 is present on northern chamber running east-west direction contemporary to mosque (1500±110 A.D.) (p.54 of the report)
Wall No 16	=	Wall no. 5 is the wall of the mosque which is directly resting over 50m. long wall no. 16 running in north-south direction (p. 52 of the report)and further projects towards north and south beyond the excavated area.
Wall No 16	=	(1) Wall no. 16 is attached with floor no. 2 (page 52 of the report) belong to period VII-A i.e. end of the 12th century A.D. (page 52 & 54 of the report) and 50 pillar bases to the east of wall no. 16 is attached with floor 2 (page 54 of the report)

Wall no. 16, Floor No. 2 and 50 pillar bases were contemporary and belong to period VII-A i.e. end of the 12th

www.vadaprativada.com

Century A.D.

Wall No. 16 has 16 course of brick constructions relating to three phases (page 67 of the report)

(1) Its 10 lower brick courses are original and belong to its first phase of construction (page no. 67 & plate 52 of the report)

(2) But the upper 6 courses are of second phase of construction, out of which 4 courses are of 2nd phase and top 2 courses are of letter construction (page 67 of the report)

(3) The lower phase i.e. 6 courses of wall no. 16 has been plastered in the inner side only i.e. towards east by lime while upper 4 courses of wall no. 16 has been plastered by both inner & outer side i.e. both in the east & in the west (page 67 of the report)

(4) At interval of 4.60 meter in the inner side of wall no. 16 two inches were found in the lower phase of its construction towards east (page 68 of the report)

Wall No 17 = Wall no. 17 is of the same length as that of wall no. 16 (50 m) in north-south direction below wall no. 16 though having a slight deviation in its orientation in north-east direction (p. 68 of the report). When wall 17 was not in use, it served as a foundation of wall 16 (page 64 of the report)

(1) It is a 1.86 meter wide wall (plate 50)

(2) It function as a foundation wall for wall no. 16 having decorated stone blocks on its top and also re-

fixed in its veneer (surface covering) (page 51 & page 68 of the report)

(3) Since wall no. 17 in the foundation of wall no. 16 (period VII-A) therefore it belong to period VI (1100-1200 A.D.)

Wall No 18-A = In northern position, this wall is in north-south direction, attached with the same floor of wall no. 16 (p. 69 of the report)

Wall No 18-B = In northern portion this wall is 15 m. long in east-west direction and perpendicular to wall No. 16 like wall No. 18-A (pl.55) (p. 69 of the report)

Wall No 18-C = In southern portion this wall is in east-west direction and attached with westerly wall No. 16 like wall No. 18A & B this wall also runs perpendicular to wall No. 16.

Wall No 18-D = This wall is parallel to wall No. 18-C is southern portion (p. 69 of the report)

Wall No 19-A = In east west direction outside circular shrine.

Wall No 19-B = In south-north direction outside circular shrine.

Wall No 19-B = is sealed by layer 5A, which is contemporary layer of structure 5 or circular shrine (p. 70 of the report) of the report) therefore, wall no. 20 is earlier than wall no. 19-A (p.71) A brick floor in north is attached with wall No. 20

Wall No 20 = Wall No. 19-A rests over wall no. 20 in east-west direction (Gupta period p. 72

www.vadaprativada.com

Wall No 21 = 1.39 meters east-west direction wall towards north side of the circular shrine.

Wall No 22 = 5.43 meters long wall running east west direction south to circular shrine, and entered below the foundation of wall no. 16 in west (p. 71 of the report) This shows that wall no. 22 is earlier than wall no. 16.

Wall No 23 = Running south –north having broken length of 1.60 m (p. 72 of the report)

Wall No 24 = Present in sections, therefore, direction is not traceable (p. 72 of the report)

Wall No 25 = Run east-west direction of Gupta Period (p.72 of the report) in east of disputed structure (J-6)

Wall No 26 = It is an earlier wall to wall no. 25, in east-west direction in east of the disputed structure (J-6)

Wall No 27 = 52 cm below the course of wall No. 26, a wall No. 27 is present running north-south direction of Kushan Period. (page 72 of the report) Huge calcrete block is attached. with wall no. 27 of Kushan Period (p. 72 of the report)

Wall No 28 = Calcrete stone wall in J-3 of Sunga

Period (east of disputed structure).

3927. As the main wall of the disputed structure i.e. wall No. 5 was filled with brick bats, it implies that it was constructed with reused material. These brick bats prima facie establish that they must be of the previous structure. Structurally the date of the designing of pillar bases has also been confirmed with example of Sarnath in which decorated octagonal stone blocks were found in Trench F-7 belonging to 12th century A.D. (page 56 & pl. 39 & 40 of the report). Plate 45 shows disputed structure resting over pillar base No. 29. Wall No. 6 (foundation wall of southern chamber of mosque) was directly resting over two pillar bases no. 34 & 35 (Pl. 30). Wall No. 7 (foundation of southern chambers of mosque towards east) is resting over 3 pillar bases (No. 29, 32 & 35) (P. 52) read with Fig. 6. Wall No. 12 (Northern wall of Northern Chamber of the Mosque) rests just over the pillar base No. 22 (P. 53).

3928. The statements of Experts (Archaeologist) of plaintiffs (Suit-4) in respect to walls and floors have already been referred in brief saying that there is no substantial objection except that the opinion ought to be this or that, but that is also with the caution that it can be dealt with in this way or that both and not in a certain way. In other words on this aspect witnesses are shaky and uncertain. We, therefore find no substantial reason to doubt the report of ASI in this respect.

3929. The next serious objection is about "Circular Shrine" which has been detailed in para 6 (6.1 to 6.10) as under:

> 6. THE ALLEGED "CIRCULAR SHRINE":-
> 6.1. That the sub-heading given to the discovery of a structure of burnt bricks as "The Circular Shrine" at page 70 is indicative of the mindset with which the A.S.I. team

did the excavation work. The A.S.I. team should have just said "The circular structure" because there is no evidence to make this structure a shrine. Just by comparing it with certain temple structures and not with circular walls and buildings of Muslim construction one can not come to the conclusion that the circular structure was a Hindu shrine. No object of Hindu worship was found on this layer. The story of "pranala" is also a sheer figment of imagination and a conjecture without any evidentiary basis. The comparison at page 71 is irrelevant and also unrealistic. The layer on which this circular structure was discovered did not throw up any material to justify the naming of this circular structure as a shrine. The surviving wall, even in A.S.I.'s own drawing, makes only a quarter of circle and such shapes are fairly popular in walls of Muslim construction. And then there are Muslim built domed circular building also.

6.2. That the scale of the Plan (as given in Figure 17 of the Report), would have an internal diameter of just 160 cms. or barely 5 ½ feet. Such a small "shrine" can hardly be worth writing home about. But it is, in fact, much smaller. The plan in Fig. 17 shows not a circle (as one would have if the wall shown in Plates 59 and 60 are continued) but an ellipse, which it has to be in order to enclose the entire masonry floor. No "elliptic (Hindu) shrine" is, however produced by A.S.I. for comparison: the few that are show are all circular. As Plate 59 makes clear the drawing in Fig. 17 ignores a course of bricks which juts out to suggest a true circle, much shorter than the elliptic

one: this would reduce the internal diameter to even less than 130 cms. or just 4.3 feet ! Finally, as admitted by the A.S.I. itself, nothing has been found in the structure in the way of image or sacred piece that can justify it being called a "shrine".

6.3. That "the southern part of the said structure was found resting over a 0.75 m wide brick wall (Wall 19A) of 9 courses belonging to earlier period which runs in east-west direction and joins the end of the north-south oriented brick wall (Wall 19B) having 7 extant courses of bricks and a width of 0.55 m, making the south-western corner of the earlier structure."

"The Wall 19A rests over a still earlier wall (Wall 20) which is 0.62 m wide".

Another wall (Wall 21) is about 0.51 m away from Structure 5 and northeast of it.

Wall 19A and Wall 20 are considered to belong to the Post Gupta (Period V) and Gupta (Period IV) periods respectively. It appears from their description and from Plate 59 that the 'circular shrine' was built over existing walls without removing the walls. These earlier walls were of the preceding period as well as the same period. These earlier walls could not have been used as the foundation for the structure as they are of completely different dimensions and shape.

6.4. That the size of Structure of 5 has an outer diameter of 1.6 m and measures 0.6 m in the inner area. The entrance is 0.5 m wide and length of the 'passage', from the entrance to the inner area, is 0.4 m. Comparisons are being made with circular brick temples at Sravasti, Kurari, Masaon, Tinduli and Chandrehe (p. 71, Fig. 18). The outer diameter of these structures range from 6.1 m (Masaon), 5.8 (Chandrehe and Chirenath), 5.5 m (Tinduli), 4.9 m (Kurari I) and 3.6 m (Kurari II) (See Fig.18). The inner area of Kurari II, the nearest in size to the Ayodhya structure is 1.4 m, Kurari I is about 1.8 m and Chirenath is 2 m. The entrance measurements are 0.9 m for Kurari II and 0.7 m for Kurari I. The length of passage is 0.6 m for Kurari II and 1.5 m for Kurari I.

6.5. That all the circular shrines have a mandapa except for the Kurari temples. Kurari I is also on a plinth with steps on the east. The closest in size to Structure 5, Kurari II, is more than double the former structure. The inner area of Structure 5 is too small to even allow anyone to enter it. Where is the possibility, then, of performing any kind of abhisekha?

Out of all the temples illustrated in Fig. 18, four have the entrance from the west, one from the north and one from the east. Thus, it seems that the comparison between Structure 5 and these shrines is being stretched too far. Structure 5 has been dated to the 10th century AD. However, as will be evident from the Report, the layers associated with this structure have mixed material, preventing any chronological determination of the structure.

6.6. That if, as pointed out by the A.S.I., subsequent structural activity (in Period VI) damaged the circular shrine, it is surprising that a later so called temple would destroy an earlier Hindu religious structure. Moreover, a later temple could easily have incorporated an earlier temple into its plan and maintained the sanctity of the earlier structure. Instead, what is being suggested is that the central part of the later temple is much further away to the north, about 20 m away. Thus, it seems highly unlikely that this structure was a Hindu religious shrine.

6.7. That Structure 5 could well have been a stupa, belonging to perhaps the 6th or 7th century AD. Figure 24 giving a bird's eye view of the structure, shows a slight difference in diameter between the first few lower courses of bricks and the courses above them. This difference recalls the two parts of the stupa, the medhi (or the drum) and the anda (or the higher rounded portion of the stupa). The 'opening' towards the east could well have been a niche for a Buddha figure. One of the reasons for consisting this structure as a stupa is that it is too small to enter, which one would not have to do in the case of a Buddist stupa. These religious structures symbolizing the Buddha are meant to be walked around and not entered.

6.8. That According to the Table placed after Page 37 (A.S.I. Report) this period V is represented by layers 6 and 5. Layer 6 is a flood deposit and layer 5 belongs to Gupta period. So the formulation of Period V assigned to Post Gupta – Rajput times is arbitrary. Thus whatever structures are said to have belonged to Period V, in fact, they belong to Period IV (Gupta Period).

6.9. That the Text says that layer 5 A is a contemporary layer of the shrine (structure 5) "below which lie walls 19A

and 20.....The layer below their working level is layer 7....."(page 72 of A.S.I. Report). There is existence of only one layer between layers 5A and 7, the layer 6 (A.S.I. Section, F8, Fig 16). Layer 7 has been dated to 140-80 BC on 14c determination. The calibrated date reads AD 90 – 340 (Page 72 A.S.I. Report). The range of calibrated date is extremely wide. However, on its maximum range it reads about 4th C. A.D. While layer 7 is dated to 4th century A.D. and layer 5A is being said to be contemporary to the Shrine which has been dated to 10th century A.D. The shrine on stylistic grounds has been dated to 10th century A.D. (Page 71, A.S.I. Report). The concerned two layers (i.e. 5A and 7) is intervened by only one layer. That is layer 6. Could this lone layer represent a temporal duration of about six centuries? It is ridiculous and fantastic. It is simply not possible. Thus the dating of the shrine to about 10th Century A.D. is arbitrary. The structure 5, whatever it may by either a simple structure or a Buddha circular Stupa, in view of the radiocorban data seems to have belonged to slightly later than circa 4th Century A.D. That is Gupta Period.

6.10. That there is yet another important feature of the so called Shrine that needs comment. It is about it's suggested water channel. Stylistically, its northward orientation has been marked to have some special significance.*

The channel does not have a uniform width throughout. It does not have even a gradually decreasing width from south to north. It becomes suddenly very narrow at nearing its end. Thus it appears that it was not made for the purpose it has been suggested. It seems to have taken the existing form by the removal of mortar during excavation as was filled therein.

It did not function for draining water from south to north is evident by the fact that there is no evidence of slope towards the direction in question. It has been measured by the levelling instrument at three different points of the channel. It was found that there is no slope on its surface.

Further, had the so-called channel been in use for draining water for a longtime, then there should have been the remains of water residuals in the channel. Such evidence could be expected on the northern side of the circular wall corresponding along to the area of water discharge. But there is no such evidence either in the channel or on the surface of the wall in question.

3930. ASI has recorded its finding on 'Circular Shrine' from page 70 to 71 as under:

"A partly damaged east facing brick shrine, structure 5 (Pls. 59-60, Fig. 17, 24 and 24A) was noticed after removal of baulk between trenches E8 and F8. It is a circular structure with a rectangular projection in the east, the latter having been already visible before the removal of the baulk. The northern part of the circular part has retained its lower eight courses above the foundation of brick-bats while the southern half is damaged by constructional activity of the subsequent phase whose brick-bats have damaged the structure upto its working level. The structure was squarish from the inner side and a 0.04 m wide and

0.53 m long chute or outlet was noticed on plan made through the northern wall upto the end where in the lower course a 5.0 cm thick brick cut in 'V' shape was fixed which was found broken and which projects 3.5 cm outside the circular outer face as a pranala to drain out the water, obviously after the abhisheka of the deity, which is not present in the shrine now. The entrance of the structure is from east in the form of a rectangular projection having a twelve course of bricks interlocked with the circular structure and having a 70x27x17 cm calcrete block fixed in it as the threshold. Two sizes of bricks were used in the construction of the shrine measuring 28x21x5.5 cm and 22x18x5 cm. The rectangular projection of entrance is 1.32m in length and 32.5 cm projected towards east. The southern part of the structure was found resting over a 0.75 m wide brick wall (wall 19A) of nine courses belonging to earlier period which runs in east-west direction and joins the end of the north-south oriented brick wall (wall 19B) having 7 extant courses of bricks and a width of 0.55 m, making the south-western corner of the earlier structure. The north-south length of wall 19B was exposed upto a length of 2.72 m when it joins section facing south in the trench E8. It is sealed by layer 5A which is contemporary layer of the structure 5.

The brick shrine is similar (fig. 18) on plan to the Chirenath brick temple at Sravasti exposed recently by the Archaeological Survey of India though which is larger (approximately 5 m in diameter including its projections). Its central part is 2.20 m square where a Siva Linga is placed in the centre (Pl. 61). It has also affinity with circular Siva temples near Rewa in Madhya Pradesh at Chandrehe and Masaon belonging to C. 950 A.D. and a Vishnu temple and another without deity at Kurari in Fatehpur district of Uttar Pradesh and Surya temple at Tinduli in Fatehpur district. V.V.Mirashi thought that temples having circular garbha-griha where a speciality of the Chedi country and were built for the first time by the Acharyas of the Mattamayura clan as in the case of Chandrehe temple which was built by Prasanta siva as per the Chandrehe stone inscription of 972 A.D. Thus on stylistic grounds, the present circular shrine can be dated to c. tenth century A.D. when the Kalachuris moved in this area and settled across river Sarayu. They possibly brought the tradition of stone circular temples transformed into brick in Ganga-Yamuna valley." (Page 70-71)

www.vadaprativada.com

3931. 'Circular Shrine' more virtually its existence that was found by ASI has been admitted by most of the Experts (Archaeologist) of Muslim parties though a reluctant attempt has been made for diverting the identity by suggesting that it may be a "Buddhist Shrine" or a tomb of erstwhile Islamic religious structure. PW-30 has categorically admitted it on page 15 and has said that his statement in para 14 of the affidavit was not after looking to the shrine at the spot but on the basis of its photo only.

3932. Circular shrine has been admitted by the experts of plaintiffs (Suit-4). PW-30 Dr. R.C.Thakran on page 150 and 129 as said:

"मुझे ए0एस0आई0 की रिपोर्ट वाल्यूम – 1 के पृष्ठ – 70ए पर

"A slender drain is visible to me on the north side in the picture below figure 17 on page 70-A of the ASI report volume-1. It is correct to say that as per this figure 70, this drain is going northwards. It is also correct to say that the Buddhist stupas do not have such north- bound drains. .. . . It is true to say that there is an arrow mark on the left side in plate no.60 of the ASI report, volume-2. A narrow drain is seen in this plate." (E.T.C.)

''सर्कुलर श्राइन, जिसका उल्लेख मैंने अपनी बयान हल्फी के प्रस्तर –14 में किया है, उसको मैंने व्यक्तिगत रूप से देखा नहीं है, बल्कि फ़ोटो देखकर मैंने यह बयान दिया है।'' (पेज 129)

"I have not personally seen the circular shrine of which I have made mention in para 14 of my sworn statement; but I have given this statement after seeing the photograph." (E.T.C.)

"...it is correct to say that plate no. 60 is insitu photograph of circular shrine. It is true that Budha stupa is always solid. The structure shows a Pranal *but Experts who visited site and measured the angle of slope with the help of sprit Level had found that the slope which was necessary for the water to pass out was not there. correct that I was not present when this structure was exposed nor I have visited this spot there after but I can express my opinion on the basis of information given by expert as well as the information in the final report and site notebooks. Prof. D. Mandal, Prof. Ratnagar and Prof. Suraj Bhan have given this information."(Page 147-148)

3934. PW 29 (Dr. Jaya Menon) on "circular shrine" said:

"Since circular shrine" was not found in my presence, I have not seen its stratigraphical association. In my view "circular shrine" was probably a Buddhist Stupa. There appears a hollow space within the excavated "circular shrine"*. Stupa is not always solid. It is generally made of bricks or stone and mud brick bats. . . . . .It is a non-Islamic structure. . . . It is probably of Gupta or late Gupta period." (Page 202-203)*

www.vadaprativada.com

"In my opinion, the finding of ASI report regarding circular shrine as recorded at page 73 is not based on any result of carbon-dating. In my mind, the ASI report on the point is not clear at page 72 of the report. I do not agree with the ASI report that it was a circular shrine mentioned from pages 70 to 73 with figures 24 and 24-A. In my opinion, the alleged circular shrine structure dates back to around 6th century AD. . . . . It is correct to say that the alleged circular shrine shown in plates 59 and 60 belongs to Sixth century AD, although ASI's report says that it belongs to post-Gupta period." (Page 225-226)

3935. During excavation at the disputed site between trenches E-8 & F-8 a circular structure of burnt bricks facing east was recovered, commonly termed as "circular shrine",

detailed at page 70 to 72 of report, volume 1, and shown in figure 17, 24, 24A, and plates 59, 60 & 62 (volume 2) of the report. The bricks used here are of two sizes: 28x21x5.5 cm and 22x18x5 cm. The bonding material was mud mortar. On its eastern side, there is a rectangular opening, 1.32 m in length and 32.5 cm in width, which was the entrance of the structure. A calcrete block, measuring 70x27x17 cm, has also been found here, fixed, obviously, as the door-sill.

3936. An extremely important feature of this structure is the provision of a gargoyle (Pranala) made in its northern wall. The ASI Report records that it is 0.04 m wide and 0.53 cm long, projecting 35 cm from the northern wall of the structure. It is 'V' shaped so that water may drop a little away from the wall. In this connection it may be mentioned that in books of history, in Sanskrit Literature, reference of circular shrine and Pranala finds place. A famous book styled as "Aaprajit Prichchha" by Bhuwan Dev in its book in chapter 207 at serial no. 23 mentions about it.

3937. The elevation, as shown in the drawing (Fig. 17 of the ASI Report) suggests that this structure was built on a raised platform, viz. adhisthana. The gargoyle, or the drain, was provided on the northern side. The structure may be dated to 9th-10th century A.D. (The ASI carried out C-14 determination from this level and the calibrated date ranges between 900 A.D. and 1030 A.D.)

3938. This was an independent miniature shrine. The architectural features suggest that, that it was a Shiva shrine.

3939. It is unthinkable that inspite of these clear features of Shiva shrine, the objectors are identifying the same as a

www.vadaprativada.com

3940. Secondly, it is too small a structure for a tomb, from inside it is only 4.4 ft. square. Neither could it accommodate a grave in its interior, nor a Qiblah-Mihrab on its western wall ; Qiblah was an integral and essential part of tomb-structure during the Sultanate period (1192-1526 A.D.) as is illustrated by numerous examples all over northern India.

3941. Thirdly, there is no trace of an arch required for constructing dome over the tomb. There are no hook-shafts to bear and no structural trace to suggest any lateral thrust of the mihrab. It may be noted that the sub-structure of the mihrab is built massively on the edges of the four corners, to counter the lateral thrust. One wonders, if it was a tomb without any arch or dome, and without even a grave?

3942. Thus, on the one hand the dimension of this structure are too small for a tomb and on the other the gargoyle was never in tombs while it was an integral feature of the sanctum of Shiva temples to drain out water poured on the Sivlinga.

3943. Shrine is a holy place where worship is performed. It is a structure where holiness is enshrined. Denial for the sake of denial should not be allowed. "No evidence to make this structure a shrine" and "a sheer figment of imagination and a conjecture without any evidentiary basis", such comments grossly lack technical acumen and clearly show the dearth of logical thinking. These themselves are mere arguments lacking "evidentiary basis". By these and many like arguments show the 'ostrich attitude' of the plaintiff.

3944. A structure is identified by its shape and/or by the

use it was put to or by the function it was supposed to perform. This circular structure was found with a well defined 'Pranala' (water chute to drain out ablution liquids).The pranala could well have been denoted as drain but the area from where it was issuing was only 40 x 60 m (including the squarish hollow chamber for fixing the object of worship and the small entrance of the east) which could not be used for bath room or for kitchen, a few alternatives where water is required to be drained out, thus, the only valid explanation was it being a 'pranala' of a shrine, small only a subsidiary one and not the main shrine holding central/main deity.

3945. Circular Shrine is found resting over wall 19A and others, this single fact, does not make the 'Circular Shrine' Contemporary to the said walls, as the working level for the 'Circular Shrine' is much higher, and only foundations of Circular Shrine rest over the existing walls, which have been incorporated as foundation of Circular Shrine, these walls definitely are not made for providing foundation to the circular Shrine. Apparently, when the Circular Shrine was built the wall 19A and others were all buried under the ground and foundation of the circular shrine just reached upto that level.

3946. Circular shrine is compared with other pre-existing and published circular shrines of proven dates found at different places, primarily to compare the style and not size. These circular shrines are not the exact replicas of one another. All the shrines reproduced in comparison are independent shrines while the structure 5 shrine is of subsidiary nature. Layers producing mixed material are dated on the basis of the latest material found in their milieu. Therefore, the period, of Circular Shrine (Str. 5)

3947. The Circular Shrine which was stated to be "not a circle but an ellipse" (para 6.2 of the objection) has also been alleged to be a "Stupa"; a circular Buddhist stupa in which on the east was a niche to support image of Buddha. Logic given in support is that "it is too small to enter". There are several miniature shrines which are even smaller in dimension and under worship. In such miniature shrine, often called subsidiary shrines, devotee is not supposed to enter but offers his/her worship from out side.

3948. The famous writer of classical Sanskrit literature Varahmihir in his book "Brihat Samhita" has described 20 types of temple in which besides kunjara and Guhraja types which are apsidal nature, circular temple such as samduga, padma, Vrish, Ghata and Vritta have been mentioned. Padma is shaped like a lotus but other three types samduga, Vrish and Vritta are clearly Circular Shrines.

3949. A circular brick temple has been noticed recently at Sikhara Kohanda in Siddharthnagar district, about 6 miles from Domariyaganj, where eight brick structures- four circular and four square have been noticed and have been roughly dated to approximately eleventh century A.D. Another prominent circular brick temple has been excavated at Chirenath in Sravasti whose sikhara is missing but on plan the temple upto its jangha portion is circular from exterior having a circumference of 14.70 m. with three niches in all the three cardinal directions and entrance in the west. The garbhagriha is roughly square, measuring 2.10 x 2.10 m. with a 1.70 m high Sivalinga of red

3950. "The temple's interior is square (side 6 ft. 8 in.) and the exterior is circular –stellate having 16 bhadra-facets and 16 karna-projections. Of the bhadras four are sham and four are real, each separated from the other by an acute-angled projection produced by turning the square. The doorway which, originally was preceded by a praggriva, faces north, while the three bhadras face the remaining cardinal directions.

3951. The hypaethral and circular temples of yoginis are well known in north and Central India. They have been mentioned by Krishna Deva as at Dudhai in Jhansi district, Mitaoli in Morena district. Bheraghat in Jabalpur district, Ranipur Jharial in Bolangir district and Surada near Kalahandi and Hirapur near Bhubaneswar in Orissa. They range from 16.72 m to 39.52 m in outer diameter, with 65 to 81 peripheral chapels and a principal shrine, normally in the centre of the courtyard. Inscribed yogini images from Central India suggest more such temples and one such shrine has been excavated and identified as Golakimatha in Jabalpur district (Krishna Deva 1999). The proliferation of circular temples with their identification with the types mentioned in classical treatises require further investigative studies of their origin and developmental process.

3952. In the overall view we find no reason to doubt the findings of ASI on this aspect also and the objections otherwise are accordingly rejected.

3953. Then comes two items i.e. "The Divine Couple and Other Architectural Members" referred to in para 7 (7.1 to 7.8) and "Figurines" (Para 9.1 to 9.3) which are as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

7. THE "DIVINE COUPLE" AND OTHER ARCHITETURAL MEMBERS:-

7.1. That the stone "mutilated sculpture of a divine couple" (p 272) is described on p. 130. (Reg. No. 1184) and Plate 235. The lower portion alone is present, below the waist. The piece is so damaged that it is almost undecipherable. What aspects of this incomprehensible piece make it a "divine" couple, we are not told. Thus the report shows clear bias in the use of the adjective "divine" and also "couple".

7.2. That further, and more important, the recorded findspot (p. 130) of this piece is Trenches K3-K4 (in the east) and the recorded layer is "Debris". Clearly, this piece of sculpture does not come from a stratified context, leave alone the strata of Period VII.

7.3*. That so too, a black, schist pillar with a square base and octagonal shaft and intricate carving comes from surface debris above the topmost floor (Floor I) in Trench F3 (p. 140), which is also of no relevance.*

7.4. That regarding the octagonal stone that was said to have been carved in twefth-century style, it may be noted that according to the text (on p. 56), it was found in Trench F-7, on pillar base 32 but as per table (on P. 63) that was "resting on Floor 2", in Trench F-6-F-7, while its foundation was resting on floor 4. It may be noticed that in the Section Facing South Sest-East (E-F), no floor marked "Floor 4" is indicated.

7.5*. That the theory of the so-called temple rests on some other reported architectural fragments also. Out of about*

www.vadaprativada.com

380 pieces have been tabulated, 205 are featureless with only marks of dressing or in some cases are completely undressed stones. To give examples, No. 122 (Reg. No. 882) kept in Manas Bhawan is a rectangular piece with pecking marks and partially polished (p. 129), No. 131 (Reg. No. 953) is a "rectangular slab with one of its sides nicely polished" (p. 129), No. 3 (Reg. No. AYD-1/74) kept in the tin shed at the excavated site is "a rectangular partly dressed sand stone slab with an open groove meant for dowel" (p. 131). The majority of these came from the dump or fill and were in many cases part of the Masjid walls. There were numerous others (particularly of calcrete) that were removed from the dump from trenches, during excavation, that were thrown away and are not tabulated. Out of 383 architectural fragments, only 40 came from stratified contexts. Out of this 40 too, none were specified to a temple, even the 8 that have been separately mentioned: pillar, doorjamb, octagonal shaft of pillar, amalaka, divine couple, slab with srivatsa motif, lotus medallion and a re-chiselled slab with lozenge design, are of no significance. The srivatsa design is associated with Jainism and the lotus design could as well be Buddhist or even Muslim. The lozenge design could well belong to a Muslim structure. It is also interesting that the floral design on the architectural fragment in Plate 90 matches the lower portion of the Arabic inscription in Plate 92. The latter depicts a floral design and the design, as sell as the method of carving, in the two pieces are very similar. It is also mischievous to label a sculpture showing the waist portions of two human figures as representing a divine couple. Moreover, all the above noted 8 pieces came from the debris. The octagonal shafts has, in fact, not even been tabulated. Many of the architectural fragments are, as admitted, of different materials (pink sandstone, buff sandstone, spotted red sandstone, calcrete, and so forth), and it is well known that temples do not use stones of diverse colours and types for decoration.

7.6. That report admits that there are few architectural members (plates 92 to 94) which can clearly be associated with Islamic architecture and on stylistic grounds which might belong to 16th century A.D. onwards. (page 122). On the same page in earlier sentences the report described certain architectural members. The photographs of these architectural members appear on plates 79, 80, 81, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90. The report says that stylistically these architectural members in general and pillars in particular may be placed in a time bracket of 10-12 century AD. In Indo-Muslim architecture elements of early Indian architecture which were consistent with Islamic traditions were freely used. Foliage, floral and geometric designs as found in early Indian architecture were copied and used in the Indo-Muslim architecture and this is the important feature which distinguished Indo-Muslim architecture from that of Arbian Land and Persia. The elements and designs in plates 79, 80, 81, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89 and 90 are found in many Muslim religious and other buildings. Lotus medallian as in pl. 70 are found as apex-stone in domes.*

On what basis the style and design contained in plate

no. 93, 94 is attributed to 16 century, is also not mentioned.

*The architectural members shown in plate no. 79, 80, 81, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, and 90 do not contain any carving of a Hindu deity. Such elements and designs have been used in Indo-Muslim architecture and hence these architectural members may have been parts of a Muslim structure. On what basis the A.S.I. remarks that these "emphatically" speak about their association with temple architecture", is not known. What is the basis for placing these architectural members in time bracket of 10-12 century A.D. is also not given in the report. Plate No. 81 is not amalaka but a part of petal design. It has to be noted that the so-called amalaka (pl. 81) is a surface collection found in debris above floor -1 (Page 141 S*r. No. 125)

7.7. That the octagonal stone block having so-called floral motif has been dated to 12th century A.D. on its alleged similarity with that one found in the Dharmachakrajina Vihar or Kumardavi at Sarnath (Plates 39 and 40). Even a cursory inspection clearly reveals that there is not the least similarity between the two. The Sarnath Specimen is rectangular on plan while the Ayodhya one is Octagonal. Again the Sarnath specimen has depiction of floral motif but the Ayodhya specimen has a different motif. Further, apart from the stylistic dissimilarity there is dissimilarity in their architectural technique as well. On the Sarnath Specimen the depiction of motif is in slightly low relief while on the Ayodhya one it is in very bold relief.

There is of course one very distinct similarity

between the two. Both belong to the category of reused material. The Sarnath Vihar in question has been built mainly by reused earlier materials such as broken bricks, stone architectural members, both plain as well as decorated etc. The stone pilaster as cited for comparison with octagonal stone block is also a reused specimen. It, thus, cannot be contemporary to the builder of the builder of the Vihar in question. There is no question on the date of Kumardevi. It is early 12th century A.D. But there is of course a big question over the date of the pilaster cited for comparison. It is certainly of some earlier date it could be even of Gupta period.

So it is obvious that of the listed architectural members (stored in Manas Bhawan as well as in the Tin Shed at the excavation site, mostly collected from the surface or debris above floor 1) majority of them are fragmentry and plain in nature. It is also obvious that they cannot be dated on stylistic ground.

7.8. That in view of the evidence drawn from the depositional history of the site there was no habitation at this site after Gupta period for a long time. It was reoccupied after a long desertion in 13th century A.D. Under this situation, many of the remains of architectural members having so called association with temples, as alleged, could have belonged to Gupta period. Some of these said to have belonged to 10th - 12th century A.D., could have been brought here to be used as building material from some neighbouring sites. This is the situation also of the decorated / moulded bricks. Needless* to mention that moulded bricks were quite prevalent in Gupta Period.

Figurines

9.1. That during the excavation, the A.S.I. found 62 human 131 animal figurines. These discoveries are irrelevant to the question under inquiry. A large number of them belong to ancient period. The A.S.I. unnecessarily took pains to give details of terracotta figurines and to include their 33 plates (Pls. No. 104 to 136) knowing well that these figurines, most of which belong to ancient periods, were not at all relevant to the question contained in the Hon'ble Court's order. The chart below gives an idea of this exercise in futility. It is possible that the A.S.I. gave detailed description of human figurines and their photographs to lead credence to its theory of an alleged temple-like structure beneath Babri Masjid.

That there are a large number discrepancies also in the description of these Terracotta finds, which also create doubts upon the bonafides of the A.S.I. Team giving such incorrect descriptions. It is true that when archaeological deposits are disturbed, it is not surprising to find earlier material in later levels. This happens when construction or leveling activities require the bringing in of soil from peripheral areas or the clearing and mixing of older deposits. On the other hand, the reverse is impossible, that is we cannot, in an earlier stratified context, find material of later periods. However, the latter appears to be the case at Ayodhya in the context of terracotta figurines as seen in the tabulation provided on pp. 174-203. We find in numerous cases figurines of later periods in far earlier levels, as is evident from the following Table:-

9.3. That it may also be pointed out that on p. 93 the Report mentions that shapes like sprinkler appear in Period IV (Gupta period). However, on p. 80, sprinklers are mentioned from Period II (Sunga level) that evolved into their diagnostic forms in the subsequent Period III or Kushan period. So also on p. 41, it is stated that layers 5, 6 and 7 in Trench G2 belong to the Medieval Sultanate level. In the schematic cross-section and tentative periodization, layer 2 and 3 belong to t he Medieval level. Hence, what is then layer 4?

3954. The rest of the two items i.e. "Archeaological members and Figurines" are mentioned in Chapter VI and chapter VII, description thereof is as under:

"Consequent upon laying of a lay out for archaeological excavation of disputed site at Ayodhya, various architectural fragments consisting of pillars, pilasters, broken door jambs, lintels, brackets and etc. were

retrieved as disjecta membra, ranging from surface of the mound to a considerable depth of various trenches. In this regard, the Fig. 58 shows spatial distribution of fragments of architectural members.

These architectural members have been wrought on calcrete, black schist and sand stone. The last one does betray different colours like those of dull brown, pinkish as well as deep red with buff spots.

Majority of these architectural members are fragmentary and plain in nature except for a few intact members like pillars, brackets and neatly dressed masonry slabs, etc. As such it becomes very difficult to identify the functional utility of all these members.

A noteworthy aspect of some of these architectural members is the presence of mortises/open grooves of varying dimensions on the body of slabs which serve the purpose of providing dowels/clamps as binding factor. In many a cases iron dowels have been found in situ. Besides, there are also symptomatic features to the effect of reusing the earlier architectural members with decorative motifs or mouldings by re-chiseling the slab (Pls. 79-80, Fig. 59). A few intact architectural members like Amlaka (pl. 81, Fig. 59) pillar with Ghata-pallava base with dwarf beings as weight-bearers and Kirtimukhas (Pls. 82-83, Fig. 59) to mention a few, have also been recovered. Besides, there are a number of architectural members which have been decorated with deeply carved foliage motifs. This pattern is a distinct one resembling like that of "stencil" work (Pls. 86-87). It may be pointed out that the various architectural members with similar decorative designs have been found used in the foundation of one of the major brick structures (wall 16)) exposed in these excavations.

The aforesaid pillars and other decorative architectural members of this site like fragment of broken jamb with semi circular pilaster (Pl. 85) fragment of an octagonal shaft of Pillar (Pl. 84), a square slab with Srivatsa motif (Pl. 88) fragment of lotus medallion motif (Pls. 89-90) emphatically speak about their association with the temple architecture. Stylistically, these architectural members in general and pillars in particular may be placed in a time bracket of tenth-twelfth Century A.D. It is also pertinent to note that there are a few architectural members (Pls. 92-94), which can clearly be associated with the Islamic architecture on stylistic ground, which might belong to sixteenth century A.D. onwards.

In addition to the architectural fragments, a highly mutilated sculpture of divine couple seated in alinganamudra has also been recovered. The extant remain depicts the waist, thigh and foot (Pl. 235). (Page 121-122)

3955. Thereafter a complete chart is also given which is not necessary to mention here. The "terracotta figurines" are in Chapter VII page 174 which says:

"During the excavation 62 human and 131 animal figurines were found. In the consonance with the prevailing practice in the Gangetic valley, these figurines are the products of both handmade as well as moulding techniques. These terracottas are assignable from the pre-Mauryan to the previous century. They are both religious as well as secular, the former being represented as cult objects viz. mother -goddess. As a majority of them is fragmentary, save for a few, they could not be dated precisely on the stylistic grounds. The effigies of the mother-goddess exhibit archaic features and conspicuous girdle, whereas the Sunga, Kushan and Gupta specimen are varied and show stylistic affinity to their stone counterparts. But this cannot be applied to 'Archaic' figurines for want of their stone parallels. From the post-Gupta period onwards they are made of coarse clay with considerable admixture of husk. They were often slipped/washed with admixture of mica as the main gritty material to avoid cracking. The excavated clay figurines are described below mentioning their levels from which they were recovered. The appearance of the terracotta figurines of earlier periods in late levels was mainly due to large scale constructional activities like raising of massive walls; floor level especially during and post-Kushan period."

3956. With respect to figurines Statement of PW 29 (Jaya Menon) said:

"It is correct to say that the figurines of elephant, tortoise and crocodiles – all made of terracotta, were recovered during the excavation. . . . . I know that the crocodile is the seat/vehicle of Hindu holy river Ganga. I agree that tortoise is the vehicle of holy river Yamuna. With reference to the plate 129 of the ASI report, Vol. II, I can say that the snake is significantly attached with the name of "Lord Shiv" (Page 42)

"In reference to page no. 112 of the above report, the

witness stated that this terracotta figurine is just a human head." (Page 74)

"Terracotta figurines are figures of animals and human-beings made of fired clay. . . . . Terracotta figurines have been found possibly as far back as 5000 B.C. . . . .It is correct to say that such terracotta figurines were also in vogue in the 11th and 12th centuries. It is correct to say that such terracotta figurines also depicted Hindus Gods and Goddesses but not always." (Page 165)

3957. PW-32, Dr. Supriya Verma for some of the such figurines said:

"It is true that ASI in the course of excavation found 62 human figurines and 131 animal figurines but I am not sure about the number and also its identification." (Page 161)

www.vadaprativada.com

"It is correct that in plate 105 of the ASI report Vol II, bust of a female with ornament decoration is shown."(Page 173)

"...female bust shown in plate 105 of Vol. II of the ASI report could be a lady, who may be either Buddhist or of any important lady of high stature. There was no practice in Budhhism or Jainism of worshipping terracotta female figurine shown in plate 105 of Vol. II of the ASI report. However, there is depiction of 'Yakshi' in stone of early historical period. It has function of protector. It was sign of protection of humans. It is wrong to say that use of 'Yaksh' or 'Yakshi' is only limited to Hindu Dharmashashtra. In fact, it is also associated with Buddhist religion. I am not aware that apart from Buddha

www.vadaprativada.com

religion, whether 'Yasksh' or 'Yakshi' was used or not."(Page-174)

"It cannot say whether the word 'Yaksh' or 'Yakshi' is referred or mentioned in any religious book of Buddhism."(Page 174)

"It is correct that this human figurine shown in plate 108 is holding a perforated disc." (Page 176)

3958. The identification and appreciation of the excavated material like human or animal figurines etc. is a matter of experts. None of these eight experts (Archaeologist of Muslim parties) claimed to be the experts in this kind of branch in Archaeology. Even otherwise their stand in respect to these finds is varying. One witness says that these finds were not at all recovered from the layers they are claimed while others says otherwise. We have seen photographs of many of such artifacts and finds and in generality there is no such inherent lacuna or perversity in the observations of ASI or other identification which may warrant any otherwise comment from this Court or may vitiate their report. It is not in dispute that no Islamic religious artefacts have been found during excavation while the artifacts relating to Hindu religious nature were in abundance. For some of the items, it is claimed that it can also be used by non-Hindu people but that would not be sufficient to doubt the opinion of ASI. Plate No.50 (Kapotpalli), Plates No.51 and 62 (floral motifs shown in walls 16 and 17), (Sravats) Plate No.88, Cobra hood (Nag Devta) Plate No.129 and various other Gods and Goddesses in human shape (Plate Nos. 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 114, 115, 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 125, 126) to our mind were quite clear and admits no

doubt. Three witnesses namely Sri Arun Kumar (OPW-18), Dr. R. Nagaswami (OPW 17) and Sri Rakesh Dutt Trivedi (OPW-19) were produced who supported the findings and report of ASI. They are retired officers, holding senior position in ASI. Their statements are sufficiently lengthy and extremely detailed. Since they have supported ASI report, we have not mentioned their statements in detail for the reason that we intended to test the objections raised against ASI report in the light of what the witnesses of plaintiff (Suit 4) have deposed and only when we would have some doubt, we would refer to and compare the statement that of OPW 17 to 19. In totality we find no substance in the objection with respect to the figurines etc. and the same are accordingly rejected.

3959. For the nature of artefacts, the witnesses of plaintiffs (Suit-4) said:

(A) PW-29, Dr. Jaya Menon

"The motif of Ghat (pot) is visible on this pillar. It is true that Ghat is also known to be as "Kalash". Normally, this kind of 'Ghat' on the pillar is not found in mosque." (Page 41)

"It is correct to say that the figurines of elephant, tortoise and crocodile – all made of terracotta, were recovered during the excavation. Such figurines were found in more than one trench. I know that the crocodile is the seat/vehicle of Hindu holy river Ganga. I agree that tortoise is the vehicle of holy river Yamuna." (Page 42)

"This Makar Pranal is non-Islamic feature…" (Page 194)

www.vadaprativada.com

"As I have mentioned that the Muslim people do not believe in the idol worship, hence there is no question of associating terracotta figurine with the Muslim culture. So far I know and my knowledge goes, the question of terracotta figurine to be associated with Muslim culture does not arise". (Page 175)

"It is true that such animal figurines are not allowed to be kept in the mosque." (Page 176)

"Makar Pranal is one of the part of the Hindu temple architecture. I am not very sure whether Makar Pranal has any association with mosque or not. I have not seen any mosque having any Makar Pranal in it." (Page 203)

"Generally the material which are used for filling of a floor are not sorted out in the filling material any artifacts of outside may be found if the material is taken from outside." (Page 289)

(C) PW-32, Dr Supriya Verma

"I have heard the word 'Kalash'. Kalash is not found in mosque…" (Page 35)

"Wall No. 16, according to me, was used as a wall prior to the construction of the disputed structure. In this way, Wall 16 was wall of some other construction which was existing prior to the constriction of the disputed structure." (Page 140)

"However, it is true that Wall No. 17 was constructed earlier to Wall No. 16." (Page 143)

"I know crocodile. It is also very important for the temples. It is called 'Makar Mukh'. I have not seen Makar Mukh in any mosque…" (Page 143)

3960. One of the objections, which has been raised very seriously is the non examination of bones. Though ASI has referred in the report, about the bones recovered during excavation but it does not appear that any examination thereof was made. It is contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs that in absence of any scientific examination of the bones, entire report of ASI gets tainted. The objection under this heading is in para 11 (11.1 to 11.2) which are:

> 11.1 One decisive piece of evidence, which entirely negates the possibility of a temple, is that of animal bones. Bone fragments with cut marks are a sure sign of animals being eaten at the site, and, therefore, rule out the possibility of a temple existing at the site at the relevant time. As no record of bones was being maintained by the A.S.I. Team, the plaintiffs and moved application and thereupon directions were given by the Hon'ble High Court to the A.S.I. to record "the number and size of bones and glazed wares" (Order dated 10.4.2003). The Report in its "Summary of Results" admits that "animal bones have been recovered from various levels of different periods" (Report, p. 270). Any serious archaeological report would have tabulated the bones, by periods, levels and trenches, and identified the species of the animals. There should, indeed, have been a chapter devoted to animal bones/ remains. But despite the statement in its "summary", there is no word about the animal bones in the main text of the Report. This astonishing omission is patently due to the

www.vadaprativada.com

A.S.I.'s prejudiced mindset with which the excavations were carried out and fear of the fatal implications held out by the animal bone evidence for its preconceived temple theory. A partial table is being provided of animal bones as found in the various trenches at different levels as noted by the nominess of the plaintiffs (which may also by verified from the Day-to-Day register) and it is shown how these are found at all levels all over the site. The A.S.I. perhaps knows that sacrificial animals' bones (if we are dealing here with a temple where animals were sacrificed, which, incidentally, has not been claimed for any Rama temple) cannot be represented by bone fragments with cut-marks strewn all over, but need to be found at particular spots, practically whole and entire, which is not here at all the case in even a single instance.

11.2. That the statements of Pages 45, 55, and 271 etc. of the report, suggesting that probably this site was not a habitational site and had stratified coutural material only from the first seven periods or that it was only during and after Period IV (Gupta level) onwards upto Periods IX (Late and Post Mughal level) that the regular habitational deposits disappear and the area below the disputed structure remained a place for public use for a long time till the Period VIII (Mughal level) stand belied and negatived by the animal bone evidence and perhaps that is why the Animal bones were totally ignored.*

Given below is a Table of animal bones found in various trenches at various levels, from records maintained by nominess during the excavation and more detailed and accurate Table may be prepared and filled by the A.S.I. with the help of day to day register.

11.3.That from the above table it is clear that animal bones have been found in NBP, Gupta, post Gupta, Early Medieval, Medieval and Mughal levels, in other words, practically from all levels. It should also be clear bones were also found from the central supposedly significant area, as in Trenches F3 and F4/F5. In the case of F3, bones are coming from Early Medieval levels and in F4/F5 from Early Medieval and Medieval levels. If, as according to A.S.I., post-Gupta levels onwards are not residential in nature but attest to levels with temples, and these levels are supposedly stratified, it is to be wondered at as to why animal bones were found even from the central part of the alleged temple.If, as the A.S.I. says, soil from earlier levels was used for construction, then it is surprising that for the construction of a temple, no sorting or sieving was done, as bones and other such materials are regarded as highly polluting.

3961. ASI has referred to the bones on page 270 and said as under:

"Animal bones have been recovered from various levels of different periods, but skeletal remains noticed in the trenches in northern and southern areas belong to the period IX as the grave pits have been found cut into the deposition coeval with the late disputed structures and are sealed by the top deposit."

3962. PW-16 Surajbhan on the question of bones stated:

''खुदाई स्थल से जो हड्डियां मिली थी, उनको मैंने नहीं देखा, यद्यपि पाटरी यार्ड में हड्डियों के कुछ टुकड़े रखे हुए थे।'' (पेज 388)

"I did not see the bones discovered from the excavation site, though few pieces of bones had been kept in the Pottery Yard." (E.T.C.)

''प्रश्न– आपने जिन बोन्स का उल्लेख किया है, वे किन–किन जानवरों के बारे में किया है?

उत्तर– यह मेरे अध्ययन का विषय नहीं है, परन्तु ए0एस0आई0 की रिपोर्ट में ही यह कहा गया है कि हड्डियां उत्खनन स्थल से पाई गई।'' (पेज 388)

"Question- The bones mentioned by you, relate to which animals?

Answer- It is not the subject matter of my studies, but in

www.vadaprativada.com

the ASI report it has been mentioned that bones had been found at the excavation site." (E.T,C.)

*''प्रश्न– खुादाई स्थल से प्राप्त हड्िडयों का आपने अध्ययन नहीं किया है?

उत्तर– जी हां।'' (पेज 390)

"Question- You have not studied the bones discovered from the excavation site?

Answer- Yes." (E.T.C.)

''प्रश्न– मेरा यह कहना है कि उत्खनन स्थल से जो हड्िडयां मिलीं थी, उसमें अधिकतर हड्िडयां जंगली जानकवरों की थीं अथवा ऐसे जानवरों की थीं, जिनको मनुष्यों द्वारा खाया नहीं जाता है, जैसे कुत्ता, गधा, सुअर, मेटक, अजगर आदि। इस बारे में आपको क्या कहना है?

उत्तर– उत्खननकताओं का ऐसा मत नहीं है।

कबीरपंथी तथा रैदासी मंदिरों के निर्माण –शैली के बारे में मेरा कोई विशेष अध्ययन नहीं है, ...मैंने इस बारे में कोई विशेष अध्ययन नहीं किया है।'' (पेज 392–393)

"Question- According to me, most of the bones found at the excavation site were of wild animals or such animals, which are not eaten by human beings such as dog, donkey, pig, frog, python etc. What you have to say in this behalf?

Answer- The excavators do not think so.

The excavators have not given any particular report in this behalf so as to prove the question as put up by the learned counsel for the cross-examiner. The statement being given by me about the bones, is mentioned in ASI's report. Animals were sacrificed in few temples even in past and today as well. Buffalo bull, he goat, cock etc. were sacrificed.

I have not made any special study about the followers of Kabir and Raidasi temple. . . . . I have not made any special study in this behalf." (E.T.C.)

3963. PW-29 (Jaya Menon) on the question of bones, stated:

"I may not be an expert but it is possible to identify different species except in the case of sheep and goat by seeing the bone. My statement in paragraph-9 of the affidavit regarding bones found in Trench No. F/3, F/4, F/5 is on the basis of daily register which was prepared at the site by the ASI Team. . . . .in the swearing para this paragraph is shown as based on 'my knowledge'. It is true that the daily register does not mention species of animals. . . . . .I am not an expert nor I have studied the bones found during the excavation at the disputed site. . . . . .Species of bone can be identified even if it is too old by visual examination. Palaeobotany is a subject dealing with ancient plants and I am not an expert of that. . . . . .I do not agree with the suggestion that the bones recovered during excavation at the site in question were kept or were brought by scavengers because such large quantity of bones could not have been brought by scavengers. By large quantity I mean that during excavation every day bags full of bones were recovered from the site in question. I do not remember the exact number of bones recovered during excavation. Size of those bags were different."

"The witness replied that she had not complained to any about the excavated soil being thrown away without any sorting nor I had complained about the bones of human skeleton being mostly thrown." (Page 42)

"According to me one of the significant aspects neglected by ASI in the disputed site is the study of animal bones. Animal bones are part of the evidence and should have been studied in the case of present excavation. If there was a temple at disputed site then the area of the construction of the temple should have been cleaned of animal bones." (Page 67)

"Question:- If bone is found under constructed area of temple then whether that construction can be considered as temple in that case also?

Answer:- I have no idea about this fact." (Page 68)

"In para 8A of my affidavit I have said that bones from a human skeleton too were mostly thrown away. These bones were recovered from trench ZHI. The human skeleton was mostly intact. Trench ZHI lies towards North to the makeshift structure. Bones can be dated. Chemical change in the bones is possible only if the bones have been buried for a long period of time." (Page 74)

"Bones of humans and animals and plant remains are also important for the study of the past." (Page 77)

"By stating in paragraph 8A that the collection of artefacts was not made in scientific manner, I mean that the bones of human skeleton recovered in a particular trench were not collected but were thrown away. I was although

present at the time of excavation but I did not raise any objection to the throwing of the bones. The excavators did not collect the bones. During excavation at the site the excavator collected bones found in northern and southern trenches but the bones found in the trench ZH-1 were not collected, rather they were thrown away. So far as I know, no one made any objection to this conduct of the excavators in throwing away the bones found in trench ZH-1." (Page 229) published by the Cultural and Archaeological wing of the Ancient Indian History Department of University of Allahabad. I do not remember the names of the magazines in which the afore-said reports were published. . . . "The bones which were being discovered when I was there in course of the excavation, had cut marks and they were of several types (thin, thick, hard, soft, etc.) seeing which it can be said as to which animals these bones belong to." (E.T.C.)

"मुझे इसके सम्बन्ध में जानकारी नहीं है कि बहुत से मंदिरों के उत्खनन में एनीमल बोन्स पाये गये अथवा नहीं। मंदिरों की खुदाई की रिपोट्स में एनीमल बोन्स पाये जाने के बारे में पढ़ा है। ऐसे मंदिरों के संबंध में किसी ईदगाह या मस्जिद का कोई विवाद नहीं था। ऐसे मदिरों के उत्खनन में, जहां पर एनीमल बोन्स पाई गई, मैंने जानने का प्रयत्न नहीं किया कि उक्त स्थान पर एनीमल बोन्स क्यों थी। ऐसा कहना उचित नहीं होगा कि मैंने वादीगण के हित में गलतबयानी किया है।" (पेज 191)

"I do not know whether or not animal bones were discovered in the excavation of several temples. I have in excavation reports of the temples read about animal bones having been found. In regard to such temples, there was no dispute as to there being any Eidgah or mosque. In the excavation of those temples where animal bones were

I have not dealt with pig bones, because the primitive history for the first time saw the rearing only of two animals, sheep and goat, by men and these two animals have continued to be in use on a large scale for fulfilment of the latter's needs. It has been in evidence during excavations at several sites." (E.T.C.)*

3965. PW 32 (Dr. Supriya Verma) on the question of bone, said:

"The bones which were referred to by me in para 11 of the affidavit were seen by me. Only by looking to the bones, I cannot identify as to which animal species the bone belongs because I am not a Zoo-Archaeologist. The above bones could be of any animal including dog." (Page 43)

"Merely by looking at a skeleton, one cannot say that whether the skeleton was of Hindu or of Muslim person."(Page 45)

"Bones that have been found in N.B.P.W. Gupta and post Gupta periods have been mentioned on the basis of ASI report because it says that bones have been found at all level. Bones have no relation with civilization. Bones are not associated with any particular community. Bones tell us about food habits of societies. Bones tell us about food habit of human society."(Page 50)

"When archaeologists come across animal bones which can be of domestic as well as of wild animals the inference that is made relate to the food habit of that society or one can get an idea about the fauna that might have existed at that time around that site. When archaeologists excavate and find archaeological material which can include pottery and bones inference and interpretation are made by archaeologists on the basis of the context in which these finds are exposed." (Page 50-51)

"While studying bones to ascertain the contest is important and the second step is to have the bones identified by Zoo-archaeologist." (Page 51)

"The archaeological sites that have been found in India reveal that from Palaeolithic time on wards animals have been consumed. Finding of bones has to be related to the context and the quantification of bones has also to be kept in mind."(Page 51-52)

"One bone can come by chance but hundreds of bones don't come by chance." (Page 52)

"Animals bones are part of archaeological evidence and have to be understood in the context in which they are being found."(Page 53)

"Q. Whether bones are found in the mosque or kept in it?

A. I have seen some ruined Mosques and I have visited once in my life Jama-Masjid in Delhi and I can not know whether bones can be found in mosque or not."(Page 53)

"Identification of bones is the subject of Zoo Archaeologist I am not a Zoo Archaeologist. I can say that bones were found during excavations but I can not identify the species to which they belong. Since I have not examined the bone I am not in a position to say whether they have cut marks or not." (Page 154)

"It is not correct to say that bones recovered during excavation at disputed site were only form dumped material; rather they were found in all levels including fill deposits." (Page 163)

"It do not agree that bones found in excavation are not a decisive piece of evidence." (Page 163)

"I completely disagree with the suggestion that animal bones are not a decisive are not a decisive piece of evidence." (Page 163)

3966. Sri M.M.Pandey arguing on this aspect submitted:

"Study of bones is important only on prehistoric sites

where not much information is available regarding the food habit, faunal profile of the region or area and seasonality of settlement. But in this case most of the bones have come from secondary deposits and belong to the period for which most of the information regarding species and food habit of populace is known through texts and other sources. Hence no study was felt necessary.

Even if the cut marks prove that animal was eaten and it may also report the species of animal eaten, the knowledge would have proved of no use in this context as the bones do not belong to primary context and were brought from some other place where meat-eaters were settled.

Meat eating also is not restricted to any religion or creed. Presence of animal bones in any quantity does not prove habitation on the site. As has been said that the context of the find is important and the case of bones is no different from any other find from these levels (Period IV to Period IX). There has been regular raising of ground by laying of earth removed from some other place (which could have been a habitation area).

No other habitational material has been found in situ in excavation, e.g., no houses, no hearths, no baths, no latrine, not even definite house-hold pottery the so-called table ware, to make it a regular habitation site.

The objection of the plaintiffs that bones are coming from all periods and levels. Post Gupta levels onwards are not residential in nature but attest to levels with temples and these levels are supposedly stratified. Why the bones

were found even from the central part of the alleged temple. If stratum VII contained a structure so radically different, from mosque in VIII above, why were these finds not kept separate? Hukka and chillum can we expect such finds in a temple?

3967. In any archaeological excavation, finds of animal bones are as important as other antiquities as bones tell about nature of fauna, environment and possibly food habits of a section of the society at that given period of time from where the bones have been recovered. But this all can be achieved provided the bones have been recovered from the regular layers. In this case as they have been recovered from a pit, dump or filling, they lose significance and importance.

3968. In the excavation at the disputed site, the entire collection of animal bones was recovered from the fills of different periods. Evidently, these fills were brought from the neighbouring areas to level the ground from time to time. It is but natural that fills which were brought from habitational deposits contained animal bones, hence their examination will throw light only about the area of their origin. They have no bearing on the nature of the layers of the excavated site.

3969. Moreover, it is a well known fact that in certain Hindu temples animal sacrifices are made and flesh is eaten as Prasad while bones are deposited below the floor at the site itself. Even Dr. Supriya Verma, the learned witness (P.W. 32) in her submission, stated on Page 50 “Bones have no relation with civilization. Bones are not associated with any particular community. Bones tell us about the food habits of the society…”. Another witness Dr Jaya Menon (P.W. 29) admitted that "It is true that in certain kind of temples animals are sacrificed" (Page 37). She clearly admitted that bones can be found at temple sites also.

> "Mandiron ki khudai ki reports mein animal bones paaye jaane ke baare mein padhaa hai. Aisey Mandiron ke sambandh mein kisi Idgah ya Masjid ka koi vivaad nahin tha" – R.C. Thakran (P.W. 30) Page 191

3970. One thing more we intend to notice in respect to the bones. It is not the case of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) or other witnesses that bones in such abundance could have been found in Islamic religious place i.e. Mosque, Idgah etc. The Islamic scriptures clearly show place of worship cannot be used for residence purpose or for eating, sleeping etc. It is prohibited. If that be so, the existence of bones could have been of some importance, had there been found some other material to suggest that it could have been a residential place if there would have been a dispute about the nature of habitation. One thing from all the evidence is clear that whatsoever the justification or submission has come, the attempt is on the part of Expert witnesses of plaintiffs (Suit-4) to show that under the disputed structure, there could be an Islamic religious place i.e. Mosque, Idgah. It shows that they are also aware that the underneath structure was not a non religious one. In this view of the matter also we find no substance against the complaint of the inference drawn by ASI and not paying much attention to the alleged bones which according to them were found from deposits and pits hence they are of no consequence, particularly in view of the other material suffice for them to draw a correct inference.

3971. Then come next serious objection about the "Glazed

Wares and Glazed Tiles", the level at which they were found, and their interpretation. Para 10 (10.1 to 10.5) of the objections says:

> 10. GLAZED WARES AND GLAZED TILES:-
>
> 10.1. That the glazed ware, often called "Muslim" glazed ware, constitutes an equally definite piece of evidence, which militates against the presence or construction of a temple, since such galzed ware was n to at all used in temples. The ware is all pervasive till much below the level of "Floor No. 4", which floor is falsely ascribed in the Report to the "huge" structure of a temple allegedly built in the 11th - 12th centuries. The Report tells us that the glazed ware sherds only "make their appearance" "in the last phase of the period VII" (p. 270). Here we directly encounter the play with the names of periods. On page 270, Period VII is called "Medieval Sultanate", dated to 12th - 16th century A.D. But on p. 40 " Medieval-Sultanate" is the name used for Period VI, dated to 10th and 11th centuries. In Chapter V (Pottery), there is no statement made to the effect that the galzed ware appears in "the last phase of Period VII" as is asserted in the Summary. Rather, it is three definitely stated " the pottery of Medieval-Sultanate, Mughal and Late-and-Post Mughal period (Periods VII to IX)...indicates that there is not much difference in pottery wares and shapes" and that "the distinctive pottery of the periods is glazed ware: (p. 108). The placing of the appearance of Glazed ware in the "last phase" of Period VII is thus a last-minute invention in the Report, to keep its "massive" temple, allegedly built in

www.vadaprativada.com

Period VII, clear of Glazed-Ware by a sleight of hand, because otherwise it would militate against a temple being built in that period. All this gross manipulation has been because the items of galzed pottery have not been attributed to their trench and stratum even in the select list of 21 items of glazed ware (out of hundreds of items actually obtained) on pages 109-111. Seeing the importance of glazed ware as a factor for elementary dating (pre or post-Muslim habitation at the site), and in view also of the Hon'ble High Court's order dated 10.4.2003 about the need for recording of glazed ware, a tabulation of all recorded galzed-ware sherds according to trench and stratum was essential. That this has been entirely disregarded shows that, owing to the glazed-ware evidence being totally incompatible with any alleged temple construction activity in Period VI, the A.S.I. has resorted to the most unprofessional act of ignoring and manipulating the archaeological finds.

10.2. That Going by the Pottery Section of the Report (p. 108), not by its "Summary", the presence of Glazed Ware throughout Period VII (Medieval, 12th -16th centuries) rules out what is asserted on page 41, that a "column-based structure"__ (on the alleged pillar bases)___ was built in this period. How could Muslims have been using glazed ware inside a temple? (To say that glazed ware was found at Multan and Tulamba before the 13th century, is hardly germaine to the issue, since, obviously these were towns under Arab rule with Muslim settlements since 714 AD onwards, and so the use of glazed ware over there can be expected.) The whole point is that glazed ware is an indicator of Muslim habitation, and is not found in medieval Hindu temples.

10.3. That the question whether particular sorts of glazed ware made by Muslim potters, could have been used in any medieval Hindu temple was dealt with by S.K. Mirmira, in Indian Pottery (Chanda: Gramodyaya Sangh, 1973) who states (pp. 5-7):-*

> "India was invaded and ruled by the Moslem dynasties since 1000 AD for a few centuries and along with them they had brought certain arts and crafts. Decorative pottery was one of them. In the 12th century AD Muslim rulers had encouraged many potters from their homelands to come and settle in India. These potters especially from Persia, knew how to superimpose bluish green glaze on red clay wares.....As a result of this, the potters near Delhi have become famous for their bluish decorations.....An enthusiastic Maharaja of Rajasthan near Jodhpur brought some potters from Arab countries.....
> It is presumed that the reason for not adopting the glazing technique of Muslim craftsmen is religious; the orthodox Hindu potters did not relish the idea of learning the new technique from those who eat beef. In Khurja near Delhi there are still a few Muslim potters, descendants of the Persian settlers, who still use this technique of glazing."

Concerning porcelain wares the author writes,

"Indians because of religious prejudices did not like these, as they thought that bones were used in the clay for whitening the wares. Even in this day, in rural parts people call whitewares as 'farangi' .....Therefore, nobody even tried to adopt these techniques."

10.4. The story of Glazed Tiles is very similar. These too are in index of Muslim habitation. Yet 2 Glazed Tiles are found in layers of Period VI which means that the layers are wrongly assigned and must be dated to Period VII (Sultanate period). There could be no remains of any "huge temple" in these layers then.*

10.5. That On p. 163, it is mentioned that glazed tiles "mainly come from debris and dump of the disputed structure. However, some of the glazed tile pieces have also been recovered from the depth which is lower than the disputed structure but from the levels of Period VIII and IX only." These are completely false statements and show the level of inaccuracy in the Report. First of all, the glazed tiles do not come from the debris and dump of the disputed structure. The debris and dump was removed from Trenches E2, F2, G2, G5, F6, E6, D6, F3 and F4/F5 out of the excavated trenches. Glazed tiles that have been found from these trenches come from levels below the Babri Masjid floor and not from the debris of dump lying above it. Some of the debris that had rolled down the western slope, was recovered from the B and C series of trenches. Glazed tiles from this debris add up to a total of 14. Second, of the 155 pieces of glazed tiles in the tables provided by the A.S.I., 96 come form pits or fill in various* trenches. Of the remaining 45, 29 come from period VIII but 14 are from Medieval levels (Periods VII) and 2 from the Early Medieval level (Period VI). This has been gleaned from the table provided by the A.S.I. on pp. 164-72. Thus, the A.S.I.'s own information falsifies their claim that the glazed title pieces mainly come from Period VIII and IX.

3972. PW 16 (Surajbhan) on the question of Glazed Ware said:

''मुस्लिम ग्लेज्ड वेयर का प्रादुर्भाव पहली बार उस इलाकें में हुआ जहॉ उन्होंने राज्य स्थापित किया, जैसे सिन्ध और मुल्तान के क्षेत्र, किन्तु आधुनिक भारत में इस मृदभाण्ड कला का प्रयोग सल्तनत काल में प्रसारित हुआ। यह सल्तनत पीरियड 1206 ए0डी0से 1526 ए0डी0 के बीच माना जाता है।'' (पेज 214)

'' The Muslim glazed ware for the first time emerged in those areas where they established their reign such as Sindh and Multan regions. But in modern India the art of casting pots spread in the Sultanate period. This Sultanate period is taken to be spanning between 1206AD and 1526 AD.'' (E.T.C.)

''इस मुस्लिम ग्लेज्ड वेयर में नए प्रकार के चित्रण होते थे, जिनमें फ़लोरल डिजाइन, जियोमेट्रिक डिजाइंस तथा सूर्य जैसे डिज़ाइन और अरेबिक आदि लिपि के डिज़ाइन भी होते थे। इस प्रकार के ग्लेज्ड वेयर में पशु – पक्षियों तथा जानवरों के डिज़ाइन प्रायः नहीं होते थे।'' (पेज 215)

"It is wrong to say that the use of glazed ware started in India from the Harappan period. Few glazed ware have been found in buildings of Kushana period, but I do not remember whether they were green and blue in colour. *Green and blue glazed ware can be in limited quantity in pre-Muslim period. However, the type and style of the glazed ware of Sultanate and Mughal period are different. The style is main part of type, but the shape, make, earth etc. are also considered in it. The type of earth used in the glazed ware of medieval period and the different colours & glaze used on it, certainly distinguishes the glazed ware of both these periods and there is no confusion in it." agree with the opinion f the ASI recited in para 2 at page 163 which reads as follows:

"Although, use of glazed tiles in India can be traced back to the early centuries of Christian era when the Kushans introduced them, the tiles, under study at present, most probably belong to the original construction of the disputed structure." (Page 225)

3974. PW 30 (Dr. R.C.Thakran) on this aspect said:

"मेरे शपथ पत्र के प्रस्तर 6 में मुस्लिम ग्लेज्ड वेयर कहा गया है। इसे इसलिए कहा गया है कि चूंकि यह ग्लेज्ड वेयर मुस्लिमों के साथ ही भारतवर्ष में आया था। ऐसा कहना सही नहीं है कि मृद्भाण्ड बनाने की कला भारतवर्ष से ही शुरू हुई थी, अर्थात् यह भारतवर्ष की ही कला है। भारतवर्ष में बर्तन बनाने की कला जो शुरू हुई, वह प्राचीनतम नहीं है इससे पहले दूसरे देशों में भी बर्तन बनाने की शुरूआत हो चुकी थी। हमारे पास ऐसी कोई जानकारी नहीं है कि जिसके आधार पर यह कहा जा सके कि भारत में बर्तन बनाने की कला का प्रारम्भ अरब देश से पहले हो चुका था।" (पेज 124)

"Para 6 of my Affidavit speaks of the Muslim glazed ware. It is so termed because this glazed ware came to India only along with Muslims. "I have referred to glazed tiles in the second line of para-8 to my Affidavit. These are tiles of a particular type and are made with a particular technique. The prevalence of this technique in India began with the advent of the Muslims. Tiles were not 'Khapda' (earthen tiles); rather, they are made of baked earth and are glazed with a particular technique. am not in a position to say as to whether any description of production technique is there or not." (Page 164)

3976. Sri Pandey on the contrary in his written argument submitted:

> The objection of the plaintiffs that the glazed pottery often called "Muslim" glazed ware militates against the presence or construction of a temple. A tabulation of recorded glazed ware sherds according to trench and stratum was essential.... which has been entirely disregarded. How could Muslims have been using glazed ware inside a temple.
> The tradition of glazing of pottery dates back to Harappan culture (2500 – 1500 B.C.) and since then it was known. During Kushan period it was a very popular ware. Gradually the tradition of glazing was lost from India but soon its imports were coming from Persia, Iran and China, where this ware has found favour. This ware is known as Indo-Sassanian Glazed ware, as it was in vogue during the Sassanian rule and later the muslims adopted it (K. K. Mohamad; "Glaze Ware in India" published in Puratattva No. 15 p. 105-110).
> Pottery of any kind is neither Hindu nor Buddhist nor even muslim except some ritual pots which are used in rituals of particular religion. To demarcate pottery ware on religious lines speaks volumes about the oriented mindset only.
>
> A tabulation of glazed ware is maintained in the day-to-day basis according to trench and stratum in the day-to-day register.

Glazed ware has been found mainly from the secondary deposits and not from primary context. The record of the glazed ware in the Day-to-Day register mentions their primary occurrence and tentative layer and depth. The layer identification on day-to-day basis is never final and is liable to change as the identification of pits and disturbances could not be finalized on the very day, but the records could not be changed.

Secondly, a ware has no religion and it transgresses the religious boundary.

The objection of the plaintiffs that Glazed tile are also similarly an index of Muslim habitation. 29 tiles come from Period VIII and 14 from Period VII. One decisive piece of evidence, which entirely negates the possibility of a temple, is that of bones. The statement that the site was not a habitation site from the Period IV onwards upto Period IX stands belied and negated by the animal bone evidence.

www.vadaprativada.com

In this connection it may be submitted that at Shah-ji-Dheri, the Buddhist structure used even glazed tiles. Huein T'sang had seen many places in north India where coloured tiles were used in the roof.

It appears that the Objector has not cared to read the table from pages 164 to 172 in the context of Chapter III "Stratigraphy and Chronology" specially from pages 45 to 47, wherein the disturbances in stratigraphy has been elaborately dealt with. Not a single tile is from confirmed primary context.

3977. For our purposes we do not find that this aspect can

have any material impact on the question which was required to be reported by ASI and it has returned the same in the form of its report. One thing is very clear that the disputed structure was not raised on a vacant or unoccupied or a virgin land but the land in question was in frequent use for several centuries continuously having structures relating to different periods. As we have already discussed, attempt on the part of the Expert (Archaeologist) witnesses of plaintiffs (Suit-4) who described the underneath structure as a Idgah or Kanati mosque makes it very clear that the structure underneath is non religious one but it was a place connected with religious purposes. This is suffice to draw inference that there was a structure over land in question where disputed structure was constructed and that structure related to religious purposes and not non-religious purposes. Then only thing which was to be seen, whether it could be a temple or not. By the process of elimination since it was never a case of Muslim parties that there existed any Islamic religious structure at the place in dispute before construction of the disputed structure or that there existed a religious structure other than Hindus, it leads to an inference as suggested by ASI and mere titbits and minor infirmities in it, even it exist, in our view, are of no consequence, if any.

3978. Then there are some objections with respect to "Pottery", "Inscriptions" and under the general heading of "Other Contradictions and Discrepancies" as under:

> 12. POTTERY
> 12.1 That in Chapter V on Pottery, it is highly significant that the pottery of Periods VII, VIII and IX is all described together (see pp. 108-120). If stratum VII contained a

www.vadaprativada.com

structure so radically different from the mosque in VIII above, why were their finds not kept seperate ?

12.2. That moreover, it is stated (p. 108) that the pottery of Periods VII, VIII and IX is combined together because "there is not much difference" in either wares or shapes. Thus the pottery of an insinuated "temple" structure is said to be of the same types as that of a mosque! Incidentally, chillium and hukka pieces are also recorded in this combined batch of pottery (p. 115). Can we expect such finds in a temple?

13. INSCRIPTIONS :-

13.1. That the short report on Inscriptions(on pages 204-06), one of which is in Nagari, and two are in Arabic, show how casual and preconceived in its notions was the A.S.I. The first is not to be dated with any certitude to the 11th century: its time range could be 7th -12th centuries; and it could be a Pala record of a Buddhist provenance--- a piece of evidence negativing the presence of a Hindu temple. On purely palaeographic grounds, the Arabic inscriptions can be dated to the 13th century with as much reason as to the 16th century.

13.2. That the so- called "Nagari" inscription has only five letters whose right- ward sloping limes in their lower portion proclaim their affinity to the Siddhamatrika script, 7th -12th centuries, out of which the Devanagari script has originated. Five letter are not sufficient to declare the letters as belonging to the 11th century(where the A.S.I. places construction of the "huge" temple. (See for the Sidhamatrika script and characters __ Richard Salomon, Indian Epigraphy, New Delhi, 1998,pp.32, 39-41). Thus the time -range of the inscription should be 7th -12th centuries. The decipherment is also hasty. The reading of the character next to la is ja(With a as in "jar"), not simple Ja with 'a' as 'u' in "judge" . Further the A.S.I. should have asked itself about the suffix pala, which suggests a possible reference to one of the Pala rulers of Bengal and Bihar(8th -11th centuries)who also held eastern U.P. (as shown by an inscription at Sarnath),and used the Siddhamatrika Script. Their well-known patronage of Buddhism seems to be sole reason why the A.S.I. has avoided any further enquiry into the name -Pala found in this inscription.

13.3. That the bias of the A.S.I. is again manifest in how the two Arabic inscriptions found in the debris of the Mosque, are dealt with in the Report, (pages 205-6), with Plates 91 and 92. The A.S.I. epigraphist dates them both to the early sixteenth century, alleged on the basis of the naksh characters employed. He gives no reason why the writing cannot be dated earlier, or placed within a larger range, say 13th - 18th century. In this respect reference may be given to the inscriptions on fronts of the Qutub Minar and the tomb of Iltutamish, both belonging to the first half of the 13th century(given in Tatsuro yanamoto, et al., Delhi:Architectural Remains of the Delhi Sultanate Period,Tokyo, 1967,Plates 2b,6b). It will be seen that the naskh is of the same style. Clearly, the A.S.I. epigraphist has not even considered the possibility of an earlier date, because he know he was expected to hold that all mosque materials must be dated to 1528, so that there be no

thought that anything could belong to an earlier mosque/Eidgah on the site.

13.4. That the floral design of the stone slab in which the word "Allah" has been carved(Plate 92) should show to everyone how absurd it is to take a floral motif as a sure sign of a temple!

14. Other Contradictions and Discrepancies :-

14.1. That there appears to be considerable confusion on the point as to when structural activity first began at the site. For example, on p.37 it is mentioned that, "the site had seen successive structural activities which began from the middle of the Kushan level(Period III)." On p.38 in the section on the Period II (Sunga level) it is mentioned that, "it is this period that the site witnessed first structural activity in stone and brick, as noticed in J3."

www.vadaprativada.com

14.2. That the descriptive term used for certain periods changes from one chapter to another. For example, in Chapter III (Stratigraphy and Chronology), Period VI is described as the Medieval-Sultanate level. In the same chapter, the tentative periodization and schematic cross-section of the mound describes the period as Early Medieval-Sulanate. However, in Chapter V(Pottery) and Chapter X(Summary of Results) this same period is described as Early Medieval. In Chapter X, this period also described as Early Medieval -Rajput. Period VII in Chapter III is described as Medieval but in Chapter V and Chapter X, it is described as Medieval Sultanate.

14.3. That on p.44,it is stated that, "no deposit contemporary to Mughal period exist on the mound

presently." The next page (45) it points out that the last two periods (Mughal and Late Post Mughal) are only represented by structural activities. Further, on p.271,the Report points out that, "there is an increase in contemporary archaeological material including pottery in the Mughal period.

14.4. That on page 41, it is mentioned that the earliest floor extended in the eastern area up to the H series of trenches in sub-period VIIA. In sub -period VIIB, the next floor extended up to trenches J4-J5-J6. On p.42, it is indicated that in sub-period VIIC, the floor associated with the "pillar bases" is the most extensive on the mound. In Fig.23A, however, Floor 4(the said earliest floor) is shown as extending all over the mound while Floor 3 and 2 are more restricted providing a complete contradictory picture.

14.5. That In Chapter III, on p.42, Period VII is described thus:"Total deposit of this period is approximately 50 to 60 cm thick which includes layers 1 and 2 in almost all the trenches except those in the eastern area where the deposit was disturbed by the construction in the later periods and in the northern area where the floor of the Period VIIC remained exposed and under use till late." However, according to the tentative periodization and schematic cross-section in the southern area layer 1 is shown to be clearly belonging to the Mughal period. So does layer 1 in the southern area belong to Period VII or VIII?

14.6*. That on p. 44, while discussing Period IX (Late and Post Mughal level), it is mentioned that first a partition wall was added and later an enclosure wall was built for* the complex. However, it is well known that the Babri Masjid was built with an enclusure wall and around the mid-19th century, the area of the Babri Masjid was partitioned with a wall.

14.7. That on the same page (p.44) and on pp. 70 and 270 it is mentioned that there were burials in the late and post Mughal period (Period IX) in the north and south that have cut the top floors and were sealed by layer 1. According to the A.S.I.'s own admission,on p.42, layer 1 in the southern area is supposed to be of the medieval period while in the schematic cross-section and tentative periodization, layer 1 is of the Mughal period. Therefore, if these burials are sealed by layer 1, then either they belong to the medieval period (Period VII-12th to 16th centuries) or to the Mughal period (period VIII). It may be pointed out that it is in the former period that the alleged temple supposedly stood here.

14.8. That the tabulation of the "pillar bases" from pp. 56-67 mentions the floors on which they rest and in some cases to which they are contemporary. However, the floor numbers do not tally with the information provided in Appendix IV at the end of the text. For example, "pillar base" 22 on pp. 60-61 is indicated as resting on Floor 4 but on p.6 of the appendix, there is no Floor 4 in Trench F2. This discrepancy has been found in 21 cases out of 50.

14.9. That the tabulation of stone architectural fragments, in Chapter VI, also includes non-architectural members like S.No. 3(saddle), S.No. 20(bowl), S.No.48(pestle), S.No.51(pestle), S.No.76 (diya), S.No.78(pestle), S.No.81

(elephant), S.No.90(muller) and S.No. 145(dish). These, if of stone, should have been described in Chapter IX, on miscellaneous objects."

3979. The report of the Archaeological Survey of India, which is a report of an expert in excavation, contains all the details including details of stratigraphy, artifacts, periodisation as well as details of structures and walls. The pillar bases mentioned in the report establish beyond all doubt the existence of a huge structure. In addition to above, existence of circular shrine, stone slabs in walls with Hindu motifs and more particularly sign of Makar Pranal in wall No. 5 (wall of disputed structure), divine couple and other temple materials, etc., conclusively proves the existence of a hindu religious structure beneath the disputed structure. It is generally admitted by the witnesses that the excavation was conducted as per settled norms of archaeology in presence of parties, experts and observers and three dimensional recording, photography, videography of each and every trench, structure, artifacts, were done by the ASI during excavation in presence of all concerned. Day-to-day register, supervisor's diary and antiquity register were being regularly maintained.

3980. There are some more objection which we find not much of worth for the reason that the experts of Muslim parties ultimately, realizing that structure existed underneath the disputed building, hence they made out a new case in their statement. However, a new stand which is not the case of the plaintiff, not pleaded is not permissible.

3981. In Ram Sarup Gupta Vs. Bishun Narain Inter College & others AIR 1987 SC 1242, it was held:

"It is well settled that in the absence of pleading, evidence, if any, produced by the parties cannot be considered. It is also equally settled that no party should be permitted to travel beyond its pleading and that all necessary and material facts should be pleaded by the party in support of the case set up by it. The object and purpose of pleading is to enable the adversary party to know the case it has to meet. In order to have a fair trial it is imperative that the party should state the essential material facts so that other party may not be taken by surprise. The pleadings however should receive a liberal construction, no pedantic approach should be adopted to defeat justice on hair splitting technicalities. Sometimes, pleadings are expressed in words which may not expressly make out a case in accordance with strict interpretation of law, in such a case it is the duty of the Court to ascertain the substance of the pleadings to determine the question. It is not desirable to place undue emphasis on form, instead the substance of the pleadings should be considered. Whenever the question about lack of pleading is raised the enquiry should not be so much about the form of the pleadings, instead; the court must find out whether in substance the parties knew the case and the issues upon which they went to trial. Once it is found that in spite of deficiency in the pleadings parties knew the case and they proceeded to trial on those issues by producing evidence, in that event it would not be open to a party to raise the question of absence of pleadings in appeal."

3982. PW-16 (Surajbhan) formed his opinion in advance

before the receipt of the ASI report and sought to explain that underneath the disputed building there appears to be an Islamic structure existing like Idgah and Kanati mosque. His statement on page 446, 521 and 527 is as under:

''यह सही है कि कुछ इश्यूज़ पर मैंने अपने विचार ए0एस0आई0 की रिपोर्ट के न्यायालय में प्रस्तुत होने के पहले अपनी जानकारी के आधार पर अपने निष्कर्ष निकाले और विचार व्यक्त किये।'' (पेज 446)

"It is true that my conclusions and views on certain issues are based on my knowledge existing prior to the submission of ASI's report in court." (E.T.C.)

''ए0एस0आई0 की इस मामले में रिपोर्ट आने के पश्चात् मैंने तथा प्रो0 इरफ़ान हबीब ने यह बात आने पर कि विवादित स्थल पर मन्दिर के अवशेष मिले हैं, यह वक्तव्य दिया था कि विवादित स्थल पर नीचे पुरानी मस्जिद या ईदगाह के अवशेष मिले हैं न कि मन्दिर के। अगर यह प्रोपोगैण्डा न होता कि विवादित स्थल पर मन्दिर के अवशेष मिले हैं, तो मुझे व प्रो0 इरफ़ान हबीब को उपरोक्त वक्तव्य देने की आवश्यकता नहीं थी।'' (पेज 521)

"Consequent to submission of ASI's report in the matter and the claim that remains of temple were found at the disputed site, I and Prof. Irfan Habib had given this statement that remains of old mosque or Eidgah had been found beneath the disputed site and not of any temple. If this propaganda that remains of temple were found at the disputed site, had not taken place, there would have been no occasion for me and Prof. Irfan Habib to give the above statement." (E.T.C.)

''मेरा विचार है कि विवादित भवन के नीचे दो स्ट्क्चर्स वाल नं0 16 व वाल नं0 17 से संबंधित भवन सल्तनत काल के थें जो किसी इस्लामिक स्ट्क्चर्स रहे होंगे, जैसे ईदगाह या क़नाती मसिजद आदि–आदि।.. . . .यह दोनों दीवारें किसी हिन्दू भवन की मालूम नहीं होती थीं, बल्कि सल्तनत

पीरियड के किसी मुस्लिम भवन की रही होंगी।'' (पेज 527)

"In my view the buildings related to wall nos. 16 & 17, the two structure beneath the disputed structure, were of the Sultanate period and must have been some Islamic structures such as Eidgah or Kanati mosque etc.. . . . . Both these walls do not appear to be of some Hindu building and instead must have been of some Muslim building of the Sultanate period." (E.T.C.)

3983. Similarly, PW-29 (Jaya Menon) on page 157 said:

"It was Dr. Supriya Varma and myself, who, for the first time, said that there was an Idgah under the disputed structure. I did not know that the plaintiffs of OOS no. 4 of 1989 had not claimed any Idgah under the disputed structure." (Page 157)

3984. PW-30 (Dr. R.C.Thakaran) on page 169 said:

"विवादित स्थल पर मई सन् 2003 में खुदाई के दौरान मुझे यह ज्ञात हुआ कि विवादित स्थल के नीचे मस्जिद/ईदगाह थी। खुदाई के दौरान दीवार को देखने से तथा ए0एस0आई0 की रिपोर्ट देखने से मुझे ऐसा लगा कि बाबरी मस्जिद या उसके पूर्व की मस्जिद/ईदगाह बनाने में जो मैटीरियल पुनः प्रयोग में लाया गया है, वह कहीं आस–पास से लाकर इस्तेमाल किया गया है।'' (पेज 169)

"In 2003, in course of excavation at the disputed site, I came to know that there was a mosque/Eidgah beneath the disputed site. Seeing the wall in course of the excavation and going through the ASI report, it seemed to me that the materials reused in the construction of the Babri masjid or its prior mosque/Eidgah, had been brought from somewhere nearby and then used." (E.T.C.)

3985. It is true that all these experts were representing, in fact, a particular party, they were all, in one or the other manner

connected with each other. The statement of PW-32 (Dr. Supriya Varma) is:

> "I have done my Ph. D. under Prof. Shereen Ratnagar." (Page 72)
>
> "All these chapters on archaeology were written by me and Dr. Jaya Menon." (Page 73)
>
> "Both Dr. Jaya Menon and myself are archaeologist by specialization. Dr. Jaya Menon and I are equally competent." (Page 74)
> (Note: Shereen Ratnagar is PW-27)

3986. Normally, it does not happen but we are surprised to see in the zeal of helping their clients or the parties in whose favour they were appearing, these witnesses went ahead than what was not even the case of the party concerned and wrote totally a new story. Evidence in support of a fact which has never been pleaded and was not the case of the party concerned is impermissible in law. Suffice it to mention at this stage that even this stand of these experts make it clear that the disputed structure stood over a piece of land which had a structure earlier and that was of religious nature. Minor mistakes and irregularities in ASI report, if any, do not shake the basic finding that the disputed structure claimed was not raised on a virgin land or unoccupied land but there existed a structure and using some part thereof either in the form of foundation or using the material thereof, the disputed structure was created. Whether lime mortar or lime plaster from a particular period or not, whether glazed ware were Islamic or available in Hindustan earlier are all subsidiary questions particularly when this much at least came to be admitted by the experts of the objectionists parties i.e. the plaintiffs (Suit-4) that there existed a structure, walls etc. used as foundation walls in construction of the building in dispute and underneath at least four floors at different levels were found with lots of several other structures.

3987. In these circumstances, now it would be appropriate to refer to the finding of ASI in Chapter 10 under the heading "Summary of Results":

> "Excavation at the disputed site of Rama Janmabhumi - Babri Masjid was carried out by the Archaeological Survey of India from 12 March 2003 to 7 August 2003. During this period, as per the directions of the Hon'ble High Court, Lucknow, 82 trenches were excavated to verify the anomalies mentioned in the report of the Ground Penetrating Radar Survey which was conducted at the site prior to taking up the excavations. A total number of 82 trenches along with some of their baulks were checked for anomalies and anomaly alignments. The anomalies were confirmed in the trenches in the form of pillar bases, structures, floors and foundation though no such remains were noticed in some of them at the stipulated depths and spots. Besides the 82 trenches, a few more making a total of 90 finally were also excavated keeping in view the objective fixed by the Hon'ble High Court to confirm the structures.
> The results of the excavation are summarized as here under:
>
> The northern Black Polished Ware (NBPW) using people were the first to occupy the disputed site at Ayodhya. During the first millennium B.C. although no

structural activities were encountered in the limited area probed, the material culture is represented by terracotta figurines of female deities showing archaic features, beads of terracotta and glass, wheels and fragments of votive tanks etc. The ceramic industry has the collection of NBPW, the main diagnostic trait of the period besides the grey, black slipped and red wares. A round signet with legend in Asokan Brahmi is another important find of this level. On the basis of material equipment and 14 C dates, this period may be assigned to circa 1000 B.C. to 300 B.C.

The Sunga horizon (second-first century B.C.) comes next in the order of the cultural occupation at the site. The typical terracotta mother goddess, human and animal figurines, beads, hairpin, engraver etc. represent the cultural matrix of this level. The pottery collection includes black slipped, red and grey wares etc. The stone and brick structure found from this level mark the beginning of the structural activity at the site.

The Kushan period (first to third century A.D.) followed the Sunga occupation. Terracotta human and animal figurines, fragments of votive tanks, beads, antimony rod, hair pin, bangle fragments and ceramic industry comprising red ware represent the typical Kushan occupation at the site. Another important feature of this period is the creation of large sized structures as witnesses by the massive structure running into twenty-two courses.

The advent of Guptas (fourth to sixth century A.D.) did not bring any qualitative change in building activity although the period is known for its Classical artistic elements. However, this aspect is represented by the typical terracotta figurines and a copper coin with the legend Sri Chandra (Gupta) and illustrative potsherds.

During the Post-Gupta-Rajput period (seventh to tenth century A.D.), too the site has witnessed structural activity mainly constructed of burnt bricks. However, among the exposed structures, there stands a circular brick shrine which speaks of its functional utility for the first time. To recapitulate quickly, exteriorly on plan, it is circular whereas internally squarish with an entrance from the east. Though the structure is damaged, the northern wall still retains a provision for pranala, i.e., waterchute which is a distinct feature of contemporary temples already known from the Ganga-Yamuna plain.

Subsequently, during the early medieval period (eleventh - twelfth century A.D.) a huge structure, nearly 50 m in north-south orientation was constructed which seems to have been short lived, as only four of the fifty pillar bases exposed during the excavation belong to this level with a brick crush floor. On the remains of the above structure was constructed a massive structure with at least three structural phases and three successive floors attached with it. The architectural members of the earlier short lived massive structure with stencil cut foliage pattern. And other decorative motifs were reused in the construction of the monumental structure having a huge pillared hall (or two halls) which is different from residential structures, providing sufficient evidence of a construction of public usage which remained under existence for a long time during the period VII (Medieval-Sultanate level - twelfth to sixteenth century A.D.) It was over the top of this construction during the early sixteenth century, the disputed structure was constructed directly resting over it. There is sufficient proof of existence of a massive and monumental structure having a minimum dimension of 50x30 m in north-south and east-west directions respectively just below the disputed structure. In course of present excavations nearly 50 pillar bases with brick bat foundation, below calcrete blocks topped by sandstone blocks were found. The pillar bases exposed during the present excavation in northern and southern areas also give an idea of the length of the massive wall of the earlier construction with which they are associated and which might have been originally around 60 m (of which the 50 m length is available at present). The centre of the central chamber of the disputed structure falls just over the central point of the length of the massive wall of the preceding period which could not be excavated due to presence of Ram Lala at the spot in the make-shift structure. This area is roughly 15x15 m on the raised platform. Towards east of this central point a circular depression with projection on the west, cut into the large sized brick pavement, signify the place where some important object was placed. Terracotta lamps from the various trenches and found in a group in the levels of Periods VII in trench G2 are associated with the structural phase.

In the last phase of the period VII glazed ware sherds make their appearance and continue in the succeeding levels of the next periods where they are accompanied by glazed tiles which were probably used in the original construction of the disputed structure. Similarly is the case of celadon and porcelain sherds recovered in a very less quantity they come from the secondary context. Animal bones have been recovered from various levels of different periods, but skeletal remains noticed in the trenches in northern and southern areas belong to the Period IX as the grave pits have been found cut into the deposition coeval with the late disputed structures and are sealed by the top deposit.

It is worthwhile to observe that the various structures exposed right from the Sunga to Gupta period do not speak either about their nature or functional utility as no evidence has come to approbate them. Another noteworthy feature is that it was only during and after Period IV (Gupta level) onwards upto Period IX (late and post Mughal level) that the regular habitational deposits disappear in the concerned levels and the structural phases are associated with either structural debris or filling material taken out from the adjoining area to the level the ground for construction purpose. As a result of which much of the earlier material in the form of pottery, terracottas and other objects of preceding periods, particularly of Period I (NBPW level) and Period III (Kushan level) are found in the deposits of later periods mixed along with their contemporary material. The area below the disputed site thus, remained a place for public use for a long time till the Period VIII (Mughal level) when the disputed structure was built which was confined to a limited area and population settled around it as evidenced by the increase in contemporary archaeological material including pottery. The same is further attested by the conspicuous absence of habitational structures such as house-complexes, soakage pits, soakage jars, ring wells, drains, wells, hearths, kilns or furnaces etc. from Period IV (Gupta level) onwards and in particular from Period VI (Early Medieval-Rajput level) and Period VII (Medieval-Sultanate level).

The site has also proved to be significant for taking back its antiquarian remains for the first time to the middle of the thirteenth century B.C. (1250±130 B.C.) on the analogy of the C14 dates. The lowest deposit above the natural soil represents the NBPW period and therefore the earliest remains may belong to the thirteenth century B.C. which is confirmed by two more consistent C14 dates from the NBPW level (Period I), viz. (910±100 B.C.) These dates are from trench G7. Four more dates from the upper deposit though showing presence of NPBW and associated pottery are determined by Radio-Carbon dating as 780±80 B.C., 530±70 B.C. And 320±80 B.C.. In the light of the above dates in association with the Northern Black Polished Ware (NBPW) which is generally accepted to be between circa 600 B.C. to 300 B.C. it can be pushed back to circa 1000 B.C. and even if a solitary date, three centuries earlier is not associated with NBPW, the human activity at the site dates back to circa thirteenth century B.C. on the basis of the scientific dating method providing

the only archaeological evidence of such an early date of the occupation of the site.

The Hon'ble High Court, in order to get sufficient archaeological evidence on the issue involved "whether there was any temple/structure which was demolished and mosque was constructed on the disputed site "as stated on page 1 and further on p.5 of their order dated 5 march 2003, had given directions to the Archaeological Survey of India to excavate at the disputed site where the GPR Survey has suggested evidence of anomalies which could be structure, pillars, foundation walls, slab flooring etc. which could be confirmed by excavation. Now, viewing in totality and taking into account the archaeological evidence of a massive structure just below the disputed structure and evidence of continuity in structural phases from the tenth century onwards upto the construction of the disputed structure alongwith the yield of stone and decorated bricks as well as mutilated sculpture of divine couple and carved architectural members including foliage patterns, amalaka, kapotapali doorjamb with semi-circular pilaster, broken octagonal shaft of black schist pillar, lotus motif, circular shrine having pranala (waterchute) in the north, fifty pillar bases in association of the huge structure, are indicative of remains which are distinctive features found associated with the temples of north India."

3988. It is contented that the ASI report does not answer the question framed by this Court, inasmuch as, neither it clearly says whether there was any demolition of the earlier structure if existed and whether that structure was a temple or not.

3989. In our view, the conclusion drawn by the ASI in the project accomplished within an extra-ordinary brief period and with such an excellence precision and perfection deserve commendation and appreciation instead of condemnation. It normally happens when an expert body tender an opinion, the party, who finds such opinion adverse to its interest, feels otherwise and try to rid of such opinion by taking recourse to all such measures as permissible but in the present case we hoped a better response particularly when the expert body involved is a pioneer and premier archaeological body of this country having International repute. We are satisfied that the report of ASI not only deserve to be accepted but it really helps this Court in forming its opinion on an important issue in this regard. All the objections against ASI, therefore, are rejected.

3990. ASI, in our view, has rightly refrained from recording a categorical finding whether there was any demolition or not for the reason when a building is constructed over another and that too hundreds of years back, it may sometimes be difficult to ascertain as to in what circumstances building was raised and whether the earlier building collapsed on its own or due to natural forces or for the reason attributable to some persons interested for its damage. Sufficient indication has been given by ASI that the building in dispute did not have its own foundation but it was raised on the existing walls. If a building would not have been existing before construction of the subsequent building, the builder might not have been able to use foundation of the erstwhile building without knowing its strength and capacity of bearing the load of new structure. The floor of the disputed building was just over the floor of earlier

building. The existence of several pillar bases all show another earlier existence of a sufficiently bigger structure, if not bigger than the disputed structure then not lessor than that also.

3991. Learned counsel for the plaintiffs (Suit-5) vehemently contended that the disputed structure (hereinafter referred to as "DS") was raised after demolishing a Hindu temple at the site in dispute, which was believed to be a birthplace of Lord Rama in the light of the various evidence collectively taken into consideration as under:

I. The existence of Hindu Temple at the site of DS is indicated in Historical Sketch of Faizabad, 1870, by P. Carnegy Commissioner/Settlement Officer Oudh (paper no 3 of Ramlala's Documents, Ext. OOS 5: 49) which mentions 3 important Hindu Shrines 'at the time of Mohammedan conquest', namely Janmasthan, Swargadwar & Treta-ka-Thakur and that at Janmasthan Emperor Babar built the Mosque (page 21). Mention of Janmasthan to be a Shrine indicates pre-existence of a Hindu Temple at the site of DS. Oudh Gazetteer of 1877 (Ext. OOS 5: 7), Millet's Report of 1888 (Ext. OOS 5: 8), Archaeological Survey of NWP and Oudh of 1889 (OOS 5: Paper 107C1/31-32), Fuhrer's account of 1891 (Ext. OOS 5: 9) and Imperial Gazetteer of 1901 (Ext. OOS 5:10), all mention pre-existence of a Hindu Temple at the site of DA.

II. Further recovery of the large Stone-Slab, 115 cm X 55 cm (vide Report dated 3.2.2002 Ext. OOS 5-2, of OTW 10) containing a 20 line Inscription of a Vishnu-Hari Temple. Recovery of the Stone-Slab was proved by OPW 8 Ashok Chatterji. Contents of this Inscription were proved

by OPW 10 Dr. K.V.Ramesh, Director Epigraphy of Govt. of India/Joint Director Archaeological Survey of India. The Inscription describes construction of Vishnu-Hari Temple by Anay Chand a Governor of King Govind Chand of Gahadwal Dynasty and Dr. K.V.Ramesh proved that the period of the inscription must be around 12th Century AD. Govind Chand was the ruler of Gahadwal dynasty from 1110 to 1156 (vide Dr. Bishan Bahadur DW 13/1-3). The recovery of this stone slab is reminiscent of recovery of another stone slab from the ruins of a mosque erected by Aurangzeb known as Treta-ka-Thakur Masjid at the site of Treta-ka-Thakur Mandir in Ayodhya; the inscription on that stone slab is dated Samvat 1241 (=1184 AD) of the times of King Jai Chand of Kannauj and records praises of Jai Chand for erecting a Vaishnav Temple (See paper nos 6 and 7 – of 1889 & 1891 - of Ramlala's documents Ext. OOS 5: 8 & 9). The significance is that the stone slab affixed to Treta-ka-Thakur Mandir was used in the structure of Masjid erected in place of the Mandir. It is quite probable that Stone-Slab recovered from DS belonged to Hari-Vishnu Temple that stood at the site of DS hence was made use of in constructing DS; after all the builder would have needed big stones – and this Stone-Slab, 115 cm X 55 cm could easily be one. Further, admittedly 14 Kasauti Pillars bearing carved figures of Hindu gods & goddesses, standing/supporting portions of Babri Masjid structure were seen by Faizabad Civil Court Commissioner, Shiv Shanker Lal, on inspection in April 1950.

III. The findings of ASI Report must be appreciated in the light of a most important factual & legal angle of the Parties' Case. This litigation commenced in 1950. From the very beginning, it has been the case of Hindu Parties that at the spot of Babri Masjid, there had existed a Temple and that the Masjid was erected at the site of the Temple after demolishing it, while it has been the case of Muslim Parties that the site was a barren vacant piece of land which came to be vested in Babar as Emperor/Sovereign who had conquered the Delhi throne. ASI excavation revealed pre-existence of 'massive structure' underneath DS. The Muslim Parties did not amend their Pleadings to take any alternative plea to meet the discovery of the massive structure beneath DS; legally, they cannot be heard to say that there had existed some Muslim religious structure at the site in whose place Babri Masjid was erected.

IV. Without prejudice to detailed submissions on ASI Report elsewhere, suffice it to mention here that the Western Wall (W5) of DS stands directly over Western Wall (W16) of the Temple without any layer of earth or other strata between the two walls which should have existed at the top if there was no structure on spot when construction of Babri Masjid commenced. W5 standing directly over W16, proves that Babri Masjid was erected over and with full knowledge of pre-existence of a structure. ASI found 50 pillar bases of pillars which could support a roof (some of them inside the baulk between trenches), a Subsidiary Shrine of Lord Shiva (in the Southern portion of the disputed area), a number of walls attached to Temple's old Wall (W16), several walls running

www.vadaprativada.com

East-West as well as North-South showing 'Massive Structure' below DS, mutilated Uma-Maheshwara Divine Couple stone sculpture (a typical feature of Iconoclastic behaviour) and a number of 'finds' which would typically belong to a Hindu Temple.

V. It was argued on behalf of Sunni Board that Wall 16 could be a Kanati Mosque or Eid-gah or some other Muslim religious structure. This contention is not acceptable for want of Pleading (indeed against their Pleading); it also fails structurally and does not explain several other walls found attached to Wall 16. The existence of a 'Mandir Janmasthan Ram Chandra at Birthpalce of Ram since ancient times with Idols of Ram Chandra ji & others installed therein' is admitted in para 27 of joint WS dt. 2.12.1950 of 5 Muslim Defendants (D1 to D5) in OOS 1 of 1989 (filed by Gopal Singh Visharad). The said Defendants had vaguely pleaded that that Temple 'existed in Ayodhya' – the exact spot was not specified. Plaintiff Gopal Singh Visharad explained in para 27 of his Replication that that Temple was situated within boundaries described by him which sets its location to be close towards North of East-West Rasta which runs abutting on the North side of disputed area. This situation is admitted by Sunni Board in para 32 of their written statement dated 24.2'89 to Visharad's suit (see para 5 above). The significance of this set of pleadings is that as early as 1950, Muslims had admitted existence of a (i)Temple of Ram Chandra (ii) at birthplace of Ram (iii) since ancient times. It cannot be argued that the 'admission'

by the 5 Muslim Defendants must be accepted or rejected 'as a whole', because the pleading is designedly half-truth and it is open to Court to 'separate the grain from the chaff'. The existence of such a temple does not find mention in the earliest independent account of the locality by Tieffenthaler in 1786 although other tell-tale details were recorded as indicated in para 17 above; it would have found mention if it was reputed as a Janmasthan temple. The important aspect of these Pleadings must be appreciated. Besides the above admissions in para 27 of joint WS of the 5 Muslim Defendants, an oral pleading was made by their Lawyer under Order X CPC that Babar erected Babri Masjid on entirely barren/open land over or under which there never existed any structure of any sort. Two of these Defendants are also Co-Plaintiffs in Sunni Board's Plaint filed 10 years later; consequently the admissions made by the Muslim Defendants in OOS 1 of 1989 (written or oral) are legally binding upon Sunni Board in OOS 4 of 1989, and they cannot take a case of Kanati Masjid, Eid-gah or other Muslim religious structure underneath DS.

VI Certain nomenclatures which have figured from time to time could call for elucidation. 'Masjid Janmasthan', prima-facie indicates a Masjid which exists at Janmasthan, otherwise it could have been named as 'Masjid Ramkot'. 'Chabutra Janmasthan', which Tieffenthaler mentioned to be indicative of place of birth of Ram and his 3 brothers cannot signify exactly the spot where the 4 brothers could have been born. Dashrath had 3 queens each of whom had her own palace. Carnegy's account (1870) mentions that Ramkot, the Fort had 8 royal mansions where dwelt Dashrath and his wives. Obviously, the Chabutra alone could not be the place where Dashrath, his 3 wives could live and give birth to 4 children. That is why Mahant Raghubar Das mentioned in his plaint (1885) that in Ayodhya there was Bhumi Janmasthan containing Chabutra Janmasthan, that he was Mahant of Bhumi Janmasthan and was in possession of Chabutra Janmasthan with a small Temple on it. 'Bhumi Janmasthan' could be the entire Palace situated at Ramkot including the site of DS while for reasons of caution and wisdom, 'Chabutra Janmasthan' could be called as birthplace of Ram. In any case, the entire area within the parameter of Parikrama was treated by the devotees as hallowed by divinity, hence worshipped as Bhumi Janmasthan, viz., the disputed area. Indeed, both the Courts in Mahant Raghubar Das' case were persuaded to reject the prayer for erecting a Temple on Chabutra Janmasthan because a Temple could not be allowed to exist in immediate vicinity of Masjid otherwise it could lead to perpetual bloodshed. That is why Hindu devotees/Mahant etc content themselves with calling the Chabutra as Janmasthan while continuing to extend their possession in the Campus and perform worship also inside DS.

VII The Archeological Survey of India on the basis of excavation conducted under the orders of the court within the stipulated period in presence of the parties and judge observers submitted its report in accordance with the

settled norms confirming existence of Hindu religious structures underneath of the disputed structures and existence of divine couple in addition to various finds relating to temple including broken pieces of divine couple. It also found structural activities during post Gupta Rajput period from 7th to 10th Century A.D. as well as construction of massive structure and walls during 10th to 12th Century. Some of the walls were seen extending beyond the area excavated by ASI. In addition to existence of 50 pillar bases out of which 4 associated with the earlier structure belonging to Period IV of 11th and 12th Century A. D. were also reported. The Archeological Survey of India expressed its views that on the basis of excavation conducted on spot and finds of excavation proves existence of massive structure with 3 structural phases and 3 successive floors attached to them is proved. The pillar bases with brick bat foundation below calcrete block also establish the existence of load bearing pillar at the disputed site. It is pertinent to mention here that according to basic principle of civil engineering, the load is distributed on brackets put over the top of the pillar. The disputed structure had no foundation of its own which was constructed on and pre existing structure/ wall i.e. wall no. 16 (12th Century A. D.) which too rests over wall No. 17 (11th to 12th Century A. D.). During excavation by the Archeological Survey of India no feature of habitational activity was found right from Gupta period to early Rajput period. The periodization was done on the basis of archaeological principles which was also confirmed by scientific investigation like carbon dating of various sites. The kind of excavation is indicative of remains of North Indian Temples.

VIII The contention of plaintiffs that use of lime motors was started by Muslim Emperors is baseless. It is well established that Choona Surkhi (lime mortars were used by the builder of the disputed structure right from 600 B. C. The excavations at Kausambi Mathura, Karwan (Gujarat) Bhitri (Ghajipur) Nalanda Taxila Ganwaria etc. proves that Choona and Surkhi with lime plaster where commonly used. R.S. Sharma in his book "Perspectives in Social and Economic History of Early India" has expressed similar opinion. Prof. Sharma in his book referring about use of Choona Surkhi at page 181 mentions as under:-

www.vadaprativada.com

IX "No background study of trends in the economic history of Mathura can be complete without some idea of the technological factors operating in this Period. There is little doubt that unbanism reached its climax in northern and western India in this period. Several factors contributed to it. One such factor was the change in building methods. At Mathura and Ganwaria in Basti district in north-eastern Uttar Pradesh the flooring was made of brick concrete mixed with lime. This indicates the use of Surkhi which contributed to the stability of structures. Further, baked, tiles for roofing appear in the period at several places in both the Satavahana and Kusana zones including Mathura. These innovations added to the solidity and longevity of urban structures in the early centuries of the Christian era."

X. Dr. H.C. Bhardwaj – Ex-Professor of History of Technology of B.H.U., in his article titled "Town planning, building and building materials" also expressed similar view and while referring to mortars and plaster expressed his opinion that the earliest use of lime and gypsum comes from Indus civilization.

XI*. Lime mortars have been used at Kausambi from 600 B.C. to A.D. 100. But it may be emphasized that by and large only mud mortar and plaster were used. The results of the chemical analysis (Table 2 and 3) show that the content of sand in the mortar was slightly higher than that in plasters. The average ratio of sand : lime* $Ca(OH)_2$ is about 1:1, whereas in the case of mortars the average is 2:1. For mortars, probably 2 parts of sand were mixed with one part of slaked lime.

XII*. Lime Plaster from Karwan (Dt. Vadodara, Gujrat) from pre-Gupta levels : From the analysis (Table 4) it is clear that two types of plaster was used. Samples 1 to 4 represent the upper coat of the plaster and 5 to 8 represent lower rough plaster. The former has higher content of lime as compared to the latter. Fine layer was laid and burnished to make it smooth and elegant.*

XIII Lime plaster from Bhitari (Dt. Gazipur, U.P.) (Gupta Period) : shows low grade lime plaster (Table 5) was used at the brick temple of Gupta period. It has sand and lime ratio of 6:1. The red colour of the plaster/mortar is due to the use of ferruginous kankar for preparation of lime.

XIV. *Lime plaster from excavations at Nalanda (7^{th}-*10^{th}

century A.D.) (Table 6) shows 3 parts of lime (calcium carbonate) and 2 parts of sand. Some of the monasteries are thickly plastered. Jars with dried up mortar and a cell used as a cistern in monastery No. 11 are indicative of the preparation of concrete.

XVI At Arikamedu lime mortar is reported from historical period. Use of lime is also attested from Hullas Khera (Dt. Lucknow) from Kusan-Gupta levels and from Banagrah (Dt. Dinajpur) where use of time and Surkhi is known from Gupta and Pala Levels. At Purana Quila lime plastered gutter connected with house drains is reported from levels datable to 8th – 9th century A.D.*

XVII. In addition to above excavations at Arikmedu in Pandicherry proves use of like model from early historical period of 1st Century A.D. Use of lime is also proved from excavations at Hulaskhera District Lucknow from Kushan Gupta levels.*

XVIII. It is thus fully established that lime mortar, lime plaster, Surkhi choona were in use in India continuously much before the arrival of Muslims in India. It is well established that lime and surkhi was used prior to 1st century B.C. and was in continuous use as such the objection of Sunni Central Waqf Board and others Muslim parties to the effect that lime surkhi made appearance from Islamic period is without any basis and mearly an objection for the shake of objection only.*

XIX. Moreover, on the contrary, there is not a single evidence to prove it otherwise. The objectors have used phrases 'Muslim construction' several times. What is a 'muslim construction'? Islamic architecture or Indo-Islamic architecture are better generic terms. Then the objector says "muslim built domed circular buildings" as an alternative explanation, but it gets self-negated by their own arguments in the next para of their objections.

XX. The report of ASI was challenged by the plaintiffs on the grounds that of the other architectural fragments, majority of these come from the dump or fill and were in many cases part of the Babari Masjid (Disputed Structure) walls; only 40 came from stratified contexts. None of which were specific to a temple and are of no significance. It is also stated that the Srivatsa is of Jainism, and Lotus design could be Buddhist but not of Islamic architecture. In this connection it may be mentioned that in early period of Islamic invasion and rule in India several mosques and other religious constructions were raised, in very short period, by the rulers, ruling elites directly or by their orders after destroying existing Hindu temples and other structures. The dressed construction material which recovered from the destruction of temples was freely utilized by the Muslim builders. In such a situation the architecture that resulted by using Indian motifs and decorations in mosques or tombs was termed Indo-Islamic, which evidently not by the choice of the ruler rather perforce of the existing situation. It was more a case of architectural conversion of Hindu temples into Islamic mosques and tombs. The purpose of the construction after destruction was simple-to establish the suzerainty of Islam and terror among the native Indians. This fact was at times boldly advertised too. At Quwwat-ul-Islam mosque near Qutab Minar in Delhi where the inscription very clearly proclaim so Ardhai-din-ka-Jhopara is another example.

XXI. So far as Srivatsa is concerned, primarily it is a Vaishnava symbol, representing Laksmi, Consort of Vishnu. Lotus is also, primarily Vaishnava symbol.(Reference may be made by the Dictionary of Iconography)*

XXII.The objection of the plaintiffs that the octagonal stone block having so-called floral motif has been compared with the used in Dharmachakrajina Vihar at Sarnath. There is not the least similarity between the two. Sarnath is rectangular while Ayodhya one is octagonal on plan. The Sarnath specimen depict motif in slightly low relief while on Ayodhya one it is ni very bold relief.*

XXIII. There is similarity of decoration and purpose and functional use of the pillar or bases, they are not the exact replicas. The depth of the carved motif is no criteria for dissimilarity. It is after all hand made and that too by possibly different men. The suggested similarity is only for the aforesaid points and in them there is sufficient similarity and enough basis to arrive at a tentative date for the two.*

XXIV. The objection of the plaintiffs that Nagari inscription is not to be dated with any certitude to the 11th century; its time range could be 7th-12th centuries. The Arabic inscription can be dated to 13th century with as* much reason as to the 16th century. The decipherment is hasty; it is Siddhmatrika script and should be dated to 7th-12th century. A.S.I. should have itself about the Pala suffix which suggests a possible reference to one of the Pala rulers of Bengal and Bihar.

XXV. In this connection it may be submitted that the date of 11th century has been reached after comparing the letters and is well researched and not arbitrary as the off-hand conclusion of the Objector. It is an unfounded possibility raised against a well-researched academic conclusion. Baseless arguments.*

XXVI. The Pala suffix to names was not used only by the rulers of Bengal and Bihar. Rajput rulers also used this suffix. Dating of the inscriptions is fine. There is no necessity to draw inferences about some ruler mentioned from the five letter extant broken inscription which not even shows all letters of equal size which should have been there had it been some royal inscription.*

XXVII. The objection of the plaintiff regarding successive structural activities is baseless. It may be submitted that there is some difference in the "first" and "successive" structural activities. The structural activity noticed in the early part of the Sunga level does not have any evidence continued in the succeeding phase of the Sunga level itself. It is definitely the first activity witnessed and exposed by the excavation.*

XXVIII. Where as in the Kushan level the structures that are build continue in the succeeding phases and periods without any appreciable break. Learned counsels*

are expected to appreciate the difference between the two statements.

XXIX. In the Tentative Periodization and Schematic Cross Section the trenches included do not belong to southern area nor there is any reference to the southern trenches. The Schematic Cross Section is west to east. It is gross misrepresentation of the facts to mislead the Court. The conclusion regarding the gradual building of partition wall and the enclosure wall is based on hard archaeological facts.

XXX. Most of the burial were found in the northern side out side the enclosure wall and were sealed by layer one, while on the south side the pit line of the one burial excavated was open to surface which also lies outside the enclosed area.

XXXI. The objection of the plaintiff that ASI has distorted evidence to suit its temple theory is shown by its treatment of mihrab (arched recess) and taq (niche) found in the western wall, which it turns into features of its imagined temple. The objection of the plaintiff is nearly for the shake of the objection to criticize the report only. During excavation recessed niches where found which have been detailed on page 68 of the report. The report described as under:-

XXXII. "At an interval of 4.60 m in the inner side of the wall 16 in its first phase of construction two recessed niches were found 0.20 m deep and 1.0 m wide along the face of the wall and 0.78 m wide at its deeper side with 0.02 m thick lime plaster in trenches E6 and E7. The niche

in E6 was exposed while the niche in E7 was found attached with the E7-E8 baulk. A similar niche was found in ZE2 in the northern area with same dimensions (Pl. 49). All of these three niches were closed during the second phase of construction when the floor level was raised and wall was raised above the ten original courses."

XXXIII. It is merely the physical description of the three "recessed niches" devoid of any suggestions or relationship, even tentative. Even the "Summary of Results" does not speak about the alleged distortions; there is no turning of these 'recessed niches' into 'features of (its) imagined temple'. However it may be noticed that temples do have niches both inside and outside its walls where subsidiary idols or images are placed.

XXXIV. So far plaintiff objection regarding mihrabs or Taq are concerned it must be noted that ASI did not used any of these expression rather simply mentioned " recessed niches". Plaintiffs have……. that expression to mean mihrab or taq. No such evidence was found during excavation as could have indicated that these three niches in wall No. 16 had any are indeed all these nitches where closed during the operation of raising the floor level above to original brick courses have scraped attention of ASI when the closer of operation was notice.

XXXV. No "Taq" has been found during the excavation. Professor R. Nath, Retired Professor & Head of the Department of History and Indian Culture, University of Rajasthan, Jaipur, referring to the niche found in excavation at Ayodhya expressed his opinion which was published in History Today (An archeological general) part 4 of 2003. According to him the lower part of a recessed niche has been discovered in the recent excavations at Ayodhya (The ASI report 2002-2003 , submitted to the High Court Allahabad, Plate -49: "A Niche in the north-south oriented brick walls" TR-ZE2) (Plate-1 herewith). It is built of brick masonry which was plastered over. Its plan is rectangular with a single recess (offset) making a Karnika (corner) in it. Its floor is also of brick and it is there courses (of brick masonry) higher than the floor-level of the room on which it opens, and of which it is a part.

XXXVI. According to objections wall No. 16 belongs to a pre Mughal open Kanti Mosque or Idgah. Fundamentally this claim must be thrown out of consideration because none of the Plaintiffs or objectors even pleaded that disputed structure was even erected over a pre-existing Kanti Mosque or Idgah. They did not even argued their pleading after ASI examination. A Kanti (so called) because it has a kanat i.e. a curtain. Mosque or Idgah has no nitches. It is a straight plain wall.. In India, such an open "curtain" mosque which does not have a "Liwan" (prayer-hall) or any other paraphernalia attached to it, and is just a wall, has 5 or 7 or 11 arches, as a rule and a single arch cannot make-up a "Qanati" mosque. Technically, it is an arcade and such arcade- walls were build in Idgahs and graveyards for facilitating "Fatiha" prayer, during the whole medieval period (1192-1803 A.D.). A single arch, even if it was there, cannot be branded

a "Qanati" mosque or "Idgah" and his claim shows that he is not, at all, conversant with the subject.

XXXVII. Equally important is the fact. Secondly, that a "qiblah-mihrab" (an arch in the centre of the western wall of a tomb or mosque, denoting the direction of the Ka'bah) is an arch, roofed by a half-cup shaped vault, both of which have tremendous lateral thrust. Hence, stone nook-shafts are invariably used on the corners of such a mihrab, as are there in the mosques of Jaunpur and Delhi (of the Sultanate period, 1192-1526 A.D.), for example, without any exception. But lithic nook-shafts are not there on the corners of this niche. It is architecturally inconceivable to build an arch, roofed by a vault, in a brick masonry without stone nook-shafts, and if stone nook-shafts are not there to take the load, and counter the lateral thrust of the arch and vault, there cannot be a mihrab. Structurally therefore, there was no arch or vault, and it was just a single, rectangular niche – which is what the ASI Report says.*

XXXVIII. It has also to be noticed, thirdly, that the floor-level of this niche is three courses higher than the floor-level of the room on which it opens. This is possible only when it was made as a niche or "alaya" for placing an image, or for a similar other purpose. The mihrab and the Liwan (sanctuary or prayer-hall of a mosque) are always and without any exception, built on the same floor-level, and there is not a single example where a mihrab is built on a higher level as a niche for keeping things. Hence this cannot be identified as a mihrab in any case.*

XXXIX. A perusal of the objection filed by the SCBW*

makes it clear that the objection has been filed on baseless and concocted facts and no material evidence has been produced by the opposite parties in support thereof. The SCBW in support of its objection has examined as much as seven witnesses out of which six witnesses namely Prof. Suraj Bhan (PW-16), Prof. Dhaneshwar Mandal (PW-24), Dr Jaya Menon (PW-29), Dr R.C. Thakran (PW-30), Dr Ashok Dutta (PW-31), Dr Supriya Verma (PW-32) are said to be experts of excavation. But a scrutiny of the cross examination of these witnesses makes it clear that except Prof. Suraj Bhan none of them has any experience of field archaeology. Prof. Suraj Bhan, who has conducted some excavations as mentioned by him in his affidavit, made it clear during cross examination that the reports of the alleged excavation have not been published so far.

XL. The plaintiffs of O.O.S. No. 5 of 1989 have examined Dr. R. Nagaswamy, a renowned archaeologist and expert of temple architecture who is a retired director of ASI and had appeared as an expert archaeologist for and on behalf of Government of India in a case pending before London courts. The highest court of London recognised him as an expert archaeologist and based its judgment on his evidence. Dr. R. Nagaswamy has supported the report of ASI and proved the same to be correct and trustworthy.*

XLI. In addition to him Dr R.D. Trivedi who was also director in ASI and is an expert of temple architecture of North India has also been examined by the plaintiffs of O.O.S. No. 5 of 89 who on the basis of discoveries made during excavation by ASI has proved the existence of a*

Nagar style Hindu temple then prevalent in Northern India. EW. Shri A.K. Sharma has also been examined by the plaintiffs of O.O.S. No. 5 of 89 who is undisputedly a field archaeologist and has carried on various excavations and is still carrying on excavation work and the reports of his excavation have been published in various journals.

XLII.Dr Rakesh Tiwari, director, U.P. State Archaeology, has been examined by the plaintiffs in support of their case. It may be mentioned here that at the time of leveling near the disputed site in June 1992, plenty of artifacts relating to Hindu temple were found near the disputed site. Dr Rakesh Tiwari in his official capacity as director has prepared a list of 263 artifacts relating to Hindu temple and has proved before the court that the artifacts found at the time of leveling prove existence of a big Hindu religious structure at the site. A perusal of the list prepared and filed in the court proves the same to be temple artifact. In addition to the above, inscriptions written in Nagari script, images of Ganesh, Lakshmi, Sadanand and Vrishabh, etc., further prove existence of Hindu temple on spot.*

XLIII. It is pertinent to mention that the leveling work was conducted under the control and supervision of Govt. of U.P. under strict security through Government agency and the listing of artifacts found on spot and their preservation was done by the State archaeological department. The artifacts so found on the spot were tendered as evidence and are still in the custody of courts. During excavation also plenty of artifacts relating to temple structure were found as reported by ASI in its report*

duly confirmed by all the witnesses including the ones examined by the SCBW.

XLIV. The Report of the Archaeological Survey of India also makes it clear that there existed temple like structure underneath the disputed structure as well as evidences of demolition of pre-existing Hindu temple are at the disputed site. It will not be out of place to mention here that before demolition of disputed shrine the artifacts recovered at the time of leveling by the Government agency also establish existence of a huge temple/religious structure in the periphery of the disputed area. The existence of temple before the construction of the disputed structure is established during excavation particularly wall No. 16 and 17 which are undisputedly prior to the construction of the disputed structure. The shape, size, length and continuity of the wall on western side in south north orientation coupled with pillar bases intervening floor 2 and 3 and also of the pillar bases of the northern side are admitted by the plaintiff.*

3992. Sri Pandey summarized his argument on this aspect submitting that the following facts established pre-existence of Hindu temple before construction of the disputed structure at the site in dispute.

I. The disputed structure had no foundation of its own (Refer Wall No.5, 16 and 17). Admittedly the wall No.5 was raised on wall No. 16 which is much prior to the disputed structure, i.e., relating to old temple structure. It is also apparent and established that wall No. 16 which is resting on wall No. 17 belong to pre-existing structure and are about. ..... wide whereas wall No.5 is about ..... wide, much lesser than the wall No. 16 and 17.Wall No.5 is not in continuation of wall No. 16 and is lying over the wall No. 16. Wall no. 16 and 17 are much longer than wall No.5. The existence of wall No. 16 is much more than 50 metres because the ending point of the wall was not discovered during excavation.

II. The in-situ existence of Makar Pranal in wall No. 5 proves that the temple materials were re-used for construction of disputed structure. It is noteworthy that existence of Makar Pranal has all along been admitted by the plaintiff and their witnesses.

III. Scientific analysis of the plasters used in the wall of preexisting structure, observations and examination of wall No. 1-15 proves that materials used in wall No. 16, 17 onwards are much superior to the walls of the disputed structure, i.e. 1-15 wherein brick bats, and re-used material have been used.

IV. The construction of wall Nos. 1-15, i.e., its structure and texture, material used, etc., proves that the walls of the disputed structure were constructed hurriedly by re-using material of the earlier structure even without any foundation as is evident from the use of brickbats and broken bricks used in the wall which prima facie establishes demolition of pre-existing temple.

V. Existence of pillar bases on all the floor without pillar found during excavation including pillar bases found in the section of the trench further proves that the disputed structure was constructed after demolishing the temple including pillars and after general levelling of the disputed structure was constructed.

VI. The existence of pillar bases in the northern side admitted by the Plaintiff as pillar bases beyond the disputed site with foundation further proves existence of huge pre-existing religious structure extending to much more area in northern side. It is pertinent to mention that bases of the pillars were not removed whereas pillar bases found in the southern and eastern side of the makeshift structure shows existence of similar foundation of pillar bases with removal of bases.

VII. Pillar bases have been found below the floor level of the structure. The pillar bases No. 29, 32, 34, 35 further prove demolition of the pre-existing temple structure as is evident from perusal of the report at page No. 52 and plates 30 and 45 of the Archaeological Survey of India Report Vol. II. Figure 3 B of ASI Report Vol. I shows nine pillar bases have been exposed below the wall and floor of the disputed structure numbered as pillar base Nos. 22, 23, 25, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34 and 35. The existence of these pillar bases below the disputed structure particularly in courtyard establishes existence of temple before construction of the disputed structure.

VIII. 20 line inscription recovered from the wall of the disputed structure at the time of its demolition also proves existence of temple in 12th century AD, i.e., prior to construction of the disputed structure.

IX. Recovery of 20 line inscription on 06.12.1992 from the debris of the disputed structure proves that the same

www.vadaprativada.com

was reused in the construction of the disputed structure.

X. Circular shrine which dates back to 4th-6th century admitted by the plaintiff proves existence of huge temple like structure on spot much before the construction of the disputed structure.

XI. The 11th century inscription found from the debris of trench No. J-3 at a depth of 5.75 metres below the floor level of the disputed structure indicates existence of temple below the disputed structure as reported by ASI in its report Vol. 1 at page 204, 205 and Fig. 22 as well as Pl. 137 of the report Vol. II. It is noteworthy to mention that such decorated inscriptions are always found in temple/Hindu religious structures and are never found in the residential buildings. A perusal of the behaviour of debris as shown in Fig. 22 marked as layer No.5 and 6 of trench No. J-3 also indicates that the same was created due to demolition of the temple. The lower level of the layer as shown in Fig. 22 establishes that the boulders obviously came from the demolished temple in accordance with a theory of gravitation.

XII. Archaeological finds like Kopot Palli, Amalak decorated bricks, decorated stone slabs in wall No.5 and 17, Srivatsha, earthern lamp below the floor of the disputed structure, Garuda Dhwaj (the pit made for erecting the Garuda Dhwaj in front of the Garbhagriha - a salient feature of northern Indian temples) shown in Pl. No. 59, 60, 63 and pit of Garuda Dhwaj in front of sanctum sanctorum

further confirms the pre-existence of temple on the disputed site.

XIII. A perusal of artifacts found during excavation as shown in Plate nos. 5, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 36, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 81, 82, 83, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 95 prima facie establishes pre-existing temple/temple-like structure.

XIV. Under any circumstances above referred artifacts may neither form part of Islamic structure nor could be used in non-religious structure. Existence of divine couple as shown in plate No. 235 and the circular shrine undisputedly proves existence of temple on spot.

XV. At the site in question (Rama Janma Bhumi/Baburi Masjid) right from the virgin soil, beginning with the circular Shiva Shrine up to the working floor of the disputed structure only religious structural remains associated with antiquities of religious nature have been found. The continuous nature of 10.80 meter thick deposit accounts for nine cultural periods beginning from N.B.P. level of 6th Century B.C. to 15th Century A.D. and clearly indicate that the site was never abandoned and was never used for habitational purpose. At the site four working floors have been exposed. From Floor # 3, there is a radio carbon date 910 ± 70 A.D. (calibrated 900 – 1030 A.D.). This well-scientifically dated floor is below the Floor # 2 with which 50 pillar bases are associated. Over Floor # 2 is Floor # 1, i.e., the floor of the mosque. Floor # 2 with which 50 pillars bases of Mandapa are associated is evidently the floor of the temple which was demolished.

Typical habitational deposits such as soakage pits, ring wells, drainage system, etc., of Indo-Gangetic plain were never found (A. Ghosh – Encyclopaedia of Archaeology, Pages 134-135). When one temple fell into disuse either due to natural calamity or natural decay, immediately new religious structure was raised.

XVI. The act of continuous raising of structures only of religious nature at the site clearly indicates that the people had memory of a happening of very important nature in the distant past at the site. At the site there is no stratigraphical gap or any hiatus.*

XVII. While demolishing the standing temple in 1528 A.D., Mir Baqi was well-aware of the sacred and religious importance of the site and he thought it proper to raise only a religious structure, i.e., a mosque, right over the demolished temple and did not leave it for people to occupy for habitational purpose.*

XVIII. The evidence of existence of a temple in 1528 A.D. is clear from the plan of the structural remains which show Garbha Grih (where presently Ram Lala is located), Ardha-Mandapa and wide Mandapa along with Pushkarini on the North-East corner, very wide walls and even damaged structural parts of earlier temples and religious members of the last temple used in the walls of the mosque. This use of members of religious nature in their construction could be done only by persons of other faith.*

3993. Sri Pandey also sought to summarize his arguments on the question of demolition as under:

I. The Mosque was built right over the walls of the

demolished earlier structure, i.e., temple after levelling them. No independent foundations were laid for the mosque.

II. In a hurry to raise the mosque, self-same material, i.e., bricks and stones of the demolished structure were used which is evident from the fragmentary nature of bricks. No full bricks have been found in the walls of the mosque. Secondly, the size and texture of the bricks (wherever length and width are available separately) tally with the size of bricks used in the demolished temple. Normally, structures of different periods have bricks of different sizes and texture. In Wall No. 15 of the mosque, many members of the temple like Makar Pranal, etc., have been used.

III. As right over the working floor of the demolished temple, the floor of the mosque has been laid, it shows continuous action of demolition and construction. There was no marked evidence of time gap, i.e., both the works were done by the same agency.

IV. In some rudimentary pillars of floor 2, signs of demolition are visible. In spite of cleaning the demolished structural remains, broken pieces of bricks, stones and other structural members were found scattered.

3994. Another attempt was made by the learned experts of plaintiffs (Suit-4) by suggesting that historically they do not find any evidence that the muslim Rulers were indulged in destroying temples of idolaters and therefore a presumption that an existing temple was demolished for construction of the disputed structure should not be formed. Though it would not have been necessary for us to tell positively that there existed a massive temple structure which was demolished by someone and thereafter the disputed structure was raised for the reason that for our purposes it was sufficient that the disputed structure has been raised on an erstwhile building of a religious nature which was non-Islamic but the kind of statement, which has been given by so many experts appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) to justify their stand that temples in past were never demolished by the then muslim Rulers or invaders from Persia etc. is so blatant lie that we are reluctant to ignore it without referring to some well known historical record on these aspects particularly some of which have been written by the Muslim writers themselves.

3995. Sri Jilani referred to the statement of the Expert witnesses where they have said that the Mughal Emperors before Aurangzeb were not against the idolaters or idol worship and there does not exist any historical record to suggest that they demolished any Hindu temple and constructed mosque or other Islamic religious structure. Even for the Muslim Rulers or invaders before Mughals as also Aurangzeb and subsequent once it is suggested that the act of a few such demolition of temple attributed to Mahmood Gazani or Khilji's or Auraugzeb etc., was not on account of any hatred on their part against idol worshippers or for spread of religion of Islam but more on account of economic reasons since these places i.e. Hindu temples etc. had lot of wealth and for looting the said wealth those attacks were made. He also referred to certain documents constituting historical record etc. to show that neither Babar entered into such activities nor others.

3996. Exhibit 48 (Suit-5) (Register 20, page 129) contains a photocopy from "Memoirs Zehir-Ed-Din Muhammed Baber; Emperor of Hindustan" written by himself in the Chaghatai Turki and translated partly by John Leyden and partly by William Erskine with Notes and a Geographical and Historical Introduction published in 1807 at London. It has frontispiece and pages number 378, 379, 380 and 381 of the said book. On pages 381 of the book (paper no. 107C1/68) it deals with the description when Baber reached near Ayodhya:

> "We were still a march or two from Oudh, when a messenger arrived from Chin Timur Sultan, with intelligence that the enemy were encamped on the other side of the Siru, and that he would require to be reinforced. I dispatched to his assistance a thousand of the best men from the centre, under the command of Kazak. On Saturday, the 7th of Rajeb, I encamped two or three Kos above Oudh, at the junction of the Gogra and Siru. Till that day, Sheikh Bayezid had kept his station, not far from Oudh, on the other side of the Siru. He had sent a letter to Sultan, for the purpose of overreaching him. Sultan having discovered his insincerity, about noon-day prayers sent a person to call Karacheh to his assistance, and begun to make preparations for passing the river. When Karacheh had joined Sultan, they passed the river without delay. There were about fifty horse, with three or four elephants, on the other side, who, being unable to stand their ground, took to flight. Our people brought down some of them, and cut off their heads, which they sent me. Bikhub Sultan, Terdi Beg, Kuch Beg, Baba Chihreh, and Baki Shaghawal,

passed the river after Sultan. Those who had passed over first, continued till evening prayers in pursuit of Sheikh Bayezid, who threw himself into a jungle, and escaped. Chiu Timur Sultan having halted at night by a pool, mounted again about midnight, and renewed his pursuit of the enemy. After marching forty kos, he came to a place where their families and baggage had been, but they were already in full light. The light force now divided itself into different bodies, Baki Shaghawel with one division,following close upon the enemy, overtook their baggage and families, and brought in a few of the Afghans as prisoners.

I halted some days in this station, for the purpose of settling the affairs of Oudh and the neighboring country, and for making the necessary arrangement. Seven or eight kos above Oudh, on the banks of the river Siru, is the well-known tract called the Hunting-ground. I sent Mir Muhammad Jalehban to examine the fords of the rivers Gagra and Siru, which he did. On Thursday, the 12th, I mounted, to set off on a hunting party."

Exhibit 90 (Suit-4) (Register 16, pages 156-162) contains the photocopy of the title page and pages no. 51 to 53 and 62 to 65 of the book "The Disputed Mosque-A Historical Inquiry" by Sushil Srivastava published in 1991 by Vistaar Publications, New Delhi. The author of this book himself has appeared as witness, i.e. PW 15 and the book itself has been produced before the Court.

4001. Exhibit 92 (Suit-4) (Register 16, pages 168-181) contains the title page, preface, index and pages no. 12 to 34 of the book "Mughal Empire In India" by Prof. S.R. Sharma, Eleventh Edition published by Laksmi Narain Agarwal Educational Publishers, Agra. The author on page 15 of the book has given reason of Babar's invasion to India as under:

> "The great advantage of Hindustan, "Babar was aware, "besides its vast extent of territory, is the amount of gold, coined and uncoined, which may be found there." To Hindustan, therefore, he turned his wistful attention when,

Urdu etc. as collected by Sir H.M. Elliot while he was in India. "Tarikh-I-Firishta" is work of Mohammad Kasim Hindu Shah who is said to be born in 1550 or 1570. Initially, he was in patronage of Murtaza Nizam Shah at Ahmadnagar wherefrom he proceeded to Bijapur sometimes in 1589 A.D. which was in the reign of Ibrahim Adil Shah. Later on, the King presented to him a copy of Rauzatu-s Safa, remarking that no competent person had hitherto written a general history of Muhammadans in India, except Nizamuddin Bakhshi though his work was too brief and imperfect, especially as concerned the Dakhin (south). The Firishta wrote history but it is quite imperfect about Indian history previous to Muhammadan invasion. He died probably in 1660. His book contains 12 chapters the details whereof have been given on page 209 of Vol. VI of the said book (The entire set of "The History of India as Told By Its Own Historians" is available to the Court and, therefore, instead of confining ourselves to the pages filed by the plaintiffs (Suit-4), we have gone through the book and have taken the contents therefrom. The translation of the book has been done by General Briggs. It is said by Elliot and Dowson on page 216/217 that General Briggs procured a copy of Firishta in Persian which contains several valuable annotations and corrections. This copy was carefully collated with several others. Chapter I commences with "Mahmud of Ghazni" and his attack on Anundpal, Raja of Lahore at AH 399 (A.D. 1008). At page 221, it deals with Firoz Shah Tughlik. The above pages have been placed on record to show that the Muslims came to India as long back as with the start of A.D. 1000 and odd and it is not Babar, who for the first time laid the foundation of the Muslim Emperor in the then Hindostan. The learned counsel for the other side, however, drew out attention to page 227 last five lines:

> "Some historians state, that Sultan Feroze Shah Barbek on this occasion broke the idols of Nagrakote, and mixing the fragments with pieces of cow's flesh, filled bags with them, and caused them to be tied round the necks of Brahmins, who were then paraded through the camp."

4008. Exhibit 88 (Suit-4) (Register 16, pages 7-12) are photocopies of the title page, index and pages no. 218, 239, 339 and 434 of the "The History of India As Told by Its Own Historians", Vol. 4 by H.M. Elliot and John Dowson. Page 218 and 239 are the extract of Chapter XXVIII, Tuzak-I-Babari or Wakiat-I-Babari, the Autobiography of Babar. In the Book, this Chapter runs from page 218 to 287. Page 239 shows that in the last but successful invasion, Babar proceeded to India on 17th November, 1525 (AH 932). Page 339 (Paper No. 244C1/5 is part of Chapter XXXII "Tarikh-I-Sher Shahi or Tuhfat-I-Akbar Shahi of Abbas Khan, Sarwani". This work is probably composed after AH 987 (AD 1579). It appears that the author was connected by marriage with the family of Sher Shah. We find no assistance from the said document for the purpose of this matter except that for some time, Sher Shar (Sher Khan) defeated the Mughals to take over the right of kingdon of Bengal and Bihar.

4009. Page 434 (Paper No. 244C1/6) is extract of Chapter XXXIII "Tarikh-I-Daudi of 'Abdulla" who has commenced his work with the reign of Bahlol Lodi alleging that he was the first King of the Afghan dynasty and brought down to reign of Muhammad Adali Sur and Daud Shah alleging them as last Rulers of that reign. Learned counsel for the other side drew our attention to pages 466 and 467 narrating the reign of Sultan Sikandar Ghazi (Sikandar Lodi):

> "He founded masjids throughout all his dominions, and appointed a preacher, a reader, and a sweeper to each; to all of whom he gave regular stipends." (Page 446)
>
> "He allotted lands to the infidels who submitted to the followers of Islam in their respective countries; and whoever rebelled or was contumacious, was considered guilty of treason, and was either slain or banished.
> He was so zealous a Musulaman that he utterly destroyed divers places of worship of the infidels, and left not a vestige remaining of them. He entirely ruined the shrines of Mathura, the mine of heathenism, and turned their principal Hindu places of worship into caravanserais and colleges. Their stone images were given to the butchers to serve them as meat-weights, and all the Hindus in Mathura were strictly prohibited from shaving their heads and beards, and performing their ablutions. He thus put an end to all the idolatrous rites of the infidels there; and no hindu, if he wished to have his head or beard shaved, could get a barber to do it. Every city thus conformed as he desired to the customs of Islam." (Page 447)

4010. Exhibit 89 (Suit-4) (Register 16, pages 13-20) are the photocopy of title page, index and pages no. 284, 285, 389, 476 and 477 of the "History of India As Told by Its Own Historians" Vol. 3 by H.M. Elliot and John Dowson. Pages 284 and 285 are the extract of Chapter XVI "Tarikh-I-Firoz Shahi of Shama-i-Siraj, "Asif". This work is devoted exclusively to the reign of Firoz Shah. The author claims to be attached to the Court of Firoz Shah and accompanied him on his hunting expeditions. The two pages show the reign of Firoz Shah at Delhi.

4011. Page 389 is extract of Chapter XVIII "Malfuzat-I Timuri or Tuzak-I- Timuri' The Autobiography of Timur". The original work was written in Chaghatai Turki language, translated into Persian by Abu Talib Husaini, and dedicated to Emperor Shah Jahan, who began to reign in A.D. 1628. Timur came to India sometime in the end of 14th century. It is not necessary to deal into his invasion in detail since it is also a story of invasion with the object of loot and destruction of idolaters which is evident from the following extract:

> "About this time there arose in my heart the desire to lead an expedition against the infidels, and to become a ghazi; for it had reached my ears that the slayer of infidels is a ghazi, and if he is slain he becomes a martyr. It was on this account that I formed this resolution, but I was undetermined in my mind whether I should direct my expedition against the infidels of China or against the infidels and polytheists of India. In this matter I sought an omen from the Kuran, and the verse I opened upon was this, "O Prophet, make war upon infidels and unbelievers, and treat them with severity."
> My great officers told my that the inhabitants of Hindustan were infidels and unbelievers. In obedience to the order of Almighty God I determined on an expedition against them, and I issued orders to the amirs of mature years, and the leaders in war, to come before me, and when they had come together I questioned the assembly as to whether I should invade Hindustan or China, and said to them, "By the order of God and the Prophet it is incumbent upon me to make war upon these infidels and polytheists." throwing themselves upon their knees they all wished me good fortune. I demanded of the warrior chieftains whether I should direct my expedition against the infidels of Hindustan or China. At first they repeated fables and wise sayings, and then said, in the country of Hindustan there are four defences, and if any one invading this extensive country breaks down there four defences, he becomes the conqueror of Hindustan.

The first defence consist of five large rivers, which flow from the mountains of Kashmir, and these rivers unite in their course, and passing through the country of Sind, flow into the Arabian Sea, land it is not possible to cross them without boats and bridges. The second defence consists of woods and forests and trees, which, interweaving stem with stem and branch with branch, render it very difficult to penetrate into that country. The third defence is the soldiery, and land holders, and prices, and Rajas of that country, who inhabit fastnesses in those forests, and live there like wild beasts. The fourth defence consists of the elephants, for the rulers of that country in the day of battle equipping elephants in mail, put them in the van of their army, and place great confidence in them, and they have trained them to such a pitch that, lifting with their trunks a horse with his rider, and whirling him in the air, they will dash him on the ground.

Some of the nobles said in reply that Sultan Mahmud Subuktigin conquered the country of Hindustan with 30,000 horse, and established his own servants as rulers of that region, and carried off many thousand loads of gold and silver and jewels from that country, besides subjecting it to a regular tribute, and is our amir inferior to Sultan Mahmud P No; thanks to Almighty God, to-day a 100,000 valiant Tatar horsemen wait at the stirrup of our amir; if he determines upon this expedition Almighty God will give him victory, and he will become a ghazi and mujahid before God, and we shall be attendants on an amir who is a ghazi, and the army will be contented and the treasury rich and well filled, and with the gold of Hindustan our amir will become a conqueror of the world and famous among the kings of earth.

At this time the prince Shah Rukh said: "India is an extensive country; whatever Slultan conquers it becomes supreme over the four quarters of the globe; if, under the conduct of our amir, we conquer India, we shall become rulers over the seven climes." He then said: "I have seen in the history of Persia that, in the time of the Persian Sutans, the King of India was called Darai, with all honour and glory. On account of his dignity he bore no other name; and the Emperor of Rome was called Caesar, and the Sultan of Persia was called Kisra, and the Sultan of the Tatars, Khakan, and the Emperor of Chine, Faghfiur; but the King of Iran and Turan bore the title of Shahinshah, and the orders of the Shahinshah were always paramount over the princes and Rajas of Hindustan, and praise be to

God that we are at this time Shahinshah of Iran and Turan, and it would be a pity that we should not be supreme over the country of Hindustan." I was excessively pleased with these words of Prince Shah Rukh. Then the Prince Muhammad Sultan said: " The whole country of India is full of gold and jewels, and in it there are seventeen mines of gold and silver, diamond and ruby and emerald and tin and iron and steel and copper and quicksilver, etc., and of the plants which grow there are those fit for making wearing apparel, and aromatic plants, and the sugar cane, and it is a country which is always green and verdant, and the whole aspect of this country is pleasant and delightful. Now, since the inhabitants are chiefly polytheists and infidels and idolaters and worshipers of the sun, by the order of God and his prophet, it is right for us to conquer them.

My wazirs informed me that the whole amount of the revenue of India is six arbs; now each arb is a 100 krors, and each kror is a 100 lacs, and each lac is a 100,00 miskals of silver. Some of the nobles said, "By the favour of Almighty God we may conquer India, but if we establish ourselves permanently therein, our race will degenerate and our children will become like the natives of those regions, and in a few generations their strength and valour will diminish." the amirs of regiments (kushunat) were disturbed at these words, but I said to them, "My object in the invasion of Hindustan is to lead an expedition against the infidels that, according to the law of Muhammad (upon whom and his family be the blessing and peace of God), we may convert the true faith the people of that country, and purify the land itself from the filth of infidelity and polytheism; and that we may overthrow their temples and idols and become ghazis and mujahids before God." They gave an unwilling consent, but I placed no reliance upon them. At this time the wise men of Islam came before me, and a conversation began about the propriety of a war against infidels and polytheists; they gave it as their opinion that it is the duty of the Sultan of Islam, and all the people who profess that "there is no god but Allah, and Muhammad is the prophet of Allah," for the sake of preserving their religion and strengthening their law, to exert their utmost endeavour for the suppression of the enemies of their faith. And it is the duty of every Muslim and true believer to use his utmost exertions in obedience to his ruler. When the edifying words of the wise men reached the ears of the nobles, all their hearts were set upon a holy war in Hindustan, and throwing themselves on their knees, they repeated the Chapter of Victory.

When I girded up my loins for the expedition, I wrote to Hazrat Shaikh Zainu-d din to the effect that I had determined on a religious expedition to Hindustan. He wrote in the margin of my letter: "Be it known to Abu-l Ghazi Timur (whom may God assist) that great prosperity in this world and the next will result to you from this undertaking, and you will go and return in safety." he also sent me a large sword which I made my sceptre.

In the meanwhile there came a petition from the Prince Pir Muhammad Jahangir, from the confines to

Kabulistan, the government of which country, from the boundaries of Kunduz and Bakalan and Kabul and Ghazni and Kandahar, was vested in him. When I looked at this petition it was thus written: "Since, according to your order, I arrived in this country, I have acted towards all the people conformably to the exalted order and wisdom-increasing counsels of the great king. When I had satisfied my mind with the conquest and settlement of this kingdom, I turned my thoughts towards the acquisition of some of the provinces of Hindustan. I enquired concerning the condition of that country, and received the following account: that the city of Dehli is the capital of the sovereigns of India, and after the death of Sultan Firoz Shah, two brother among his nobility, of whom one was named Mallu and the other Sarang, becoming very powerful, established their independence, giving the nominal sovereignty to one of the sons of Sultan Firoz Shah, by name, Sultan Mahmud, they kept the real power in their own hands, and virtually governed the empire. Mallu, the elder brother, lives at Dehli, about the person of Sultan Mahmud, and Sarang is established in the city of Multan, for the protection of that country. When I became acquainted with these matters, acting according to the practice of the great king, I wrote a letter and sent it to him (Sarang) by an ambassador, purporting that since the fame of the victories and conquests, and of the extensive empire of the great king is spread all over the world, it is certain that it must have reached him also. The great king has appointed me to the government of those provinces which

lie on the borders of Hindustan, and has ordered that 'If the rulers of Hindustan come before me with tribute I will not interfere with their lives, property, or kingdoms; but if they are negligent in proffering obedience and submission, I will put forth my strength for the conquest of the kingdoms of India. At all events, if they set any value upon their lives, property, and reputation, they will pay me a yearly tribute, and if not, they shall hear of my arrival with my powerful armies. Farewell.' When the ambassador reached the presence of Sarang at Multan, he was treated with great respect and consideration; but in reply to his letter, Sarang said, 'It is difficult to take an empire like a bride to your bosom without trouble and difficulty and the clashing of swords. The desire of your prince is to take this kingdom with its rich revenue. Well, let him wrest it from us by force of arms if he be able. I have numerous armies and formidable elephants, and am quite prepared for war.' with these words he dismissed the ambassador. But when this unsatisfactory answer was brought back to me. I issued immediate orders for the armies to assemble from all quarters, together with such of the nobles as were in my province, such as Amir Saikal Kandahari, and other amirs, and soldiers."

4012. The amount of wealth his army looted at Delhi is mentioned on page 446:

"The other booty was immense in rubies, diamonds, garnets, pearls, and other gems; jewels of gold and silver; ashrafis, tankas of gold and silver of the celebrated Alai coinage; vessels of gold and silver; and brocades and silks of great value. Gold and silver ornaments of the Hindu women were obtained in such quantities as to exceed all account. Excepting the quarter of the saiyids, the ulama, and the other Musulmans, the whole city was sacked."

4013. On page 448, the number of the people killed by him mentions:

"I had triumphed over my adversaries, I had put to death some lacs of infidels and idolaters, and I had stained my proselyting sword with the blood of the enemies of the faith."

At page 476 and 477 is the narration of his return journey through Kashmir.

''ऐसा प्रतीत होता है कि बाद में हिन्दुओं के प्रबल विरोध एवं अपनी सहिष्णुता की नीति के कारण बादशाह अकबर ने भवन के आगे चबूतरा बनाने की आज्ञा दे दी थी जिस पर हिन्दुओं द्वारा मूर्तियॉ स्थापित की गई और यहॉ नियमित पूजा होती रही। उसी स्थान से उत्तर की तरफ हिन्दुओं का लगा हुआ दूसरा पूजा स्थान था जिसे सीता रसोइया कहा जाता था और बाद में सीता पार्क कहा जाने लगा। मुस्लिम शासकों ने इसी के पास कौशल्या रसोई को भी नष्ट करने का साहस नहीं किया किन्तु हिन्दुओं के मन में क्षोभ और क्षति की भावना बनी रही और कहा जाता है कि राम

''मुसलमानों ने फैजाबाद और अवध से नास्तिकता की गंदगी का सफाया कर दिया क्योंकि यह राम के पिता की राजधानी थी और पूजा का एक बड़ा केन्द्र था। जहॉ पर राम जन्म का एक बड़ा मन्दिर बना था वहीं एक बड़ी मस्जिद बनाई गई''। 1855 ई0 के संघर्ष के दूसरे प्रत्यक्षदर्शी शेख अजमत अली, ककोरवी नवी, (811–13) ने लिखा है कि 923 में सैयद मियॉ आशिकान के संरक्षण में बाबरी मस्जिद जन्म स्थान मन्दिर (बुतखाने जन्म स्थान में) बनाई गई। उसकी पुस्तक मरगकाई खुरावी : तारीखे अवध : की एक प्रति लखनऊ की टैगोर लाईब्रेरी में है और इसका प्रकाशन 1987 में हुआ था। डा0 ककोरवी ने अपनी पुस्तक मिर्जा अली वेग शुरूर (1787–1867) की पुस्तक फसाना –ई–इब्रात के उद्धरण को जोड़ा है। जिसमें बताया गया है कि बाबर के शासन काल में सीता के रसोई के पास एक बड़ी मस्जिद बनाई गई। अयोध्या पर अंग्रेजों के कब्जे के पहले एक योरोपीय यात्री टीफेनथेलर ने जो 1767 में अयोध्या आया था लिखा था कि मस्जिद के बाड़े में हिन्दू लोग नियमित रूप से पूजा अर्चना करते थे और यह भी उल्लेख किया था कि जन्मभूमि मन्दिर को तोड़कर प्रस्तुत मस्जिद बनाई गई थी। इसके पहले भी विलियम फ्रेन्च : 1608 जिसकी पुस्तक की प्रति बनारस हिन्दू विश्वविद्यालय के पुस्तकालय में मौजूद है में उल्लेख किया गया है कि जन्म स्थान व राम कोट क्षेत्र के अन्य मन्दिरों को बाबरी मस्जिद बनाने के लिये तोड़ा गया था। इस लिये यह कहना कि यह झगड़ा अंग्रेजों ने अपनी ''फूट डालो और राज्य करो'' के नीति के तहत जबरदस्ती खड़ा किया था महज ऑखों में पट्टी बॉध लेने के समान है। मौलाना अब्दुल हई जैसे विद्वान धर्मोपदेशक से यह आशा नहीं की जा

सकती थी कि उन्होंने अंग्रेजों से प्रेरणा लेकर लिखा होगा। उन्होंने स्पष्ट लिखा है कि बाबर ने रामचन्द्र के जन्म स्थान पर बाबरी मस्जिद बनवाई थी। इसके अतिरिक्त मार्टिन : 1838 ईस्टर्न इंडिया सर्जन, जनरल एडवर्ड वेलफेयर इनसाईक्लोपीडिया आफ इंडिया 1858, अवध गजेटियर 1877 और अलेक्जेन्डर कनिंघम 1862 के साक्ष्यों पर संदेह व्यक्त करने का कोई कारण नहीं है कि बाबरी मस्जिद जिसे मध्ययुगीन मुसलमानी दस्तावेजों में मस्जिद –ई–जन्मस्थान कहा गया है राम जन्म भूमि स्थान के मन्दिर को तोड़कर बनाई गई थी। अंग्रेज शासकों के लिये हिन्दू मुसलमानों में फूट डालने के लिये एक विवाद का झूठा मूठा हौवा खड़ा करने का कोई कारण नहीं था क्योंकि इस मसले पर दोनों समुदायों में विवाद व आपसी संघर्ष मुगल शासन में ही प्रारम्भ हो चुका था और तब से वह चल रहा था। जैसा कि इतिहास बताता है कि औरंगजेब की पुत्री भी इस तथ्य से अवगत थी कि मन्दिर को तोड़कर उसके ऊपर मस्जिद बनाई।''

4016. From Exhibit 19 (Suit-4) (Register 10, Page 21), we find that the Babar though defeated Ibrahim Lodhi in the battle of Panipat in 1526 AD, but he himself noticed several local Amirs having declared themselves independent even before his defeat of Ibrahim Lodi:

"When I first arrived in Agra, there was a strong mutual dislike and hostility between my people and the men of the place.

The peasantry and soldiers of the country avoided and fled from my men. Afterwards, everywhere, except only in Delhi and Agra, the inhabitants fortified different posts, while the governors of towns put their fortifications in a posture of defence, and refused to submit or obey." the nature of the situation he was confronted with, after his victory at Panipat, is best described in his own words:

(a) 'Kasim Sambhali was in Sambhal;

(b) 'Nizam Khan in Bayana;

www.vadapprativada.com

(c) 'the Raja Hasan Khan Mewati himself in Mewat: that infidel was the prime mover and agitator in all these confusions and insurrections;

(d) 'Kanauj, with the whole country beyond the Ganges, was entirely in the possession of refractory Afghans, such as, Nasir Khan Lohani, Ma'ruf Farmuli, and a number of other Amirs who had been in a state of open rebellion for two years before the death of Ibrahim.

'At the period I defeated that prince, they had overrun, and were in possession of Kanauj and the country in that quarter, and had advanced and encamped two or three marches on this side of Kanauj. They elected Bihar Khan (or, Bhadur Khan), the son of Darya Khan, as their King, and gave him the name of Sultan Mahmud. When I came to Agra we could not find grain or provendor, either for ourselves or for our horses. The villagers, out of hostility for us, had taken to rebellion, thieving, and robbery. The roads became impassable.

'I had not time, after the division of treasure, to send proper persons to occupy and protect the different parganas and stations.'

To make matters worse, the heat was abnormal that year, and many of Babur's men dropped down dead. Not a few of his Begs and best men began to lose heart, objected to remaining in Hindustan, and even began to make preparations for retreat. .... The final subjugation of the Afghans had to be deferred in the face of a more

4017. However, Sri Hari Shankar Jain placed before the following passage from page 22 of the book:

> "But Babur himself looked upon this only as holy war against the infidel, with whom had joined some Muslim apostates. This is indicated by his assumption of the title of Ghazi after the victory: 'After this victory. I used the epithet of Ghazi, in the Imperial titles.' this was necessary to arouse his dispirited and home-sick followers. Babur was a master of the art of persuasion, with a keen eye for the dramatic."

4018. The Afgan Rabels were sought to be taken by Babar in February, March 1528, but after persuing them upto Avadh, he returned to Agra by 13th March 1528 as is evident from page 25 of the book as follows:

www.vadaprativada.com

> "Afghan Rebels. On February 2, 1528. Babur set out to punish the Afghan rebels who had advanced from Bihar into Doab, stormed Shamsabad, and driven the Imperial garrison out of Kanauj. At Babur's approach, the enemy crossed the river Ganges and mustered on its left bank to dispute, Babur's passage. The Emperor reached the great river, on February 27, built a bridge across its broad stream, by March 13, put the insurgents to headlong fight, and hotly pursued them as far as Oudh. After this Babur returned to Agra for the rainy season."

4019. Sri Jain placed before us the following extract from page 32 and 33:

> "Babur was, with all his virtues, a Musalman Emperor. When he had killed the Pagans (as he called the Hindus) he piled up a pyramid of their skulls, at least for the delectation of his orthodox followers. He considers the war against the Rajputs as jihad or 'holy war' and assumed the title of Ghazi, after his victory at Khanua. He spoke of the self-immolation of the Rajputs at Chanderi as 'going to hell'. When he remitted the tamgha after his penitence and vow to renounce wine, it was only Musalmans who were exempted from it, and not the Hindus. After the fall of Chanderi, as Ferishta tells us, he "did not fail to rebuild and repair the mosques in Chanderi, Sarangpur, Rantambhor and Raisen, which had been partly destroyed and otherwise injured by being converted into cattle-sheds, by Medini Rai's orders." Babur himself stated on his conquest of Chanderi, that he converted 'the mansion of hostility' into 'a mansion of faith.' All these facts make it difficult to accept the too liberal policy outlined in the Bhopal MS. ascribed to Babur.

www.vadaprativada.com

But to say this is not to allege the contrary. Babur was beyond question a man of deep faith in God; but his belief in Islam must have sat comparatively light on his mind. He had abjured his orthodoxy and became a Shia to win the support of the Shah of Persia to his cause. At the same time, he had refused to persecute his quandom orthodox co-religionists at the command of his newly accepted suzerain. There is no evidence of his ever having destroyed a Hindu temple or otherwise persecuted the Hindus on account of their religion. On the other hand, there is at least one reference to his equal recognition of the Hindu and Turki Amirs who had enlisted in his service."

''सम्पूर्ण मानव जाति के लिये आदर्श के प्रेरणास्रोत मर्यादा पुरुषोत्तम भगवान राम का जन्म कहां हुआ था इसकी जानकारी का प्राचीनतम

साहित्यिक स्रोत महर्षि बाल्मीकि का रामायण है। महर्षि बाल्मीकि के अनुसार भगवान श्रीराम का प्रादुर्भाव (जन्म) जिस लोकविश्रुत अयोध्या नगरी में हुआ था वह कोशल जनपद की राजधानी थी तथा सरयू नदी के दक्षिण तट पर बसी हुई थी। वर्तमान उपलब्ध रामायण जिस समय रची गयी उस समय भगवान राम की कथा तो लोक में प्रसिद्ध थी किन्तु अयोध्या की कोई पहचान शेष नहीं रह गयी थी। इसका स्पष्ट कारण भी था। लोक विश्वास तो यह मानता है कि श्रीराम अब से करीब 9 लाख वर्ष पूर्व त्रेता युग में पृथ्वी पर क्रीड़ा किये थे लेकिन यदि इक्ष्वाकुवंशीय पौराणिक वंशावली के आधार पर गणना करें तो भी भगवान राम अबसे करीब चार हजार वर्ष पूर्व (ई.पू. लगभग 2350 से 1950 के बीच) हुए थे। अबकि वर्तमान रामायण का रचनाकाल विद्वान ई.पू. 300 से ई. 200 के बीच मानते हैं। लोक विश्वास भी मानता है कि अयोध्या कई बार बसी कई बार उजड़ी। ऐसे में अगर दो हजार वर्ष बाद उसकी भौगोलिक पहचान खो जाय तो कोई आश्चर्य नहीं।

भगवान बुद्ध के समय (ई.पू. छठी शताब्दी) में सरयू के दक्षिण तट पर बसा यह नगर 'साकेत' के नाम से प्रसिद्ध था। उस समय अयोध्या नाम को कोई नगर था ही नहीं। लेकिन इस क्षेत्र के राजवंश तब भी अपने को ऐक्ष्वाकु (इक्ष्वाकुवंशी) कहते थे। साकेत ही अयोध्या है, इसकी पहचान कब किसने की इसका कोई पता नहीं चलता किन्तु इतना निश्चित है कि महाकवि कालिदास के समय साकेत और अयोध्या एक ही नगर का नाम था। रघुवंश नामक अपने महाकाव्य में उन्होंने साकेत और अयोध्या का पर्यायवाची के रूप में इस्तेमाल किया है। अब से करीब डेढ़ हजार वर्ष पूर्व (पांचवी शताब्दी ई. का मध्य) के कालिदास जैसे विद्वान की पहचान को आज चुनौती देने का प्रश्न ही नहीं उठता। इस तरह साकेत के रूप में अयोध्या की पहचान हो जाने के बाद भी श्रीराम जन्मभूमि की पहचान की समस्या का समाधान नहीं हुआ क्योंकि साकेत के भी उजड़ने–बसने की श्रृंखला जारी रही। बुद्धकालीन भारत के छः श्रेष्ठतम महानगरों में से एक साकेत भी काल प्रवाह के आगे टिक नहीं सका। जब कोशल जनपद मगध साम्राज्य का अंग हो गया तो इसका महत्व घटने लगा। नन्दवंश (ई. पू. चौथी शताब्दी) के समय इसका महत्व एक सैनिक छावनी भर का रह गया। शुंग वंश तथा कुषाणकाल में भी एक धार्मिक नगर के रूप में इसकी प्रसिद्धि थी लेकिन उसके बाद की एक दो शताब्दियों में तो यह सम्भवतः और महत्वहीन हो गया।

''प्रथम श्रीराम मन्दिर का निर्माण

ऊपर उल्लेख आ चुका है कि विक्रमादित्य स्कन्दगुप्त ने शारंगिन (धनुषधारी) विष्णु का मन्दिर बनवाया था। मेरा विश्वास है कि यही श्रीराम जन्मभूमि पर बना प्रथम मन्दिर था। इस मन्दिर का स्वरूप कैसा था इसकी आज केवल कल्पना भर की जा सकती है। परम्परा से ज्ञात है कि काले पत्थर के उत्कीर्ण चौरासी खम्भों पर मन्दिर का मध्य मण्डप खड़ा था। काले पत्थर के इन उत्कीर्ण स्तम्भों में से 16 अभी भी अयोध्या में उपलब्ध हैं। इन स्तम्भों के काल के बारे में विद्वानों में मतभेद है। कुछ विद्वान इसे दसवीं–ग्यारहवीं शताब्दी का मानते हैं तो कुछ विक्रमादित्य कालीन। इनके काल निर्धारण का कोई पुष्ट आधार नहीं है। परम्परा पर विश्वास करें तो इनका काल भी विक्रमादित्य (स्कन्दगुप्त) का काल ही मानना पड़ेगा। जो

जन्मभूमि के निकट हुए पुरातात्विक उत्खननों से निर्माण के कम से कम तीन स्तरों का पता चलता है। इससे जाहिर है कि श्रीराम जन्मभूमि का कम से कम तीन बार निर्माण हुआ। पहला निर्माण यदि स्कन्दगुप्त ने कराया तो सम्भव है चार–पांच सौ वर्षों में वह निर्माण जीर्ण हो गया हो जिसका मध्य काल (दशवीं–ग्यारहवीं–शताब्दी) में पुननिर्माण कराया गया। तीसरी बार मुगल सम्राट बाबर के शासनकाल में उसके सबूदार मीरबाकी ने मंदिर को ध्वस्त करके मस्जिद बनवाया जो काल–क्रम में स्वतः मंदिर में

''विदेशी आतताइयों के हमले ई. सन् 1000 के लगभग महमूद गजनवी के नेतृत्व में काफी तेज हो गये थे। महमूद ने स्वयं अनेक हमले करके कन्नौज तक को लूटपाट कर तहस–नहस कर दिया था। मसूद के नेतृत्व में तुर्क हमलावरों ने बाराबंकी तक पहुंचकर अपना पैर जमा लिया था लेकिन अयोध्या पर मुसलमानों का पहला प्रभावी हमला मुहम्मद गोरी के समय (लगभग ई. 1194) हुआ। गोरी का एक सिपहसालार मखदूशाह जूरान गोरी ने सम्भवतः पहला हमला किया और यहां स्थित प्रथम जैन तीर्थंकर आदिनाथ के मन्दिर को ध्वस्त कर डाला। किन्तु श्रीराम जन्मभूमि का मन्दिर जाने कैसे उसके हाथ से बचा रहा। उसके बाद भी अयोध्या लगातार मुस्लिम शासकों के नियंत्रण में रही लेकिन श्रीराम जन्मभूमि को किसी ने कोई क्षति पहुंचाने का उपक्रम नहीं किया। मुगलों के आगमन के पूर्व तक श्रीराम जन्मभूमि का मन्दिर शान से अपना माथा ऊँचा किये खड़ा रहा।

फटे पन्ने का अनुवाद दिया है। यह पन्ना शायद बाबरनामे का एक हिस्सा है जो अयोध्या से सम्बद्ध लगता है और 934 हिजरी के लुप्त अभिलेख की कुछ सूचनाएं समेटे है। शाही पुस्तकालय से प्राप्त यह हिस्सा सम्भवतः मूल लेख का फारसी अनुवाद है। इस अंश में लिखा है– ''इस स्थल पर जहां बगीचे, बहता पानी, सुन्दर भवन, वृक्ष विशेषकर रसाल वृक्ष तथा रंगीन पक्षियों का बाहुल्य है, कुछ आनन्दपूर्व बिताने के बाद गाजीपुर की ओर बढ़ने का आदेश दिया।'' इससे जाहिर होता है कि बाबर न केवल अयोध्या आया बल्कि यहां कुछ दिन निवास भी किया।

इस समय श्रीराम जन्मभूमि पर बाबर या उसके सूबेदार मीरबाकी द्वारा जो मस्जिद खड़ी की गयी उसके भीतर तथा बाहर दो पद्य वद्ध अभिलेख अंकित हैं। फारसी लिपि में अंकित इस अभिलेख से इसके निर्माण के इतिहास पर कुछ प्रकाश पड़ता है। भीतर का अभिलेख इस प्रकार है।

ब फरमूदाये शाह बाबर की अदिलस

इसका हिन्दी अनुवाद इस प्रकार होगा–

''बाबर शाह की आज्ञा से, जिसके न्याय की ध्वजा आकाश तक पहुंचती हुई है, नेक दिल मीरबाकी ने फरिस्तों के उतरने के लिए, यह स्थान बनाया है। उसकी कृपा सदा बनी रहे। कि बुवद खैर बाकी।

'बुवद खैर बाकी' इस वाक्य से इस मस्जिद के निर्माण की तिथि 935 हिजरी (1528 ई.) भी निकल आती है।''

कि शुद दर दौर गेती कामरानी

इस अभिलेख में क्रमशः ईश्वर (खुदा), हजरत मुहम्मद तथा बाबर की प्रशंसा की गयी है। पहले शेर में कहा गया है – सम्पूर्ण जगत का सृष्टिकर्ता (ईश्वर) स्वयं निवास रहित है। दूसरे शेर में हजरत मुहम्मद को दोनों जहान तथा पैगम्बरों का सरदार कहा गया है। तीसरे शेर में बाबर को कलंदर कहकर उसकी प्रशंसा की गयी है किन्तु अगली दो पंक्तियां (जो अपठनीय हैं) के बिना उसका साफ अर्थ नहीं निकलता।

बाबर के समय तक अयोध्या की प्रतिष्ठा बहुत बढ़ गयी थी भगवान राम की जन्मभूमि भारतीय यात्रियों के आकर्षण का मुख्य केन्द्र बन चुका था सम्भवतः स्थानीय मुसलमानों के भड़काने से ही बाबर ने इस मंदिर को तोड़वा कर मस्जिद बनवाने की आज्ञा दी होगी क्योंकि हिन्दू तीर्थ यात्री के केन्द्र के रूप में इसका विकास मुसलमान पीरो–फकीरों की आंख में चुभने लगा था। स्थानीय परम्परा स्वीकार करती है कि पीर फजल अब्बास मूसा आसिकान ने बाबर को इसके लिए भड़काया कि वह मंदिर को तोड़वा कर वहां मस्जिद बनवाये। इस फजल अब्बास मूसा आसिकान की कब्र अभी भी श्रीराम जन्मभूमि के पश्चिम–दक्षिण करीब आधे किलोमीटर की दूरी पर है। इस कब्र में पूर्व मंदिर के वैसे ही दो स्तम्भ लगे हैं जैसे कि चौदह स्तम्भ मस्जिद में लगे हैं।

उन्हें पता चला कि मुस्लिम सेना मंदिर को कभी भी ध्वस्त कर सकती है क्योंकि बादशाह का ऐसा आदेश मिल गया है तो उन्होंने मंदिर की बड़ी प्रतिमा को सरयू में डाल दिया और छोटी प्रतिमा को लेकर उत्तराखण्ड की ओर निकल गये। लेकिन मन्दिर के अन्य पुजारियों तथा भक्तों ने प्राण रहते मंदिर की रक्षा करने का संकल्प लिया। जब शाही कुमक मन्दि के द्वार पर पहुंची तो पुजारियों ने रास्ता रोक लिया। धर्मान्ध आक्रामकों ने तुरन्त उनका शिर काट लिया। श्रीराम जन्मभूमि की चौखट पहलीबार शहीदों के रक्त में डूब गयी। मूर्ति भंजकों की उन्मादी भीड़ अन्दर घुस गयी लेकिन वहां उन्हें कोई प्रतिमा नहीं मिली। बाहर निकल कर तोपों की मार से उन्होंने मन्दिर को जमीन पर सुला दिया। मंदिर को गिराने की खबर आग की तरह आस–पास के इलाकों में फैल गयी। प्रशासन ने पूरी चुस्ती बरती कि उत्तेजित हिन्दू अयोध्या न पहुंचने पायें लेकिन फिर भी बड़ी संख्या में लोग यहां धर्म की वेदी पर अपनी प्राणाहुति देने के लिए पहुंचे। परम्परा के अनुसार मन्दिर को ध्वस्त करने के विरोध में एक लाख छिहत्तर हजार हिन्दू मारे गये। यह संख्या अतिशयोक्तिपूर्ण हो सकती है किन्तु ऐसा नहीं है कि मीरबाकी ने निर्विरोध अपना कार्य सम्पन्न कर लिया हो। भारी खून खराबे के बाद ही वह शाही आदेश को पूरा कराने में सफल हो सकता होगा। किसी लेखक का यह कथन सही है कि जलालशाह ने हिन्दुओं के खून का गारा बनाकर उस पर लखैरी ईंटों की नींव मस्जिद बनवाने के लिए दी। यह सहज अनुमान का विषय है कि हिन्दू समुदाय ने यों ही मंदिर की जगह मस्जिद नहीं बन जाने दिया होगा लेकिन तत्कालीन संघर्षों की कहानी जानने का कोई ऐसा आधार नहीं है जिससे प्रामाणिक ब्यौरा दिया जा सके।

राजा महताब सिंह श्रीराम जन्मभूमि मंदिर की रक्षा तो नहीं कर सके लेकिन उनके बलिदान से उठी आग से तमाम भारतीय वीरों का खून उबल उठा। सीमित शक्ति, छोटी ताकत होने के बावजूद ये वीर लगातार शाही सेना से टकराते रहे और मर्यादा पुरुषोत्तम के आदर्शो की वेदी पर अपनी प्राणाहुति देते रहे। महताब सिंह के बाद बाबर के मात्र दो वर्षो के सीमित शासनकाल में श्रीराम जन्मभूमि की मुक्ति के लिए तीन बड़े संघर्ष हुए। और उसके बाद तो अकबर के समय तक लगातार तब तक संघर्ष होते ही रहे जब तक कि भारतीयों को मस्जिद प्रांगण में पूजा करने का अधिकार नहीं मिल गया। अकबर की शांतिप्रिय धार्मिक नीति के कारण तनाव कम हुए जिसके परिणाम स्वरूप जहांगीर तथा शाहजहां के समय शांति रहीं। किन्तु कट्टरपंथी औरंगजेब के शाहंशाह बनते ही स्थिति बदल गयी। उसने उस चबूतरे को ही खुदवा डाला जहां हिन्दू पूजा पाठ करते थे। अंतिम खूनी संघर्ष अंग्रेजों के शासन काल में 1934 में हुआ। बाबर के समय से लेकर स्वतन्त्रता प्राप्ति के समय तक हुए प्रमुख संघर्षो का विवरण नीचे दिया जा रहा है।

देवीदीन पाण्डेय का प्रहार– अभी मस्जिद बन नहीं पाई थी कि पं0 देवीदीन पाण्डेय ने आस–पास के क्षत्रियों को ललकारा और जन्मभूमि पर टूट पड़े। पण्डित देवीदीन पाण्डेय अयोध्या से 1 किमी0 पूर्व स्थित ग्राम सनेथू के निवासी बताये जाते हैं। वे पुरोहित थे। उन्होंने आस–पास के रियासतों के क्षत्रिय वीरों को संगठित किया और शाही सेना पर एका–एक हमला कर दिया। पण्डित देवीदीन शास्त्र के ही नहीं शस्त्र के भी पण्डित थे। उनके आकस्मिक प्रहार से एक बार तो मीरबाकी घबड़ा गया। लेकिन फिर जमकर युद्ध हुआ। पांच दिन तक युद्ध के बाद छठे दिन मीरबाकी के अंगरक्षक द्वारा फेंकी गयी एक ईंट पण्डित जी के सिर में लगी उन्होंने शिर को पगड़ी से कस कर बांधा और दूने उत्साह से तलवार चलाने लगे।

www.vadaprativada.com

राणा रणविजय सिंह का हमला– पण्डित देवीदीन की मृत्यु के मात्र दो सप्ताह बाद हंसवर (यह रियासत भी फैजाबाद के पूर्वांचल में स्थित है) के राजा रणविजय सिंह ने भारी सेना लेकर जन्मभूमि पर अधिकार के लिए हमला किया। दस दिन की मुठभेड़ में इस राजा ने भी अपने सभी सैनिकों के साथ इस पवित्र धरती को अपने रक्त से सींचकर स्वर्ग के लिए प्रस्थान किया।

स्त्रियां भी पीछे नहीं रहीं – संकट की घड़ी में राजपूतानें की क्षत्राणियां आत्महत्या का रास्ता (जौहर) अपनाती रही हैं लेकिन अयोध्या की क्षत्राणियों ने अपने पति की आहुति का बदला लेने के लिए स्वयं लोहा अपने हाथ में उठाया और लकड़ी की आग में नहीं रण की आग में कूदकर जौहर किया।

उपर्युक्त हंसवर नरेश रणविजय सिंह की स्वर्गयात्रा के बाद उनकी पत्नी रानी जयराज कुमारी ने अपने पति के संकल्प को पूरा करने का बीड़ा उठाया। इस वीरबाला ने तीन हजार स्त्रियों को संगठित करके नारी–सेना बनायी और शाही सेना के साथ छापा–मार युद्ध शुरू किया। जयराज कुमारी का हमला लगातार हुमायूँ के समय तक जारी रहा। बताया जाता है कि हुमायूँ के समय में इस रानी ने एक बार तो शाही सेना को खदेड़कर जन्मभूमि पर कब्जा कर लिया किन्तु थोड़े ही समय में नई शाही कुमक आ गयी और उसके साथ लड़ते हुई इस वीरांगना ने भी अपने रक्त को अपने पति की रक्तधारा में मिलाकर अपना संकल्प पूरा किया।

इस युद्ध में रानी के गुरु सन्यासी स्वामी महेश्वरानन्द जी भी

शामिल रहे। अपनी शिष्या के साथ लड़ते हुए उन्होंने भी शाही सेना को भारी क्षति पहुंचाकर वीरगति प्राप्त की।

साधुओं का पहला हमला– महेश्वरानन्द की मृत्यु से इस अंचल के साधु सन्यासियों में भी जोश भर उठा। महेश्वरानन्द के बाद स्वामी बलरामाचारी ने युद्ध को आगे बढ़ाया उन्होंने न केवल साधु सन्यासियों को एकत्र किया बल्कि गांव–गांव घूमकर हिन्दुओं की एक जबरदस्त सेना तैयार की। इन्होंने कई हमले किये। परम्परा के अनुसार इन्होंने करीब बीस बार हमला किया। कई बार वे जन्मभूमि पर अधिकार करने में सफल रहे किन्तु उनकी सफलता स्थाई नहीं हो पाती थी। नयी शाही कुमुक के आ जाने पर उन्हें भागना पड़ता। फिर भी बलरामाचारी ने अयोध्या क्षेत्र के पूरे अॅचल में ऐसी चेतना लगा दी थी कि श्रीराम जन्मभूमि के लिये प्राणोत्सर्ग करने के लिये उत्सुक वीरों की टोली ने मुगल शासन को तंग कर दिया।

मस्जिद के आंगन में मन्दिर– यह स्वामी बलरामाचारी के शौर्य्य का परिणाम था कि तत्कालीन मुगल बादशाह अकबर को मस्जिद के प्रांगण में मन्दिर स्वीकार करना पड़ा। बताया जाता है कि स्वामी बलरामाचारी ने ही लड़ भिड़कर अकबर से मस्जिद के प्रांगण में एक चबूतरा बनवाने का अधिकार ले लिया जिस पर खस की टट्टियों का तीन फिट ऊॅचा एक मंन्दिर बनवाया गया। बलरामाचारी को यह अधिकार दिलाने में अकबर की धार्मिक उदारता के साथ–साथ उसके दो दरबारी रत्नों राजा टोडरमल तथा वीरबल के सहयोग ने भी काम किया। उसी स्थल पर अब भी छोटा सा मन्दिर है जिसमें पूजा पाठ होता है।

शांति तथा सद्भाव का काल– 1528 में मन्दिर की जगह मस्जिद के निर्माण से नफरत की जो दीवाल खड़ी हुई थी अकबर के समय (1556–1605 के मध्य) वह बहुत कुछ ढह गयी और शाहजहॉ के समय तक (1627–1658 ई.) सद्भाव और शांति का वातावरण बना रहा। करीब 69–70 वर्ष की इस अवधि में जन्मभूमि के लिए किसी संघर्ष का पता नहीं चलता।

www.vadaprativada.com

हिन्दू श्रद्धा से इस भूमि पर आते थे और पूजा–पाठ करते थे। मुसलमान प्रति जुमे को नमाज पढ़ने आते थे लेकिन हिन्दुओं के मन्दिर की ओर से जूता पहनकर नहीं जाते थे। यद्यपि मुस्लिम फकीरों को यह बात खटकती थी लेकिन शासन का रूख भिन्न देखकर वे भी कोई कदम उठाने की हिम्मत नहीं रखते थे। किन्तु जब शाहजहां के बाद औरंगजेब मुगल सिंहासन पर बैठा तो घर्मान्ध फकीरों ने फिर अपनी चाल चलनी शुरू कर दी। जिन फकीरों ने नेकदिल बाबर को मन्दिर तोड़ने तक के लिए मजबूर कर दिया उनके लिए औरंगजेब को धर्मान्धता के रंग पर लाने में कितनी देर थी।

भारतीय (हिन्दू) स्वभावतः सहिष्णु होते हैं। वे छोटे से चबूतरे को लेकर सन्तुष्ट थे। वे मस्जिद में भी अपने राम को विराजमान मानते थे। मुस्लिम नमाज से भी उन्हें कोई चिढ़ नहीं थी। लेकिन इस्लामी कट्टरपंथयों को मस्जिद के प्रांगण में घंटा, घरियालियों, शंख तथा कीर्तन की गूँज तनिक नहीं सुहाती थी। जब औरंगजेब जैसा कट्टर इस्लामी शासक मुगलिया तख्त पर आसीन हुआ तो इन कट्टरपंथियों ने दिल्ली दरबार में पहुंचकर बादशाह से फरियाद की। बताया जाता है कि औरंगजेब ने आदेश भेजा कि हिन्दू मस्जिद में कोई धार्मिक उत्सव न करें। उसने अपने सिपहसालार जांबाज खां को सेना के साथ अयोध्या भेजा। लेकिन यहां भी बैरागी व हिन्दू रियासतों के क्षत्रिय सतर्क थे। उस समय समर्थ गुरु रामदास के शिष्य बाबा वैष्णव दास अयोध्या के अहिल्याघाट स्थान पर स्थित परशुरामठ में आसन जमाये थे। उनके साथ हजारों चिमटाधारी साधुओं का जत्था था। बाबा वैष्णव दास के साथ गुप्तारगढ़ी के सशस्त्र साधुओं का एक दल भी तैयार खड़ा था। ''शारद'' जी के इतिहास के अनुसार हिन्दू रजबाड़ों तथा बाबा वैष्णवदास के चिमटाधारी साधुओं ने उर्वसी कुण्ड के पास जांबाज खां की सेना का मुकाबला किया और उसे मार भगाया।

बताया जाता है कि इस पराजय के कारण औरंगजेब ने जांबाज खां को हटा दिया और उसकी जगह सैय्यद हसन अली को नियुक्त किया। सैय्यद हसन अली एक बहुत बड़ी सेना लेकर तोपखानों के साथ अयोध्या के लिए रवाना हुआ। वैष्णव दास को जब इसकी खबर मिली तो उन्होंने सिख गुरू गाविन्द सिंह को पत्र लिखकर अयोध्या बुलवाया। गोबिन्द सिंह फौरन यहां पहुंचे। सैय्यद हसन के मुकाबले के लिए हिन्दू सेना के तीन

भाग कर दिये गये और शाही सेना का मुकाबला तीन स्थानों–रुदौली (फैजाबाद–बाराबंकी सीमा पर), सआदतगंज (फैजाबाद नगर का पश्चिमी नाका) तथा जालपा (अयोध्या की वर्तमान दूध डेयरी के पास) पर करने का निश्चय किया। सआदतगंज में सिखों का दस्ता खेतों के पास छिप गया। (बताया जाता है इसके पास छोटा सा एक तोपखाना भी था) क्षत्रियों का दस्ता रुदौली में जा डटा। वैष्णव दास का चिमटाधारी गिरोह जालपा के पास सरपतों की झुरमुट में जम गया। शाही सेना पर पहला प्रहार रुदौली में हुआ। तब तक मुगल सैनिक संभलते क्षत्रिय मारकाट कर भाग निकले। शाही सेना जब सआदतगंज पहुंची तो सिखों ने धावा बोल दिया। पीछे से क्षत्रियों ने भी हमला कर दिया। इस दुहरे हमले में शाही सेना तहस–नहस हो गयी और सैय्यद हसन अली खां भी मारा गया। गुरू गोविन्द सिंह अयोध्या में थोड़े दिन ब्रह्मघाट पर ठहरे थे जहां कभी गुरु नानक देव भी पधारे थे।

श्रीराम जन्मभूमि पर हिन्दुओं का सबसे बड़ा उत्सव राम–जन्म का हुआ करता था। उस समय लाखों साधु तथा गृहस्थों की उपस्थिति में स्थानीय कट्टरपंथी मुसलमान कुछ नहीं कर पाते थे लेकिन वे बादशाह के कान अवश्य भरते रहते थे। अंततः 1664 में औरंगजेब स्वयं एक बड़ी सेना के साथ अयोध्या आया और जन्मभूमि पर हमला बोल दिया। इस हमले में हिन्दुओं के पैर नहीं टिक सके। तत्कालीन पुजारी प्रतिमा लेकर भाग खड़े हुए। औरंगजेब की सेना ने चबूतरे पर खड़े फूस के मंदिर को नोच डाला और चबूतरे को खोदकर गड्ढा कर दिया। यह विनाशलीला आठ दिनों तक चलती रही। औरंगजेब ने अयोध्या के दो और विष्णु मंदिरों को गिरवाकर वहां मस्जिदें कायम कर दी। जन्मभूमि पर झोपड़ी रखकर पूजा करने का भी अधिकार हिन्दुओं को नहीं रह गया।

औरंगजेब के बाद दिल्ली सल्तनत कमजोर होती चली गयी। अवध के सूबे में भी स्थानीय रियासतें स्वतन्त्र हो गयी थी। दिल्ली के बादशाह मुहम्मदशाह ने अपने रिस्तेदार सआदत खां मुहम्मद अमीन बुरहानुलमुल्क

www.vadaprativada.com

को (सितम्बर 1722) अवध का सूबेदार बनाकर भेजा। उसने सूबेदारी बचाने के लिए अवध पर हमला किया। अमेठी (सुल्तानपुर जिले की एक रियासत) के राजा गुरूदत्त सिंह ने नवाब का मुकाबला किया। इस युद्ध में सूबेदार विजयी रहा हिन्दू संगठन छिन्न–भिन्न हो गया।

हिन्दुओं को पूजा अर्चना का फिर अधिकार मिला

सआदतअलीखां के बाद उसका दामाद अबुलमंसूरअलीखां 'सफदरजंग' अवध का सूबेदार (1739 ई.) बना। उसके समय में अयोध्या में शान्ति बनी रही। सफदरजंग के बाद उसका बेटा सुजाउद्दौला अवध का नवाब हुआ (6 अक्तूबर 1754)। सफदरजंग के मन्त्री नवल राय तथा सुजाउद्दौला के मन्त्री बालकृष्ण दोनों धार्मिक प्रकृति के थे। उनके काल में किसी तरह का साम्प्रदायिक वैमनस्य नहीं खड़ा हुआ। सुजाउद्दौला ने अयोध्या से पश्चिम हटकर एक नये नगर की नींव डाली जिसका नाम फैजाबाद रखा गया। (इस समय फैजाबाद जनपद का मुख्यालय है)। इससे पहली बार प्रशासनिक मुख्यालय अयोध्या से खिसककर फैजाबाद गया। सुजाउद्दौला के बाद उसके बेटे आसफुद्दौला ने (1775 ई.) में अपनी राजधानी फैजाबाद से हटाकर वहां से 120 किमी. पश्चिम लखनऊ में बनाया। आसफुद्दौला को भी टिकैत राय जैसे योग्य मंन्त्री का सहयोग मिला। टिकैत राय ने हिन्दू–मुस्लिम सद्भाव की स्थापना में अभूत–पूर्व योगदान किया। टिकैत राय के प्रयत्नों से ही वर्तमान हनुमानगढ़ी बनी थी। नवाब ने उसके लिए पूरा सहयोग किया था। इसी काल में जन्मभूमि पर मस्जिद प्रांगण में वह चबूतरा फिर बना जिसे औरंगजेब ने खुदवा दिया था। नवाबों के काल में साम्प्रदायिक सद्भाव पूरी तरह बना रहा किन्तु नवाब नसीरुद्दीन हैदर के शासनकाल (1827–37 ई.) में श्रीराम जन्मभूमि को पुनः पूर्व रूप देने की कोशिश हुई। मकरही के तालुकेदार के नेतृत्व में हिन्दुओं

वाजिदअलीशाह के समय हिन्दू–मुस्लिम संघर्ष

नवाब वाजिदअलीशाह के शासनकाल में (सन् 1855ई.) गुलाम हुसेन नामक एक सुन्नी फकीर ने दंगा करा दिया। विडम्बना यह कि ये गुलाम हुसैन साहब हनुमानगढ़ी पर पलते थे। ये हनुमान जी के सामने तुरही बजाया करते थे। किसी बात को लेकर उसका महान्त से विवाद हो गया इस पर उसने सुन्नी मुसलमानों को यह कहकर भड़काना शुरू कर दिया कि हनुमानगढ़ी के भीतर औरंगजेब ने जो मस्जिद बनवाई थी उसे वैरागियों ने गिरा दिया है। मुसलमान उसके बहकावे में आ गये और संगठित होकर हनुमानगढ़ी पर हमला बोल दिया लेकिन हनुमानगढ़ी के साधु भी संगठित थे। उनकी मार के आगे मुसलमान भाग चले। साधुओं ने उनका पीछा किया वे सब जाकर जन्मभूमि मस्जिद में छिप गये। साधुओं ने मस्जिद का फाटक तोड़ डाला। दोनों ओर से जम् के संघर्ष हुआ। इस संघर्ष में 11 साधु तथा 75 मुसलमान मारे गये।

अयोध्या के तत्कालीन कोतवाल मिरजा मुनीमबेग ने झगड़ा निपटाने की बहुत कोशिश की लेकिन नाकामयाब रहे। संघर्ष के बाद नायब कोतवाल नासिर हुसैन ने सभी शवों को एक ही जगह दफन कर दिया।

हम इश्क के बन्दे हैं मजहब से नहीं वाकिब।
गर काबा हुआ तो क्या बुतखाना हुआ तो क्या।।

(हम तो प्रेम के पुजारी है, मजहब क्या है हम नहीं जानते, चाहे मन्दिर हो चाहे मस्जिद, मेरे लिए दोनों में कोई फर्क नहीं है)।

नाराज हुए। अमेठी के मीर–मौलवी अमीरअली नामक मुसलमान ने क्रोध में भर कर स्वयं धर्मयुद्ध (जेहाद) करने का निश्चय किया। उसने धर्मरक्षा के नाम पर मुसलमानों का एक विशाल दल सजाया तथा श्रीराम जन्मभूमि पर हिन्दुओं का चबूतरा और फूस का मन्दिर ध्वस्त करने के लिए कूच किया। नवाब की ओर से मुसलमानों को रोका गया लेकिन वे नहीं माने। नवाब ने देखा कि मुसलमान नहीं मान रहे है तो अमीरअली को रोकने के लिए उसने भी अपनी एक सैनिक टुकड़ी भेज दी। इधर हिन्दू राजाओं ने भी जेहाद का मुकाबला करने की तैयारी की। रुदौली या रौनाही के पास अमीरअली की फौज के साथ नवाब की फौज का मुकाबला हुआ। हिन्दू सेना भी पहुंच गयी थी। इस युद्ध में अमीरअली मारा गया। हिन्दुओं की ओर से भीटी के राजकुमार जयदत्त सिंह भी इस अभियान में शामिल हुए। इस घटना का विवरण ''मदीनतुल–औलिया' नामक ग्रन्थ में भी आया है। इसके अनुसार ''मौलवी अमीर अली जुमा की नमाज पढ़कर 170 आदमियों को लेकर जेहाद के लिए रवाना हुए। सन् 1271 से 1272 हिजरी तक वायदा मोकिद हुआ। जेहाद का नाम सुनकर सैकड़ों मुसलमान शरीक जिहादीन (जेहाद में शामिल) हुए। तकरीबन दो हजार की जमेयत होगी जो रौनाही के पास जंग करते हुए शहीद हुए।''

'गुमगस्ते हालात अयोध्या' ने भी इस घटना का विवरण दिया है। इसमें अमीरअली को कसवा अमेठी (लखनऊ) का निवासी बताया गया है। नवाब ने उसे अपने अहलकार मिर्जा मुनीम बेग इत्यादि द्वारा फसाद करने से रोकना चाहा किन्तु वह नहीं माना। आखिरीबार 1855 में उसने जबर्दस्त तैयारी की जिसमें संडीला, रामपुर तथा दरियाबाद (बाराबंकी) के मुसलमान तालुकेदारों और मौलवियों ने हाथ बंटाया। यह देखकर अंग्रेजी रेजीडेंसी के मुख्याधिकारियें ने लखनऊ के नवाब से सम्पर्क किया कि अमीरअली और उसके साथी आतंककारियों को रोका जाय। नवाब ने शाही फरमान जारी करके उन्हें रोका, परन्तु जब वह नहीं माने तो अंत में शाही सेना और अंग्रेजों की सेना भेजी गयी। राजा शेरबहादुर सिंह ताल्लुकेदार कर्मियर गोण्डा की भी एक सेना गयी। राजा शेरबहादुर सिंह की सेना ने अमीरअली के साथियों का सफाया किया।

1857 के प्रथम स्वतंत्रता संग्राम के बाद अवध क्षेत्र ब्रिटिश शासन क्षेत्र में आ गया। यद्यपि इस काल में जन्मभूमि पर कोई विवाद नहीं था,

www.vadaprativada.com

मुसलमान हर शुक्रवार को अपनी नमाज अदा करते थे तथा हिन्दू चबूतरे पर बने अपने फूस के मन्दिर में पूजा–पाठ, लेकिन दोनों भीतर–भीतर इस कोशिश में लगे रहते थे कि दूसरे का वहां से बिल्कुल सफाया कर दें, इसलिए छिटपुट संघर्ष होते रहते थे। ई. 1857 का वर्ष ऐसा रहा जब कि हिन्दू और मुसलमान कंधे से कंधा मिलाकर अंग्रेजों के विरुद्ध युद्ध में लगे थे। साम्प्रदायिक द्वेष की खाइयां पट रही थीं। ऐसे में यह स्वाभाविक था कि मुसलमानों की ओर से जन्मभूमि का मस्जिद समेत पूरा क्षेत्र हिन्दुओं को सौंप दिये जाने का प्रस्ताव आता। मुस्लिम नेता अमीरअली ने अयोध्या–फैजाबाद के सभी मुसलमानों को एकत्र करके उन्हें समझाया कि वे हमारे सम्राट बहादुरशाह जफर को अपना सम्राट मानकर जिस तरह युद्ध कर रहे हैं उससे हमें भी आगे बढ़कर ऐसा कुछ करना चाहिए जिससे दोस्ती और मजबूत हो। इसके लिए जरूरी है कि श्रीरामचन्द्र जी की जन्मस्थली हिन्दुओं को सौंप दी जाय। वातावरण सौहाद्र्य का था सभी मुसलमानों ने एक स्वर से समर्थन किया। लेकिन जब अंग्रेजों का यह पता चला तो वे घबड़ा गये। वे नहीं चाहते थे कि हिन्दू और मुसलमान दोस्त बन जाय। इस समय अयोध्या में अंग्रेजों के विरुद्ध संघर्ष करने वालों में बाबा रामचरणदास प्रमुख थे। रामजन्मभूमि के हस्तान्तरण की मनोभूमि तैयार करने में उनकी भी महत्वपूर्ण भूमिका बतायी जाती है। अंग्रेजों ने षडयन्त्र पूर्वक अमीरअली तथा बाबा रामचरणदास को बागी घोषित कर दिया तथा 18 मार्च 1858 को कुबेर टीला पर एक इमली के पेड़ में अमीर अली तथा बाबा रामचरणदास दोनों को फांसी दे दी गयी। स्थानीय जनता बहुत दिनों तक इस इमली के पेड़ की पूजा करती रही। अंग्रेजों ने जब यह श्रद्धा देखी तो उसने इस इमली के पेड़ को भी कटवा दिया।

रानी विक्टोरिया का हस्तक्षेप– जन्मभूमि और बाबरी मस्जिद के विवाद की जानकारी जब ब्रिटिश महारानी विक्टोरिया को हुई तो उसने इस मस्जिद का एक नक्शा अपने पास मंगाया और उसके आंगन के बीच एक रेखा खींच दी और आदेश दिया कि आंगन के बीच में इस रेखा पर एक दीवाल खींच दी जाय मुसलमान अन्दर नमाज पढ़ें, हिन्दू बाहर के चबूतरे पर अपना पूजा पाठ करें। ब्रिटिश अधिकारियों ने आदेश का पालन किया और मस्जिद के आंगन में करीब आठ फिट ऊॅची एक दीवाल खड़ी कर दी गयी जिसमें बीच–बीच में लोहे की जालियां लगा दी गयी तथा लोहे के ही दो दरवाजे लगाये गये। यह दीवाल आज भी इसी तरह बरकरार है।

इससे यह पता लगता है कि उस समय की सरकार भी यह समझती थी कि राम को जन्मभूमि को तोड़ कर उस जगह मसजिद खड़ी कर देना आसान काम नहीं है। इसका प्रभाव सारे हिन्दुस्तान पर पड़ेगा। सोई हुई हिन्दू जाति एक बार अँगड़ाई लेकर खड़ी हो जायगी। फिर तो उससे टकराकर दिल्ली का सिंहासन चूर चूर हो जाएगा और सारी राजसत्ता धूल में मिल जायगी।

इस फरमान के निकलने का क्या परिणाम हुआ। भारत के हिन्दू जन्मभूमि के उद्धार के लिए कुछ कर सके या नहीं, इसका हमारे पास कोई प्रमाण नहीं है। किन्तु कनिंघम की लखनऊ गजेटियर में प्रकाशित रिपोर्ट यह बतलाती है कि युद्ध करते हुए एक लाख चौहत्तर हजार हिन्दू जब मारे जा चुके, उनकी लाशों का ढेर लग गया तब बाबर के वजीर मीर बांकी खॉ ने तोप के द्वारा जन्मभूमि का मन्दिर गिराया। यह रिपोर्ट कनिंघम ने किस आधार पर दी है इसका भी हमारे पास कोई प्रमाण नहीं है। लेकिन उसकी यह रिपोर्ट कम से कम हिन्दुओं के मारे जाने की है। इसी से पाठक यह जान सकते हैं कि समस्त भारतीय जनता इस अन्याय से क्रुद्ध थी और अपनी समस्त शक्तियों से जन्मभूमि की रक्षा करने के लिये कृत संकल्प थी। हैमिल्टन तो बाराबंकी गजेटियर में यहां तक लिखता है कि जलालशाह ने हिन्दुओं के खून का गारा बनाबर उसपर लाहौरी ईंटों की नींव मसजिद बनवाने के लिये दी थी।

मसजिद के बन जाने पर भी हिन्दू शान्त नहीं बैठे, वे येन केन प्रकार से रामजन्मभूमि को पुनः प्राप्त करने के लिये कृत संकल्प रहे। हुमायूँ के समय में अयोध्या के पास स्थित सराय सिरसिण्डा, और राजेपुर नामक ग्राम के सूर्यवंशीय क्षत्रियों में एक बार पुनः जोश आया और दस हजार की संख्या में एकत्रित होकर उन्होंने पुनः जन्मभूमि पर धावा बोल दिया। स्थानापन्न सारी शाही छावनियॉ काट डाली, तम्बू फूंक दिए और मसजिद का अगला द्वार तोड़ फोड़ कर बरबाद कर दिया किन्तु तीसरे ही दिन शाही कुमक आ गई और सब क्षत्री युद्ध करते हुए मारे गये उनके गांवों में आग लगा दी गई किन्तु उनके वंशज इस पर भी शान्त नहीं हुये। अकबर के राज्य काल में उन्होंने फिर संगठित रूप से जन्मभूमि पर हमला किया। शाही सेना सावधान थी। बड़ी भयंकर मारकाट हुई। जब यह समाचार दिल्ली पहुॅचा तो राजा बीरबल और टोडर मल ने अकबर को बहुत समझाया। हिन्दुओं ने अपनी भयंकर मार से शाही सेना के पांव उखाड़ कर एक चबूतरा मसजिद के सामने बना लिया था, अकबर ने उसी पर भगवान के स्थापित करने की आज्ञा दे दी। दीवाने अकबरी में लिखा है–

इस नीति से कुछ दिनों के लिये यह झगड़ा शान्त हो गया। उस चबूतरे पर स्थित भगवान की मूर्ति का पूजन पाठ बहुत दिनों तक अबाधगति से चलता रहा। अकबर की कठोर आज्ञा के कारण मुसलमान उनके घड़ी घंटा आदि बजाने और पूजन पाठ में कोई विक्षेप नहीं करते थे। यही क्रम शाहजहॉ के समय तक रहा। जहांगीर और शाहजहॉ ने भी इस सम्बन्ध में हिन्दुओं का कोई विरोध नहीं किया। सन् 1640 में जब दिल्ली

के सिंहासन पर हिन्दू धर्म द्वेषी औरंगजेब बैठा तब जन्मभूमि के इतिहास के पृष्ठ में एक क्रान्तिकारी नया अध्याय आरम्भ हुआ।

राजसिंहासन पर बैठते ही सबसे पहले औरंगजेब का ध्यान अयोध्या की ओर गया। प्रायः देखा गया है कि जैसा राजा होता है वैसे ही उसके कर्मचारी एवं अधिकारी वर्ग हो जाते हैं। जहां अकबर के समय में हिन्दू जाति के प्रति सहानुभूति रखने वालों की अधिकता थी वहां औरंगजेब के समय में हिन्दू धर्म द्वेषियों का प्राबल्य हो गया, सिंहासन पर बैठते ही मुल्लाओं ने औरंगजेब के कान भरने शुरू किये उसका ध्यान राम जन्मभूमि की ओर दिलाया औरंगजेब ने अपने सिपहसालार जाबांज खॉ की अध्यक्षता में एक जबरदस्त सेना भेज दी। वह सेना अयोध्या आ पहुॅची। पुजारियों को पहले ही यह मालूम हो गया था अतः उन्होंने पुनः भगवान की मूर्ति एवं पूजा का सामान छिपा दिया तथा रातो रात देहातों में घूम घूम कर मन्दिर पर आक्रमण होने की सूचना हिन्दुओं को दे दी और रात ही रात हिन्दुओं का एक जबरदस्त दल मन्दिर की रक्षार्थ श्रीराम जन्मभूमि पर आ डटा, उन दिनों अयोध्या में अहिल्याघाट पर परशुराम मठ में स्थित वैष्णवदास नाम के एक महात्मा निवास करते थे दक्षिण प्रान्त के समर्थ गुरु श्रीरामदास जी महाराज के शिष्य थे और उन्हीं की आज्ञानुसार सम्पूर्ण उत्तरीय भारत में हिन्दू संस्कृति के प्रचार एवं विधर्मियों से देश का उद्धार करने के लिये घूम रहे थे। इनके साथ दस हजार चीमटाधारी साधुओं का एक जबरदस्त गिरोह था। उस गिरोह के साधु प्रचार, योग साधना, जासूसी, युद्ध विद्या आदि सभी कार्यो में निपुण थे, जन्मभूमि पर औरंगजेबी आक्रमण का समाचार जब इन साधुओं को मिला तो यह साधुओं की जबरदस्त सेना हिन्दुओं के दल से मिल गई और इस जबरदस्त दल ने उर्बसी कुण्ड पर मुगल सेना का डटकर सामना किया। सात दिन तक लगातार घोर संग्राम होने पर साधुओं के चीमटों की मार से शाही सेना के धुर्रे उड़ गये और वह मैदान छोड़कर भाग खड़ी हुई।

मुगल सेना को पराजित कर भगा देने के पश्चात् यह साधुओं का दल भाऊ के जंगलो में छिप गया। हिन्दुओं का गिरोह भी जहां तहां अन्तर्ध्यान हो गया और चबूतरे पर स्थित मन्दिर की रक्षा हो गई। इस पराजय का समाचार जब औरंगजेब के पास पहुंचा तो वह अत्यन्त क्रुद्ध हुआ और जॉबाज खॉ को पदच्युत करके उसके स्थान पर सैय्यद हसन

अली को सिपहसालार बनाकर पचास हजार सेना देकर जन्मभूमि को तहस नहस कर डालने के लिये भेजा।

मगर साधुओं का दल भी असावधान नहीं था। इस गिरोह के कुछ आदमियों को पत्र देकर वैष्णवदास ने गुरु गोविन्द सिंह के पास भेजा। गुरु गोविन्द सिंह अपने अधीनस्थ सिक्खों की एक जबरदस्त सेना लेकर उन दिनों आगरे की ओर मुगल सेना की हेंकडी भुला रहे थे। वे वैष्णवदास के साथ आकर मिल गये और ब्रह्मकुण्ड पर अपना अड्डा जमाया। वैष्णवदास के जासूस कदम 2 पर मुगल सेना की टोह ले रहे थे। जब उन्हें पता चला कि हसनअली की अध्यक्षता में पचास हजार मुगल सेना ऑधी की तरह अयोध्या की ओर बढ़ती चली आ रही और उसके साथ एक तोपखाना भी है तो सिक्ख और साधुओं की सेना ने अपने तीन दल कर दिये। एक दल सिक्खों का एक छोटे से तोपखाने के साथ फैजाबाद के वर्तमान शहादतगंज के पास खेतों में छिप गया। दूसरा दल गृहस्थ क्षत्रियों का था जिसने रुदौली में डटकर शाही सेना का सामना किया। और वैष्णवदास का चीमटाधारी गिरोह जालपा पर सरपत के जंगलो में छिपकर मुगल सेना की प्रतिक्षा करने लगा।

चार वर्ष तक लगातार आक्रमण न होने के कारण हिन्दू असावधान थे। इससे लाभ उठाकर सन् 1664 में औरंगजेब ने पुनः श्रीजन्मभूमि पर आक्रमण कर दिया। यह समाचार पाकर हिन्दुओं ने मुकाबला किया किन्तु शाही सेना के सामने उसकी एक न चली पुजारियों के प्रयत्न से मन्दिरस्थ भगवान की प्रतिमा छिपा दी गई। इस अचानक आक्रमण में दस हजार

हिन्दुओं का बध हुआ। मारे गये हिन्दुओं की लाशें मन्दिर के पूर्वीय द्वार पर स्थित नवकोण का एक कन्दर्प कूप नामक कुवॉ था उसमें भर दी गई और चारों ओर से चहारदिवारी उठाकर उसे घेर दिया गया। आज भी वह कन्दर्प कूप ''गंज शहीदा'' के नाम से मन्दिर के पूर्व द्वार पर स्थित है जिसे मुसलमान अपनी सम्पत्ति बतलाते हैं।

आठ दिन तक रात दिन घोर संग्राम

शाही सेना ने जन्मभूमि का चबूतरा खोद डाला। बहुत दिनों तक वह चबूतरा गढ़े के रूप में वहां पर स्थित था। हिन्दू जनता श्रीराम नौमी के दिन भक्ति भाव से उसी गढ़े में जल अक्षत पुष्प चढ़ा दिया करती थी। जब लखनऊ की नवाबी का उदय हुआ और लखनऊ की नवाबी की मसनद पर नवाब सहादतअली खॉ तख्तनशीन हुआ तो एक बार फिर हिन्दुओं ने जन्मभूमि पर आक्रमण किया किन्तु इस बार भी दुर्भाग्य से उन्हें सफलता नहीं मिली।

नवाब नासिरुद्दीन हैदर के समय में फिर हिन्दुओं का जबरदस्त आक्रमण हुआ। इस बार हिन्दू संगठित थे। अबकी बार डटकर नवाबी सेना का सामना हुआ। आठवें दिन हिन्दुओं की शक्ति क्षीण होने लगी। जन्मभूमि के मैदान में हिन्दू और मुसलमानों की लाशों का ढेर लगा हुआ था। शाही सेना के सैनिक अधिक संख्या में मृतक हुए थे। इस भयानक संग्राम में भीटी हसवर, मकरही, खजुरहट, दियरा, अमेठी के राजा गुरुदत्त सिंह आदि भी सम्मिलित थे। शाही सेना इन्हें पछाड़ती हुई हनुमानगढ़ी तक ले आई। हनुमानगढ़ी तक आने पर साधुओं की चीमटाधारी जमात हिन्दुओं से आ मिली। इस जमात में खाकी साधुओं के साथ बड़े बड़े महन्त भी थे। अबकी बार डटकर घोर संग्राम हुआ। इस युद्ध में शाही सेना के चिथड़े उड़ गये और उसे रगेदती हुई हिन्दू सेना ने जाकर जन्मभूमि पर अधिकार कर लिया।

नवाब वाजिदअली शाह के समय में पुनः हिन्दुओं ने जन्मभूमि के उद्धारार्थ आक्रमण किया। अबकी बार के आक्रमण में अवध के दो चार राजाओं को छोड़कर सभी हिन्दू राजा सम्मिलित थे। फैजाबाद गजेटियर में कनिंघम लिखता है कि इस बार शाही सेना एक ओर खड़ी तमाशा देखने लगी। हिन्दू और मुसलमानों को यह छूट दे दी गई कि वे लड़कर आपस

www.vadaprativada.com

में निपट लें। यह संग्राम ऐसा भयानक था कि वर्णन करना शक्ति के बाहर है। दो दिन के रात दिन तक होने वाले भयंकर युद्ध में बुरी तरह मुसलमान पराजित हुए। क्रुद्ध हिन्दुओं की भीड़ उनके मकान फूँकने और कबरें तोड़ फोड कर बरबाद करने एवं मसजिदों को मिसमार करने लगी। यहाँ तक कि मुर्गियों तक को जिन्दा नहीं छोड़ा। केवल उन्होंने स्त्रियों और बच्चों को कोई हानि नहीं पहुँचाई। सारी अयोध्या में प्रलय मच गया, मुसलमान अयोध्या छोड़कर अपनी जान लेकर भाग निकले। इतिहास लेखक कनिंघम लिखता है कि यह अयोध्या का सबसे बड़ा हिन्दू मुसलिम बलवा था। मुसलमानों की इस प्रकार की दुर्दशा देखकर शाही सेना ने जिसमें अधिकतर अंग्रेज थे। स्थिति को काबू में किया। सारे शहर में करफ़्यू आर्डर की घोषणा कर दी गई। उस समय अयोध्या के महाराज मानसिंह ने नबाब वाजिदअलीशाह से कह सुनकर चबूतरा फिर से हिन्दुओं को बनवा लेने की आज्ञा दिलवाई और चबूतरे पर तीन फीट ऊँची खस की टट्टियों का एक छोटा सा मन्दिर बना जिसमें पुनः भगवान की स्थापना की गई।

अंग्रेजी राज्य में दो बार जन्मभूमि पर आक्रमण हिन्दुओं द्वारा हुए। पहला आक्रमण सन् 1912 में और दूसरा आक्रमण सन् 1934 में हुआ। पहले आक्रमण में तो बाबरी मसजिद को हानि नहीं पहुंची किन्तु दूसरे आक्रमण में बाबरी मसजिद तोड़ फोड़ कर बरबाद कर दी गई किन्तु फैजाबाद के डिप्टी कमिश्नर जे0 पी0 निकल्सन ने मसजिद पुनः बनवा दी।

बाबरी मसजिद में एक जगह लिखा है–

27 मार्च सन् 1934 मुताबिक 11 जीउल हिज्जा सन् 1352 हिजरी बरोजे बलबा हिन्दू बलबाई मसजिद शहीद करके असली कुतवए उठा ले गये जिसको तहव्वर खाँ ठेकेदार ने निहायत खूबी के साथ तामीर किया।

मुसलमानों द्वारा श्रीरामजन्मभूमि के उद्धार का प्रयत्न

सन् 18 सौ सत्तावन के विप्लव में जब बहादुर शाह को सम्राट घोषित कर विद्रोह का नारा बुलन्द किया गया तो अयोध्या के हिन्दू, राजा देबीबख्श सिंह गोंडा नरेश तथा बागी रामचरणदास की अध्यक्षता में संगठित हो गए। उस समय बागी मुसलमानों के नेता अमीरअली ने अयोध्या और फैजाबाद के समस्त मुसलमानों को इक्ट्ठा करके कहा कि बिरादराने वतन बेगमों के जवरातों को बचाने में हमारे हिन्दू भाइयों ने जिस कदर

www.vadaprativada.com

सबसे अन्तिम भयानक युद्ध जिसमें शाही सेना खड़ी तमाशा देखती थी और हिन्दू मुसलमान आपस में लड़कर फैसला कर रहे थे वह सन् 1856 में हुआ था, जिसमें सबसे बढ़ कर हानि मुसलमानों की हुई थी।''

4025. We do not find any reference for the supporting material of the said book. On page 33, however, reference has been made to Cunningham's report but the facts which are alleged to have been written by Cunningham do not find mention in the work of Cunningham which we have already referred in some detail. The alleged Farman of Babar, which is mentioned by the author in support of his work that Babar issued order for desecration of the birth place of Lord Rama, has not been shown to exist anywhere. Despite our query, the learned counsel could not place his hand even to suggest about the very existence of any such Farman. Again the quote from page 173 of Babarnama is also perverse as no such fact is mentioned anywhere in the Babarnama written by various writers and the learned counsel Sri Verma could not support the said work.

4026. Ex facie, we are clearly of the view that whatever have been written in his work mostly is imaginary and the creation of the author himself instead of having any factual authenticity. We, therefore, find it difficult to believe on the said narration in the absence of any supporting and corroborating material particularly when it is not shown by Sri R.L. Verma that author of the said booklet was a historian or in any case an expert in the subject having special skill and resources to collect such historical facts.

4027. Exhibit 114 (Suit-5) (Register 23, Page 535-577) is a copy of article/paper by Dr.S.P.Gupta, Director, Allahabad Museum being Presidential address in XXIII Annual Conference of the India Archaeological Society held on 22nd December, 1989 at Guntur (State of Andhra Pradesh). The subject of the paper is "Ram Janmabhumi Controversy : Passion Apart What History And Archaeology Have To Say On This Issue". The paper only shows the personal opinion of the author. The aforesaid author has appeared as witness O.P.W. 3 on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-5). We find no reason to take into account the aforesaid opinion when he himself has appeared before us and has deposed as an expert witness (Archeologist).

4028. Exhibit 115 (Suit-5) (Register 23, Page 579-587) is another article by Dr. S.P.Gupta, Former Director, Allahabad Museum, Allahabad on the subject "Ram Janambhoomi-Babri Masjid Revisited". This document also does not require any further comments and we do not find any reason to consider it since it is at the best an opinion of an expert and when the expert himself has deposed his statement, it is better to consider that statement instead of his ex parte opinion.

4030. Exhibit 51 (Suit-5) (Register Vol. 28, page 217-225) is a copy of a Article written by Sri Ajay Mitra Shastri under the title "Ayodhya and God Rama" said to have been published sometime after December 1992. The author was Head of Ancient Indian History and Archeology Department, Nagpur University, Nagpur, Maharashtra, who has expressed his opinion that the building in dispute was constructed by Babar in 1528 as is evident from the inscriptions fixed on the said building built after demolition of a Hindu Temple and in support of this opinion, he has relied on (a) the Chandravati plates of the Gahadavala King Chandradeva, dated Vikram Samvat 1150 (AD 1092-93); (b) the research work of Hans Bakker; (c) inscription of Jayachachandradeve, dated AD 1184 said to have been seen by him when he claimed to have visited Ayodhya in 1992; (d) the stone inscription said to have been found at the time of demolition of the disputed building on 6th December 1992.

4031. Exhibit 129 (Suit-5) (Register Vol. 28, page 227-281; 289-325) claimed to be an Article read by Sri S.P. Gupta in a Conference at Ayodhya in October, 1992. The author himself has appeared in witness box and, therefore, we would consider his evidence along with his oral deposition.

4034. Exhibit 128 (Suit-5) (Register Vol. 28, page 355-367) claimed to be copy of the resolution of archaeologists, historians, epigraphists and scholars of allied disciplines participated in seminars held between 10th to 13th October, 1992 at Ayodhya.

4035. Though expert witnesses produced on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-4), have sought to claim that history does not say

demolition of religious structure by Rulers of one religion and nothing is there to show discrimination between the followers of different religions, we find that the said averments are mere in the nature of a deliberate attempt to misguide the people and the Court about historical information which already is present in black and white in various historical literature. Even some of the corresponding writers have admitted and mentioned these things. The first source, we find more reliable than other is, the translation of the work of a number of Muslim writers given in the book "History of India As told by its own Historians" by H.M. Elliot and John Dowson published in eight volumes.

4036. Henry Miers Elliot was born in 1808 at Westminster in England. Due to consolidation of British power in India, the East India Company felt extreme deficiency of civil servants and, therefore, sought reinforcement from England by resorting to an emergence summary kind of recruitment and it is pursuant thereto Mr. Elliot was nominated as a candidate by Campbell Marjoribanks and was appointed directly in civil services to be sent to India. He sought to specialize in oriental languages and during the Training Examination, secured honorary classes. Initially, he was appointed an Assistant to the Magistrate and Collector of Bareilly and thereafter he worked in the capacity of Assistant to the Political Agent and Commissioner at Delhi, Assistant to the Collector and Magistrate of Mooradabad, Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue for the North West Provinces. In 1847 he became Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. He died in an early age of 45 while seeking to restore his broken health in the soothing climate of Cape of Good Hope.

4037. In 1846, Mr. Elliot got printed first volume of his "Supplement to the Glossary of Indian Terms" and in 1849 published the first volume of his "Bibliographical Index to the Historians of Mohammedan India". It appears that Mr. Elliot had collected a large number of manuscripts mostly from Muslim writers containing history of Indian territory of the periods since when the Islamic followers got attracted to India hearing stories of its huge wealth on account whereof one of the Muslim writer termed it "Meadows of Gold". All the work was either in Persian or Arabic. Elliot got translated it either himself or through others. After his death the material which he had collected was taken by his widow to England and thereafter Prof. John Dowson of Staff College, Sandhurst got it edited, and also, wherever necessary, made corrections in translation etc. The said work has been published in eight volumes under the title "The History of India As told by its own Historians". The above book basically therefore contains the English translation of a large number of manuscripts which are the work of several Muslim and other authors. The antiquity of the work relates back to the period of Mahmud Ghaznavi. Besides, in the form of Appendix, the authors have analysed the Indian history of more than a thousand years which was relevant in connection with Muslims with Indian sub-continent.

4038. In Appendix A, Page 403 and onwards, (Vol. 2) of the book "History of India", the author has referred to what has been said by Abu Rihan al Biruni in his work "Tarikhu-I—Hind" written in Arabic stating that Kabul was earlier governed by Hindu Kings. It says :

"Kabul was formerly governed by princess of Turk lineage.

It is said that they were originally from Tibet. The first of them was named Barhtigin, and the Kingdom continued with his children for sixty generations. The last of them was a Katorman, and his minister was Kala, a Brahman. This minister was favoured by fortune, and he found in the earth treasures which augmented his power. Fortune at the same time turned her back upon his master. The Katorman's thoughts and actions were evil, so that many complaints reached the minister, who loaded him with chains, and imprisoned him for his correction. In the end the minister yielded to the temptation of becoming sole master, and he had wealth sufficient to remove all obstacles. So he established himself on the throne. After him reigned the Brahman(s) Samand, then Kamlua, then Bhim, then Jaipal, then Anandpal, then Nardajanpal, who was killed in A.H. 412. His son, Bhimpal, succeeded him, after the lapse of five years, and under him the sovereignty of Hind became extinct, and no descendent remained to light a fire on the hearth. These princes, notwithstanding the extent their dominions, were endowed with excellent qualities, faithful to their engagements, and gracious towards their inferiors. The letter which Anandpal wrote to Amir Mahmud, at the time enmity existed between them, is much to be admired. 'I have heard that the Turks have invaded your dominions, and have spread over Khurasan; if you desire it, I will join you with 5,000 cavalry, 10,000 infantry, and 100 elephants, but if you prefer it, I will send my son with twice the number. In making this proposal, I do not wish to ingratiate myself with you. Though I have vanquished you, I do not

desire that any one else but myself should obtain the ascendancy. This prince was a determined enemy of the Musulmans from the time that his son, Nardajanpal, was taken prisoner; but this son was, on the contrary, well-disposed towards them."

4039. The author, however, made minor corrections in the above extract which was initially translated and published by M. Reinaud and instead of word 'Katorman', in translation this line is, “The last of them was a name, which represents the name of a tribe, or prince of that tribe, as well as the name of the country in which that tribe resided. He also observed that Turkish dynasty at Kabul which is said to have lasted for sixty generations should mean that it must have continued in the same family or tribe and they appear to have reigned upto AD 850. Further, history and genealogy of the rulers of Kabul and nearby areas has been considered thereafter which we do not find of much relevance to discuss in detail. However, in order to see the extent of reliability and the so called historical narrations in the books of different languages written by innumerable writers, we find useful to refer some discussion made in Vol.-2, Appendix Note C which relates to the history of Ghaznivides and reads as under :

“The contents of this volume relate more especially to the history of the Ghaznivides. It therefore seems expedient to take a general review of the authors who have particularly treated of that dynasty.

First in order come 'Utbi, who has already been sufficiently noticed. It may be remarked generally that he is deficient in dates, and, though the chief and earliest authority on all which relates to the early invasions of India, be evidently had no personal knowledge of that country, a circumstance which of course greatly detracts from his value. He is fuller in the reign of Subuktigin and the transactions in Turkistan than any of his successors.

Thirty years later come Abu-l Fazl Baihaki, of whose voluminous and important work only a portion has come down to us.

After an interval of more than two centuries follows the Nizamu-t Tawarikh, composed in 674 H., about a century after the extinction of the dynasty. The short notice which this work devotes to the Ghaznivides has been translated as an extract from that work, but it is of little authority, and confuses dates irremediably towards the close of the dynasty, in which the transactions were carried on too far eastward to be within the foreign ken of the author. Indeed he confesses that he knows nothing of their successors, the Ghorians, beyond the names of three of their kings.

The next, but after a period of two hundred years from 'Utbi is the Tabakat-i Nasiri, the chief value of which is that it quotes the lost volumes of Abu-l Fazl Baihaki. It is for this reason, however, greatly to be regretted, especially as he is one of the earliest Muhammadan authors who wrote in india, that his notice of Mahmud's reign is so very curt; for it is that in which we most feel the want of Baihaki's familiar gossiping narrative. It is true he is quoted in the Jami'u-l Hikayat, Tarikh-i Guzida, Rauzatu-s Safa, and Firishta; yet it may be doubted if any except the author of the first ever saw his Tarikh-i Nasiri, which is mentioned by name in the Tabakat. In some of the other Ghaznivides reigns, this work differs from others, as will be seen from the passages which are extracted in the article TABAKAT-I NASIRI in this volume.

The great copyist and extractor, Rashidu-d din, follows after the lapse of about twenty years. In this Jami u-t Tawarikh, he follows 'Utbi implicitly, as far as the Yamini extends, taking not only this facts, but giving a literal translation of that work, even to the images and similes. So little does he attempt to improve upon the Yamini, that he even leaves out the important expedition to Somant, which was undertaken after the close of that work. This resource fails him altogether in the later reigns, which are consequently very unsatisfactorily disposed of in the Jami u-t Tawarikh.

About twenty years later follows the Tarikh-i Guzida of Hamdu-lla Muatauff – although he mentions the Makamat of Abu Nasr Miskati, and the Mujalladat of Abu-l Fazl Baihaki, he does not appear to have read them: at least he gives no information derived from them, and altogether his account of Mahmud's reign is very meagre. He mentions the names of the towns taken by him, omitting , however, all notice of Somnat, and without stating the dates of their capture. He is so often quoted by Mirkhond, Khondamir, and Firishta, that he has had more credit than he deserves in this portion of his universal history.

After a long interval of about a century, we have

Mirkhond, who in his Rauzatu-s Safa has given us the first detailed account of the history of the Ghaznivides. It is founded in the early portion upon the Yamini, but in later reigns rests upon some other authorities which are not quoted. Those which are mentioned, as the Nasiri and Guzida, are too meagre to have furnished the fuller information found in the Rauzatu-s Safa. This portion has been translated by F. Wilken into latin, and published with the original text at Berlin in 1832, under the title of Historia Gasnevidarun. He has added in footnotes passages from Firishta and Haidar Razi, where the details are more complete than in the Rauzatu-s Safa. Haidar Razi, however, is no original authority. I have found all the passages, except two, quoted by Wilken to be word for word the same as the Tarikh-i Alfi, even where other authorities are quoted, as Ibn Asir, Ibn Kasir, and Hafiz Abru. The chief omission to be noted in Mirkhond's account is that of the expeditions to India intervening between those of Kanauj and Somnat, and the attack upon the Jats of Jud after Mahmud's return from Somnat.

Mirkhond is followed by his nephew Khondamir in the Khulasatu-l Akhbar and the Habibu-s Siyar. The former has been translated by Price with additions from Firishta, and from the latter a translation will be found in a later volume of this work. He follows the Rauzatra-s Safa closely, and has no new authorities, omitting some passages, but dealing more copiously with the biographies of contemporary poets and ministers. Altogether, Mirkhond's narrative is preferable, and in this, as well as in many other portions of his history Khondamir might have saved himself the trouble of attempting to rival his uncle.

The next authority of any value is the Tarikh-i Alfi. Like as in other portions of that work, it is, in the history of the Ghaznivides, also somewhat deficient in connexion, and troublesome, from adopting a new era; but, altogether, it is copious and correct. 'Utbi and Mirkhond are the chief authorities of the Tarikh-i Alfi, but something is added from the less known histories, which have already been mentioned as being quoted at second hand by Haidar Razi. It is to be regretted that Abu-l Fazl Baihaki is not amongst them. Here also we have no detailed account of the Indian expeditions between those of Kanauj and Somnat, and that to Thanesar is not mentioned.

Nizamu-d din Ahmad, in his Tabakat-i Akbari, gives a succinct account of the history of the Ghaznivides, and is particular in mentioning his dates. He notices very curiously the events in Turkistan, Sistan, and 'Irak, confining his attention principally to what related to India. In his work we, for the first time, find mention of several expeditions to India, which are passed over by his predecessors; and it is, therefore, to be regretted that he does not signify on what authority he relates them. The only probable source, among those mentioned as his general authorities, is the Zainu-l Akhbar. Nizamu-d din is followed closely by Firishta.

'Abdu-l Kadir, in his Tarikh-i Badauni, follows Nizamu-d din implicitly; but, in order to show the

variations, he occasionally quotes the Nizamu-t Tawarikh, and the Lubbu-t Tawarikh. He adds also, some verses of poets who were contemporary with Ghaznivides.

The Muntakhabu-t Tawarikh of Kahki Shirazi is very brief, and scarcely deserves notice. It is chiefly follows the Habibu-l Siyar.

We next come to the history of Firishta, which gives the most complete and detailed account which we have of the Ghaznivides. Dr. Bird complaints of the author's ignorance of the geography of Upper India; but he has exhibited no more than his predecessors, and in one or two instances attempts corrections. His chief resource is the Tabakat-i Akhbari, but he has also used the Tarikh-i Yamini, the Tarikh-i Guzida, the Rauzatu-s Safa, and the Habibu-s Siyar. Some of the other works which he quotes there is reason to believe he never saw. The translation by Briggs is generally correct and faithful in this portion, and there are no omissions in it of any great consequence.

The Khulasatu-t Tawarikh discusses this history in a peculiar fashion of its own. It omits all notice of transactions on the frontiers of Persia and Turkistan, and confines itself solely to India, insomuch that it leaves out whole reigns in which the sovereign had no connection with India: and, in consequence, preposterously confines the whole number of reigns to seven only. There is no other novelty in this chapter, except that it substitutes two new readings of places, which if they are derived from the history of Mahmud by 'Unsuri, which is quoted in the preface, may be considered authentic.

These are all the authorities which is seems necessary to notice, as all the subsequent ones follow in the wake of Firishta. Abu-l Fida, Ibn Shuhna, Ibn Asir, Ibn Kasir, Nikbi, and Lari, have had all that is valuable in them extracted by the diligence of European authors, who have translated, abridged, or commented on the reigns of the Ghaznivides. The Turkish histories of the period, such as the Nakhbatu-t Tawarikh, and the work of Munajjim Bashi, we may fairly presume to have been exhausted by the industry of Hammer-Purgstall amongst the fourteen different histories which he quotes as authorities upon Mahud's reign – so that the only hope now left us for ascertaining any new fact with respect to the history of the Ghaznivides is in the recovery of the missing volumes of Memoirs, which we know to have been written by contemporary writers, and to have been in existence less than two centuries ago – such as those of Abu-l Fazl Baihaki, Abu Nasr Mishkani, and Mulla Muhammad Ghaznawi. The Makamat of Abu Nazr Mishkati (Mishkani) is mentioned by Firishta (Briggs I. 32 and 97), and the same author is referred to in Wilken (Gasnevidarum, p. 189). Firishta quotes from him the anecdote about Masud, which has been given from the Tabakat-i Nasiri (Supra, p. 271), and which is there also attributed to Abu Nasr Mishkan. The Tarikh-i Mulla Muhammad Ghaznawi is mentioned by 'Abdu-r Rahman, who wrote the Mir-atu-l Asrar and Mir-at-i Masudi, in Jahangir's time. The author was contemporary with Sultan Mahmud, of whom his work is said to give an ample account."

4040. Regarding the expeditions of Mahmud Ghaznavi in India with which the real Muslim history of invasions commenced as is widely known, we find that the European authors noticed the same in the 17th Century and probably the first publication came from D' Herbelot, a French author under the title "Bibiotheque Orientale, Art. "Mahmood." Paris, published in 1697. Modern history writers tell us about seventeen expeditions of Mahmud Ghaznavi to India but in "Tabakat-i-Akbari" written by Nizamu-d-din Ahmad, the period of expedition mentioned twelve which has been reiterated by some subsequent writers. This discrepancy has been noticed by "Dowson" in Appendix, Note B, on page 434-435 (Vol.-2) as under :

> "It has been usual to consider the number of Mahmud's expeditious to India to be twelve. The first authority for this number is Nizamu-d din Ahmad in the Tabakat-i Akbari; and as Dow has also numbered them as twelve, the most English authors following him as the standard, have entertained the same persuasion. But it is curious to observe that, while Nazamu-d din mentions that there were altogether twelve, in recording them seriatim, he enumerates no less that sixteen; and Dow, while he marginally notes twelve, records no less than fifteen different ivasions. Even Elphinston though he notes twelve, records more. The Khulasatu-t Tawarikh gives twelve, and confines itself to that number, or in reality only to eleven, as by some mistake an expedition to Kashmir and Kalinjar are placed in one year, and the tenth expedition is omitted. The Akhbar-i Muhabbat follows it in both errors."

4041. Dowson, thereafter, proceeded to consider expeditions period-wise individually and has shown total seventeen expeditions which took place in 1026 AD (AH 417). The author has not hesitated in giving the details of the battles fought by Ghazani and his determination to destroy Hindu religious places as well as the idols. The first expedition started in 1000 A.D. (AH 390) when Mahmud Ghaznavi captured many forts, provinces in the northern territory of India and established his Governors thereat. Various Volumes of "History of India" by Elliot and Dowson (supra) give details of various subsequent Muslim rulers and about their act of demolition of Hindu temples which included similar orders having been issued even during the reign of Jahangir, Shahjahan and Aurangzeb etc.

4042. Sri Hari Shankar Jain sought to place before us "The History and Culture of the Indian People; The Delhi Sultanate" publish by Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan (1st published in 1960, 4th Edition 1990) forwarded and edited by K.M.Munshi, R.C.Majumdar, A.D.Pusalker and A.K.Majumdar. On page 617 in the Chapter titled as "Hindu Muslim Relations" Status of the Hindus has been discussed. The learned authors referred to a passage from an article written by Sir Jadunath Sarkar, historian as under:

> "The poison lay in the very core of Islamic theocracy. Under it there can be only one faith, one people, and one all overriding authority. The State is a religious trust administered solely by His people (the Faithful) acting in obedience to the Commander of the Faithful, who was in theory, and very often in practice too, the supreme General of the Army of militant Islam (Janud). There could be no

place for non-believers. Even Jews and Christians could not be full citizens of it, though they somewhat approached the Muslims by reason of their being "People of the Book" or believers in the Bible, which the Prophet of Islam accepted as revealed.

"As for the Hindus and Zoroastrians, they had no place in such a political system. If their existence was tolerated, it was only to use them as hewers of wood and drawers of water, as tax-payers, "Khiraj-quzar", for the benefit of the dominant sect of the Faithful. They were called Zimmis or people under a contract of protection by the Muslim State on condition of certain service to be rendered by them and certain political and civil disabilities to be borne by them to prevent them from growing strong. The very term Zimmi is an insulting title. It connotes political inferiority and helplessness like the status of a minor proprietor perpetually under a guardian; such protected people could not claim equality with the citizens of the Muslim theocracy.

"Thus by the basic conception of the Muslim State all non-Muslims are its enemies, and it is the interest of the State to curb their growth in number and power. The ideal aim was to exterminate them totally, as Hindus, Zoroastrians and Christian nationals have been liquidated (sometimes totally, sometimes leaving a negligible remnant behind) in Afghanistan, Persia and the Near East.

"The Quran (IX.29) calls upon the Muslims 'to fight those who do not profess the true faith, till they pay jizya with the hand in humality (ham sagkhirun)'. This was a poll-tax payable by Hindus (and also Christians) for permission to live in their ancestral homes under a Muslim sovereign.

"In addition to the obligation to pay this poll-tax, the Hindu was subjected to many disabilities by the very constitution of the Muslim theocracy. He must distinguish himself from the Muslims by wearing a humble dress, and sometimes adding a label of a certain colour to his coat. He must not ride on horse-back or carry arms;though wearing the sword was a necessary part of the dress of every gentleman of that age. He must show a generally respectful attitude towards Muslims. The Hindu was also under certain legal disabilities in giving testimony in law-courts, protection under the criminal law, and in marriage. Finally, in the exercise of his religion he must avoid any publicity that may rouse the wrath of the followers of the Prophet.

"Under the Canon Law, as followed in Islamic countries, a man who converts a Muslim to some other faith is liable to death at the hands of any private Muslim, and so also is the apostate from Islam."

4043. Thereafter the authors further said:

"Sir Jadunath's exposition of the Islamic theory, and in particular his view of the nature of the jizya, has been opposed by some. But his views are fully borne out by the following passage in the Zakhirct-ul-Muluk by Shaikh Hamadani:

"The is another mandate relating to those subjects who are unbelievers and protected people (zimmis). For their

governance, the observance of those conditions which the Caliph 'Umar laid in his agreement for establishing the status of the fire-worshippers and the People of the Book (Jews and Christians) and which gave them safety is obligatory on rulers and governors. Rulers should impose these conditions on the zimmis of their dominions and make their lives and their property dependent on heir fulfilment. The twenty conditions are as follows:

1. In a country under the authority of a Muslim ruler, they are to build no new homes for images or idol temples.

2. They are not to rebuild any old buildings which have been destroyed.

3. Muslim travellers are not to be prevented from staying in idol temples.

4. No Muslim who stays in their houses will commit a sin if he is a guest for three days, if he should have occasion for the delay.

5. Infidels may not act as spies or give aid and comfort to them.

6. If any of their people show any inclination towards Islam.

7. Muslim are to be respected.

8. If the zimmis are gathered together in a meeting and Muslims appear, they are to be allowed at the meeting.

9. They are not to dress like Muslims.

10. They are not to give each other Muslim names.

11. They are not to ride on horses with saddle and bridle.

12. They are not to possess swords and arrows.

www.vadaprativada.com

13. They are not to wear signet rings and seals on their fingers.

14. They are not to sell and drink intoxicating liquor openly.

15. They must not abandon the clothing which they have had as a sign of their state of ignorance so that they may be distinguished from Muslims.

16. They are not to propagate the customs and usages of polytheists among Muslims.

17. They are not to build their homes in the neighbourhood of those of Muslims.

18. They are not to bring their dead near the graveyards of Muslims.

19. They are not to mourn their dead with loud voices.

www.vadaprativada.com

20. They are not to buy Muslim slaves.

At the end of the treaty it is written that if zimmis infringe any of these conditions, they shall not enjoy security and it shall be lawful for Muslims to take their lives and possessions as though they were the lives and possessions of unbelievers in a state of war with the faithful.

It is unnecessary for our present purpose to enter into any further discussion about the correctness of Sir Jadunath's interpretation of the Muslim scripture, but there is no doubt that he correctly represents the view accepted, both in theory and practice, by the Muslim rulers and theologians in India during the period under review. And this is really more relevant to the present issue."

4044. Sri Jain also referred to the following narration contained in pages 620 as under:

"Reference has already been made above to the position of the Hindus in Muslim State according to Islamic theory as explained by the 'wise men', and particularly Qazi Mughis-ud-din of Bayana, to Ala-ud-din Khalji, and the earnestness with which the Sultan carried it into practice.

Muhammad bin Tughlaq is generally, and perhaps rightly, regarded as a man of liberal views. The Chinese Emperor asked for his permission to build a temple at Samhal, a place of pilgrimage in the Himalayan hills frequented by the Chinese, which the Muslim army "had seized, destroyed and sacked". But the Sultan, who accepted the rich presents sent by the Chinese Emperor, wrote to him a reply to this effect: "Islam does not allow the furthering of such an aim and the permission to build a temple in a Muslim country can be accorded only to those who pay the jizya."

It has been already stated above, that Firuz Tughlaq, who also looked upon India as a Muslim country, held more bigoted views, for he would not permit the erection of new temples even by those who paid the jizya. He, however, realized this tax with utmost rigour even from the Brahmans who were up to that time exempted from it.

The true nature of the jizya is further revealed by the opposition of the orthodox Muslims to the idea that the Hindus should be allowed to perform their religious ceremonies simply by the payment of the jizya. The historian Ziya-ud-din Barani, a contemporary of the two

Tughlaq emperors, mentioned above, wrote in righteous indignation.

". . . . Should the kings consider the payment of a few tankas by way of jizya as sufficient justification for their allowing all possible freedom to the infidels to observe and demonstrate all orders and details of infidelity, to read the misleading literature of their faith and to propagate their teachings, how could the true religion get the upper hand over other religions and how could the emblems of Islam be held high. . . . ."

It would thus appear that an orthodox section of the Muslims chafed at the Hanafite doctrine which was officially accepted by the Muslim rulers in India. As Qazi Mughis-ud-din pointed out to 'Ala-ud-din Khalji, 'it was Hanifa alone who assented to the imposition of the juzuya on the Hindus. Doctors of other schools allow no other alternative but 'Death or Islam'. As has been stated above, Sultan Mahmud followed this policy, and evidently Barani and men of his ilk yearned for its restoration in the fourteenth century. Barani gave vent to this feeling in the following passage in his Fatawa-i-Jahandari. "If Mahmud . . . . had gone to India once more, he would have brought uder his sword all the Brahmans of Hind who, in that vast land, are the cause of the continuance of the laws of infidelity and of the strength of idolators, he would have cut off the heads of two hundred or three hundred thousand Hindu chiefs. He would not have returned his "Hindu-slaughtering" sword to its scabbard until the whole of Hind had accepted Islam. For Mahmud was a Shafi'ite, and

according to Imam Shafi'i the decree for Hindus is "either death or Islam"-that is to say, they should either be put to death or embrace Islam. It is not lawful to accept jizya from Hindus as they have neither a prophet nor a revealed book." The same book shows how Barani chafed at the idea that the "desire for the overthrow of infidels and the abasing of idolators and polytheists does not fill the hearts of the Muslim kings", who "permit the banners of infidelity to be openly displayed in their sapital and in the cities of Muslims, idols to be openly worshipped ." "How", asks the Indignant historian, "will the true faith prevail if rulers allow the infidels to keep their temples, adorn their idols, and to make merry during their festivals with beating of drums and dhols, singing and dancing?"

If a learned historian and a distinguished Muslim felt no scruple in openly expressing such views in writing, in the fourteenth century A.D., i.e. six hundred years after the Muslims first settled in India, one can well understand why the gulf between the Hindus and the Muslims could never be bridged.

A perusal of the history of Afif, another great historian of the period, conveys the same lesson. He puts in the mouth of the wazir of Firuz Tughlaq a long speech in which he frankly says that a State should have only two ends in view, namely (1) prosperity of the kingdom and protection of the people, etc.; and (2) destruction of the infidels and expansion of the kingdom."

4045. He also refers to page 627 of the book, the 'Travellor's Account' of 'Ibn Batutah', who came to India about the middle of the 14th century A.D. during the reign of Muhammad bin Tughlaq has been dealt with and refers to the following:

> "Ibn Batutah confirms the general statement, made above, particularly about forcible conversion, mass-enslavement, and the inferior status of the Hindus as zimmis. Thus he remarks that "other nations embraced Islam only when the Arabs used their swords against them."

4046. The Muslims and non Muslims peoples were also treated differently. One of such illustration has also been noticed by J.S. Grewal, Director, Indian Institute of Advanced Study, Shimla in his book "The New Cambridge History of India II.3 The Sikhs of the Punjab" and in Chapter 2 thereof, which is under the heading "Foundation of The Sikh Panth", it says :

> "The rulers are unjust; they discriminate against their non-Muslim subjects by extorting jizya and pilgrimage tax. The ruling class is oppressing the cultivators and the common people. The rajas prey like lions and the muqaddams eat like dogs; they fall upon the raiyat day and night. Notwithstanding the association of non-Muslims with the administration at subordinate levels, contemporary rule is occasionally equated with 'Muslim" rule."

4047. The historical events as they took place are fait accompli. In our view today whether we appreciate or condemn, like or dislike, the practice, policy, individual acts or omissions on the part of a Ruler, who invaded India or his successor who ruled India in the past, we cannot forget that whatever they have done is a matter of history and will always remain so. After this length of period, we are not able to understand as to how

this Court is competent either to comment upon the genuity or ingenuity, justification or injustification, correctness or incorrectness, cruelty or liberality etc. on their part. One side while condemning the acts of any of such invader and/or Ruler may find obstruction as a track of rocks difficult to break. Similar attempt on the part of other side either to justify such acts or to otherwise glorify the same would be of no help. If something is wrong ex facie it was always so but the concept of wrongness is a relative one. Something which may be wrong at one point of time for some individual may not be so at another point of time or for other set of individuals. It depends on a variety of factors, which we find difficult to place in a strait jacket formula or to codify. It is a historical fact that before independence of India in 1947, most of the geographical area of this Country had to face a large number of invasions either from a north west side or from Europe from different directions. Mainly these warring incursions were with the motive of syphoning off the huge wealth this Country had. Some times those invaders decided to make it a source of regular earning and left their Governors/ Representatives/ Commanders in their conquered territory to rule. The religious background those invaders had, came along with them but all the individuals did not come from their native place. The situation was exploited by creating such circumstances so that the native people of the conquered territories of this Country would have no option but to convert their religion so as to avail favour of Rulers. These are some of the historical illustrations which this Country had experienced in last more than a millennium. In our view, this by itself would not be a relevant factor to decide or adjudicate an issue in the present day territory governed by a written and codified law including a written Constitution. All the persons irrespective of their religion, faith, customs, etc. who were residing in the territory of India set out in our Constitution at the time of its promulgation became citizens of this Country besides those who have born or otherwise have acquired citizenship as per the procedure laid down in the Constitution and the statute concerned. They are governed by the statutes as are in force in this Country. A Court of law is also bound to decide a matter in accordance thereof. Neither the Rulers several hundred years back were governed by these statutes we are confronted or governed nor they can be under the authority of judicial review of a Court of a judicial system which came into existence later on and is governed by a different system in-vogue subsequently.

4048. For our purpose it is not at all necessary to go into this larger question and the manner in which it has been raised since certain facts are the matters of history and all those who have some idea of history are well aware. Whether an act of past should be seen in a different context colour or texture may be a subject matter of debate and discussion amongst the intellectual of this country whose approach is also tainted with their own mind set and this is really unfortunate part that we are still looking for only unbiased independent and objective historians who may give us a correct and clear picture of historical evidence but whatever we had to do suffice it to conclude that the incidence of temple demolition are not only confined to past but is going in continuously. The religion which is supposed to connect all individuals with the brotherly feeling has become a tool of hatred and enmity. For the purpose of the present case we can stop on this aspect by simply observing that the justification sought to be canvassed by some of the expert witnesses of Muslim parties is that in the history the people who attacked the Indian continent from its northern borders of Panjab etc. in the last more that thousand years and odd have acted according to their understanding and policies as the case may be but they are totally irrelevant in the present day time where this county is governed by a written constitution which clearly declares against discrimination merely on the ground of religion.

4049. Some of the learned counsel for the parties sought to rely on the Constitution Bench decision in Dr. M. Ismail Faruqui (supra) by reading certain passages in a manner as if the Apex Court has expressed its opinion on certain aspects which are contentious issues before this Court in the suits pending before us and said that the said observations are binding on this Court and, therefore, those aspects cannot be looked into.

4050. Sri Iyer, Senior Advocate sought to read the aforesaid judgement where the contents of the White Paper issued by the Central Government quoted to suggest that these are the findings of the Government are of India having taken note by the Apex Court and, therefore, should be treated to be concluded. It is suggested that the issues, if any, in those matters should be deemed to be concluded by the judgement of the Apex Court.

4051. We, however, find no force in the submission. The Constitution Bench considered the validity of Ayodhya Act, 1993 whereby certain land at Ayodhya including the land which was subject matter in these suits sought to be acquired by the Government of India. Further, the Apex Court was considering the special reference made by the President of India on 7th January, 1993 under Article 143 of the Constitution seeking opinion of the Apex Court on the following question:

> "Whether a Hindu temple or any Hindu religious structure existing prior to the construction of Ram Janma Bhumi-Babari Masjid (including the premises of the inner and outer courtyard of said structure) in the area on which the structure stood."

4052. In the context of the above matters the Apex Court refers in detail the contents of the White Paper published by the Government of India in February, 1993. In the context of the question as to whether certain provisions of the Act, 1993 are valid or not, the Court considered several aspects and repelled the argument that the Act is discriminatory containing provisions more favourable to Hindus by observing that certain rights of Hindus also stand adversely affected.

4053. It is in this context that certain facts placed on record are mentioned therein but it cannot be said that those facts stood adjudicated by the Apex Court for the reason that those facts neither were in issue before the Court nor actually have been adjudicated. The only question which has specifically been considered and decided that was necessary in the light of challenge thrown to the power of acquisition of land over which a mosque existing. It appears that pro-mosque parties raised a contention that a mosque cannot be acquired because of special status in Mohammedan Law irrespective of its significance to practice of the religion of Islam. This argument in the context of acquisition of land was considered from para 68 (AIR) and onwards in the judgement. The Court has held that the right to

www.vadaprativada.com

worship of Muslims in a mosque and Hindus in a temple was recognised only as a civil right in British India. Relying on the Full Bench decision of Lahore High Court in Mosque Known as Masjid Shahid Ganj Vs. Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, Amritsar, AIR 1938 Lahore 369 where it was held that a mosque if adversely possessed by non muslims it will loose its sacred character as mosque, the Apex Court held that, "the view that once a consecrated mosque, it remains always a place of worship as a mosque was not the Mahomedan Law of India as approved by Indian Courts." The Lahore High Court also held that, "a mosque in India was an immovable property and the right of worship at a particular place is lost when the right to property on which it stands is lost by adverse possession." Both these views were approved by the Privy Council and the Apex Court followed the said view. Besides, independently also the Court took the view that the sovereign power of the State empowers it to acquire property. It is a right inherent in every sovereign to take an appropriate private property belonging to individual citizens for public use. This right is described as eminent domain in American Law and is like the power of taxation of offering of political necessity and is supposed to be based upon an implied reservation by the Government that private property acquired by its citizens under its protection may be taken or its use can be controlled for public benefit irrespective of the wishes of the owner. The Court also considered the right of worship whether a fundamental right enshrined under Article 25 or 26 of the Constitution and observed, "while offer of prayer or worship is a religious practice, its offering at every location where such prayers can be offered would not be an essential or integral part of such religious practice unless the place has a particular significance for that religion so as to form an essential or integral part thereof. Places of worship of any religion having particular significance for that religion, to make it an essential or integral part of the religion, stand on a different footing and have to be treated differently and more reverentially". Ultimately the law has been laid down by the Constitution Bench by majority that under the Mohammedan Law applicable in India title to a mosque can be lost by adverse possession. If that is the position in law, there can be no reason to hold that a mosque as a unique or special status, higher than that of the places of worship of other religions in secular India to make it immune from acquisition by exercise of the sovereign or prerogative power of the State. A mosque is not an essential part of the practice of religion of Islam and namaz (prayer) by Muslims can be offered anywhere even in open. The Court also held that unless the right to worship at a particular place is itself an integral part of that right, i.e., the place is of a particular significance, its alienability cannot be doubted. The Apex Court having answered the various questions on the validity of the Act 1993 declined to answer the reference and returned the same as such as it is. The suits having been revived due to striking down of Section 4(3) of the Act, this Court trying the original suits has to decide the entire matter on merits unless it can be shown that a particular issue which is engaging attention of this Court in trial of the original suit has already been raised, argued and decided by the Apex Court. The learned counsels for the parties have not been able to show any such finding in respect to the matters which are involved in various issues before this Court and, therefore, we are not in agreement with the counsels for the parties as argued otherwise.

www.vadaprativada.com

4054. The mere fact that some facts have been noticed by the Government of India in White Paper and those facts have simply been noticed by the Apex Court while referring to the facts mentioned in the White Paper, it cannot be said that those facts can be construed as if they have been accepted by the Apex Court to be correct and stand adjudicated. The law of precedence is well known. The authority of the superior Court laying down a law is binding on the Courts below provided a matter has been decided by the Court. An issue can be considered to be decided by a superior Court when it was raised, argued and decided and only then it is a binding precedent for the other courts.

4055. The ultimate inference, which can reasonably be drawn by this Court from the entire discussion and material noticed above, is:

(i) The disputed structure was not raised on a virgin, vacant, unoccupied, open land.

(ii) There existed a structure, if not much bigger then at least comparable or bigger than the disputed structure, at the site in dispute.

(iii) The builder of the disputed structure knew the details of the erstwhile structure, its strength, capacity, the size of the walls etc. and therefore did not hesitate in using the walls etc. without any further improvement.

(iv) The erstwhile structure was religious in nature and that too non-Islamic one.

(v) The material like stone, pillars, bricks etc. of the erstwhile

www.vadaprativada.com

structure was used in raising the disputed structure.

(vi) The artefacts recovered during excavation are mostly such as are non-Islamic i.e pertaining to Hindu religious places, even if we accept that some of the items are such which may be used in other religions also. Simultaneously no artefacts etc., which can be used only in Islamic religious place, has been found.

4056. The claim of Hindus that the disputed structure was constructed after demolishing a Hindu temple is pre-litem and not post-litem hence credible, reliable and trustworthy. Till late, no person of any other religion except the Hindus have been continuously staking their claim over the site in dispute on the ground that this is the place of birth of Lord Rama and there was a temple. In normal course, there could not have been any reason for such persistent attachment to the site had there been no basis or substance for the same particularly when this kind of persistence is continuing for the last hundreds of years. The various non-Indian writers, who have mentioned these facts, clearly stating that a Hindu temple was demolished for constructing mosque in question, may have some motive if it would have been a case of only post nineteenth century when the British Government virtually came in power and sought to evolve the theory of "Divide and Rule" but even prior thereto, these facts have been noticed and recognized. Tieffenthaler was a missionary having no motive in making such remark when he visited Oudh area between 1766 to 1771 and such work was published in 1786.

4057. This belief is existing for the last more than 200 years from the date the property was attached and therefore, having been corroborative by the above it can safely be said that the erstwhile structure was a Hindu temple and it was demolished whereafter the disputed structure was raised.

4058. One more aspect remains to be seen. Issue No.1(b) (Suit-4) further requires that if the first part is answered in affirmative, then what shall be its effect. We have already held that whatever happened was in an era when this Court and/or the codified statute or the Constitution of India at that time was not applicable. The intent of the sovereign was supreme at that time. We can only see the de facto position as has resulted after the aforesaid event but we find no authority to consider this event de jure. The de facto position is that after demolition, a building was constructed in the shape of a mosque. It is also de facto position that despite construction of such building in the shape of the mosque, it was used and continued to be visited by Hindus for offering worship, Puja and Darshan since according to their belief, they treated it to be the birth place of Lord Rama in respect whereto there was no alternative and according to their belief, the piety and reverence, the place is permanent and not liable to be disturbed in any manner by any such act.

4059. Accordingly, we answer both the issues i.e. Issue No.1(b) (Suit-4) and Issue No. 14 (Suit-5) in affirmative.

(B) Existence of other Hindu religious places making the disputed building landlocked by religious places of Hindus:

4060. In this category, falls Issue No. 19 (b) (Suit-4), which reads as under:

> "Whether the building was land-locked and cannot be reached except by passing through places of Hindu worship? If so, its effect?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4061. This issue has been framed considering pleadings of the defendants that no Muslim person could have entered the building in dispute for the reason that it is landlocked by the Temples and other Hindu religious places of worship. In para 28 (B) of the written statement of defendant no. 13, Mahant Dharam Das, it has been said that no one could enter the three domed structure except after passing through the places of Hindu worship, i.e., Ram Chabutara; Charan and Sita Rasoi. It is said that according to the tenets of Islam, a Mosque should never be landlocked by a Hindu place of worship and there can be no co-sharing in title or possession with Allah, particularly, in the case of a Mosque. His possession must be exclusive. To the similar effect is the pleading in para 31 of the written statement of defendant no. 13.

4062. We have referred to the site maps while discussing issues relating to limitation. One of the oldest map, which is available, is that of 1885 prepared by Sri Gopal Sahai Amin, a Commission appointed by the Civil Court in Suit-1885. So far as the disputed site is concerned, he had clearly noticed existence of three structures in the outer courtyard, i.e., Ram Chabutara on the south east side, a Chhappar on the north east side and Sita Rasoi on the north west side. Another map was prepared and submitted in the Court of Civil Judge, Faizabad on 25th May, 1950 by Sri Shiv Shankar Lal, Pleader, who was also appointed as Commissioner in Suit-1 for preparing the site map. Here also he has mentioned three structures in the outer courtyard as were noted in the earlier map at the same places. Besides the above, in the vicinity of the disputed site, other existing places which are shown in the map are: on the eastern side, Mandir Sri Vijay Raghav Sakshi Gopal, Shankar Chabutara; on the south east side Sita Koop, Tulsi Chaura, Sumitra Bhawan; on the southern side Lomash Chaura and on the northern side, it shows Narad Chabutara. The aforesaid map was not disputed in that suit by the defendant no. 2, who contested that matter as Mutwalli of the alleged wakf of the disputed building and in the present case, by both the parties except of nomenclature.

4063. This situation is virtually admitted by the parties also including the plaintiffs (Suit-4) as is evident from the deposition of their witnesses, though in the pleading, initially, they tried to deny existence of Sita Rasoi etc. in the premises of outer courtyard of property in dispute. This is evident from the following:

(i) PW 1, Mohd. Hashim:

''पहले जब पूरब के फाटक से अन्दर जाते थे तो दक्षिण की तरफ एक चबूतरा था। उस पर कभी–कभी पुजारी लोग बैठते थे। यह चबुतरा रास्ते से दस कदम हटकर था। उस पर एक छप्पर था। मस्जिद के उत्तर दरवाजे के पास एक चूल्हा बना हुआ था, उसको सीता रसोई कहते थे। उस रास्ते से आने में रसोई के कारण कोई रूकावट नहीं थी। सीता रसोई के सामने एक चारदीवारी थी और ज्यादा भीड़ हो जाने पर उत्तर वाले दरवाजे से जाते थे। इसके बाद मस्जिद के अन्दर एक और दीवार थी, उसके सदर दरवाजा पर ताला लगा हुआ था।''(पेज 3–4)

(xi) DW1/2 - Sri Krishna Chandra Singh:

''हनुमतद्वार से अन्दर जाने पर बाएं यानी दक्षिण तरफ राम चबूतरा था जिस पर राम दरबार के विग्रह तथा श्री रामलला की मूर्ति विराजमान थी। उसके दक्षिण पश्चिम कोने पर नीम व पीपल का पेड़ एक ही में लगा हुआ था, जहाँ अर्ध गोलाकार चबूतरा था, चबूतरे पर शिव, पार्वती, गणेश, कार्तिकेय, शिवजी का अर्घानन्दी की मूर्तियाँ विराजमान थी।'' (पेज 3).

"On going inside through Hanumatdwar, on the left, that is on the southern side there was Ramchabutra, on which 'Vigrah' (different forms) of Ram Darbar as also the idol of Ramlala was seated. On its southern-western corner, there were Neem and Peepal trees stuck together, where lay a semi circular Chabutra, on which the idols of Shiv, Parvati,

Ganesh, Kartikey and Shiv Ji's vehicle Nandi were seated." (E.T.C)

(xii) DW1/3, Sri Sahdev Prasad Dube:

''श्रीराम जन्मभूमि स्थित मन्दिर में प्रवेश के लिए पूरब दिशा में हनुमत द्वार 6 दिसम्बर, 1992 के पूर्व था, द्वार के दोनों ओर कसौटी के खम्भे लगे थे, जो गिनती में दो थे, इन पर देवी–देवताओं की मूर्तियाँ उभरी थी। उत्तर की ओर सीता रसोई व इसके पूरब में जन्मभूमि मन्दिर का भण्डारगृह व राम चबूतरा था, सीता रसोई व इसके पूरब में जन्मभूमि मन्दिर का भण्डारगृह व राम चबूतरा था, सीता रसोई के उत्तरी दिशा में सिंहद्वार था, दक्षिण व पश्चिम दिशा में परती जमीन थी जिससे भक्तगण मन्दिर परिसर अर्थात् राम जन्मभूमि स्थित मन्दिर की परिक्रमा करते थे।'' (पेज 5).

"For entrance in Sri Ram Janmabhumi-situated temple, in the eastern direction was Hanumatdwar prior to 6th December, 1992. On both sides of the gate were fixed Kasauti pillars, two in number, with the images of gods-goddess engraved on them. On the north lay Sita Rasoi and on its east were 'Bhandar Grih' (store room) of Janmbhumi temple and Ramchabutra. To the north of Sita Rasoi was Singhdwar; on its south and west there was uncultivated land, from which point of place devotees performed circumambulation of the temple precincts or Ramjanmbhumi-situated temple." (E.T.C)

''विवादित ढांचे में लगे काले पत्थर के खम्भों, पर कलश, आम के पल्लव, कमल, देवी–देवताओं एवं मानव आकृतियाँ स्पष्ट थीं तथ उसी परिसर में सीता रसोई, चरणचिन्ह, चौका बेलन, चूल्हा, राम चबूतरा था। उक्त स्थल हिन्दुओं के पूज्य स्थली के रूप में था एवं विवादित स्थल सदैव से भगवान राम के जन्म स्थल के रूप में पूज्य था।'' (पेज 5).

"'Kalash', mango leaves, lotus flowers, images of god-goddess and human beings were clearly seen engraved on the black stone pillars embedded in the disputed structure, and Sita Rasoi, foot prints, 'Chauka', 'Belan', 'Chulha' and Ramchabutra were there in that very premises. The said place was as a revered place for the Hindus and the disputed site was always revered as the birthplace of Lord Rama." (E.T.C)

''भवन की स्थिति से मेरा तात्पर्य पूरे भवन से है, जिसमें पूरब की ओर राम चबूतरा, जहाँ पूजा हो रही थी, उत्तर की तरफ सीता रसाई और विवादित भवन को भी लोग रामजन्मभूमि मानते थे, से है।'' (पेज 167).

"By the location of the building I mean the entire building, including Ramchabutra on the east providing space for worship, Sita Rasoi on the north and the disputed structure regarded by people as Ramjanmbhumi." (E.T.C)

4064. PW 6 on page 20, further said about the other temples around the building in dispute:

''मुतदाविया जायदाद के इर्दगिर्द हिन्दुओं के मन्दिर हैं। इस जायदाद से हनुमानगढ़ी तक रास्ते में हिन्दुओं के बड़े–बड़े मंन्दिर हैं, जैसे–कनक भवन और रामजन्मस्थान, हनुमानगढ़ी। मोहल्ला रामकोट में राम जन्मभूमि मन्दिर भी है। अयोध्या में श्रीरामचन्द्र जी के मन्दिर भी हैं, हनुमान जी के भी मन्दिर हैं और जैनियों के भी मन्दिर हैं।'' (पेज 20)

"Around the property in suit, there are temples of Hindus. On the way from this property to Hanumangarhi, there situate a number of big temples of Hindus e.g. Kanak Bhawan, Ramjanamsthan and Hanumangarhi. In Mohalla Ramkot, Ramjanambhumi temple also situates. In Ayodhya, there are also the temples of Sri Ram Chandra Ji Hanumanji and Jains." (E.T.C.)

4065. In the above context, PW 16 said as under:

''पूर्वी दरवाजे से भीतर घुसने पर पूरबी अहाते में दक्षिण की तरफ चबूतरा था, जिसे राम जन्मभूमि कहते हैं। इसी अहाते की उत्तर की तरफ

www.vadapprativada.com

भण्डारगृह कोठार हो सकता था।'' (पेज 57)

"Entering through the eastern door, there was a chabutara (platform) towards eastern side of the compound, which is called Ram Janambhumi. Towards north of this compound there might have been store room." (E.T.C.)

''सीता रसोई जहॉ पर स्थित था, उसी के पास उत्तरी दरवाजा था। यह ठीक है कि मुख्य इमारत जिसे मैं मस्जिद कहता हूँ, के अन्दर जाने के लिए उपरोक्त हिन्दू धार्मिक स्थानों के पास से होकर जाना पड़ता था।''

(पेज 58)

"Near the place where Sita Rasoi situated, there was the north door. It is correct that for reaching the main building, which I term as 'mosque', one had to pass through the aforesaid religious places." (E.T.C.)

4066. This position as emerges from the above could not have been controverted in any manner. Therefore, the first part of the issue in question we are inclined to answer in affirmance. So far as the second part is concerned, i.e., its effect, we find that the pleadings in this respect are that if the mosque is surrounded or landlocked by the places of worship of other religions (in the present case Hindu), then it cannot be a Mosque according to the tenets of Islam. However, no such command in any of the Islamic text could have been traced or placed before us to support the submission. It is true that normally the places of worship are constructed where the population of the worshippers is quite reasonable and for their convenience, the persons responsible for construction normally choose a place where obstruction is minimal, but that is one aspect of the matter and can not be equated to a proposition that such a construction would not be an Islamic religious structure, if it is surrounded or landlocked by the religious places of other

4067. The issue further is sought to be argued on the ground that under Islamic text, at one place there cannot be two places of worship as the property vested in God cannot have a share holder. It is, thus, submitted that this is a command against a Mosque under the Islamic text and, therefore, the building in dispute could not be a Mosque. We have already held that in this case, it is a peculiar situation where in the same premises, Hindus and Muslims both were worshipping according to their beliefs, customs and tenets and this is going on for the last several decades before the first suit was filed in the Court of Civil Judge. When a religious practice is continuing in a particular manner for such a long time, in our view, it ought not be questioned or should be discussed or adjudicated by the Court. No one can be allowed to say such practice was not correct and the generations to generations were acting illegally or contrary in following tenets of their religion. The manner of worship of one religion ought not be allowed to be questioned after almost a century by the people of other religion. It is impertinent and improper. In view thereof, we answer the Issue No. 19 (b) (Suit-4) in affirmance to the extent that the building was landlocked and could not be reached except by passing through the places of Hindu worship. However, this by itself was of no consequences.

(C) Whether the Hindus had been continuously worshipping at the place in dispute:

4068. Issue No. 13, 14 (Suit-4) and 24 (Suit-5) come in this category.

4069. Issue No. 13 and 14 (Suit-4) read as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

Issue No. 13 :-

Whether the Hindus in general and defendants in particular had the right to worship the Charans and 'Sita Rasoi' and other idols and other objects of worship, if any, existing in or upon the property in suit?

Issue No. 14 :-

Have the Hindus been worshipping the place in dispute as Sri Ram Janam Bhumi or Janam Asthan and have been visiting it as a sacred place of pilgrimage as of right since times immemorial? If so, its effect?

4070. While considering issue No.3 (Suit-4) pertaining to limitation, we have already held that in the outer courtyard there were certain religious structures of Hindus which they were worshipping since long i.e. before 1885. The plaintiffs (Suit-4) having lost their right to interfere in such right of Hindus which has continued for such a long time, therefore, in respect to those religious structures, the answer would be affirmative. So far as the inner courtyard is concerned, there the idols were kept for the first time on 22/23rd December, 1949. But that itself makes no difference for the reason that the place of birth of lord Rama, we have already held to be a Swayambhu deity and worship of this place is continuing for the past several centuries. As we have already discussed while considering issues relating to site as birthplace and the existence of temple as also the issues pertaining to possession therefore, Hindus in general had been entering the premises within the inner courtyard, as a matter of right for the last several centuries, hence cannot be denied this right after such a long time. We therefore, answer issues 13 and 14 (Suit 4) in affirmative.

4071. Issue No. 24 (Suit-5) is;

4072. Here also we remind that for the purpose of Suit-5, the property in dispute comprises of inner and outer courtyard, both. There are two plaintiff Deities. Plaintiff 1 is the idol. We have already held that the idol of Ramlala or Lord Rama kept earlier on Ram Chabutara in the outer courtyard and was being worshipped by Hindus since long time, i.e. almost a century, was shifted and placed under the central dome of the disputed structure in the inner courtyard in December, 1949.

4073. So far as the plaintiff 2 is concerned, we have discussed above that it was also being worshipped since long as noticed by Joseph Tieffenthaler in the middle of the 18th century and thereafter in several gazetteers etc.. Worship of both the plaintiffs was going on for such a long time which satisfy the term "time immemorial". Issue No.24 (Suit-5) therefore is also answered in affirmative.

(D) The presence of idol in the disputed building:

4074. Issue No.2 (Suit-1) comes in this category.

4075. Issue 2 (Suit -1) is:

"Are there any idols of Bhagwan Ram Chandra Ji and are His Charan Paduka situated in the site in suit?"

4076. Before answering it, we may remind ourselves that the suit is confined to the premises within the inner courtyard as also clarified by the plaintiff Gopal Singh Visharad in his statement made under Order X, Rule 2 C.P.C. on 07.03.1962 which reads as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

"Plaintiff Gopal Singh Visharad and Sri Param Hans Ram Chandra plffs of both the suits no.2/50 and 25 of 1950 accompanied by their counsel state that they do not want any relief with regard to constructions or structures indicated in the map of the Commissioner Sheo Shanker Lal dated 25.5.50. by the terms 'Sita Rasoi' 'Bhandar' and 'Ram Chabootra' . They say that the reliefs are asked for only with regard to property enclosed in the said map by letters A. B. C. D. L. K. J. P. O. H. N. G. A.

4077. In the discussion already made above, this has come on record that "Charan Paduka" is part of the structure which is also called as "Sita Rasoi" or "Chhati Pujan Sthal" which existed in the outer courtyard. It is evident from the site plan submitted by Sri Shiv Shankar Lal on 25th May, 1950, which we have already appended as Appendix 2 to this judgment. This is also admitted by plaintiff. Therefore, it cannot be said that "Charan Paduka" situated in the site in dispute since the suit is confined only to the premises within the inner courtyard.

4078. So far as the idols of "Bhagwan Ram Chandra Ji" is concerned, we have already held while considering Issues No.3(a) (Suit-5) and Issue No.12 (Suit-4) that the same were placed under the central dome of the disputed structure, within the inner courtyard, in the night of 22/23rd December, 1949 but prior thereto the same existed in the outer courtyard and it is therefrom, the same was shifted. Suit-1 was filed on 16th January, 1950 on which date idol of Ram Chandra Ji, as a matter of fact, existed in the inner courtyard under the central dome of the disputed structure. Issue No.2 (Suit-1) is therefore, answered accordingly.

(E) Issues relating to place of birth of Lord Rama, believed as such by Hindus by tradition etc.

4079. Here we are concerned with issues no. 11 (Suit-4), 1 (Suit-1) and 22 (Suit-5) which reads as under:

Issue No. 11 :-

Is the property in suit the site of Janam Bhumi of Sri Ram Chandraji?

Issue No. 1 :-

Is the property in suit the site of Janam Bhumi of Sri Ram Chandra Ji?

Issue No. 22 :-

Whether the premises in question or any part thereof is by tradition, belief and faith the birth place of Lord Rama as alleged in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the plaint? If so, its effect?

www.vadaprativada.com

4080. The real and substantial issue in all these cases going to the root of the matter is that the plaintiffs (Suit-4) and Muslim defendants in rest of the suits unequivocally and unanimously submit that there is no evidence to show that lord Rama was born at the disputed site. They submit that Hindus belief that Ayodhya is the place of birth of lord Rama and therefore is very holy and religious place even if not disputed in these cases, but that by itself would not mean that the disputed place can be identified as the only place where lord Rama is said to have been born. Neither in any Hindu religious scriptures nor in any other history book or record it is mentioned that the disputed site was actually the place of birth of lord Rama. He may have born at Ayodhya but to narrow it down and concentrate on the disputed site is wholly conjectured and imaginary. It is without any foundation or substance.

4081. It is said that though the statements under Order X, Rule 2 C.P.C. have been given by the learned counsels for the various Muslim parties that they do not dispute about the faith of Hindus regarding birth of lord Rama at Ayodhya and that the present Ayodhya is the same as believed by the Hindus yet the Court cannot ignore the opinion of voluminous record of historian and other experts in the field saying that the Ramayana, which is considered to be the basic document to reflect life of lord Rama and makes it an incarnation of lord Vishnu, is a myth and therefore it is termed as an epic.

4082. That being so, the story of lord Rama, with the passage of time has generated in such a vast Hindu faith as if a matter of historicity yet on judicial side when this Court will take note of it, it cannot hold otherwise and therefore it is unjust to raise an unfounded claim and contend that lord Rama was born at the disputed site. They submit that the vedic literature and the Hindu scripture relied by various counsels for Hindu parties broadly do not construe reliable source of history and therefore in the absence of any reliable material, merely on the basis of something which is mentioned in some gazetteers published in 19th century and onwards during the British regime, that too wholly unsubstantiated, and, perhaps was written to create a rift between Hindu and Muslim in furtherance of policy of the Britishers to rule India following divide rule, it cannot be said that building in dispute was constructed at a place where lord Rama had born and therefore the question of desecration of Hindu religious place does not arise.

4083. It is in this context, the common submissions in

brief advanced by the learned counsels for the Muslims side are that there exists no evidence to show that any temple or religious structure existed at the disputed site which is said to have been demolished for construction of the disputed structure; there is no evidence to show that Lord Rama actually took birth at the disputed site though his birth in Ayodhya itself is not disputed; the disputed structure was constructed in 1528 by Meer Baqi, a Commander of Emperor Babar and throughout since then it has been considered, treated and practised as Mosque wherein Muslims have offered their religious prayers regularly till at least December 1949 when the District administration restrained them by attaching the property in dispute and placing it under the receivership.

4084. Sri Jilani submitted that it is for this reason that the stand of Hindus also differ on certain aspect though not in respect to the issue pertaining to birth place.

4085. The Sunni Central Waqf Board was impleaded as defendant in Suit-1 in 1989 whereafter it filed its written statement and Sri Jilani referred to paras 10, 11, 12 and 13 thereof. He then referred the claim and written statements in other three suits and submitted that in general there are three parties: (1) Muslim Group, (2) Orthodox Hindus and (3) Nirmohi Akhara. The case of the Nirmohi Akhara is that there was never a mosque but it was throughout a temple of Lord Sri Rama and Ram Janam Bhumi was in possession of Nirmohi Akhara who was performing Pooja, Arti etc. through its Pujaris, from time immemorial. The case of orthodox Hindus is that it was a place of birth of Lord Sri Rama where a mosque was constructed by Babar through his aide Mir Baqi but the said

building was never used as mosque. At least from 1934 the building was never used as mosque. In respect to the placement of idols, Sri Jilani pointed out that there are two versions: first, about the alleged manifestation of Ram Lala in the night of 22/23.12.1949 and second is the transfer of idols from Ram Chabutara to the dome shaped building of the disputed premises.

4086. Mr. Jilani, in brief, advanced his submission by placing oral and documentary evidence as under:

1. The building in question was constructed in 1528 AD by Mir Baqi at Ayodhya and has always been treated a mosque

2. The muslims were offering Namaj in the said building since very beginning and at least from 1855 onwards. There is evidence that the building in dispute was in possession of Muslims, managed by a Mutawalli and Namaj was offered regularly therein.

3. There is no evidence whatsoever that the disputed building was constructed after demolition of any temple of Lord Ram or any other deity worshipped by Hindus.

4. In fact there is no evidence at all that there existed a Hindu temple on or before 1528 when Mir Baqi made construction of the disputed building.

5. The claim of Nirmohi Akhara that it was throughout in possession of the disputed building and Pooja Archana of Lord Rama was going since long is incorrect, the oral evidence is not creditworthy and self contradictory. There is no credible documentary evidence either.

6. On the contrary the documents of the state authorities of

different time, oral evidence of individuals etc. show that the building in question was a mosque, throughout known as Babri Mosque, and Namaj was offered therein throughout.

4087. Adopting the entire arguments of Sri Z. Jilani, Sri Siddiqui further stated that though he does not dispute that Lord Rama took birth at Ayodhya, however, there is no evidence that Lord Rama took birth at the disputed site. There is neither any evidence to this effect nor there existed any Temple of Lord Rama at the aforesaid place in 1528 when the construction in dispute was raised by Meer Baqi, a Commander of Emperor Babar. He drew our attention to the topography of the land in dispute and nearby area referring to the two maps of 1885, a site plan prepared by Court Commissioner Sri Gopal Sahai, Amin, and, the map and pleadings in Suit No. 95 of 1941, and Commissioner Sri Shiv Shanker Lal's report. He pointed out that the report of Sri Shiv Shanker Lal mentions two houj (हौज) showing source and availability of water for Vajoo and also a place used as urinal at the disputed site. He also referred to the exhibits A20, A21 and A22 (Suit-1) and exhibit A13 (Suit-4). According to him, the aforesaid maps show admission of the parties that the disputed construction was a mosque.

4088. On the contrary, the stand of all the counsels appearing for Hindu parties whether plaintiff or defendant in all the suit is common. They collectively submit that there is enough material to show that since time immemorial the disputed place being a part of fort of lord Rama or King Dashratha was held, treated, practised and worshiped as the place of birth of lord Rama as an incarnation in human form of

4089. Taking lead in support of the issues relating to site of birthplace and worship by Hindus, Sri R.L. Verma said that the place in dispute is the same where Lord Rama was born several thousands or lacs of years ago. It is a very pious, holy and religious place for Hindu, has been worshipped by them since time immemorial and a fine temple of Lord Rama existed which was demolished by Mir Baqi to construct a mosque. He sought to place before us as source of history, Vedas, Puranas, Ramayana and other religious and historical literature and books and also the statements of several witnesses.

4090. On behalf of the defendant no. 20 (Suit-4), Sri P.N. Misra and Km. Ranjana Agnihotri, advocates, made their submissions at length placing certain extracts from "Rigveda Samhita", "Taittiriya Sanhita", "Yajurveda Samhita", "Atherva-Veda ka Subodh Bhasya", "Atharva-Veda Samhita", "Skanda-Purana", "Shri Narsinghpuranam", "Sri Ramacaritamanasa", "History of Dharmashastra" by P.V. Kane. It is contended that Ayodya, Lord Rama and their relationship is duly recognised since ancient time which shows that the Lord Rama was born at the place in dispute and there cannot be any reasonable doubt in this regard which is in the memory, faith and belief of Hindu people since several centuries handed down to them from generations to generations.

4091. Expanding the above submission of Sri Verma, Sri Ravi Shankar Prasad, Sri P.R. Ganapati Ayyiar, Senior Advocates, etc. all the learned counsels placed before us in detail various Hindu scriptures, Indian Books, Gazetteers and other documents to show that throughout Hindus have believed and worshipped the place in dispute as a place where lord Rama was born. They submit that the matter of birth of lord Rama being several thousand and lakhs of year old, it is imprudent to expect any direct evidence on the subject. In the matter of faith and religion, the Court will have to form an opinion and adjudicate the matter on the basis of preponderance particularly if it found the evidence of continuous faith of the entire community to several hundred and thousand of years i.e. beyond the memory of mankind and if it is found that there has been a continuity in such a faith with respect to such a place, no further adjudication by asking for direct evidence would be necessary and the Court will have to uphold such faith which has continued for time immemorial. Some of the details of the argument of the learned counsels in this regard and the material they placed, we have already referred to.

4092. Sri M.M. Pandey in respect to the Issues No. 14, 22 and 24 (Suit-5) has made submissions as under:

(A) Hindus hold Lord Ram to be incarnation of Lord Vishnu, claim that Ram was born at the place where disputed structure (in short 'DS') was erected and that before its construction, there stood a Hindu Temple; this temple was demolished and in its place DS was constructed. The birthplace has been held by Hindus as a highly sacred place and constitutes to be Swayambhu Deity, worshipped as such since time immemorial.

(B) In the nature of things, the place of birth cannot be proved by 'direct' evidence; indeed no living being is capable of proving the birthplace of any of his parents, 4 degrees or more remote in the line of ascent. The fact,

therefore, has to be judged in accordance with the meaning of word 'proved' u/s 3 of Indian Evidence Act. The significant expression is: 'the Court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought …….. to act upon the supposition that it exists'. So 'belief' and 'supposition' are perfectly legal and acceptable states which may lead to 'proof'. Herein lies the legal relevancy of 'Faith' of the concerned people, to wit the Hindus, which is the essential foundation of most of the Spiritual Doctrines. Birthplaces of God's men have always been treated sacred in all religions. Paper no. 3 of Ramlala's documents is Historical Sketch of Faizabad in 1870 (Ext. OOS 5: 49) by P. Carnegy, Commissioner/Settlement Officer of Oudh; in page 5, it is mentioned that 'Ayodhya is to Hindus what Mecca is to Mohammedans and Jerusalem to Jews'. In the History of Dharmashastra – Governmental Oriental Series – Vol III at page 177, P.V.Kane records from Visnu-dharmottara that Ayodhya 'was endowed with hundreds of parks; it celebrated festivals and held gatherings of people……it always resounded with music of lutes, flutes…….it resounded with the recitation of the Veda……there was not a man who was wretched, dirty or emaciated; it stretched for three yojanas on the Banks of the Saryu and was ten yojanas in the middle.' Apart from lot of documentary evidence, including admissions by some Muslims, OPW1 Paramhans Ramchandra Das deposed (Page 7) that birth of Lord Ram in Ayodhya is mentioned in Balmiki Ramayan, its boundaries are mentioned in

www.vadaprativada.com

Ayodhya-Mahatma Chapter of Skandha-Puran, that Birthplace & Garbha-griha is the site of Disputed Structure (DS) where Bhagwan Ramlala is seated presently (P 8, 54) and in Atharva-veda mention of Ayodhya of Ashtachakra-Naodwar is made in a mantra and the names of Deities (Deota) of the 8-Chakras is mentioned in a Shloka of Rudrayamal which states the Deity of the first-Chakra to be Ram Janmabhumi (P.103). OPW2 Deoki Nandan Agarwal (at P. 39), OPW4 Harihar Prasad Tewari (P. 2 & 3), OPW6 Hausala Prasad Tripathi (P.5, 12,13 & 77), OPW 7 Ram Surat Tewari (P. 4, & 6), have deposed about the DS being Birthplace of Shriram as incarnation of Bhagwan Vishnu and faith, worship darshan, Parikrama and pilgrimage thereof by Hindus since ancient times. OPW 12 Kaushal Kishore Mishra deposed that Ramchandra ji was born in Mohalla Ramkot in Ayodhya within DS in the garbh-griha central dome of the 3-domed 'temple', and that Ramkot was the palace of Dashrath ji which contained the garbh-griha (P.42 & 43). OPW 16, Jagatguru Ram Bhadracharya, a great scholar of literature relating to Lord Ram has elaborately deposed about the DS to be the birthplace of Bhagwan Shriram as mentioned later in these arguments; significant documentary evidence will also be placed later. SB's witness PW 12, Ram Shankar Upadhyaya, stated (at page 49) that when he went to DS, he did not carry flowers, wreath (mala) or Prasad, but he had received Prasad from the mandir from the pujari.

(C) In OOS 1 of '89 (of Ram Gopal Visharad), para 27

of WS dt. 21.2.1950 by Muslim Defdts. 1 to 5 (including Mohd. Faiq & Zahoor Ahmad, who are co-plaintiffs in Sunni Board's OOS 4 of '89), states that in 'Ayodhya a Temple named Mandir Janmasthan Shri Ram Chandra ji, established long ago, has been in existence at the birthplace of Ram Chandra ji and Idols of Shri Ram Chandra ji and others are Virajman therein'. In OOS 3 of '89 (of Nirmohi Akhara), Defdt. No. 6 (Haji Pheku), Defdt. No. 7 (Mohd Faiq) and Defdt. No. 8 (Achchan Mian alias Ahmad Hussain) pleaded similarly in para 28 of their joint WS, filed through Sri Mohd Ayub, Advocate, on 28.3.1960 that in Ayodhya a temple named as 'Mandir Janmasthan Shri Ram Chandra ji, established long ago, has been in existence at the birthplace of Ram Chandra ji, and Idols of Shri Ram Chandra ji & others are Virajman therein'. This pleading is the same as was taken by Mohd Faiq etc in para 27 of their WS dt 21.2.1950 as indicated above and was confirmed by their lawyer, Sri Mohd Ayub, on 17.5.1963 under Order X R. 1 CPC which establishes that (i) there is birthplace of Shri Ram Chandra in Ayodhya and (ii) a Temple existed at the birthplace. In OOS 4 of '89 (of Sunni Board), Plaintiff No. 4 Mohd Faiq is also Defdt in Visharad's suit and is Defdt No. 7 in Nirmohi Akhara's suit; he verified Sunni Board's Plaint which was also signed and filed by said Mohd Ayub, Advocate, on 28.8.1963. These statements made by Mohd Faiq and Advocate Mohd Ayub, and Defdt. Zahoor Ahmad in Visharad's suit (and co-palintiff in Sunni Boards' suit) are binding and conclusive against Sunni Board and

www.vadaprativada.com

Muslim Defdts in Visharad Suit and in Nirmohi Akhara's suit: Sec. 17 & 18 Evidence Act. 1960 SC 100, Narayan Bhagwat Rao Gosavi Vs. Gopal Vinayak Gosavi , 1967 SC 341, Basant Singh Vs. Janki Singh, and 1945 Mad 361, Obanna Vs. Gangaiah, hold that persons jointly interested in a suit are bound by the admission made by any one of them. 1947 All 110, Beni Madho Vs Major A.U.John and 1997 All 122 (at 133) Talat Fatima Hasan Nawab Syed Murtuza Ali lay down that an admission made by a Party's Pleader is binding. The Sunni Board stated in para 32 of their WS dt. 24.2.1989 in reply to Visharad's suit (i.e. 17 or 18 years after their own Plaint) that 'there already exists Ram Janmasthan Mandir in the northern side of the property in question at a short distance (60-70 steps, vide their PW 12 Ram Shankar Upadhyay at P.50 & PW4 at P. 55) from the pathway passing from the side of the Babri Masjid'. [This confirms Shri Ram Chandra ji's Temple at the birthplace by Mohd Faiq, Zahoor Ahmad and Mohd Ayub in 1950, 1960 and again in 1963]. Thus, existence of Shri Ram Chandra's birthplace in today's Ayodhya and of Temple at birthplace stands admitted; the only fact which requires further proof is whether site of DS is at the birthplace and temple had existed there in the past which was destroyed and replaced by DS. It is significant that concerned Muslims did not put up a case/plea at the earliest available opportunity that Ram Janmasthan Temple at Ram's birthplace existed separately at a distance of 60-70 steps from DS. That opportunity existed in Mahant Raghubar Das suit of 1885

when Mohd. Asghar, Mutawalli of DS, filed a written statement and signed the site plan prepared by Pleader-Commissioner appointed by Court, but did not plead, nor pointed out to Pleader-Commisioner, that Ram Janmaasthan Mandir mentioned above already stood at a separate spot. It shall appear later in these arguments that the Janmasthan Mandir aforesaid seems to have been an effort by Hindu community/devotees to establish a birthplace temple in the name of Lord Ram, as close as possible to the demolished Temple replaced by DS, in the circumstances prevailing through centuries of Mughal invasion, repression and use of force since 1528. It will be seen that in 1786 Tieffenthaler found the platform (later called Ram Chabutra) inside the disputed area campus, the DS and the periphery of DS (parikrama) being worshipped by Hindu devotees. It will also appear that in 1853 Hindus forcibly occupied DS, that in 1855, the British administrators separated the DS from the rest of the campus by erecting a partition wall through the platform of DS so that Muslims could offer namaz inside DS whereas Hindus could remain in possession of the rest of the campus, that through the vicissitudes of Mandir-Masjid conflicts, effort by Mahant Raghubar Das of Nirmohi Akhara in 1885 to erect a temple on Ram Chabutra failed because a self-impleaded Muslim Defdt (Mutawalli of DS) opposed erection of Temple thereat and Courts found co-existence of Masjid and Mandir within the disputed area to be fraught with danger of bloody riots and so on.

(D) Authority of ancient times about the birth of Ram in Ayodhya is contained in Balmiki Ramayan (Paper OOS 5: 261C/1,2) which contains inherent evidence of its period contemporary to Ram. Balmiki Ramayan, written by Maharishi Balmiki, seems to satisfy the definition of word "History" given at page 459 of 'The New Lexicon Webster's Dictionary of the English Language' 1987 Edn, published by Lexicon Publications Inc. New York. 'History' is defined as a record of past events usually with an interpretation of their cause and an assessment of their importance; a narrative of real or fictitious events connected with a particular person, country, object. Balmiki Ramayan, fulfils this criterion; it is a description of Ram and specific events of his life. Being a contemporary version, Narad (the Rishi) places Ram as just a man to poet Balmiki who asked him to identify a person who possessed all the virtues of Man. Balmiki closely watched and followed the deeds of Ram and wrote about the birth of Ram in verses 8th, 9th and 10th of 18th Sarg and describes Ram as the Lord of Universe. The fact of Ram's Manifestation is borne out in Chapter X verse 31 of Shrimad Bhagwad Gita (Ext. OOS 3: 20) where Lord Shri Krishna has mentioned that among 'warriors I am Ram'.

(E) Closest in point of time immediately preceding Babar's invasion, is evidence of the darshan of the Idol/Temple of Ram by Guru Nanak Dev on his pilgrimage to Ayodhya. It is proved by the testimony of Rajendra Singh DW 2/1-1 that Guru Nanak started on pilgrimage in 1507 and had darshan of Ram Janmabhumi Mandir between 1510 & 1511. In his affidavit in examination-in-chief, Annexure 3 and 4, he has deposed respectively about contents of 'Adi Sakhian' (1701) and 'Puratan Janma Sakhi Shri Guru Nanak Dev Jiki' (1734), which record that during his pilgrimage Guru Nanak Dev went to Ayodhya, among other places, and had darshan; he mentioned about the record in 'Pothi Janma Sakhi Gyan Ratnawali' (1730) – Annexure 5 - that Guru Nanak Dev on reaching Ayodhya said to his disciple Mardana: 'Mardania this is Shri Ram Chandra ji's city, hence let us proceed to have darshan, and he got down at the bank of the river'. The witness deposed about the record of actual darshan of Ram (i.e. Idol of Ram) by Guru Nanak Dev in Guru Nanak Vansh Prakash (1829) – Annexure 7 - by Baba Sukhbasi Ram Bedi, who was a descendant in 8th degree of Laxmi Chand (one of the sons of Guru Nanak Dev), that 'accompanied by Mardana, Sadguru proceeded and arrived in Ayodhya, drank the water of river Saryu and had darshan of Ram closely'. Finally, the witness deposed about Bhai Baleywali-ki-janma-sakhi (1883) Annexure 6, where Guru Nanak pointed to Bhai Baley ji, his disciple, on visiting Ayodhya that it was Shri Ram Chandra ji's city where He Manifested and performed life's tasks. SB filed 'Janma Sakhi Bhai Bale Wali', Paper No. 208C1/1 to 3 Ext. OOS4: 68 which records Guru Nanak Dev's visit to Ayodhya and advising both Mardana and Baley, but there is no mention of Guru Nanak Dev's darshan of Shriram or Ram Temple. The document does not appear to be reliable

because paper Nos 208C1/1&2 are title covers of which 1 bears no year and 2 bears year of publication to be 2000 AD; on the contary, Ann 6 filed by the witness is of the year 1883.

(F) Besides extensive cross-examination, SB confronted the witness with pages 5 to 8 and 33 to 36 of W.H.McLeod's 'Sikhs & Skihism' (1999), paper 210C1/1 to 210C1/10 Ext. OOS 5: 69, which mentions some other Janma-Sakhis but not any of the ones named by the witness. This is irrelevant because the book does not mention that there were no other Janma-Sakhis. On the contrary, page 5 mentions that his 'sources for the life of Guru Nanak ….. are generally unreliable …….but it is possible to set out……..a brief outline of his life'. Thus McLeod's account is neither reliable nor substantial. He admitted the contents of Adi Granth, complied by Guru Arjan Dev to be authentic (pages 5 & 7), which contained very little material regarding events of Guru Nanak's life, hence "we resort to our only other available sources, the traditional biographies called Janma-Sakhis". He further mentioned that Janma-Sakhis are hagiographic (=saintly/holy) accounts of life of Guru Nanak each consisting of series of separate incidents or chapters (page 8). At the same time he mentioned that there being 'nothing better', Janma-Sakhis have to be used although they are 'thoroughly inadequate sources' (page 33). It will be appreciated that 'inadequate' is not 'untruthful', and there would be no reason to record accounts untruthfully in 1701, 1730, 1734, 1829 and 1833 about matters which are treated to be 'saintly/holy'. Further, there is no inconsistency inter se these Janma-Sakhis spread over a century and a half recorded by sources that are natural & trustworthy.

(G) It is admitted by McLeod that starting from Sultanpur in Punjab, Guru Nanak travelled in all directions, East/West/North/South (page 34). He even went on pilgrimage to Mecca (page 35); so the probability is that in India itself he would have gone on pilgrimage to Ayodhya which, admittedly, is a Holy Place of pilgrimage since ancient times. Page 228C1/3, filed by SB, is extract of British Encyclopaedia mentioning that in his voyage to East, Nanak went 'as far as Assam'; so why not Ayodhya too. Moreover, McLeod's account of contents of Janma-Sakhis (in pages filed by SB) is extremely sketchy. In less than 2 pages (34-35), he disposed of the accounts recorded by Bhai Gurdas and in less than 1 page (36) he disposed of the accounts contained in Puratan Janma-Sakhis.

(H) A very significant narration by McLeod may be noticed. While referring to Adi Granth or Guru Granth Sahib (page 7), he has mentioned about 'famous references to Babar, the so-called Babar vani …….do indicate that Guru Nanak witnessed something of Babar's depredations ……..at the sack of Saidpur', and that 'in the case of Babar vani, we may confidently assume that he witnessed something of the devastation caused by Babar's Army'. This is what witness Rajendra Singh DW2/1-1, deposed on the basis of contents of Guru Granth Sahib describing Babar as 'Satan Incarnate' and his army 'Storm of Sin'. The veracity of the witness, therefore, cannot be doubted.

(I) SB relied upon some Sikh religious literature to establish that Ram could be no Manifestation of God. On the contrary, Paper No. 212C1/1 to C1/4 Ext. OOS 4: 86 extract of Adi Guru Granth Sahib, filed in cross-examination of Rajendra Singh DW2-1/1 has paper No. 212C1/3 where Guru Nanak Dev acknowledged 'Self-Manifestation' of God. J.S.Grewal's "The New Cambridge History of India", Paper No. 214C1/1 to C5, filed during deposition of the witness, mentions Grewal's view of Guru Nanak's 'rejection of Hindu deities and scriptures' and 'repudiation of traditional modes of worship and religious practices' (p. 214C1/3). This is not a correct appreciation of Guru Nanak's views. Earlier, at the same page, Guru Nanak is mentioned to have maintained that 'none of the Hindu deities could be equated with the Supreme Being. In fact, everything known to myth, legend and history was the creation of Guru Nanak's God. The human incarnations of Hindu Deities, like Krishna, could add nothing to God's greatness'. The Author has mixed up his understanding of the teachings of Guru Nanak with their true content. Having impressed upon the absolute supremacy of the Supreme Being, Guru Nanak remarked that human incarnation of Hindu deities like Krishna "could add nothing to God's greatness", so they could not be equated with Supreme Being and were creation of God. A correct understanding of these teachings is that human incarnations do take place like Krishna but they cannot be

equated with God Himself; indeed they Manifest with all the limitations of a human being. What is mentioned by Grewal as 'rejection' is in fact sublimation of the concept of incarnation into Godhead. Similarly SB relied upon the remark of Guru Nanak that 'there was no merit in the worship of images' (p C1/3); this remark misses the recognised rule of Hindu worship that the Hindu does not worship the 'material in the image' but the Spirit of God behind the Image (See Para 36 below). Guru Nanak's criticism of 'practices of those who worship Krishna and Rama', concerns practices , not the essence of the Faith of Hindus in God and Incarnations. Grewal fell into same error over the teachings of Guru Nanak at page 214C1/4; his inference that with 'rejection' of idea of 'incarnation' it is 'impossible to treat Rama and Krishna as deities' concern only the practices of worship of Ram & Krishna without affecting their Divinity; the fact of happenings of Self Manifestation are already established by extract of Guru Granth Sahib contained in page 212C1/3 referred to above. Grewal committed the same error while mentioning about Quran at page 214C1/4. It is interesting that page 228C1/5, extract of British Encyclopaedia filed by SB dealing with views (of Sikhism), mentions that Sikhism forbids representation of God in pictures and worship of idols, but admits that Adi Granth itself has become an object of intense ceremonial reverence and as such is known as Granth Sahib (the Granth personified) so that it is "roused" in the morning and in the evening it is "put to rest for the night". This is very similar to the manner in which the worship of a Hindu Deity is performed by the Pujari and has been judicially recognised. This also reflects the spiritual commitment of the Devotees/followers of a Faith which transforms an object of reverence into a Deity even if the followers commitment does not strictly conform to the teachings of the Founder.

(J) Chronologically, the next account filed in the case is in Ain-e-Akbari (paper 107C1/….) Ext. OOS 5: 76 written by Abul Fazal, a courtier of Akbar, in 1598. The extract on record is the one printed in 1881 by Nawal Kishore Press, Lucknow. The text at page 78 records that Avadh, one the bigger towns of Hindustan, is counted as an ancient place of worship. It was stated to be the place of residence of Raja Ramchandar who, as indicated above, "combined in his own person both spiritual supremacy and kingly office".

(K) In modern times, Mahatma Gandhi, Father of the Nation, treated Ram as God. In "MAHATMA", Gandhi's biography written by D.G.Tendulkar, at page 93 of Volume VIII, mention is made of Gandhi holding that God was known by many names and He had many attributes and that 'Ram and Rahim, Krishna & Karim' were all names of one God. Again, page 137 mentions Gandhi saying that Man calls God by many names – Ram, Khuda etc; and page 162 mentions Gandhi saying that God is known to Hinduism as Ram. His famous bhajan in daily evening prayers, r6upit ra6v rajaram, pitt pavn sIta ram, is too well-known. Paper No. 110C1/96 (filed by Sunni Board) contains, at page 183, an account by Abul Fazl (Akbar's Courtier) in 1598 that Ramchandra 'who in Treta age combined in his own person both the spiritual supremacy and kingly office'; clearly perceived Ram to possess 'spiritual supremacy' which could place him in the category of God's incarnation. Paper No. 4 of list d. 5.11.1989 filed by Madan Mohan Gupta of Deft. Akhil Bharatiya Sri Ram Janma Bhumi Punardudhar Samiti is extract of translation of Ain-e-Akbari by Col. H.S.Jarret in 1891 recorded a foot-note that Ram Chandra was '7th Avatar and as incarnate Rama is the hero of famous epic that bears his name'.

(L) OPW 16, Ram Bhadracharya, who has stood searching cross-examination on his authority on Lord Ram has consistently deposed about the birthplace of Ram with reference to Ramtapniyopnishad and Ayodhya Mahatma in Skandh Puran (Vaishnav Khand). Jagadguru Ram Bhadracharya, OPW 16, also deposed about the place of Ram's birth in Ayodhya in paras 25 and 27 of his affidavit citing the authority of Chapter X of Skand-Puran (Vaishnav Khand) and of Yajurved. In para 23 of his affidavit, he asserted that the expression 'sarvalok namskrutam' in Sarg 18 (verse 10) signifies the disputed area in these suits as the birthplace of Ram. In para 24 of his affidavit read with pages 39 and 40 of cross-examination, he cites the authority of Ramtapniyopnishad and Atharva-ved to establish the birthplace of Ram to be in Ayodhya. Refuting the suggestion that Ayodhya Mahatm of Skand-Puran is a later interpolation, he asserted at page 53 that the spot which has been mentioned in Skand-Puran as Janmabhumi is the very spot which is the disputed site in this case. At page 54, he described the boundaries of Janmabhumi as mentioned in Skand-Puran; most of these boundaries tally with the present location of Disputed Area in Plans I & II of Shiv Shanker Lal. Add to these, paper no 17 of Documents filed on behalf of Bhagwan Shri Ramlala in OOS 5/89, the witness spoke about the situation of temple of Vighaneswar Bhagwan and said that Janmasthan is at North-East angle of Vighaneshwar, is towards North of Vashistha Kund and towards West of Lomash Kund; he reaffirmed those very situations on further cross-examination by different angles. All these situations are corroborated by couplet nos. 16, 18 and 19 of "Skand-Puran Mahatm" extract in paper no 17 (of Ramlala's documents referred to above. Jagadguru Ram Bhadracharya made a very emphatic and important statement in para 62 of cross-examination: "विवादित स्थल के उत्तर सड़क पार किसी जन्मस्थान नामक मन्दिर के बाबत मैंने किसी शास्त्र या अन्य पुस्तक में नहीं पढ़ा। मैं नहीं बता सकता कि ऐसे किसी मन्दिर को गूदड़मल मन्दिर के नाम से जाना जाता है।" This cross-examination was done by Z. Jilani for Sunni Board and the reply totally excludes the theory of Janmasthan Temple towards North of DA across the Pakka Road (pleaded by pro-Masjid Parties) as Ram's birthplace or antiquity of that temple.

(M) Babarnama (as translated by A.S.Beveridge) Ext. OOS 5: 16, which is first hand account his exploits/adventures by Babar himself (1528), does not contain any account of Ram, Mandir or Masjid. On Babar's capturing Delhi Sultanate after defeating Ibrahim Lodi on 21.4.1526, some local Governors of Lodi rebelled against Babar to establish their own rule. Babarnama mentions at page 544 that his son, Humayun, having been entrusted with subduing the rebels, took Jaunpur, Ghazipur, Kharid (Jaunpur), and placed Sheikh Bayazid Furmuli into the charge of Aude(=Oudh). Page 589 mentions that on 26.12.1527, troops were sent against Bayazid, signifying that Bayazid also rebelled in the meantime. On 21.3.1528, Babar visited Lucknow, and crossed Gomti and on 28.3.1528 Babar and his army dismounted at some distance 'above the junction of rivers Gaghra & Sird' (pages 601-602). His men, including Mir Baqi Shaghawal, chased Bayazid who ultimately escaped. Having stayed at the camping place, Babar left for hunting on 2.4.1528 (page 602). Admittedly, no account of the period after 2.4.1528 till 18.9.1528 is found in Babarnama. It is futile to guess about the missing contents; the significant fact is that a possible 'instant, first hand account' about the events relating to DS is not available in Babarnama; Babar did not even retrospect about this important event even later in Babarnama.

(N) The next record of disputed spot is available in William Finche's account of Ayodhya (paper no. 107C1/95-96, Ext. OOS 5:19) during his travels in 1608 to 1611, which finds mention also in SB paper 110C1/96 at page 183. It records: "Here also the ruins of Ranichand's castle and houses (the footnote mentions that Ranichand is a typographical error for Ramchand) which the Indians acknowledge for the great God, saying he took flesh upon him to see the tamasha of the world". This supports the popular perception of incarnation of Ram and existence of Castle of Ram in Ayodhya. The locality of Castle of Ram is known as Ramkot. Kot means fort (See Para 19). The DS and the surroundings are situated on this Ramkot; Contour Map [Fig.1 of ASI Report after GPR Survey under High Court Orders dt.13.12.2002 read with report (page 13)] shows the height of the mound-top on which DS stood to be 108.48 M above sea-level while the surrounding area sloped 'sharply' down to 103 M within a short distance and further sloped down 'gradually' to 101 M moving farther away from the top. The ASI has reported that 'the contour map itself suggests that the deposits at the site are no less than 8.0 M'; they further mentioned that the site 'contains the cultural deposits and debris accumulated for centuries'. This configuration of the locality fits in with structural pre-existence of 'Ramchand's Castle and houses' as recorded by William Finche. In natural course of things, persons are born in their 'houses' which, in the case of Royal families could well be the 'Castle'; hence this high raised site could be the birthplace of Ram.

(O) The next material available, in point of time, is a Jesuit Missionary Le Pere Joseph Tieffenthaler's "Historical and Geographical Description of India" published in 1786 paper No. 107C1/96 to 104. Those were the times when rivalry was hot between the French and the British over establishing their supremacy/empire in India. The account of Tieffenthaler was presented by the publisher Jean Burnoulli in French to the French King (paper No. 107C1/97). Translation of pages 252 to 255 (paper nos. 107C1/98 to 103) into English language by Government of India, under orders of the High Court, are part of the record and the following portions are of much significance:

(i) At page 252 - Avad , called as Adjudea (obviously, 'Ayodhya') is very ancient; it mentions founding of Bangla or Pesabad (obvioulsly, 'Faizabad') as 'as a new city where the Governor established his residence – a great number of inhabitants of Oude settled there'.

(ii) At page 253 – From 'Sorgadoori" (=Swargadwar Temple), Ram took away all inhabitants of the City to Heaven; the City was brought back to its earlier status by Bikarmajit (=Vikramditya), the famous king of Ujjain (The translator has mentioned Bikarmajit as the famous king of Oude erroneously; the text mentions the locality to be 'Oudjen' i.e Ujjain). Aurangzeb got the Temple demolished and replaced it with a Mosque and 2 obelisks (Minarets?).

-A place specially famous, called Sitha Rassoi, i.e., 'table of Sita wife of Ram', adjoining to the City in the South situated on a mud-hill ('mud-hill' is the area of Ram Chand's houses and Castle mentioned by William Finche).

-Aurangzeb got a fortress called Ramkot [this name

has continued throughout in modern records] demolished and got constructed at the same place a Muslim Temple with 3 domes. Some believe it was constructed by Babar. [This is the DS]. 14 black stone pillars there, skilfully made, existed at the site of the fortress; 12 of the pillars support the interior arcades of the Mosque. [The translator has not translated the height of these pillars –mentioned as 5 'empans'- which, according to Court Commissioner of 1950, was 6 feet each].

-A square box raised 5 'inches' above the ground with borders made of lime, with a length of more than 5 'inches' and 'height' of about 4 'inches' can be seen there. [We find the unit of measurement in 'inches' and mention of 'height' by the Translator to be incorrect. Firstly, having earlier mentioned the height of the square box to be 5 inches –which is correct- there could be no occasion of mentioning height again to be 'about 4 inches'. Secondly, the English translation of the French units of measurement and of one dimension mentioned in the French text is not correct. The French text mentions the height of the box to be 5 pouces which is correctly translated as 5 inches; but the dimension of length in French text is 5 aunes and dimension of width in French text is mentioned in continuation of dimension of length as 'large rout au plus de 4' which means wide more than 4 aunes (per context). A French aunes = 1.20 M. French Dictionary, Le

Petit Larouse Grand Format (1996 Edition) mentions at page 105 that aunes is equivalent to 1.20 M; page 812 mentions pouce to be equivalent to 27.07mm = English 'inch'. The correct dimensions of the box-structure, thus, was 6 M (1.20x5) in length, more than 4.8 M (1.20x4) in width and 5 inches in height; this establishes the dimensions of the structure to be 19.68 feet x 15.744 feet x 5 inches. [In the Gazetteer of 1854 written by Edward Thornton, paper No. 1 of Bhagwan Shri Ramlala in OOS 5 of 1989, mention is made of 'a quadrangular coffer of stone protruding 5" or 6" above ground pointed out as a cradle of Ram as 7th Avatar of Vishnu and is abundantly honoured by pilgrimages and devotion of Hindus'. This is the very platform mentioned by Tieffenthaler]. Shiva Shanker Lal, Pleader-Commissioner has mentioned (1950) the dimensions of Ram Chabutra to be 21 feet x 17 feet x 4 feet. Tieffenthaler's record of length and breadth of the box-structure is substantially similar to that of Court-Commissioner; increase in the height of the structure from 5 inches to 4 feet during 150 years after Tieffenthaler's visit is consistent with the complaint of Muslim parties in 1885 Suit of Mahant Raghubar Das that the latter had been raising various types of structures in the disputed area including construction of the Chabutra; incidentally, the structural changes would establish effective acts of possession of Hindu devotees/pujaris over very

(iii) At page 254- The Hindus call the square box as Bedi, i.e.the Cradle. The reason for this is that once upon a time, there was a house in this place where Beschan (Lord Vishnu) was born in the form of Ram besides his 3 brothers. Subsequently, Aurangzeb, or according to another belief Babar, got this place destroyed in order to deny them (Hindus) the opportunity of practising their superstitions. [It is to be appreciated that the word 'superstition' is mentioned by a Jesuit-christian who treat Hindu Faith to be 'superstitious', but so far as the Hindus are concerned, it is Faith which transcends reason, and that is the practice which Tieffenthaler found to be prevailing at that time.]. However there still exists some superstitious cult in some place. For example, in the place where the native house of Ram existed, they go around 3 times and prostrate on the floor. [This is the ritual of Parikrama commonly associated with worship at Hindu Temples. ''नालन्दा विषाल शब्दकोष'' Samvat 2007 at page 794, gives the meaning of Pa rikrama as the 'path around all sides of a Temple or Pilgrimage-place for circumbulation'. One is amused at the Parikrama made by Babar 3 times around the sick-bed of his son Humayun while praying to Allah to restore Humayun to health and in lieu thereof to take his life; it is said that Allah accepted the prayer of Babar so that while Humayun started recovering, Babar's health started declining ending in his death. Such is the spiritual power of Parikrama!]. The two spots are surrounded by low

crenellated wall. (The two spots, signify the 3-domed DS and the Platform; the low crenellated wall is the surrounding boundary of both and signifies the premises as a whole. The expression, "in the place where native house of Ram existed they go around 3 times and prostrate on the floor" interpreted with the immediately following sentence 'the two spots are ……..' shows that Parikrama was being done of both DS and the platform, hence the entire premises were being worshipped. It is also remarkable that Teiffenthaler described the premises to be a Muslim Temple; this means that even the Muslim structure was being treated like a Temple. Equally remarkable is his mention of 12 pillars supporting 'interior arcades of the Mosque. Appreciating the use of distinct expressions, 'Muslim Temple' and 'Mosque', it means that while the DS was a Mosque, the entire premises, including DS was treated also as a Temple.)

At another place, not far from the Bedi, are found buried 'grains of black rice turned into small stones' hidden under the earth since the time of Ram [This is 'fossilised' rice, called Akshat in the rituals of worship; fossilisation of substances 'represents a past geological age that has been preserved in the Earth's Crust' (page 73 of Volume 4 of Britannica Ready Reference Encyclopaedia) which proves the antiquity of the locality. It also supports the ASI finding, mentioned above, that the site 'contains the cultural deposits and debris accumulated for centuries', and also establishes

continuity of the locality during the fossilisation period of 'ages', may be from that of Ram. As mentioned in para 1 (above), all Muslim Parties in these Suits have admitted now that present time Ayodhya is at the same place as indicated in Balmiki Ramayan.]

In the month of 'Tschet' (= Chaitra month of Hindu Calendar) big gathering of people gather here to celebrate the Birthday of Ram so famous in entire India.

(P) Tieffenthaler's account has a special importance in this case. While most of the material on record establishes that Ram was born in Ayodhya the particular place of birth in Ayodhya, namely the site of DS, is fixed by Tiefenthaler's account earliest in point of time. He mentioned the platform 19.68 feet x 15.77 feet x 5 inches, situated within the disputed area (the Campus of the Babri Masjid) to represent the place where Ram and his 3 brothers were reputed to have been born. 'Muslim temple' with 3 domes is Babri Masjid at Ramkot, the fortress; the platform is within the precincts of Babri Masjid and in the month of Chaitra people gather here 'to celebrate the birthday of Ram so famous in entire India'.)

(Q) The next document of accounts is "A Historical sketch of Tahsil Fyzabad, Zilla Fyzabad" including "Ajudhia & Fyzabad" by P. Carnegy of 1870 (see para 4 above, Ext. OOS 5: 49), i.e within 84 years of Tieffenthaler's account and 13 years after British Queen's Proclamation of 1858. The British power stood fully consolidated while French & Portuguese had been marginalised and the British rulers proceeded to establish effective governance. P. Carnegy was appointed not only as Commissioner but also as Settlement Officer to conduct survey and prepare records of the territories of Ayodhya & Fyzabad. The contents of this document, therefore, assume great importance regarding the contemporary facts and events. At page (i), he mentions that a writer of History of Ayodhya 'must master all that has been written of the 3 distinct ages…..'; at no 3, he mentions Ajudhya Mahatam, with its Epitome in Appendix B 'taken from the PURANS'. Ajudhya Mahatam is in Skanda Puran (See Para 14). At page (ii) of the Epitome, it is recorded that at the 'heart of the city lies the great Ramkot, the fort of Ram …… on its western side is the Janma Bhum or Janam Asthan, the birthplace of the hero'. Page (iii) records 'Just beside the birthplace of Rama is the "Kitchen" of Janki-ji.' At page 6 (of the main narrative) Carnegy records that 'with the fall of the last of Rama's line, Ajudhia became a wilderness', that to Vikramajit 'the restoration of the neglected and forest-concealed Ajudhia is universally attributed …… the different spots rendered sacred by association with the worldly acts of deified Rama, were identified, and Vikramajit is said to have indicated the different shrines to which pilgrims from afar still in thousands half-yearly flock'. At page 7, he records about Ramkot: 'The most remarkable of those was of course Ramkot, the stronghold of Ramchandar……. This fort covered a large extent of ground …….. within the fort were 8 royal mansions where dwelt the Patriarch Dashrath and his wives, and Rama his deified son …….' Serial

www.vadaprativada.com

No. 6 of these mansions records 'Janam Asthan (Rama's birthplace)'. Page 20-21 mentions 'The Janamasthan and other temples'. It is recorded: ' It is locally affirmed at the Mahomedan conquest there were three important Hindu shrines…….the 'Janmasthan' the 'Swargadwar Mandir' also known as Ram Darbar and the 'Treta-ke-Thakur'. On the first of these the Emperor Babar built the mosque which still bears his name, A.D.1528. On the second Aurangzeb did the same, A.D. 1658-1707; on the third that sovereign, or his predecessor, built a mosque according to the well-known Mahomedan principle of enforcing their religion on all those whom he conquered. The Janmasthan marks the place where Ramchandra was born'. At page 21, it is mentioned that in 1855 a great rupture took place between the Hindus and Mahomedans, the former occupied the Hanuman Garhi in force, while the Mahomedans took possession of the Janmasthan. The Mahomedans actually charged up the steps of Hanuman Garhi, but were driven back with considerable loss. The Hindus then followed up this success, and at the third attempt, took the Janmasthan at the gate of which 75 Mahomedans are buried in the Martyrs' grave (Ganj-shahid). Several of the King's regiments were looking on all the time, but their orders were not to interfere. It is said that up to that time, the Hindus and Mahomedans alike used to worship in the mosque-temple. [This reminds of Tieffenthaler's description of the disputed structure as Muslim-Temple. See para 17(ii)(2) and 17 (iii) of these Arguments]. Carnegy goes on to add that since the British rule, a railing has been put up to prevent disputes, within which in the mosque the Mahomedans pray, while outside the fence the Hindus have raised a platform on which they make their offerings. At page 27, Carnegy, giving a brief list of 'buildings' existing at that time, mentions at No. (5) Babar's mosque with stone inscriptions in 'Ajudhia', date 1528, and stone columns of infinitely greater antiquity, i.e., of much older period than DS; hence DS could be from the earlier temple demolished. There is no reason to hold any of these accounts to be erroneous.

(R) Annexed to page 27 of Carnegy's Record is Appendix ‘A’ setting out "List of Sacred Places in and about Ajudhia". Drawn in Tabular form, Col. No. 2 is for 'Name of sacred place', Col. No. 3 is for 'Name of founder or restorer', Col. No. 4 is for 'Number of years since it was founded or restored', Col. No 5 is for 'Number of generations since founded or restored', Col no. 7 is for 'How obtained', Col. No. 9 is for 'Sect and special object of veneration', Col. No. 11 mentions page no. 'for particulars' of the item and Col No. 12 is for 'Remarks'. The Appendix lists 209 'sacred places'. All of them are Hindu sites; Appendix C is the 'List of old Mahomedan places of Note…..' While 'Janam Asthan' is mentioned at serial no. 1 of Appendix A with particulars at page 20, 'Mosque of Emperor Babar' is mentioned at serial no. 3 of Appendix C with particulars at page 21.

(S) Janam Asthan at serial no. 1 of Appendix A, carries the name of 'Ramdas ji' as 'founder or renovator', 'founded or restored' since 166 years of 7 generations, 'obtained' as

'given by Mir Masumali Mafidar' related to 'Gudar, Ramchandar' by 'sect & special object of veneration'. Referring to 'particulars' at page 20 (per Col. No. 11), larger picture emerges. While according to Appendix A, the Janam Asthan could have existed only since 1704 A.D., established by 'grant' from a Mafidar, the particulars at page 20-21 lay down that on Janmasthan 'Emperor Babar built the mosque which still bears his name, A.D. 1528', marks the place where Ram Chandr was born, had 'a fine temple at Janmasthan' and 'many of its columns are still in existence, having been used by the Mahomedans in the construction of the Babri Mosque', the columns are 'black stone called by natives Kasoti (literally touchstone) and carved with different devices'. Obviously, the 'Mosque' could not be described as Janmasthan because as the structure stood, it was a Mosque, not a temple; the site on which the Mosque stood could be the Janma Bhumi of Ram, but could not be visible in the structure. At the same time, the only visible structure bearing the nomenclature of Janmasthan was the one mentioned at Serial No. 1 of Appendix A. Further, Appendix B 'Ayodhya Mahatma', at page (ii) mentions "Janam Bhumi or Janam Asthan, the birthplace of Ram". On a consideration of all this record, in totality, the reasonable conclusion is that, on the findings of survey by P.Carnegy, while a visible standing structure associated with Ram's birth was the Temple since 1704 mentioned at serial no. 1 of Appendix A, the Janma Bhumi was the invisible site on which the Babri Mosque stood since 1528. At the same time, the details of 'Mosque

of the Emperor Babar' (serial no. 3 of Appendix C) as at page 21, clearly mentions that the mosque which Emperor Babar built in 1528 AD was built on the Janmasthan. The probability is that Janmasthan structure mentioned at serial no. 1 of Appendix A was the result of politico-religious compulsion faced from the devotees of Ram, so that a temple of Ram's birthplace was managed to have been erected with the leave/license of the Muafidar because Hindus were prevented throughout from erecting a Ram Janam Bhumi Temple anywhere within the precincts of Babri Masjid campus, so much so that when, in 1885 Mahant Raghubar Das sued for permission to erect a Temple on the Ram Chabutra, it was objected to by contesting Muslims and refused by the concerned authorities, including the Court, at Ayodhya. This probability is strengthened by the 'Remark' recorded by Carnegy in Col no. 12 of Appendix A as follows: "Great astonishment has been expressed at the recent vitality of Hindu religion at Ajudhia, and it was to test the extent of this chiefly that with no small amount of labour, this statement has been prepared. As the information it contains may be permanently useful, I have considered it well to give it a place here". This 'recent vitality of Hindu religion' is reflected in the 'great rupture' of 1855 mentioned above. It was facilitated by the collapse of tyrannical rule of Mughal Aurangzeb, followed by slightly humane rule of the local Governors (Subedars), styled as Nawabs, who may have realised the injustices caused to Hindu devotees so much so that, according to Carnegy,

when the 1855 episode occurred, "Several of the King's regiments were looking on all the time, but their orders were not to interfere." Following the growing influence of British East India Co since Lord Wellesley's 1801 treaty, establishment of British Resident of Oudh, coupled with ill-governance of Oudh, the Company accomplished annexation of Oudh, formally proclaimed by Outram on 13th February 1856; Wajid Ali Shah, the last ruler of Oudh, was deported to Calcutta where he died (See page 762-63 of Majumdar, Raychaudhari & Kalikinkar Dutta's "Advanced History of India", supra). Carnegy has mentioned about annexation of Oudh in 1856 at page 13. Nawab Wajid Ali Shah had a great liking for Hindu culture, Art, Dance & Music, and could well have directed his regiments not to intervene' in the 1855-rupture.

(T) The next important Document reflecting upon 'recent vitality of Hindu religion' mentioned by P. Carnegy, is Barabanki Gazetteer by H.R.Nevill (1902), paper no. 9 of Bhagwan Sri Ramlala's documents (Ext. OOS 5: 52), mentions at page 168-169 that shortly before annexation of Oudh by British an event happened in 1853, and records: "The cause of occurrence was one of the numerous dispute that sprung up from time to time between Hindu Priests and Musalmans of Oudh with regard to the ground on which formerly stood the Janma Asthan Temple which was destroyed by Babar and replaced by mosque. The ground being particularly sacred to Hindus was at once seized by Bairagis and others". This shows that Hindu-Bariagis took possession of DS in 1853

as site of Ram's birthplace. The document adds that Moulvi Ameer Ali, resident of Amethi (then in Lucknow), at once proceeded to declare Jihad in the city. The King sent orders to Faizabad to inquire into the matter, but nothing was done. Ameer Ali then collected a large and well-armed force of Mahomedans; but the King summoned Ameer Ali and proclaimed that no violent action should be taken, and that the Mosque should be restored. When Ameer Ali collected more men, the King on receiving the news thereof, summoned Sir James Outram, the Resident, and left it to him to put a stop to Ameer Ali's movement in any way he could. As already mentioned, according to Carnegy, the 'rupture' took place in 1855. Page 174 of Faizabad Gazetteer of 1905, filed per list dt. 5.11.1989 by Defdt. Madan Mohan Gupta (Ext. OOS 5: 11) mentions that although Muslims re-occupied the place in 1855, the Hindus made a counter-attack and stormed the Janmasthan. So, the Bairagis and other Hindus captured DS/DA in 1853 and re-captured it in 1855 from Muslims after a fight in which several Muslims were killed and 75 were buried around the Masjid. Ext. A-26, the Judgment of Sub-Judge in Mahant Raghubar Das suit mentions Hindu-Muslim riots of 1855 after which the British constructed a wall separating the areas of possession of Hindus & Muslims over DS referred to by Carnegy. These documents confirm the DS to be the site of Ram Janmabhumi on which stood Janma Asthan Temple. Admittedly, the British authorities erected a partition wall on the platform of DS towards East of DS in

1855 and provided that the portion on the West of the partition wall would remain in possession of Muslims whereas that on the East thereof, including the platform mentioned by Tieffenthaler, would remain in possession of Hindus.

(U) In 1858 (i.e.3 years after the events of 1853-55) a Sikh Fakir Khalsa, Nihang Singh, took possession of DS itself, installed Nishan Shri Bhagwan in the Central Dome of DS and performed Puja-Havan. Ext. 19 of OOS 1 of 1989, is a report (application) of SO Sheetal Dubey of local PS lodged on 28th November, 1858 that a Nihang Singh (Sikh) Fakir Khalsa r/o Punjab installed NISHAN SHRI BHAGWAN (NISHAN is pillar with a flag at the top as symbol of a Temple's Deity) with 25 Sikhs helping to protect and install the NISHAN, and Hawan and Puja was performed in the name of Guru Govind Singh inside "Masjid Janmasthan". That is the beginning of Masjid's nomenclature describing its situation at Janmasthan, the birthplace. Two days later (on 30.11.1858), Mohd Salim Muazzin (the person who makes Azan to call Muslims for prayer in Masjid) filed an application (Ext. OOS 1: 20) in connection with Ext. 19, stating that the Nihang Singh of Punjab and Sikhs and Bairagis of Janmasthan are bent upon committing rioting and in the middle of Babri Masjid near arch (Mehrab) and pulpit (Mimbar) made a mud chabutra 4 angul high, dug a pit , lighted fire and perform Puja and Hom, and also planted NISHAN 1 ¼ yards tall and installed Idol; word 'Ram-Ram' has been written by charcoal at various places in the Masjid. This confirms that in 1858, DS was claimed by Sikhs-Hindu Bairagis and described by the jurisdictional local Police Officer too as Birthplace of Ram (the police describing it as Masjid Janmasthan). Exts 21, 22, & 23 of OOS 1 of 1989 demonstrate the same situation.

(V) Of these, Ext. OOS 1: 23 is the application dt. 9.4.1860 of one Mohd. Isa with reference to SO's report regarding "installation of Nishan by Sant Tek Singh Fakir Khalsa in Masjid Janmasthan". This is an admission and confirmation by a concerned Mohammedan in 1860 that DS was Masjid at Janmasthan. In the Order dt. 3.1.1870 Ext. A19 (of OOS 1 of 1989) the Settlement Officer ordered payment of Annual Endowment Grant for support of Janmasthan Mosque to Mohd. Asghar (the Mutawalli of DS) and Mohd. Afzal Ali. Following it, Mohd Asghar and Mohd Afzal filed a Suit through Plaint dt. 22.8.1871, Ext. 26 and described Babri Masjid 'to be situated in Janmasthan Avadh' and claimed to be owner of 21 Imli trees situated at darwaza of Babri Masjid which is situated in Janmasthan. The claim was upheld by the same day's order Ext. 25. Ext 15, Dy. Commissioner's Report dt 14.5.1877 read with Ext. 16, Commissioner's Order dt. 18.12.1877 in an Appeal filed by Mohd Asghar show that in November 1873 an Idol was placed on 'platform of Janmasthan', that in May 1877, the Dy. Commissioner got a door opened in the Northern wall of the Campus and recorded that 'the new door was opened not in the Mosque but in the wall of Janmasthan. Mohd. Asghar's Appeal was dismissed by the Commissioner's above Order (dt. 18.12.1877). In Ext. 18, an application dt. 2.11.1883 by Mohd Asghar filed in the Court of Asstt. Commissioner, Faizabad, Mohd Asghar admitted the rights of Mahant Raghubar Das on Chabutra Janmasthan. These documents constitute important confirmation by the Police, the Dy. Commissioner and the Commissioner, and important admissions by Muslim-claimants regarding DS (Mohd Asghar, Mohd Afzal and Mohd Isa) that Babri Masjid stood at Janmasthan and came to be called as Masjid Janmasthan, i.e. Mosque at the birthplace (of Ram). It was never mentioned by any of the Muslim-claimants that there stood any 'Mandir Janmasthan' towards North of DS beyond the East-West rasta situated on the North of DS (a case now taken by Sunni Board/Muslim parties in these Suits), although P. Carnegy had mentioned in 1870 about Janmasthan since 166 years and construction of Masjid by Babar in 1528 on Janmasthan where formerly a temple had existed (See Para 21).

(X) Other significant documents are:

(i) Paper No. 1 of Ramlala's documents (OOS 5:5) are pages 739-740 of Edward Thornton's Gazetteer of 1854 mentions 'extensive ruins of Fort of Ram, King of Oudh, highly celebrated' and 'quadrangular coffer of stone protruding 5 or 6 inches above ground pointed out as Cradle of Ram as 7th Avatar of Vishnu, and is abundantly honoured by pilgrimages and devotion of Hindus'. This is what Tieffenthaler had recorded seen in 1786.

www.vadaprativada.com

(ii) Paper no. 4 of Ramlala's documents (OOS 5:7) is Volume 1 of Oudh Gazetteer of 1877; at page 7 it mentions that on Janmasthan, Babar built a Mosque.

(iii) Paper no. 5 of Ramlala's documents (OOS 5:8) contains paragraphs 666 to 669 of A.F.Millet's Report of Settlement of Land Revenue, Faizabad, in 1880, describing Janmasthan and other temples of Ayodhya and mentions erection of mosque by Babar on Janmasthan.

(iv) Paper no. 6 of Ramlala's documents (Paper 107C1/31-32) contains page 67 of Chapter X of Report of Archaeological Survey of NW Provinces and Oudh 1889 which mentions that Babar's Masjid at Ayodhya was built in AH 930 or AD 1528 by 'Mir Khan on the very spot where the old temple of Janmasthan of Ram Chandra was standing.

(vi) Paper no. 7 of Ramlala's documents (OOS 5: 9) contains page 297 of ASI publication of 1891 by A. Fuhrer of Monumental Antiquities and Inscriptions in NWP & OUDH stating that in the very heart of city (Ayodhya) is "Janmasthan or birthplace of Ram" and Mir Khan built a Masjid during the reign of Babar on Janmasthan.

(vii) Paper no. 8 of Ramlala's documents (OOS 5: 10) contains page 389 of Imperial Gazetteer of India Volume II of 1901 mentioning that at one corner of the present town of Ayodhya a vast mound known as Ramkot or the Fort of Ram is the holy spot where Ram was born, that most of the enclosure is occupied by a

mosque built by Babar from the remains of an old temple and an outer portion of a small platform and shrine marked the birthplace.

(Y) After the installation of an Idol in November 1873 on the platform of Janmasthan (vide Exts. 15 and 16 supra), an important Suit was filed by Mahant Raghubar Das Vs. Secretary of State, RS 61/280 of 1885 for permission to erect a temple on the platform (mentioned by Tieffenthaler in 1786 which came to be known as Ram Chabutra situated in the South-Eastern corner of the premises of disputed Babri Masjid). Ext. A22 is plaint dt. 19.1.1885; Para 1 mentions that BHUMI JANMASTHAN is situated in the city of Ayodhya of which Mahant Raghubar Das is Mahant, Para 2 mentions CHABUTRA JANMASTHAN with a small temple placed on it, and Para 3 mentions that Mahant Raghubar Das is in possession thereof. Thus Raghubar Das claimed that Chabutra Janmasthan (containing a small Temple) is situated in Bhumi Janmasthan and that the Chabutra Janmasthan had been in his possession. In the Written Statement, Ext. A23, Mohd Asghar/Mohd Javed as Mutawalli of Babri Masjid stated that the Masjid was constructed by Babar, that the Chabutra was constructed in 1857 which Muslims had complained of and applied for demolition and orders were passed for its demolition (but it continued to exist), Plaintiff and other Hindus used to have ingress/egress into the campus of the Masjid and had been assembling/dispersing, coming/going and making offerings (नज़र नियाज़ चढ़ाते हैं) as they do at other religious places like Imambaras/Masjids for their spiritual benefit. The concept of offerings for spiritual benefit is relevant acknowledgment of Deity-nature of DA. An important circumstance is that Mohd Asghar etc. never pleaded that Janmabhumi was situated elsewhere, viz. further North of East-West Rasta which runs towards North of DS (as pleaded in the current litigation), the record of P. Carnegy in 1870 about 'Janmasthan in the name of Ramdas' and another Janmasthan with Babri Masjid thereon was already public (See Paras 20 and 21 supra). Their statement that the Chabutra was constructed in 1857 is absolutely false because Tieffenthaler's account of 1786 records its existence. Another important feature contained in Court-Commissioner's Site Plan, Ext. A25, which bears signatures of Mohd. Asghar, is that all around the Babri Masjid there existed Parikrama (circumambulation path) which is a typical feature of all Hindu Temples; Shiv Shanker Lal Court Commissioner in these very Suits found the Parikrama all around the DS. It shows that throughout hundreds of years, Hindus worshipped the entire DA as Ram Janmabhumi.

(Z) The trial Court dismissed the Suit of Mahant Raghubar Das on the ground that grant of permission to construct a Temple within the campus of Masjid would be laying foundation for quarrel and riots (vide Judgment Ext. A26). Mahant Raghubar Das filed an Appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge made a local inspection of the locality and in his judgment, Ext. A27, delivered on the very following day (18.3.1886) he recorded that "it was most unfortunate that the Masjid should have been built on land specially held sacred by Hindus". He further recorded that the 'platform or Chabutra of masonry' occupied by Hindus 'is said to indicate Birthplace of Ram Chandra'. He dismissed the Appeal on the ground that since the event occurred 356 years earlier, it was too late to remedy the grievance, and that in fact or law there was 'no injuria' as District Magistrate's Order in his administrative capacity to maintain law and order in exercise of sovereign power could not give a right to the Plaintiff to challenge the same; hence status quo ought to be maintained. The observation that Ram Chabutra was 'said to indicate' birthplace of Ram, reflects Mahant Raghubar Das's anxiety & effort to assert Ram's birthplace to sustain continuity of Worship of birthplace of Ram since time immemorial despite 3-4 centuries Mughal/Muslim violence and use of force on a place of Hindu worship as Islamic Jehad mentioned by Babar himself in Babarnama. District Judge's finding that there was no injuria, establishes that no civil rights of Parties were decided, hence res judicata could not be applied.

(AA) Encyclopaedia Britannica (ED V) Volume 1, 15th Edition (1980), page 693 deals with Oudh and mentions that out of a few surviving monuments of antiquity, there is Rama's Birthplace marked by a Mosque erected by Mughal Emperor Babar in 1528 on the site of an earlier temple.

(AB) Considered in totality, the above material overwhelmingly establishes that the disputed area is the

birthplace of Ram and the DS stood at that birthplace. It is admitted that the area was seized by Babar's army under Mir Baqi, his General. In the normal course of human behaviour having regard to the Islamic concept of Kafir, Jehad etc to which Babar was deeply devoted (vide his own writings in Babarnama), the Hindu devotees of Ram could never have opportunity to maintain their own place of worship after demolition of Hindu Temple and erection of Babri Masjid at its site by use of force and physical might. Cruelty of Babar's hordes during raid in Ayodhya against Sheikh Bayazid is revealed by Babar himself in his Babarnama which records that on Saturday 7th Rajab (=28.3.1528) Bayazid and his force, stationed to the other side of River Saryu, "being unable to stand their ground took to flight and our people brought down some of them and cut off their heads which they sent to me". It would have been impossible for Hindu devotees at that time to preserve/maintain any vestige of the Temple. Nevertheless, when Tieffenthaler wrote the History & Geography of Ayodhya in 1786, he found a platform about 19 feet x 15 feet x 5 inches inside the campus of DS and Hindu devotees used to worship at the platform and also throughout DS [see para 17(iii) above]. The record does not show when this Chabutra (platform) was erected. Humayun succeeded Babar on his death in 1530, but in 1539 he was defeated at Chaunsa near Buxar and finally on 17.5.1540 was defeated by Sher Khan and his Afghan followers at the battle of Ganges/Bilgram (whereupon Sher Khan assumed the royal title of 'Sher Shah' with territories extending from Kannauj to hills of Assam and from Himalyas to Jharkhand & Bay of Bengal) and Humayun just managed to escape and had to lead the life of a wanderer for 15 years and the Moghul sovereignty of Hindustan passed to the Afghans (vide page 431 of "An Advanced History of India" by R.C.Majumdar, H.C.Raychandani & Kali Kinkar Dutta, 4th Macmillan Edn 1978). At page 433, the Historians write that in the spirit of an enlightened despot, Sher Shah "attempted to find an empire broadly based upon the peoples' will". That could have afforded an opportunity to Hindus to get into possession in portions of campus of DS. This opportunity, perhaps, could not be broadened to take possession of DS itself in total exclusion of Muslims from the Mosque. It is likely that, in the prevailing situation, the Hindus content themselves with possession over Chabutra while continuing their efforts to extend rights and possession over different portions of the Campus of DS. Indeed, in application dt. 2.11.1883, Etx. 18, Mohd Asghar admitted possession of Mahant Raghubar Das not only on the Chabutra Janmasthan but also on Sita Rassoi abutting towards North of DS which is mentioned by Tieffenthaler too [see para 17(ii)(i) above]. Existence of Sita Rassoi, venerated by Hindus as sacred, immediately abutting DS and the Chabutra show that Hindus were constantly trying to extend their physical possession in the campus of Babri Masjid with passage of time. Indeed Register of Muafi dated 29.6.1880, Ext. 2 of SB Suit, wherein grant of Sahanwa land in lieu of cash maintenance amount for

www.vadaprativada.com

Babri Masjid was recorded, clearly records that this is the Masjid in Ayodhya for possession of which Hindis and Muslims fight and are rival claimants. Humayun recovered the Indian territories with the aid of Shah of Persia and reoccupied Delhi in July 1555 (vide page 438 of history book supra). He died on 24.1.1556 and was succeeded by his 13 year old son Akbar (vide page 438). There is nothing to show that Humayun or Akbar undertook any military exercise in Ayodhya. Indeed, Akbar was liberal in his religious views and promulgated Din-e-Ilahi, compounded from various elements taken partly from Quran, Scriptures of Brahmins and Gospel of Christ; a firm believer in the policy of universal toleration, Akbar made no attempt to force his religion on others but appealed to the inner feelings of men (vide page 452). Akbar abolished Pilgrim Tax in the 8th year and Jizia in the 9th year of his rule (vide page 455). He had great veneration for Guru Ramdas and granted land to him containing a pool where the famous Amritsar Golden Temple stands (vide page 492). Perhaps affairs moved in the same direction during the rule of Jahangir and Shahjehan. Shahjehan fell ill in September 1657. Terrible war of succession broke out amongst his sons and finally, Aurangzeb captured the throne of Hindustan, seized Agra Fort on 8.6.1658, proceeded to Delhi and crowned himself as Emperor on 21.7.1658, while all efforts by Shahjehan for amicable settlement failed. Aurangzeb confined Shahjehan in Agra Fort where he died on 22.1.1666 at the age of 74 (vide page 477). A champion of Sunni

orthodoxy, Aurangzeb tried to enforce strictly the Quranic law under which every pious Muslim was to exert himself in the path of God, i.e. to carry on Jihad against non-Muslim lands. He re-imposed Jizia tax in 1679 on non-believers (pages 489 & 490). Tieffenthaler wrote that Aurangzeb got demolished the Temples of Swargadwar and Treta-ka-Thakur and got Mosques built at their site, but there is no indication that he caused any violence at Sita Rassoi. Aurangzeb died on 3.1.1707 at Ahmadnagar disheartened, anguished and unhappy; he wrote to his son Azam: "I came alone & am going alone. I have not done well to the Country & the people, and of the future, there is no hope" (vide page 500-501). Only 60 years later Tieffenthaler found the platform and discovered that Hindus had been worshipping not only at the platform but also at the DS. So, it is quite likely that Hindu devotees possession and worship in the campus of DS had been going on even from the times of defeat of Humayun.

4093. Though the range and scope of argument has gone beyond what actually needs to be considered necessarily in relation to the three issues as noticed above but we shall concentrate only on such matters and aspects which are related with these issues and not beyond that. In fact in respect to other arguments covering other matters we have already considered and recorded our findings while deciding other issues.

4094. The investigation of the material on these issues really travels in an uncertain extent of period of the past which we can, for convenient purposes say history though some of the expert historian witnesses in their statements have tried to

dispute these issues compelled to peep into history leaving no option with us, as already said the length of history ranges from several thousand to several lakhs of years (B.C.).

4095. We shall first find out what are the recognised sources to know history and in particular that of Indian sub-continent.

4096. In "The History and Culture of Indian People – The Vedic Age" Vol.-I published by Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Mumbai- Sri R.C.Majumdar, A.D.Pusalker and A.K.Majumdar, 6th Edition 1996, Chapter II discusses in brief the sources of Indian History. The learned authors, for the above purpose, have divided the period of Indian History in three : (1) from the most ancient times to the end of the twelfth century A.D.; (2) from thirteenth to eighteenth century; and (3) the subsequent period.

4097. Three sources are mainly mentioned in regard to ancient times:

A. Literary Sources

B. Archaeology

C. Foreign Account

4098. In the category of "Literary Sources", the learned authors have referred to Vedic Literature, local chronicles, Biographies, Poetical Epics like Ramayana, Mahabhartha, Gaudavaho and Vikramanka-deva charita etc. In the category of "Archaeology", the learned authors have taken into account the archaeological excavations, Inscriptions, Numismatics (Coins), Monuments etc. The "Foreign Account" consists of the information provided by the foreign writers visiting the continent. It consists of the Greek writers Herodotus; Ctesias; Megasthenes (who accompanied Alexander to India and lived for some time in the court of Chandragupta Maurya as an ambassador of Seleucus); anonymous author of "Periplus of the Erythraean Sea" who made a voyage to the Indian coast about A.D. 80, was a Greek and settled in Egypt, and left a record of its ports, harbours, and merchandise; Ptolemy; Arab sailor and merchants like Sulaiman, Al Mas'udi, Al-Beruni, Chinese travellers i.e. Fa-hien (about fifth century A.D.), Hiuen Tsang, and I-tsing (seventh century A.D.).

4099. In the Mediaeval period, the most reliable sources are contemporary political and other chronicles regarding political events of the country like Tabaqat-i-Nasiri (by Minhaj-ud-din, thirteenth century A.D.); Ta'rikh-i-Firuz Shahi (by Ziya-ud-din Barani and Shams-i-Siraj 'Afif'); Gulshan-i-Ibrahimi (by Muhammad Qasim Firishta); Ain-i-Akbari and Akbar-nama (by Abu'l-Fazl); Tabaqat-i-Akbari (by Nizam-ud-din Ahmad) and Muntakhab-ut-Tawarikh (by Abd-ul-Qadir Budauni). Besides, there is autobiographies of Mughal emperors Babur, Jahangir, Shahjahan, Aurangjeb etc. and the English historians work like "The History of India" as told by its own Historians – compiled by Elliot and Dowson. There are some Foreign Account also during this period that is of Marco Polo, who visited India and other parts of Asia towards the close of the thirteenth century; Ibn Batuta, an African Muhammadan, who spent several years in the court of Muhammad Tughlaq and returned to his native country in A.D. 1349; Nicolo de'Conti, the Venetian, visited in fifteenth century, a number of European travellers like Tieffenthaler, Willium Finch, Minouchi etc..

4100. The third period i.e. subsequent to eighteenth century is called as "Modern Period" and during this period, the written record of various transactions etc. of the Rulers are available in various forms including Gazette and Gazetteers, History Accounts, official records kept in record offices etc.

4101. Several witnesses produced by the parties have also made certain statements about what constitute sources of history, and, in brief, some of such statements are noted below.

4102. P.W. 29, Jaya Menon while being cross examined by Sri R.L. Verma, at page 48, explained difference between "history" and "archaeology" and also said about the sources for knowing "Ancient Indian History" :

> "From my point of view Archaeology is a different subject from history but both of them have the same aim of understanding the human past. I would say that Archaeology was introduced later on as a subject it was not present from the very beginning of the knowledge of the history.
>
> The sources of knowing Ancient Indian History are texts, inscriptions, coins and archaeological evidence. Vedic Literature is significant for knowing the Vedic period."

4103. However, she did not accept "Puranas" as a source for knowing Vedic period and says at page 49 :

> "Besides Vedas there is no other source to know about the Vedic period. So far as Puranas are concerned they are not a source for knowing Vedic period. I have heard the name of Smritis. I know about Manu Smriti but I have not read it. Manu Smriti is one of the texts which tells about society. For knowing the later Vedic period, Brahmanas, Aranyaks and Upnishads have significance. I

www.vadaprativada.com

have very little knowledge about Vedangas. I have heard about six parts of Vedangas but I do not know much about them. Upnishad is the end of Vedas. Volunteered, it is also a text in which early philosophical ideas are present. Upnishads were written by various people at various times who were Rishis and Brahmins."

4104. PW 29 gave some information about "Smrities" and "Puranas" at pages 48 to 52 :

"There are 18 Puranas known to Ancient Indian Culture. The name of Puranas are Vayu Puran, Matsya Puran and many others..."

"I have heard about Mahabharat which is written by Vedvyas but I have not read it. I have also heard about Valmiki Ramayan but I have not read it. During study of my M.A. Classes, I have heard about Mahabharat and Valmiki Ramayan. I do not know whether Mahabharat and Valimiki Ramayan are referred to as part of Puranas. Lord Rama is hero of the book which is called Valimiki Ramayan. I disagree that Valimiki Ramayanwas written in the lifetime of Lord Rama. Volunteered, Ram is a mythological figure so he could not have lived in the time of Valmiki. I came to know about it on the basis that both these stories of Ramayan and Mahabharat were written at different points over a long period. Mahabharat is considered older than Ramayan. Roughly the earliest part of Mahabharat could date to one thousand B.C. But it was written down by about fourth century A.D. and the Ramayan from about fifth Century B.C. Till about fourth century A.D."

"Vedas came into written form probably in Fourth

www.vadaprativada.com

Century A.D."

"I disagree that customs, traditions and legends are sources for understanding the past."

"The period of Rig Ved is called early Vedic period. According to me chronologically there is difference between Rig Ved and other Vedas."

"Period of Rig Ved in history is called early Vedic period. After prevedic era, Vedic period starts. I do not think that Smritis are connected with Vedas. Manusmriti has different information than Vedas. I do not agree that the Smrities in any way help to understand Vedas. There is no terminology which may be said to be 'Pauranic era'. The Puranas are basically dated to fourth century A.D."

"Puranas are supposed to be written in Gupta period i.e. between four to six century A.D."

4106. On pages 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17, 30, 31, 32 and 33, he (PW 28) said, about sources of ancient history, as under :

''यह ठीक है प्राचीन इतिहास को जानने के लिए पुरातत्व एक अच्छा स्त्रोत है। इसके अतिरिक्त साहित्यिक स्त्रोत है, परम्परा भी स्त्रोत हैं।'' (पेजः 8)

"It is true that archaeology is a good source to know ancient history. Besides this, there is a literary source;customs are also a source."(E.T.C.)

काल के पहले काल को जानने के लिए हमारे पास साहित्य और पुरातात्विक दोनों स्त्रोत उपलब्ध हैं। अशोक काल के पहले के इन्सक्रिप्शन उपलब्ध नहीं है। केवल हड़प्पा कालीन लिपि उपलब्ध है जो पढ़ी नहीं गई है। धम्मपद देवनागरी लिपि में उपलब्ध है। पर सबसे पहले पहल वह सिलोनिक लिपि में लिखा गया है। अशोक काल के पहले के इतिहास को जानने के लिए बौद्ध साहित्य और कुछ वैदिक साहित्यक उपलब्ध हैं। वैदिक साहित्य से तात्पर्य है संहिता ब्राहम्ण, अरण्यक, उपनिषद। धर्मशास्त्र वैदिक साहित्य में नहीं आता है। ट्रैवलर्स एकाउण्ट को भी मैं इतिहास का स्त्रोत मानता हूँ। यह ठीक है कि एपीग्राफी और पेलियोग्राफी इतिहास जानने का एक स्त्रोत है। .....न्यूमिसमैटक्सि भी इतिहास को जानने का स्त्रोत है, इसी को मुद्रा शास्त्र भी कहते हैं।'' (पेजः 9)

"It is true that archaeology is the only source to know the history of a period not having written history. In this very manner, archaeology alone is a source to know the 'Harappan culture'. To know about the pre Ashokan period. Both the literary and archaeological sources are available with us. Inscriptions anterior to the Ashokan period are not available. Only the Harappan script is available which has not been deciphered. 'Dhammpad' is available in devanagari script. But first of all it is written in Cylonic script. The Bauddha literature and some of the Vedic literature is available to know the history of pre-Ashokan period. The Vedic literature means 'Samhita Brahman'and 'Aranyak'. Scriptures are not comprised in the Vedic literature. I take traveller's account as well to be a source of history. It is true that epigraphy and palaeography are a source to know history. Numismatics is also of history and this very subject is also called 'Science of Coins'. "(E.T.C.)

"Only the written sources are comprised in literary sources. Oral things are included in customs.

The Vedas and Upnishads are taken to be historical sources since the time they were scripted. As per information available so far, no Veda preceding the 10th century AD is found in written form. Before the said time they were retained by way of 'Shrutis' and 'Smritis'. Historians of pre-10th century period take them to be their historical sources but they had no particular name."(E.T.C.)

''पुराण की जानकारी मुझे है। यह ठीक है कुल 18 पुराण हैं। पुराणों की रचना काल 400 ए0डी0 से लेकर 19वीं शताब्दी तक है। मुझे वेद की जानकारी है और मैंने उसे पढ़ा भी है। वेद चार हैं पहला ऋगवेद है और क्रमशः सामवेद, यजर्वेद और अथर्ववेद हैं। अथर्ववेद का मैंने अध्ययन किया है। अथर्ववेद में जनरल बातें हैं अर्थात जगह, स्थल अर्थात मानव का सामाजिक स्तर क्या था, आदि का उल्लेख है। अथर्ववेद में अयोध्या का वर्णन एक मिथक नगर के रुप में है।

"I have knowledge of Puranas. It is true that there are 18 Puranas in all. The composition of Puranas spans from 400 AD to 19th century. I have knowledge of the Vedas and I have also gone through them. Vedas are four in number. The first one is Rigveda and other ones are Samveda, Yajurveda and Atharvaveda. I have studied Atharvaveda. Atharvaveda deals with general things, that is to say, it mentions about places, that is about social status etc. of human beings. Ayodhya finds mention as a mythical town in Atharvaveda.

As a historian I take Atharvaveda to be an authentic book on history."(E.T.C.)

''अथर्ववेद में अंकित तत्कालीन सामाजिक तथ्य ही ऐतिहासिक स्त्रोत माने जाते हैं। मैं इसे धर्मशास्त्र एवं वैदिक दृष्टि से प्रामाणिक ग्रन्थ नहीं मानता हूँ।

"Only the then existing social facts mentioned in Atharvaveda are taken to be historical sources. I do not take it to be an authentic book from scriptural and Vedic points of view.

Rigveda is the oldest of the Vedas. As per scholars, its compostion is attributed not later than 1500 BC. . . . . Samveda follows Rigveda. Its composition is attributed to 1200 BC. It has description about singing and religious manners. "(E.T.C.)

4107. What constitutes Vedic literature is the next aspect. In the context of India, the Vedic literature comprises of two i.e. one related with Hindus and to be more precise Sanatan Dharma i.e. Vedas, Brahmanas, Aranyakas, Upnishads, Puranas, Vedanta,

Vedangas etc. and another is the religious literature of Jainizm, Buddhism etc. This literature since beginning alleged to be not available in written form for the reason that Vedic knowledge in India was considered to be so precious that it ought not to be placed on a perishable writing material like Berchbar and Palm leaves. The transmission of sacred knowledge of Vedas appears to have been primarily by words of mouth usually from father to son, generation after generation. The four Vedas consist of about 20358 verses running in approximately 2000 printed pages and surprisingly have survived in such a unique system having been passed down by birth to special families within the Brahmin communities.

4108. The other category of the derivative literature can be kept broadly in the category of Smrti (memorized) and Shruti (what is heard). There are certain other literature termed as Sutras and then several work of explanatory and subsidiary scripture.

4109. In brief, we may first consider as to what construe the above "vedic literature".

4110. Vedas : The Sanskrit word 'Vedas' means literary “knowledge” or “wisdom”. According to Hindu traditions 'Vedas' existed in their eternal and perfect form from the beginning of time. They are primary scriptures of Hinduism revered as apaurusheya, "not of human origin", and are honoured by epithets usually reserved for the Gods as eternal, imperishable, infallible and indestructible. Primarily there are four Vedas, (1) Rig-veda, (2) Yajur-veda, (4) Sama-veda and (4) Atharva-veda.

4111. “Hindu World-An Encyclopaedic Survey of

Hinduism" by Benjamin Walker, first published in 1968 by George Allen & Unwin Ltd., London and the first Indian Edition was published in 1983 by Munshiram Manoharlal Publishers Pvt. Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as the "Hindu World") (Book No. 12) Vol. II at page 556, gives information about Vedas; and on page 557 says:

> "According to Hindu tradition, the Vedas existed in their eternal and perfect form from the beginning of time. At the end of each kalpa or aeon, Isvara (God) uttered the original Veda as he remembered it. Since God himself shared with all other beings in the universal disintegration concomitant with the descending kalpas, he remembered less and less. At the beginning of the dvapara-yuga (the age preceding our own) the Veda consisted of I00,000 verses and had four divisions. By the beginning of the kali-yuga (our present age) these had become confused. Much was lost and much perverted. From this disordered mass the sage Vyasa salvaged as much as he could, arranged the material in its present form under four headings, and passed them on to his four principal disciples: the Rig-veda to Paila; the Yajur-veda to Vaisampayana; the Sama-veda to Jaimini; the Atharva-veda to Sumantu (or Angires)."

4112. Rig-veda has been explained in Hindu World (supra) Vol. II at page 294 as under:

> Rig-veda:, the most important of the four vedas, and regarded as the Veda, since the Yajur and Sama Vedas are merely different arrangements of the Rig-vedic hymns for ritual purposes, while the Atharva-veda was composed some time between 1500 BC and 900 BC and had a fixed

text from about 300 BC. Some scholars date the Rig-veda earlier; Max Muller put the date at 1200 BC, Keith at 1400, Pargiter at 1500, Weber at 2000 BC. H. Jacobi after examining the Indian calendrical system and the position of certain stars and constellations as described in the old texts, placed its composition at 4000 BC. B.G. Tilak, also on astronomical evidence, placed it at 5000 BC.

There are points of similarity between the hymns of the Rig-veda and those of the Avesta, and some of the Rig-vedic legends show a resemblance to the great Yashts of the Avesta. The latter, it is to be remembered, were composed before the Rig-veda. Some authorities claim that Book VI of this Veda was composed before the Aryan tribes entered India. But generally the language of the Rig-vedic hymns shows a good deal of borrowing from the Prakrit languages. It is difficult to distinguish the Indo-European from the purely Indian portions, and the Hindus themselves have long lost the tradition of its true origins. Substantial parts of it were composed by sudras, outcastes and even women.

The Rig-veda is a collection of miscellaneous fragments of old legends, chants and hymns, some of them of great beauty, put together comparatively late. Twenty-one recensions of the Rig-veda, representing the rituals of different schools and even different families, are known to tradition. The Charana-vyuha (Exposition of Schools), a supplementary work of the sutra period mentions five sakhas or branches of the Rig-veda, representing the five chief schools based on the different recensions. These were (I) the Sakala, the only recension that has been preserved,

(2) Vashkala (or Bashkala), which incorporated some additional hymns, named after a non-Aryan teacher, (3) Asvalayana, which recognized as canonical the group of eleven Valakhilya hymns, (4) Sankhayana, which also recognized the Valakhilya, but not all the eleven hymns, and (5) Mandukeys; the recension recognized by this school is not known. Fragments of some of these recensions (e.g. the Vashkala) have been inserted into the present mandalas, but all the remainder are lost or forgotten. The canon of the rig-veda was probably not closed till about 500 BC, and the present text fixed about 300 BC. The special hierophants of Rig-vedic ritual are known as the hotri.

The Rig-veda is divided into ten books called mandala 'circles', or into eight parts called ashtaka, 'octaves' (or khanda 'trunks' i.e. divisions). These books are subdivided into adhyaya or chapters, and eighty-five anuvaka, 'sections', containing a total of 1028 sukta or hymns (actually 1017 original hymns plus the II apocryphal Valakhilya hymns, mentioned below, of the eighth mandala), 2006 vargas or classes, 10417 rich or verses, 153,826 pada or words, and into many thousands of akshara or 'imperishable' syllables.

The Rig-veda thus consists of ten books or mandalas composed of hymns and psalms of praise to the gods, among them Agni, Indra, Surya, Dyaus, Aditi, Varuna, Ushas, the Asvina, Prithivi, the Maruts, Rudra, Yama and Soma. There are also a number of magical hymns and poems dealing with social customs, ethical questions, riddles, MANTRAs, myths and legends. In the opinion of

Prof. B. K. Ghosh, it contains a mass of dry, stereotyped hymnology, but 'of natural outpourings of the heart there is not much to be found in the Rig-veda' (VII, p.226). The priestly prayers are not so much for spiritual enlightenment as for victory, power, wealth, food, wine and women, and according to Bhandarkar, 'are saturated with selfish sordid aims'.

Mandala I is an 'eclectic ceremonial liturgy, and a veritable prayer book of the ancient priests'. Traditionally ascribed to eighteen rishis, although sometimes the same hymns occur under different authors, and distinct fragments are put together as a single piece. Most of the hymns are simple invocations to fire, water, the sky, etc. This first book includes one unusually long hymn known as the asyavamiya, which poses the earliest metaphysical and mystical questions of the Indian mind, anticipating the Upanishads. 'Who saw that First when it was born? What is the Formless that upholds the form? From the earth are breath and blood; wherefrom the Soul?

Mandalas II and VII, the 'Family Books', are credited to rishis of various important families such as Bhrigu, Visvamitra, Gritsamada, Angiras, Vasishtha, Atri, Vamadeva, Bharadvaja. Book VI contains the poetry of the period before the tribes entered the Indian subcontinent.

Mandala VIII, a book of miscellaneous and supplementary hymns, mostly by members of the Kanva family. Following verse 48 of this mandala, eleven hymns of an apocryphal character were later interpolated. These khila (apocrypha) are called the Valakhilya, after the

Mandala IX, a unique book inasmuch as it is almost exclusively devoted to a single deity, Soma. Its arrangement is also peculiar, as the first 60 hymns are set up in the order of diminishing length; the remainder, however, show no signs of order.

Mandala X, differs from the other nine in subject and language. Linguistically this tenth book belongs to a later period than the rest, and in many respects forms a transition to the other Vedas. Many of the hymns are highly philosophical, some sacerdotal and legendary, others divinatory or designed for magical purposes, including charms for averting miscarriage, curing consumption, securing the destruction of a rival, and so on. About a dozzen hymns contain dialogues foreshadowing the dramatic and epic poetry of later times. There are prayers to the greater and lesser gods, to cows, rivers, dice and rain. The Purusha Sukta, which makes an allusion to the distinctions of caste, is found in this mandala, and so also is the famous hymn of creation, commencing with the words, 'In the beginning there was neither nought nor aught'. Also included in this Book is the hymn on the burning of a corpse which starts, 'Let the eye repair to the sun, the breath to the wind. Go thou to heaven or to earth according to thy merit'.

An interesting feature of the Rig-veda is what is known as the samvada (conversation) hymns, about twenty in number, scattered through the various books. They have no specific ritualistic application and were either treated as ballads, or as ceremonial dramas. Many autho0rities trace the origin of the Indian drama to the samvada hymns.

Another set of hymns, the so-called danastuti (gift-praising), are panegyrics commemorating the generosity of kings and other wealthy patrons towards the priests employed by them and describing the amount and nature of the gifts. Of late date, the danastuti hymns possess some literary merit, and are important since they furnish historical data about the families and genealogies of the composers, their patrons, and the Vedic tribes. In these hymns are to be traced the beginnings of the future epic narratives in praise of princes and heroes of battle.

For the above descriptions, learned author had referred to the books "Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Culture", Madras, 1940 by Bhandarkar, D.R., "The Hymns of the Rig-veda", 1889-92 by Griffith, R.T.H., " The Religion of the Rig-veda, Oxford", 1923, by Griswold, H.D., "Sacred Literature", Landon, 1905 by Hurst, G.I., "The Rigveda", Boston, 1886 by Kaegi, A., "Hymns of the Rig-veda", Landon 1922, by Macdonell, A.A. 4113. "The Sacred Scriptures of India", Swami Chidatman Jee Maharaj, first published in 2009 by Anmol

Publications Pvt. Ltd., New Delhi says that "Rigveda" consists of 1,017 or 1,028 hymns. This contains a total of about 10,600 stanzas, which give an average of ten stanzas to each hymn. The shortest hymn has only one stanza, while the longest has fifty-eight. It says that the knowledge of Richas or Suktas itself is the literal meaning of Rigveda. 'Rit' means an incantation that contains praises and Veda means knowledge. Rigveda is the oldest veda. It comprises of 10 Mandals, 102 Suktas and contains 10,555 mantras.

4114. Yajurveda has been dealt with in Hindu World (supra) Vol. II at page 613 as under:

> Yajur-veda (?700-?300 BC), the second Veda, compiled mainly from Rig-vedic hymns, but showing considerable deviation from the original Rig-vedic text. It also has prose passages of a later date. The Yajur-veda, like the Sama-veda samhita (collection), introduces a geographical milieu different from that of the Rig-veda. It is not so much the Indus and its tributaries any more, but the areas of the Satlej, Jamna and Ganges rivers. Along with this we find new development of religious and social life, an age when the Epic tribes contended for supremacy in the Indo-Gangetic plain, and the castes were already clearly divided. The Yajur-veda represents a transition between the spontaneous, free-worshipping period of the Rig-veda and the later brahmanical period when ritualism had become firmly established.
> The Yajur-veda is a priestly handbook, arranged in liturgical form for the performance of sacrifices (yaja), as its name implies. It embodies the sacrificial formulas in their entirety, prescribes rules for the construction of altars, for the new and full-moon sacrifices, the rajasuya, the asvamedha, and the soma sacrifices. Strict observance of the ceremonial in every detail was insisted upon, and deviations led to the formation of new schools, there being over one hundred Yajur-vedic schools at the time of Patanjali (200 BC). Much of the sakha literature grew up out of variants of the Yajur-vedic texts.

www.vadaprativada.com

In the Yajur-veda the sacrifice becomes so important that even the gods are compelled to do the will of the brahimns. Religion becomes a mechanical ritual in which crowds of priests conduct vast and complicated ceremonies whose effects are believed to be felt in the farthermost heavens. Its under-lying principles were so ridden with superstition and belief in the power of the priests to do and undo the cosmic order itself that critics have likened their formulas to the ravings of mental delirium. The priest especially associated with the Yajur-vedic ceremonial was the adhvaryu.

The Yajur-veda now consists of two samhitas, which once existed in one hundred and one recensions. Both the samhitas contain almost the same subject matter but differently arranged. The Taittiriya Samhita, commonly called the Black Yajur-veda for its obscurity of meaning, was known in the third century BC, and is the older of the two. It has been described as an 'undigested jumble of different pieces', and as having 'a motley character'. In this samhita the distinction between the Mantra and the Brahmana portions is not as clear as in the other Vedas.

The Vajasaneyi Samhita, or the White Yajur-veda, was communicated to the sage Yajasaneti Samhita by the sun-god in his equine form. It has a much more methodical arrangement and brings order and light, as opposed to the confusion and darkness of the Black Yajur-veda.

For the above descriptions, learned author had referred to the book "The Texts of the White Yajur-veda", 1899 by Griffiths, R.T.H.

4115. To "Yajurveda", in Sacred Scriptures of India (supra), on page 207 it says that Yajurveda inspires humans to walk on the path of Karma and that is why it is also referred to as Karma-Veda. The essence of the Yajurveda lies in those mantras (incantations) that inspire people to initiate action. It further says that there are many branches of Yajurveda but two branches, namely, Krishna and Shukla Yajurveda have gained relatively more prominence, i.e., Krishna Yajurveda and Shukla Yajurveda. Besides it, it says that Yajurveda was later on named as "Taitareya Samhita".

4116. Samveda is discussed in Hindu World (supra) Vol. II at page 343 as under:

Sama-veda (c. 700-300 BC) (saman, 'melody'), the third Veda. Its samhita or principal part is wholly metrical, consisting of 1549 verses, of which only 75 are not traceable to the Rig-veda. The stanzas are arranged in two books or collections of verses.

The Sama-veda embodies the knowledge of melodies and chants. The samhita of this Veda served as a textbook for the priests who officiated at the Soma sacrifices. It indicates the 'tunes' to which the sacred hymns are to be

sung, by showing the prolongation, the repetition and interpolation of syllables required in the singing. The Sama-veda also contains a detailed account of the soma rites. The hierophants associated with the Sama-veda are known as the udgatri.

Many of the invocations in the Sama-veda are addressed to Soma, some to Agni and some to Indra. The mantra part of the Sama-veda is poor in literary quality and historical interest, but the Brahmanas belonging to it are important. Of the once numerous samhitas of the Sama-veda (the Puranas speak of a thousand) only one has reached us, in three recensions, namely: the Kauthama, current in Gujarat, the Ranayaniya which survives in Maharashtra, and the Jaiminiya in the Karnatic.

For the above descriptions, learned author had referred to the books "The Samaveda", Banaras, 1896 by Griffith, R.T.H.(Ed.) and "The Samaveda", 1843 by Stevenson, J.

4117. "Samveda" has been discussed in Vol. 2 of Sacred Scriptures of India (supra) on page 1 and onwards and it says that the compilation of Richas (Shlokas) is known as Sama. Sama is dependent on the Richas. The beauty of speech lied in the Richas. The beauty of Richas lie in the sama and the beauty of the same lies in the style of pronunciation and singing. The knowledge of sama, therefore, is Samaveda. This refers to Geeta-10/22 where Sri Krishna has stated the importance of Samaveda in the following manner :

Vedamana Samavedo Asmi meaning "I am samaveda myself amongst the Vedas."

4118. There are two parts of the Samaveda (1) Purvarchik (2) Uttararchik. In between both of them is 'Mahanamnayarchik which comprises of 10 incantations. There are four parts of Purvarchika Aagneya, Aendra, Paavmaan and Aasanya.

4119. Atharvaveda is considered in Hindu World (supra) Vol. I at page 94 as under:

> Atharva-Veda, the fourth Veda, of whose origin there has been much contentious speculation. It is also referred to as the Brahma-veda because it served as the manual of the chief sacrificial priests, the brahmins. A great deal is said in the Atharva-veda hymns about the brahmins and the honours due to them. One-sixth of the work is not metrical, and about one-six of the hymns are also found among the hymns of the Rig-veda, mostly in the first, eight and tenth books. The rest of the subject matter is peculiar to the Atharva-veda, This Veda was once current in nine different redactions, of which only two, the Pippalada and Sunaka recensions are extant, the former in a single unpublished 'Tubingen manuscript' discovered by Roth.
> The Atharva-veda embodies the magical formulary of ancient India, and much of it is devoted to spells, incantations, chants and charms. In general the charms and spells are divided into two classes; they are either bheshajani, which are of medicinal, healing and peaceful nature, dealing with cures and herbs for treating fever, leprosy, jaundice, dropsy and other diseases; this class includes prayers for successful childbirth, love spells, charms for fecundity, for the recovery of virility, hymns for

the birth of sons, and a quaint chant to put the household to sleep while the lover steals into the girl's home at night. Or else they belong to the abhichara class, which are of a bewitching and malevolent nature; these include spells for producing diseases and bringing ill-luck to enemies. Among them is a spell that a woman may use against her rival to make her remain a spinster; another spell is meant to destroy a man's virility, and so forth. There are hymns to serpents and demons, and incantations replete with witchcraft, sorcery and black magic.

One of the reputed authors of the Atharva-veda was the rishi Atharvan, of Maga of Persian ancestry. But certain parts, especially the verses dealing with the rites of sorcerers and wizards were attributed to the rishi Angiras, of pre-Aryan, probably Dravidian stock. The hymns were said to have been collected by Sumantu, a rishi of great antiquity who bequeathed the material to Vyasa for arranging.

The Atharva-veda is the most interesting of the sruti, for it has preserved to a great extent a solid core of pre-Aryan and non-Aryan tradition. It is unique among the texts of Vedic period and 'an important source of information regarding popular religious belief, not so far modified by priestly religion.' It reveals in fact a vast substratum of indigenous doctrine that is not only non-Vedic but at times contra-Vedic.

Scholars trace Mesopotamian influences in the Atharva-veda, among them Dr. Bhandarkar, who discerns in it the magical lore of the Asuras. Others see evidence of

Vratya and Maga Doctrines. The Vishnu Purana and the Bhavishya Purana speak of the Angiras as one of the four Vedas of the Magas. The foreign words occurring in the Atharva-veda, which Tilak traced to Chaldea, may have been only strange to Sanskrit, and may well have formed part of the regular vocabulary of the Maga priests.

For centuries the Vedid Aryans held all practitioners of astrology in disrepute and regarded them as 'unclean', and excluded them from the sraddha rites. They also ostracized from their social environment those who followed the profession of physician. Both these sciences, be it noted, were associated with the Magas, and are prominent in the Atharva-veda. Some authorities claim that this Veda represents the oldest stratum of Indian liturgy and belief, and embodies the creeds of the pre-Aryans. It thus constitutes a record of non-Aryan aboriginal or popular religion before the arrival of the Aryans on the scene.

For long the Atharva-veda was not included among the other three Vedas. Although the Vedas are now said to be four in number this was not the originally recognized number of the compilations. Max Muller held the view that the original division of the Vedas was a threefold one. The oldest records refer to only three Vedas, namely, the Rig, Sama and Yajur. Manu speaks of these as the trayi (triad) milked out from the fire, air, and sun, and the Atharva-veda was not even acknowledged in his time. There is no reference to it in the Chhandogya Upanishad; the Brahmana texts mention only three Vedas; the Jatakas know of only three.

This would seem to indicate not that the Atharva-veda was non-existent at the time the other Vedas were composed, but that it did not for several centuries form part of the sacred scriptures of the Aryans. Of its canonical status today it has been said that 'influential scholars of South India still deny the genuineness of the Atharva-veda'.

For the above descriptions, learned author had referred to books "Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Culture", Madras, 1940 by Bhandarkar D.R., "The Atharvaveda", Strassburg, 1899 by Bloomfield M., "The Hymns of the Atharvaveda", Oxford, 1897 by Bloomfield M., "The Hymns of the Atharvaveds", Banaras, 1895-96 by Griffith R.T.H. 4120. The fourth Veda "Atharvaveda" has been discussed in Vol. 2 of Sacred Scriptures of India (supra) on page 25 and onwards. The meaning of the word Atharveda (Atharva) is devoid of movement or concentration. The word Tharva means fickleness or movement and accordingly the word "Atharva" means that which is unwavering, concentrated or unchanging. That is why it is said :

Tharva Gati Karma Na Tharva Eti Atharva

4121. The philosophy of Yoga speaks that:

Yogash Chitta Vritti Nirodhah, which means controlling the different impulses of the mind and senses in Yoga. The Gita re-iterates that when the mind is free from impulses and flaws, the mind becomes stable and the person becomes neutral when the impulses of the mind and the other senses are in control, then only the mind is freed from instability and purterbances. The word "Atharva" therefore refers to neutrality of personality. The Atharvaveda speaks more about Yoga, the human physiology, different ailments, social structure, spirituality, appreciation of natural beauty, national religion, etc. This knowledge is practical and is worth bringing in use.

4122. The Atharvaveda is a fusion of prose and poetry together. A number of facts related to Ayurveda are seen here, that is why Ayurveda is considered to be the Upaveda (Sub-Veda) of this Veda.

4123. The idea of spiritual and symbolic interpretation of Vedas is articulated in "Brahmana" and "Upnishad". The term "Upanisads" has also been explained on page 312 of Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) and the relevant extract is as under:

> "Upanisad(s) From upa, 'supplementary', 'additional', and ni-sad 'to sit down near a teacher', from whom a pupil received esoteric knowledge. But grammarians differ about the meaning of the word, some defining it as 'tattvajnana', the knowledge of reality; others as 'rahasya', secret doctrine. The Upanisads themselves indicate that the knowledge contained in them was esoteric and therefore to be imparted only in secret. But most of the two hundred or more so-called Upanisads contain neither esoteric doctrine nor teaching imparted in secret. Of all these texts, whether individual or part of a collection, only thirteen--or fourteen, according to some authorities-- actually contain

esoteric teaching. The remainder are late compositions which mainly represent the views of Vaisnavas, Saivas and Saktas. Winternitz divides them into six classes, which deal with the following subjects respectively: 1. Vedanta doctrine; 2. Yoga; 3. the ascetic life (sannyasa); 4. Visnu; 5. Siva; 6. other cults.

The dating of the thirteen (or fourteen) classical Upanisads is conjectural, but internal evidence suggests that they were composed between 700 and 300 B.C., some of them revealing changes of style and views, and of repeated revision. Their composition may be assigned to three periods. Six belong to the earliest; six to the middle, regarded as pre-Buddhist and pre-Panini; the last two to a time shortly after the establishment of the Buddhist Order. The first group consists of the Aitareya, Kausitaki, Taittiriya, Brhad-Ar., Chan, and Kena; the second, Kathaka, Svetasvatara, Maha-Narayana, Isa, Mundaka, and Prasna; the third, Maitrayaniya and Mandukya. Those of the first group resemble Brahmanas in language and style, a simple, slightly clumsy prose, but by no means lacking in beauty. Some of the second group are mainly composed in verse, and unlike those of the first group, reflect Samkhya and Yoga views, though their inclusion may be the result of late recensions. Those of the third group are definitely post-Vedic, both in language and views.

The fourteen Upanisads, as well as other 'forest compilations' called Aranyakas, were subsequently attached to particular Brahmanas, which in turn were attached to a particular Veda. Thus the Brhad-Ar. Up., itself probably a collection of earlier compositions, was attached to the Satapatha Brahmana, which was attached to the White Yajurveda.

That the Aranyakas and Upanisads originated as a reaction against the stereotyped views of professional sacerdotalists can hardly be doubted. This is indicated by ksatriyas being numbered among the composers or the Upanisads, and also by the choice of forest retreats for the discussion and teaching of esoteric doctrines. Once begun, the speculative mood became general and resulted in the formation of other groups opposed to brahminic fundamentalism, such as the Carvakas, Jainas and Buddhists. Even some priestly schools appear to have been influenced and to have contributed to the final recension of the earliest Upanisads, which may account for some of their inconsistencies. The Upanisads have thus been criticized adversely for some of their views and the use of the false analogies. The explanation lies perhaps in the fact that they are not a single co-ordinated collection but separate compositions, the work of minds not always equally well-equipped for the task.

Nonetheless, the fact remains that the Upanisads generally present an objective view of the universe and a rational approach to the problem of reality far in advance even of the flashes of intuitive knowledge that illumine occasional passages of the Vedas and Brahmanas. Thus the expression 'as if' or 'as it were' (iva) in the Brhad-Ar. Up. (II.4, 14), accords well with the modern scientific view that, despite the manifold appearances of the phenomenal world, the entire universe, both known and as yet unknown, essentially one.

'The practice of taking what is actually not an Upanisad as an Upanisad appears to have been in existence from the time of Panini' (Bhattacharyya, Agamasastra of Gaudapada, P. xxxvi)."

4124. The term "Brahmana" is explained on page 166 of Hindu World (supra) as under: -

Brahmana. Broadly speaking the post Rig-vedic philosophy shows two trends, discernible in the Brahmanas and in the Upanishads. Though belonging to the Vedas they are considered apart from the Vedas, as they express notions that have a character and quality of their own and render them convenient for separate consideration.

www.vadaprativada.com

The Brahmanas are theological manuals composed by and for brahmins, and have been referred to as 'the Hindu Talmud'. They were composed later than the mantras, dating from about 600 BC, and are mainly textbooks of ritual and prayer for the priests, serving as commentaries on the Vedic hymns, describing in detail the sacrificial ceremonial, and giving many curious explanations both linguistic and legendary of the origin and meaning of the rituals. They seem to codify the ritualism of the aboriginal rather than the Aryan priesthood, since it is inconceivable that their fantastic ceremonies were ever put widely into execution, least of all by the robust, unsophisticated Aryans of the Vedic age, Written throughout in prose, they represent the oldest prose

in any Indo-European language, although they do not have great literary merit.

The Brahmanas stress the importance of prayer, sacrifice, ritual, liturgy, formalism, textualism, and emphasize the observance of caste and the asramas. Sacrificial rites are regarded as all powerful, controlling the processes of nature and even the gods. This led to an elaborate formulary and to the domination by the brahmin priesthood who conducted vast and elaborate rites and attached cosmic significance to the smallest minutiae. Says the Satpatha Brahmana, 'Verily there are two kinds of gods; the gods themselves who are assuredly gods, and the priests who have studied Vedic lore'

Professor B.K. Ghosh refers to the Brahmanas as 'an arid desert of puerile speculations on religious ceremonies marking the lowest ebb of Vedic culture' (IV, p. 225), while Max Muller with unkind emphasis declared that one could not read ten pages of the Brahmans without revulsion, and that for pedantry and absurdity they could hardly be matched anywhere. 'These words', said the great German scholar, 'deserve to be studied as the physician studies the twaddle of idiots and the ravings of madmen.'

Each of the Vedic samhitas has its Brahmanas, which reflect as it were the character of the samhita with which they are associated. The Brahmanas also often give the name to the related Upanishad. The Rig'vedic Brahmanas include; the Aitareya Brahmana (c. 600 BC) perhaps the oldest of them all. Its author was Mahidasa the son of a sudra mother. It deals principally with the great some

sacrifies and the different ceremonies of royal inauguration. The Kausitaki, also called the Sankhayana or the Asvalayana Brahmana, contains much material common to the Aitareya and treats of various sacrifices.

The Brahmanas of the Yajur-veda include; the Taittirriya Bharmana of the Black Yajur-veda the origin of which is linked with the name of the sage Yajnavalkya. The satapatha Brahmana (Hundred-paths Brahmana), belonging to the Vajasneyi samhita of the White Yajur-veda, is an important source of information for sacrifical ceremonies, theology and philosophy. Next to the Rig-veda it is the most important work in Vedic literature, and is ascribed to Yajnavalkya. It is found in two recensions, namely, the Madhyamdina and the Kanva.

The Bhahmanas of the Sama-veda are eight in number. Included among them are; the Prauda Brahmana, consisting of twenty-five sections, hence also called the Pancha-vimsa. It contains the famous vratya-stoma ritual by which non-Aryan converts were admitted into the Aryan fold. Shad-vimsa (Twenty sixth) Brahmana, so called because it was added to the twenty-five sections of the Prauda. The Sama-vidhana Brahmana, the third Brahmana of the Sama-veda, devoted entirely to magic. It gives the chants to be used for various spells. Tandya (or Tandaka), the most important Brahmana of the Sama-veda, sometimes confused with the Prauda. It is concerned with sacrifices in general, and with particular rites like the Sattras, vratya-stomes, and others. The Adbhuta Brahmana, a manual treating of omens and auguries, marvels and miracles. It is sometimes regarded as part of the Shad-vimsa and is often classed with it. The Chhandogya Brahmana, famous for the Upanishad names after it.

The Atharva-veda has only one Brahmana, namely, the Gopatha, a very late work composed largely of material gathered from previous sources, including the Satapatha and the Aitareya.

For the above descriptions, learned author had referred to the books "Satapatha Brahmana", Oxford, 1882-1900 by Eggeling J (Tr.), "The Rig-vedic Brahmanas" Cambridge, Mass., 1920 by Keith A.B. (Tr.), "The Brahmanas of the Vedas", Madras, 1901 by Mac Donald K.S., "The Vedic Age", London, 1951 by Majumdar R.C. and "Chips from a German Workshop", London, 1867 by Muller F. Max.

4125. Smrti: Its dictionary meaning is 'remembered', 'recalled'. In Hindu religion this term has been applied to the whole corpus of sacred lore remembered and handed down by traditions. It is thus distinguished from the truths of the Veda which were heard (sruti) by the ancient risis but the term denotes secondary works i.e. the one written in the subsequent generation based on memory. They are considered to be supplement to Vedas. They are on the subjects of Smrti, Smarta, Sutra; Dharmasastras of Law books; "Itihasas" or legendary poems and the Kavyas, Puranas and Niti-sastras.

4126. Smrti-Sutra: Any Sutra work based on Smrti is called Smrti Sutra but principally such Sutras are concerned with family and domestic rites.

4127. Dharmasastras: It is a general name of Law book

www.vadaprativada.com

or Code of Laws and widely known are the course of Manu, Yajnavalkya, Apastamba, Gautama, Vasistha and Baudhayana.

4128. Itihasa: Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) says about Itihasa on page 121 as under:

> "Itihasa (-iti-ha-asa, 'so indeed it was') A class of 'literature' of a popular character, associated with another class called 'purana' (not to be confused with the post-Vedic Puranas). Both itihasas and proto-puranas were current in the early Vedic period, but were apparently not of sufficient importance to be generally included in the RV., though it appears to allude to some of them, and even to include a complete story, i.e., the gambler's lament (RV., X.34). The earliest references to itihasa and proto-purana occur in the AV. (XV. 6,4,et seq.) and to itihasa alone in the Brhad-Ar. Up. (II.4, 10, etc.). The Chan. Up. (III. 4, 1, 2, etc.) declares that itihasas and proto-puranas constitute a fifth Veda, while the Sankhayana Srauta sutra (XVI.2.21, 27) regards them as two distinct Vedas, as does the SBr. (XIII.4.3, 12-13). The Tait. Br. (II.9) also regards them as two classes of literature."

4129. Puranas: Puranas means ancient. They are part of Smriti (non Vedic Scriptures). Benjamin Walker in Hindu World (supra) has dated Puranas composition was between 6th Century A.D. to 16th Century A.D. It is said that Puranas are Veda of the common folk. There are said to be 18 great Puranas i.e., Mahapuranas on which six relates to Lord Vishnu, six are devoted to Lord Shiva and six to Lord Brahma. These Mahapuranas have been narrated in brief in Hindu World (supra) (page 255-257, Vol. -II) and it would be appropriate to reproduce the as under:

"THE SIX VISHNU PURANAS, sattvic in quality:

(I) Vishnu Purana, consisting of 7,000 stanzas and bearing all the 'lakshana' of the true Purana. Legend has it that it was first communicated by Brahma to Ribhu, who revealed it to the sage Pulastya and Pulastya passed it on to the sage Parasara, who in turn made it known to his disciple Maitreya, and the text takes the form of a dialogue between Parasara and Maitreya. Its basic teaching is that Vishnu is the creator, sustainer and controller of the world; it is in him that the world exists as a harmonious system, and in truth Vishnu is the world. This Purana is the most perfect and best known of all the works of this class. It gives much valuable information about the Maurya dynasty.

(2) Narada Purana (or Naradiya Purana), of 3,000 stanzas, in which the sage Narada describes the essential duties of man. Another related work, known as the Brihan, 'Great' Naradiya, consists of 3,500 verses. These Puranas belong to the period after the Muhammadan conquest, and do not bear the marks of a genuine Purana.

(3) Bhagvata Purana (or Srimad Bhagvatam), the most celebrated of the Puranas, is a voluminous work of 18,000 stanzas in length, divided into twelve skandha or books. The most popular part is the tenth book, which narrates the life story of Bhagavata or Krishna, especially of his boyhood. The Bhagvata Purana is written in the form of a dialogue between a sage and a king. The latter is doomed to die within a week for having unwittingly killed a holy man, and to ensure his salvation he spends the week

listening to the Bhagavata Purana. It lays great stress on the doctrine of bhakti or faith, and makes the love of the gopis (milkmaids with whom Krishna sported), symbolic of spiritual devotion. The name of his favourite gopi, Radha, does not appear in this Purana. Some authorities believe it was written in South India, and it was once held to be the work of the grammarian Vopadeva (c. AD 1250) friend of Hemadri who flourished at the court of the raja of Devagiri. A few authorities place it as early as AD 900. The favourite tenth book of this Purana has been translated into all the Indian languages.

(4) Garuda Purana, of which there are several versions, although it is doubtful if a genuine original version is in existence. It is named after Garuda the vulture vehicle of Vishnu, but there is nothing in its contents to justify the name. It deals with the rites held over the dying, the death moment, the funeral ceremonies, the ritual building up of a new body for the preta or deceased, the judgment, the various after-death states till rebirth. It also deals with sun-worship and astrology and is probably Indo-Zoroastrian in origin.

(5) Padma Purana, an extensive work, divided into six books, which tells of the time when the world was a golden lotus (padma), and goes on to describe the Creation, and the spheres of earth, heaven and the underworld. To this a supplementary book on Devotion has been added. The whole work dates no earlier than about AD 1100.

(6) Varaha Purana, has about 10,000 stanzas, and is not older than AD 1000. It was revealed by Vishnu to Varaha

www.vadaprativada.com

(the Boar).

THE SIX SIVA PURANAS, tamasic in quality:

(1) Matsya Purana, bears some of the marks of the genuine Purana. A heterogeneous mixture, borrowing much from the Vishnu and Padma Puranas, and from the Mahabharata. It was related to Manu by Vishnu in the form of a fish (matsya). It contains some information about the Andhra dynasty.

(2) Kurma Purana, dated about AD 900. Vishnu as a tortoise (kurma) explains the purpose of life. It glorifies the worship of Siva and Durga.

(3) Linga Purana, dated about AD 700. In this work Siva explains the meaning of virtue, wealth, pleasure and liberation, and the spiritual significance of the linga (phallus). It is largely ritualistic.

(4) Vayu Purana, the oldest of the Puranas dated about AD 500. It is devoted to Siva and his many attributes, and contains material about the sacredness of Gaya. A variation of the Vayu, known as the Siva Purana, gives information about the reign of Chandragupta I.

(5) Purana (c. AD 550), related by Skanda, god of war. The longest of the Puranas it is said to consist of over 80,000 stanzas, although it does not exist in composite form, but only in fragments. Such, for example, is the Kasi Khanda, describing Banaras and the Saivite temples there, and the Utkala Khanda, giving an account of Orissa.

(6) Agni Purana (c. tenth century AD), also called the Agneya Purana, was originally communicated by Agni, god of fire, to the rishi Vasishtha. It is an encyclopaedic

compilation containing, besides some original material, many extracts from other works, relating to ritual worship, cosmology, dynastic chronology, the art of war, and a section on law taken from Yajnavalkya, a chapter on medicine taken from Susruta, and selections from Pingala and Panini on grammar, rhetoric and prosody.

THE SIX BRAMHA PURANAS, rajasic in quality:

(1) Brahma Purana (c. AD 1300), also called the Adi Purana or first Purana, since it generally stands first in all the lists of Puranas. It is also known as the Saura Purana because it is devoted to Surya and sun-god. It was revealed by Brahma to the sage Marichi. Apart from sections devoted to the cosmologies, ritual worship, descriptions of the temples of Orissa and so on, it promulgates the worship of Krishna as Jagannatha (partly taken from the Vishnu Purana). The last part, known as the Brahmottara Purana is of a later date, and celebrates the sanctity of Balaja river.

(2) Brahmanda Purana, expounds the magnificence of egg (anda) of Brahma, and describes the future aeons. Like the Skanda Purana this does not exist as a composite work, but only in parts and fragments. The popular Adhyatma Ramayana is one such part of this Purana. The authorship of the Adhyatma Ramayana is ascribed to Vyasa, and in it Rama is described as a saviour god and a deliverer rather than a mortal hero.

(3) Brahma-Vaivasvata Purana (or Brahma-Vaivarta), related by Manu Savarna, son of Vivasvat, to the rishi Narada. It is of comparatively late date, and enjoins the worship of Krishna and Radha, making this couple husband and wife so that their love is not adulterous but conjugal.

(4) Markandeya Purana (c. AD 900), quite different in tone from all the other Puranas. It is related by the sage Markandeya and is heard by certain fabulous birds who are versed in the Vedas. These birds repeat it to the sage Jaimini. It has little to do with sect, ceremonial, or worship of Brahma as such, but is a succession of legends, secular in tone, recommending no particular doctrine, and consisting mainly of original compositions, superior to the Puranas in general. An episode of this Purana the Durga Mahatmya (variously called Devi Mahatmya, Chandipatha, Chandi Saptasati) is older in date (c. AD 700) than the rest. It is a poem of seven hundred verses in thirteen chapters, devoted to the glorification Sakti as mother-goddess, who descends to earth from time to time to rid the world of demons and monsters. This section is recited at many Hindu religious functions.

(5) Bhavishya Purana, the title, meaning 'future' Purana, seems to have been arbitrarily bestowed. It is mainly a handbook of rites and ceremonies, for the greater part very unpuranic in character and content.

(6) Vamana Purana (c. AD 1500), contains an account of a dwarf (Vamana) incarnation of Vishnu. It divides its homage between Siva and Vishnu."

4130. Besides above, there are certain lesser Puranas called Up-Puranas some of which are listed in Hindu World (supra) Vol. II page 257 as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

"The eighteen lesser Puranas, called the Upa-Puranas are variously listed, but usually drawn from the following:(1) Aditya, (2) Ascharya, (3) Ausanasa (from Usanas), (4) Bhaskara (or Surya), (5) Devi, (6) Devi-Bhagavata, a Saiva Purana, sometimes listed with the great Puranas, (7) Durvasasa, (8) Kalika (c. AD 1350), a Sakta text, the source of much Tantrik material (see human sacrifice), (9) kalki, (10) Kapila, (11) Mahesvara, (12) Manava, (13) Marichi, (14) Nandikesvara, (15) Narada or Vrihan, (16) Narasimha, (17) Parasara, (18) Samba, (19) Sanathkumara, (20) Sivadharma, (21) Surya or Bhaskara, (22) Suta-samhita, a devotional Purana, Like the Bhagavata, but devoted to Siva, (23) Usanas or Ausanasa, (24) Varuna, (25) Vaya, (26) Vrihan (see Narada), (27) Yuga."

www.vadaprativada.com

4131. It is said that Vedangas are the limbs of Vedas and treated as auxiliary to and in some sense as part of Veda. In Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) on page 329 it says about Vedangas as under:

"Vedanga(s) Lit. 'limbs' (angas) of the Veda, comprising six treatises 'regarded as auxiliary to, and even in some sense, as part of the Veda'. Their original purpose was to ensure that each part of the sacrificial ceremonies was correctly performed.

The process of ritual development must have been gradual, so that the formulation of the Vedangas may be assigned to a period between that of the later Brahmanas and the early Sutras, the latter being the style used for the Vedangas. The Vedangas deal specifically with the following six subjects; Siksa, correct pronunciation; Chandas, metre; Nirukta, etymology; Vyakarana, grammar; Jyotisa, astronomy; and Kalpa, ceremonial, i.e., the general rules governing sacrificial ceremonies."

4132. Siksa has been explained on page 277 of Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) which is as under:

"Siksa One of the six vedangas or sets of rules governing the performance of the sacrifice. Siksa was a sophisticated system of phonetics which included the correct value of each letter, its accent and quantity, and the proper method of articulation, so as to ensure correct pronunciation (pratisakhya) especially in the recital of sacred passages of the Vedas."

4133. Chandas has been explained on page 61 and 62 of Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) and reads as under:

"Chandas 'Metre.' The name of one of the six Vedangas, which lays down rules intended to ensure the correct performance of sacrificial procedure, and especially of the use of the appropriate metre in the chants. In Indian prosody chandas denotes a succession of poetical feet (padas) arranged in regular order, according to certain types recognised as standards, in verses of a particular length. A metre may consist of long or short syllables, ranging from a minimum of four to a maximum of twelve.

Next to language, metre is significant in determining the age of the Vedic hymns, their metres indicating the gap that exists between them and those of classical Sanskrit poetry, the latter retaining little trace of the numerous metres of the Veda. On the other hand, classical Sanskrit

poetry has metres having no prototype in the Veda.

In the oldest Indian metre only the number of syllables is fixed, their quantity or measure being only partially determined, the last syllable of each line being a syllaba anceps, i.e., either a short or long syllable regardless of the metre of the syllables preceding it. Vedic verses are generally composed of lines of eight, eleven or twelve syllables, but only the last four (or five) have a fixed rhythm. Originally the most popular metre was the gayatri, after which the gayatri mantra (RV., III. 62, 10) is named, which is repeated by every devout Hindu at his morning and evening devotions. Its regular form consists of three lines each of eight syllables. Contemporary with it was the anustubh (from which derived the sloka), consisting of four lines, also of eight syllables each, subsequently the most popular metre for Epic poetry.

The eleven-syllabled line has a caesura or pause after the fourth or fifth syllable. The tristubh metre consists of four such lines. The twelve-syllabled line is called jagati, and except for its additional syllable follows the same pattern as the tristubh. Another metre, the dvipada-viraj, only occasionally used, consists of four or eight five-syllabled lines. A distinctive feature of Vedic verse is that two or more metres may occur in a single hymn, as in RV., VII. 54, where the metre of the first verse is gayatri, that of verses 2-4 uparistabrhati, and that of verses 5-8 anustubh.

Metre has always been regarded by Hindus as of the utmost importance. This is indicated 'by the excessive cultivation and elaboration bestowed upon their whole

metrical system', some of the most sacred metres vere personified. Nonetheless, it was not until the second century B.C. that a treatise (Vedanga) dealing with both Prakrit and Sanskrit metres appeared, or at least it is the earliest to have survived. This Vedanga called the Chandah-sastra, is ascribed to Pingala (or Pingalanaga).

Though metre is an important aid in repeating passages from the Veda it is not the only one. In his introduction to the first hymn of the RV. Sayana states that not only should anyone repeating a Vedic hymn know the name of the rsi to whom it was revealed, and the name of the god to whom it was addressed, but also be aware both of the proper accents to be used and of the correct interpretation of the mantras. Anyone not knowing these things and attempting to repeat a portion of the Veda is called a mantra-thorn (mantra-kantaka) whose ignorance will assuredly cancel or obstruct the efficacy of its recital.

Injuries can be caused by a particular use of the metres (Kaus, Br., X15). Also certain metres are connected with the attainment of power, splendour, etc. (XVII.2). Even the gods used the metres to reach the heavenly world and thus by the metres the sacrificer too is enabled to reach heaven (Ait. Br., 1.9)."

4134. Nirukta has been explained on page 210, Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) as under:

"Nirukta 'Explanation or etymological interpretation of a word.' The name of several works, especially of a Commentary on the Nighantu by Yaska. The Nighantu is a list of Vedic words handed down by tradition, which with

www.vadaprativada.com

the Nirukta is the oldest surviving Indian treatise on etymology, philology and semantics.

Subsequently, the Nirukta led to the systematic development of etymology and was included among the list of vidyas or sciences."

4135. Kalpa has been explained on page 139, Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) and says as under:

"Kalpa I. 'A fabulous period of time, a day of Brahma, or 1,000 yugas, a period of four thousand, three hundred and twenty millions of years of mortals, measuring the duration of the world.'

Another Pauranic system divides a kalpa into fourteen periods called manvantaras, each containing seventy-one mahayugas and totalling 994 (14x71) mahayugas. The remaining six, required to make up the number of 1,000 mahayugas, are distributed amongst the manvantaras as follows: one krtayuga, 0.4 of a mahayuga, precedes the first manvantara as a dawn or introductory period. This manvantara and each of the remaining thirteen are followed by another krtayuga or twilight period. Thus the one 'dawn' and fourteen 'twilights' =15x0.4=6 mahayugas, which with the 994 referred to above total 1,000 mahayugas or one kalpa. But some Puranas refer to a 'night of Brahma' and others to a 'night and day of Brahma', to denote immense periods of time. Thus a hundred 'days and nights of Brahma' are considered to constitute the entire span of his existence. This is the longest period in the Hindu time-scale, and is called a para, half of which, a paradha, had elapsed when the present kalpa began. But in theory kalpas succeed one another ad infinitum."

4136. Jyotisa has been explained on page 130 and 131, Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) as under:

"Jyotisa One of six Vedangas. In a general sense it denotes the science of astronomy, but in sacrificial ritual it refers to the Vedic calendar by which the most auspicious day for the performance of a particular sacrifice is fixed. Subsequently such calendrial decisions became a feature of astrology, so that no important undertakings such as marriage, building a house, etc., were made without reference to calendrial omens.

Though there is no Vedic text on the subject, there is ample evidence in the Vedas of a knowledge of the stars. The RV. lists a number of them and divides the year of 360 days (savana) into twelve months. The 'moon of later birth' (Rv., 1.25, 8) is probably an allusion to an intercalary thirteenth or supplementary month of the luni-solar year, but other passages lack any precise astronomical knowledge. A notable effort to remedy this deficiency is apparent in particular passages of the Aranyakas and Upanisads, which attempt to interpret the world objectively, and to establish the relations of similarity, identity and interdependence, for which the word 'iva' (as if, or as it were) is used. Although these attempts were an advance on earlier cosmological views, they were mainly speculative. It was not until the appearance of the Jyotisavedanga (Treatise on astronomy), compiled between 300 and 200 B.C., that the subject made use of the mathematics gradually being evolved. Though failing to produce a sophisticated stellar theory, the Jyotisavedanga provided a basis for the subsequent five astronomical treatises called Siddhantas, of which the only surviving one is the Suryua Siddhanta (Explanation or Solution of the Sun). But its scope was limited by attempts to reconcile the temporal aspect of recurring cosmic cycles with the mythical unit of time called 'a day of Brahma', equivalent to a calendar year. The latter was divided into 10,800 'moments', the number of metrical divisions in the RV., each of which consists of forty syllables, the whole totalling 432,000 syllables.

At the end of the Great Cosmic Cycle, all the stars, having completed revolutions over a period of 4,320,000 years, were thought to return to their original positions. To support the authenticity of this grand total, it was subjected to the following analysis. This begins with the number 108, i.e., the product of the four phases of the moon and twenty-seven naksatras (luner asterisms); the second, the product of the sixteen theoretical parts of the lunar disc, and twenty-seven lunar phases, totalling 432; and finally the product of the lunar years, which is 12,000 divine years, equivalent to 360 calendar years, each of 360 days, making a grand total of 4,320,000. The assumption that these figures solved all astronomical problems led to greater attention being devoted to astrology. But some amends were made later when the Surya Siddhanta was re-written and established as the basic handbook of Indian astronomy. About this time (A.D. 499) the astronomer Aryabhata produced his great work the Aryabhatiya which mentions the rotation of the earth and develops the theory of epicycles. The end of the sixth century marks the birth of the astronomer Al-Biruni, considered to be the most accomplished of Indian astronomers despite his refusal to accept Aryabhata's theory of the rotation of the earth.

Before the introduction of the signs of the zodiac, solar months were called by the names corresponding to luner months, and subsequently by the zodiacal sign in which the sun appeared. Owing to differences in the length of lunar months and days and variations in the precession of the equinoxes it became necessary to make adjustments to reconcile them with the months and signs of the zodiac. This reconciliation was achieved in the Siddhanta period when the week of seven days was introduced, each named after a planet. The months followed the Greek zodiacal order but with Indian designations. This arrangement involved changing the three Vedic seasons to six, each consisting of two months viz:

Vasanta (Spring)	caitra (March-April)
	vaisakha (April-May)
Grisma (Hot season)	jyaistha (May-June)
	asadha (June-July)
Versa (Rainy season)	sravana (July-August)
	bhadrapada(August-September)
Sarad (Autumn)	asvina (September-October)

Sisira (Frosty season) magha (January-February)

phalguna (February-March)

Astrology has always been closely associated with astronomy in India as is indicated in the works of astronomers referred to above. in addition Varahamihira (sixth cent. A.D.), author of several astronomical treatises, who also wrote on astrology and divination, the most important being the Brhat-samhita (Great Compendium), which describes the motions and conjunctions of celestial bodies and their divinatory significance. He also wrote two books on purely horoscopic astrology, in which he introduced many Greek astrological terms, including hora, the hour of birth.

The subsequent Moslem invasions and contacts with Arab science influenced Indian astronomy in the medieval period, Bhaskara (twelfth century) being one of its most noted exponents."

4137. Then comes Vedanta, i.e., the end of the Veda, i.e., the complete knowledge of Veda. It is explained on page 329 to 330, Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) as under:

"Vedanta 'End of Veda'. i.e., the complete knowledge of the Veda. It is not an appendage to any particular portion of the Veda as were the Brahmanas, but a re-interpretation of its basic truths in the light of aupanisadic revelation. The Vedanta is thus associated with the Uttara-Mimamsa 'upper or later examination', regarded as one of the six Hindu darsanas which represented the 'views' of particular religious groups, and is distinguished from the Purva-*

www.vadaprativada.com

Mimamsa, the conservative and fundamentalist appraisal of the original parts of the Veda. The Vedanta views, unlike those of the other darsanas, were not initiated by a particular teacher, but were derived from the teaching of the Upanisads. As these presented both a doctrine of pure monism (advaita) and that of a modified dualism (dvaita), the expositions differ. It was not until Badarayana produced his Brahma-sutras (between A.D. 200 and 450) that particular Vedanta views were systematically presented. Despite the lack of indisputable evidence, it is probable that the aupanisadic notion of the atman was current in the sixth century B.C., as is suggested by the Buddhist anatta (Skt. anatman) non-atman doctrine, which by the second century A.D. had become the sunyavada of the Mahayana Buddhists."

4138. The term "Aranyakas" has also been explained on page 17, Dictionary of Hinduism (supra) and the relevant extract is as under:

"Aranyaka(s) 'Forest texts.' these are essentially sacred esoteric writings which form the core of the Upanisads. They were considered to be 'of a secret uncanny character, and spelt danger to the uninitiated', being intended only for those brahmanas and ksatriyas who had renounced the world and retired to forest solitudes."

4139. Contemporary Literature of other religion namely, Buddhist, Jain etc.: Some literature of Buddhist and Jain religious scholars of the contemporary period referring to historical events is also available giving information about social, political and other aspects and they are also treated to be

4140. Biographies: It is another literary source of history. Certain writer's took the life of their royal patrons as theme of their literary works. Though this kind of work may not be recorded as a genuine history, yet they contain valuable historical information of contemporary era. Their object was glorification of king rather than to give a true picture of his life and times, and mostly they were conceived by their authors not as historical texts but primarily as medium for showing their literary skill and ingenuity. Among this category are:

> "Banabhatta, that great master of Sanskrit prose, wrote the Harsha-charita (life of the emperor Harsha), and two poets, Vakpati and Bilhana, described the exploits of Yasovarman and Vikramaditya (of the later Chalukya dynasty) in two epics, the Gaudavaho and the Vikramanka-deva charita. We have also a curious poetical work, the Rama-charita, in which the author uses throughout verses of double entendre, which, taken one way, describe the story of the Ramayana, and taken the other way, recount the story of king Ramapala of Bengal.
> Among other biographical works may be mentioned the Kumarapala-charita of Jayasimha, Kumarapala-charita or Dvyasraya-kavya of Hemachandra, Hammira-kavya of Nayachandra, Navasahasanka-charita of Padmagupta, Bhojaprabandha by Ballala, Prithviraja-charita of Chand Bardai and Prithviraja-vijaya (fragmentary) by an anonymous writer."
> (Vedic Age-Vol 1-Majumdar 1996, Page 49)

4141. Local Chronicles: These are not available from very

www.vadaprativada.com

ancient time but it appears from the history books that there were certain local chronicle in different parts of India like Rajatarangini etc.

4142. Rajatarangini: It is a history of Kashmir written throughout in verse by Kalhana sometimes in 1149-50 AD.

4143. There were certain chronicles of Gujarat like, Ras-Mala, Kritikaumudi of Somesvara, Sukrita-samkirtana of Arisimha, Prabandha-Chintamani by Merutunga, Prabandha-kosa by Rajasekhara, Hammira-mada-mardana and Vastupala-Tejahpala-prasasti of Jayasimha, Sukritakirti-kallolini of Udayaprabha, Vasantavilasa of Balachandra, etc. It is said that some chronicles were published in respect to Sindh and Nepal also.

4144. Archaeology: The expert witness (Archaeology), Dr. Jaya Menon, PW 29 has also stated about "archaeology", its meaning, scope etc. At page 29 of the statement in cross-examination by the learned counsel for defendant no.20 (Suit-4) giving the meaning of "archaeology" she stated:

> "Archaeology is a discipline in order to understand the past through excavation and seeks to understand the material that is uncovered during excavation. It is correct that the term, "Archaeology" is derived from Greek and "archaeos" means old. Logos means study. To me, Archaeology means much more than a systematic study of antiquities only. The difference between History and Archaeology is that the History is a study of past on the basis of written evidence, whereas the Archaeology signifies a study of material evidence. It is not correct to say that in India, History is the mother of Archaeology. In fact, the two subjects are entirely different disciplines based on different sources. In India, the history of Archaeology dates back to two million years. I studied this fact in a book titled as, " The Rise of Civilisation in India and Pakistan", authored by Allchin and Allchin. The said book was published in the year 1983. It was published by the Publishers, "Select Book Service Syndicate". The basic aim of Archaeology is to understand the human past. It is true that the Archaeology is a subject to understand the changes and development of nature and humanity."

4145. Further at page 61, P.W.29 states:

"The Archaeological history of human beings can be divided into palaeolithic, mesolithic, neolithic, chalcolithic and Iron Age."

www.vadaprativada.com

4146. Inscriptions:The engraved information on stones, metal has been found to be a source of the highest value for the reconstruction of the political history of the ancient India. They are free from the process of tampering to which books and other documents written on perishable material are liable. The historians appeared before us unanimously agreed that the inscriptions as historical evidence take precedence over the mass of Literature, as age of most of the texts is uncertain and they all must have undergone considerable modifications in the course of being preserved in copies through hundreds of years.

4147. Numismatics: The study of coins is called numismatics.

4148. Monuments: The remains of buildings, statues, decoratives, fragments, potteries and other objects of miscellaneous character is also relevant in tracing the history and evolution.

4149. This brief discussion was only to give some idea about the sources of history, ancient India's Vedic and religious literature etc. However, there is a lot of controversy on the historicity of the above vedic literature in one or the other way. This we shall discuss a little after.

4150. Whether Lord Rama was born and was a personality in history, as a matter of fact cannot be investigated in a Court of Law for more than one reason. According to the faith and belief of Hindu people, the period when Lord Rama was there, ranges from several thousand of years to lacs and crores of years. One thing which has been accepted and admitted almost universally and before us also that it is the faith of Hindu people that Lord Rama was incarnation of Lord Vishnu and was born at Ayodhya. Regarding the identity of Ayodhya though it is said to be a city of much antiquity with the birth of Lord Rama but is mainly connected and known with Lord Rama.

4151. The witnesses on behalf of the Hindu parties and in particular OPW 16, Jagadguru Ramanandacharya Swami Ram Bhadracharya; DW 3/18, Sri Acharya Mahant Bansidhar Das alias Uriya Baba; DW 3/13, Mahant Ram Subhag Shashtri; DW 3/20, Mahant Raja Ramchandracharya; DW 3/14, Jagad Guru Ramanandacharya Swami Haryacharya; DW 2/1-3, Mahant Ram Vilas Das Vedanti; DW 20/2, Swami Avimukteshwaranand Saraswati and few others propagating in detail about Hindu faith on worship of Lord Rama said that he was born thousands and lacs of years ago and, therefore, to ask for a positive evidence as contemplated in an enactment by the British Parliament laying down the procedure of evidence which has continued by virtue of Article 372 of Constitution would be not only a futile attempt but is against all the canons of the principles of law which would have been applicable in such matters. It is suggested that nobody can dare to ask such questions for the such pious and reverent beliefs in other religions like Jesus Christ, Prophet Mohammad Saheb etc. then where is the question of asking such an evidence in the matter of a religious faith and belief, which is not a few hundred years old but travels in the history of several thousands years. They tried to explain the system of timings of four yugas as contemplated in Vedic texts and which has been mentioned in detail in Shanti Parva (231.21-22) (Mahabharat) as under:

> "The rishis, measuring time, have given particular names to particular portions [of time]. Five and ten winks of the eye made what is called a Kastha. Thirty Kasthas made what is called a Kala. Thirty Kalas, with the tenth part of a Kala, made a Muhurta. Thirty Muhurtas made one day and night. Thirty days and nights form a month, and twelve months form a year. Persons well-read in mathematical science say that a year is made up of two solar motions, meaning the northern and southern. The sun makes the day and night for men. The night is for the sleep of all living creatures, and the day is for work. A month of human beings is equal to a day and night of the departed manes [ancestors who have gone on to the subtle worlds]. That division consists in this: the light half of the month is their day which is for work; and the dark fortnight is their night for sleep. A year (of men) is equal to a day and night to the gods [devas or celestials]. This division consists in this: the half year for which the sun travels from the vernal to the autumnal equinox is the day of the gods, and the half year for which the sun moves from the latter to the former is their night. [Thus, an earth year is but a day for the devas.] Calculating by the days and nights of human beings about which I have told you, I shall speak of the day and night of Brahma and his years also. I shall, in their order, tell you the number of years, that are for different purposes calculated differently, in the Krita, the Treta, the Dvapara, and the Kali Yugas. Four thousand celestial years is the duration of the first or Krita age. The morning of that cycle consists of four hundred years and its evening is of four hundred years. [Note: This says celestial years, or years of the demigods on the higher planets. Such years are much longer than those of planet earth. So 4000 celestial years, with the morning or Sandhya of 400 celestial years and the evening or Sandhyansa, or intermediate period, of another 400 years, equals 4800 celestial years or 1,728,000 human years.]

www.vadaprativada.com

"Regarding the other cycles, the duration of each gradually decreases by a quarter in respect of both the principal period with the minor portion and the conjoining portion itself. These periods always keep up the never-ending and eternal worlds. They who know Brahma, O child, regard this as Immutable Brahma." (Mb, Shanti Parva, Chap.231, Text 21-22)

This means that as each age appears, from the Krita, Treta, Dvapara to Kali, each Yuga decreases by a quarter of the previous Yuga, in addition to the conjoining Sandhya

and Sandhyansa periods with each Yuga. In this way, it is roughly calculated that a whole cycle of the four yugas, namely Krita, Treta, Dvapara and Kali-yuga together, total about 12,000 celestial years in length.

The Mahabharata (Santi Parva,231.29-32) continues: "The learned say that these 12,000 celestial years form what is called a cycle. A thousand such cycles form a single day of Brahma. The same is the duration of Brahma's night. With the beginning of Brahma's day the universal entities come into being. During the period of universal dissolution the Creator sleeps in Yoga-meditation. When the period of sleep expires, He awakes. What is Brahma's day covers a thousand such cycles. His night also covers a thousand similar cycles. They who know that are said to know the day and the night. On the expiry of His night, Brahma, waking up, modifies the indestructible intelligence by causing it to be overlaid with ignorance. He then causes Consciousness to spring up, whence it originates Mind which is at one with the Manifest."

4152. There is some confusion on account of a little difference in Puranas. One calculate the time as contemplated in Vedic texts in terms of the years in accordance with present system and this is why the time results in lots of inaccuracy. In Vedic literature, the time is described in celestial years, or years of the devas, not according to the time we experience and calculate on earth:

"In calculating the duration of the different yugas, there are a few differences between the Puranas. The

Brahmanada Purana (1.2.29.31-34) specifically states that Krita or Santya-yuga is 1,440,000 human years in length, Treta-yuga is 1,080,000 years, Dvapra-yuga is 720,000 years, and Kali-yuga is 360,000 years in length. The Linga Purana (4.24-35) also agrees with this except for Treta-yuga, which it says is 1,800,000 years in length.

However, when explaining the various measurements of time, the Vishnu Purana (Book One, Chapter Three) and the Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.11.19), along with the Bhagavad-gita (8.17) and the Vayu Purana (Chapter 57) and others, such as the Mahabharata as quoted above, the measurements of the durations of the Yugas, stands explained.

In the explanations of the measurements of time found therein, one cycle of the four yugas together is 12,000 years of the demigods, called divine years. Each of these years is composed of 360 days, and each of their days is equal to one human year. So Krita-yuga is 4000 divine years in length, Treta-yuga is 3000 divine years in length, Dvapara-yuga is 2000 divine years in length, and Kali-yuga is 1000 divine years long, with the addition of the conjoining portions of the Sandhya and Sandhyansa.

In this way, each yuga is preceded by a period called a Sandhya, which is as many hundred years in length as there are thousands of years in that particular yuga. Each yuga is also followed by a period of time kinwn as a Sandhyansa, which is also as many hundreds of years in length as there are thousands of years in the yuga. In between these periods of time is the actual yuga. Therefore,

Krita-yuga = 4000 divine years, Sandhya = 400 divine years, Sandhyansa = 400 divine years. Total = 4800 divine years X 360 days = 1,728,000 human years.

Treta-yuga = 3000 divine years, Sandhya = 300 divine years, Sandhyansa = 300 divine years. Total = 3600 divine years X 360 days = 1,296,000 human years.*

Dvapara-yuga = 2000 divine years, Sandhya = 200 divine years, Sandhyansa = 200 divine years. Total = 2400 divine years X 360 days = 864,000 human years.

Kali-yuga = 1000 divine years, Sandhya = 100 divine years, Sandhyansa = 100 divine years. Total = 1200 divine years X 360 days = 432,000 human years.

This equals 4,320,000 human years in one cycle of the four yugas together, and 1000 cycles of these yugas equals 12,000 divine years and 4,320,000,000 human years in a day of Brahma.

It is also explained that Kali-yuga began with the disappearance of Lord Krishna from the planet. This has been calculated to be 3102 B.C.. Since Kali-yuga is described as being 432,000 earth years in length, with 5,000 years and more already passed, then the age of Kali-yuga has approximately 426,000 more years to go."

4153. Taking note of this kind of calculation, our attention is drawn to Exhibit 36 (Suit-5) (Register 32 Page 7 to 113) which is an extract photocopy of the book "Itihas Darpan" Vol. III December 1996 published by Bhartiya Itihas Sankalan Yojna Samiti, Delhi, which contains its frontispiece and pages 1 to 74. Its first chapter is "The Age and Size of Universe as per Hindu

Calculations". Apparently, the concept of time and period appears to be exaggerated and may not be relevant for the dispute but in substance it has some connection with the issues in hands and will reflect on what the Court is required to do while considering such issues without appreciating the antiquity, magnanimity and the lack of appropriate knowledge on this aspect on the part of the people in presenti to explain the real concept, may be on account of loss of ancient record in original etc. or the material having disappeared with time. Some part of the calculation of learned author would be a matter of interest and may also reflect what these religious personalities have said is not something which can be brushed aside easily. It says:

> "Professor Arthur Holmes in this masterly work The Age of the Earth opines "Long before it became a scientific aspiration to estimate the age of the earth, many elaborate systems of the world chronology had been devised by the sages of antiquity. The most remarkable of these occult timescales is that of the ancient Hindus, whose astonishing concept of the earth's duration has been traced back to Manusmriti, a sacred book. According to this compilation of law and wisdom, the whole past and future of the world is but a day in the eternal life of Brahma – a day of four thousand three hundred and twenty million years, throughout which finite beings are created out of Infinite. The day of Brahma is divided into fourteen great cycles, each lasting 30,34,43000 years, together with when Brahma's night begins the finite is destined once more to merge into infinite. At present the world is in the seventh of these cycles and according to the Hindu calender recorded in the Vishnu Purana it is now (A.D. 1947) 107,29,49048 years since the earth came into existence. By a curious coincidence this characteristically precise assessment is of the same order as the two thousand million years which has recently been the most favoured estimate for the age of the expanding universe."

Since the introduction of the theory of Relativity by Prof. Elbert Einstein, the concepts regarding the universe have been revolutionised. According to Einstein the space, time and matter all are relative. There is nothing which could be called Absolute. Time and space could not be separated. The astronomer looking through his telescope is looking both outward in space and backward in time, for the light reaching the earth from the states is not of today but of million of years back. We are looking at them in their form when the light left them so many millions of years back and it is quite possible that some of these stars might have ceased their existence at present. Therefore, Einstein described the Universe as a space time continuum having four dimensions-three of space and one of time. Einstein had shown that the properties of space-time continuum are disturbed wherever there is matter and motion. A star, a comet or a galaxy, says Licoln Barnett, a noted physicist distorts the geometry of the space-time through which it moves, just as a fish swimming in the water agitates the surrounding waters. Space becomes bent or curved in the region of the matter hence the paths of the planet are the results of moving through space distorted by the Sun.

As we have already seen, the space-time continuum is

bent and distorted by the material bodies in it. If the space is curved in the region surrounding the heavenly bodies it is obvious that all matter in the universe must produce the similar effect- an overall curvature of the whole space-time continuum. The universe, must be regarded as a close system finite but unbounded and not infinite as has been supposed. On the face of it, it is beyond one's imagination to visualise a finite universe but there is nothing so mysterious about it. The surface of the earth, for example, is finite, that is having a limited or measurable area but at the same, time unbounded, i.e. one could walk around it for ever without ever reaching the end.

Einstein theorised that the universe is of such size and shape that a beam of light travelling at 1,86,000 miles per second would return to its source after about 200 billion years. (One billion is equal to one million million and the figure comes to 200,000,000,000,000). As the figure is nothing but the circumference of the universe using the formula pi 'D(Diameter)= Circumference, we can calculate the diameter of the universe.

$$Pi=22/7: \frac{Diameter = 200,000,000,000,000x7}{22}$$

$$=\frac{100,000,000,000,000x7}{11}$$

= about 63,636,363,636,364

Light years

(One light year is the distance travelled by light in one earthly year at the rate of 1,86,000 miles per second and is equal to 5.38 million million miles)

Keeping aside for a while the Einsteinian views about the universe, let us see what the ancient Hindus

concieved about the universe.

In the Hindu puranas the universe was considered a gigantic egg hence the name "Brahmanda'. God who is the lord of Universe is described as 'Akhilanda Koti Brahmanda Nayaka' meaning, 'The Lord of the biggest egg having innumerable cosmic spheres.' The age of the universe or the life-span of the universe is given in terms of the life span of Brahma. In Hindu chronology there are two time-scales; one the earthly scale and the other the divine scale (Deva Mana). The details of the scales are given below.

The simplest chronological unit is known as 'Prana'

6 Pranas =1 Vighatika

60 Vighatikas =1 Ghatika

60 Ghatikas = 1 Ahoratra (Day & Night together)

15 Ahoratras (Days) = 1 Paksha (Fortnight)

2 Pakshas (For nights) = I Masa (Month)

12 Masas (Months) =1 Samvatsara (Year)

=1 Divine Day

30 earthly years = 1 Divine Day (Divya Maha)

360 earthly years = 1 Divine year (Divya Vastara)

4800 Divine years or 17,28,000 earthly years = 1 Krita Yuga (including twilight period)

3600 Divine years or 12,96,000 earthly years = 1 Treta Yuga (including twilight period)

2400 Divine years or 8,64,000 earthly years = 1 Dwapara Yuga (including twilight period)

1200 Divine years or 4,32,000 earthly years = 1 Kali Yuga (including twilight period)

www.vadaprativada.com

12000 Divine years or 43,20,000 years (Sum total of 4 Yugas) = 1 Maha Yuga or Divya Yuga (Great epeoh)

1000 Divya Yugas or 432,00,00000 years = 1 Udaya Kalpa (Day of Brahma)

Another

1000 Divya Yugas or 432,00,00,000 earthly years – 1 Kshaya Kalpa (Night of Brahma)

2000 Divine years or 864,00,00,000 earthly years – 1 (Full day of Brahma Brahma dina)

30 such days of Brahma – 1 month of Brahma (Brahma Masa)

12 such months of Brahma – 1 year of Brahma

100 such years of Brahma = 1 Life Span of Brahma

By the end of this period the entire Universe, every galaxy, nebula, star – each and every thing perishes. This period of Universal dissolution lasts for another such life span of Brahma (100 Brahma Vatsaras) and on completion of the same new creation of everything commences again. This phenomenon is cyclic and has neither beginning nor end.

Applying this vast time scale let us calculate the age of Brahma in terms of earthly years.

1 day of Brahma = 864,00,00,000 years

1 year of Brahma = 864,00,00,000 X 360 years

1 Life Span on Brahma = 864,00,00,000 X 360 X 100 years

= 311,040,000,000,000 years (15 digits)

The modern astrophysicists place the age of the present universe as anything between 10 and 20 billion years. Let us see what it seems to

www.vadaprativada.com

1 Million is equal to 10,000,00

1 Billion equals to 1 Million X Million

= 10,000,00 X 10,000,00

= 100,000,00,00,000

10 Billion = 10 X 100,000,00,00,000

= 1,000,000,00,00,000 (14 digits)

20 Billion = 2,000,000,00,00,000 (14 digits)

Now let us calculate the present age of the Universe as per the Hindu scriptures. At present Brahma has completed his fifty Divine years of life and is in his fifty first Divine year.

1 Divine year = 8,640,000,000 X 360 earthly years

50 Divine years = 50 X 8,640,000,000 X 360 years

= 155,520,000,000,000 (15 digits)

A comparison of both the above figures clearly shows that while the modern astrophysicists, figures are very conservative the Hindu calculations are most accurate.

During the current fifty first year 1,972,949,096 (By 1995) years were over. Hence the total age of the universe at present comes to 155,520,000,000,000 plus 1,972,949,096 i.e. 155,521,972,949,096 years.

A comparison of both the above figure shows that while the figures of the modern astrophysicists are very conservative, the figures arrived at by the Hindu calculations are most accurate. The reason is that while the former are conjectural the latter are based on scientific facts.

It was already mentioned that as per Einsteinian view since the Universe is such that a beam of light

travelling at a speed of 1,86,000 miles per second would return to its source after 200 billion years – Light rays are supposed to travel in straight lines. In such a case how it would be possible for the light rays to undergo several bends and come back to its original source? Even a third grade star like the Sun could deflect light rays passing nearby. Einstein perdicted this and also practically showed it during a solar eclipse. Thus he proved that light also is having mass based on which his popular formula e = mv was conceived. There are billions and billions of stars which are very very massive than the Sun in the universe. Many such stars devour the light coming to them becoming black hole while others deflect that light rays passing nearby. Thus the light rays undergo several deflections and finally come to the original source. As per this Einstenian concept it was calculated that the Universe is having a circumfrence of 200 Billion light years and the diameter of 63,636,363,636,364 light years. Thus Einstein believed that the universe is finite having these dimension.

200 billion = 1,000,000 X 100,00,00 X200

= 200,000,000,000,000 (15 digits)

It is curious to note that the life span of Brahma also is having such a staggering figure.

Life span of Brahma = 311,040,000,000,000 years

(15 digits)

Could it be just a coincidence? Does it indicate the size of the Universe? If so it is the most accurate calculation."

4154. This document further appears to have been filed to show the manner in which the stone inscription of 1992 was deciphered, but now, in our view, it is wholly irrelevant since K.V. Ramesh OPW 10 has submitted his own translation and transliteration in English which all the parties have admitted that it is the most authentic one and his competence and expertise on the subject admits no doubt.

4155. F.E. Pargiter tried to find out historicity in the matter by tracing out the genealogy. In his "Ancient Indian Historical Tradition" he collected list of rulers and dynasties based on traditional Sanskrit sources. He could successfully find the chronology tracing back about three thousands of years but find some gaps missing links etc., hence rejected it by observing that it is entirely a myth. It is normally difficult to a common man to trace out his own genealogy by five or ten stages back, and, here a person who had no knowledge of local faith, belief etc., from here and there tried to find out chronological list of hundreds of predecessors, going in thousands of years, and yet when found some alleged manuscripts or some descriptions in certain books creating some confusion, easily accepted the easier mode of wriggling out of it by terming it a myth. Probably the reason might be that they were working under a concept of Christian methodology at that time that the world itself was created 4004 BCE. He also might be under the conventional wisdom of Max Muller's theory of Aryan invasion in Indian sub-continent who presumed that Indian civilization began only when the Aryans allegedly invaded from the side of Indus in about 1500 BCE. It is probably for this reason that he was not able to go beyond that. Something is really disturbing with these kind of disputes. Doubts normally are not raised or tried to be avoided in the matters of other religions. The dispute of Al Aqsa in Jerusalem where the Farmosque is and treated to be the third most pious place by muslims since they believe that Prophet Muhammad descended thereat after visiting heaven, nobody even doubts their faith but one can always ask a question that Jerusalem is not mentioned in Quran at all while Mecca and Madina words have been used innumerably then what is the evidence for such belief but then one must understand and appreciate that in the matter of faith and religion such things cannot be asked. A religion itself means if some people believe something and worship as a matter of right, since the time immemorial, the others must not raise any doubt. Simple logic is that failing to find evidence to something does not necessarily result in that the thing does not exist.

4156. The issues which have been framed and up for consideration by us are causing a bit complication inasmuch as issue 11 (Suit-4) says, "is the property in suit the site of Janambhumi of Sri Ram Chandraji". It does not talk of whether this question has to be considered in the context of tradition, faith and belief of Hindus, or, that like an ordinary property dispute, we are really required to answer where Lord Rama was born actually. If this be so, the issue requires us to perform an impossible task. On the one hand, qua the property in dispute when question arises whether it was actually constructed by Babar, and whether he actually dedicated or not, the submission is that the matter travels in history and, therefore, direct evidence for an event occurred such a long time back may not be possible, hence the issues must be decided in the light of the traditions etc. and other circumstantial things. But here, where the period of Lord Rama ranges in several thousands and lacs of years, can it be said that the question where he actually born, be decided by a Court of Law by collecting positive evidence on this aspect and any party will be able to do it.

4157. The issues pertaining to history cannot be decided like this and to us it appears that by necessity we have to treat the issues 11 (Suit-4), 1 (Suit-1) and 22 (Suit5) as if we are required to answer the common question whether the property in suit is the site of birth of Sri Ramchandra Ji according to tradition, belief and faith of Hindus in general, otherwise this kind of dispute will create inroads to a very serious and dangerous arena which we cannot allow.

4158. Let us now proceed to find out as to how Ayodhya and Lord Rama inter se are considered by the parties before us and what has been said in brief by their witnesses.

4159. Regarding the identity and importance of Ayodhya, the statements of some of the witnesses of plaintiffs (Suit-4) are as under:

(a) P.W. 6 Mohammad Unus Siddiqi

''यह ठीक है कि हिन्दू लोगों में इस बात की आस्था है कि अयोध्या भगवान राम के नाम से जुड़ी हुई है।''(पेज 20)

"It is true that it is a matter of faith for Hindus that Ayodhya is linked with the name of Lord Rama."(E.T.C.)

(b) PW 8, Abdul Ajij

''यह ठीक है कि अयोध्या हिन्दुओं की एक तीर्थस्थली है। बहुत दूर–दूर से हिन्दू लोग वहॉ आते हैं।'' (पेज 33)

"It is true that Ayodhya is a pilgrimage of Hindus. Hindus come here from far off places." (E.T.C)

(c) PW 10 Mohammad Idris

''अयोध्या एक मजहबी शहर है, वह हिन्दुओं का भी मजहबी शहर है और

www.vadaprativada.com

मुसलमानों का भी मजहबी शहर है। . . . . .यह ठीक है कि अयोध्या में मन्दिरों की भरमार है।'' (पेज 33–34)

"Ayodhya is a religious town. It is a religious town for Hindus and so is it for Muslims. . . . . It is true that Ayodhya has plenty of temples."(E.T.C)

(d) PW 21 Dr. M. Hashim Kidwai

''यह सही है कि राम चन्द्र जी का जन्म अयोध्या में हुआ था। यह सही है कि हिन्दू लोग अयोध्या में भगवान राम के जन्म स्थान पर दर्शन करने सदियों से जाते है।'' (पेज –77)

"It is true that the birth of Ram Chandra Ji took place in Ayodhhya. It is true that from centuries, Hindu community have been visiting the birthplace of Lord Rama for Darshan." (E.T.C.)

www.vadaprativada.com

''यह ठीक है कि अयोध्या हिन्दुओं की एक महत्वपूर्ण तीर्थस्थली है यह भी ठीक है कि अयोध्या में भगवान श्री राम का जन्म हुआ था। सभी हिन्दू इस बात को नही कहते कि भगवान राम का जन्म उसी भूमि पर हुआ था जहां बाबरी मस्जिद बनी है। यह ठीक है कि कुछ हिन्दू की ऐसी मान्यता है कि यह भगवान श्री राम की जन्म स्थली है।'' (पेज –83)

"It is true that Ayodhya is a significant pilgrimage of Hindus. It is also correct that birth of Lord Rama took place in Ayodhya. All Hindus do not say that the birth of Lord Rama took place on that very land where Babari Mosque is constructed. It is correct that some Hindus believe that it is the birthplace of Lord Sri Rama." (E.T.C.)

(e) PW 25 S.M. Naqvi

''जो तीर्थयात्री अयोध्या में दर्शन के लिए आते हैं वह और सब स्थानों के अलावा बाबरी मस्जिद के पास जो सीता रसोई कहा जाता है और राम चबूतरा कहा जाता है वहां तक आते हैं और श्रद्धा जरूर पेश

करते होंगे और श्रद्धानुसार फूल और बताशे चढ़ाते हैं।'' (पेज 51)

"Such pilgrims, who come to Ayodhya for 'Darshan' (offering of prayer by Hindus in temple), apart from other places, also visit the place called 'Sita Rasoi' & 'Ramchabutara' near Babri masjid and must be offering their devotion and offer flowers and sweets as per their devotion." (E.T.C.)

4160. So far as the witnesses of Hindu parties are concerned, they all have said unequivocally that according to their faith and belief Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya and the disputed site is the place where Lord of Lord manifested. The relevant part thereof we may refer a bit later.

4161. We are aware that the antiquity, history etc. of a place or personality would not solely depend upon the oral statements of some persons who could not have any personal knowledge of the matter. This appears virtually admitted on the part of the muslim parties also and it is probably for this reason, under Order X Rule 2 CPC, statement was made by all the learned counsels appearing for Muslim parties, about the faith and belief of Hindus that Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya or that it is this very Ayodhya in respect whereto the above faith exists, they have no reason to dispute it, and their dispute is confined only to the site in question as to whether the place of birth of Lord Rama can be zeroed down thereto or not, legally and otherwise.

4162. The counsel for the parties virtually were unanimous that these aspects can be seen better in the light of the historical and other texts which may reflect upon it and give some idea on the subject. Having considered the issue in detail we find that the work of Historians and experts as they claim, and the recorded material, which we have in the form of books, can broadly be categorised in two.

(1) The books written before or till 1600 AD (hereinafter referred to as "pre-1600 AD"; and,

(2) The books written after 1600 AD (hereinafter referred to as "post-1600 AD").

4163. The reason for making the above distinction though to some extent is apparent, but we propose to give its detail. At this stage, it would be suffice to mention and remind us that the books falling in the first category, i.e. pre-1600 AD mostly consist of Hindu, Jain, Baudha and Muslim literature written by the persons of these communities, in limited way some chronicles, and also include the published material of certain travellers from other countries like China etc. In the later category, i.e. post-1600 AD the published material consist of the history books mostly written by Europeans as well as English translation of pre 1600 AD literature, which was originally written in languages like Sanskrit, Turkish, Persian etc. as also the travellers account of persons mostly European, visiting Indian sub-continent.

4164. It is no doubt true that pre-1600 AD literature is a bit scattered, lack at several places, clarity and specificity, and leaves at times one to guess or assume something while the post-1600 AD material is more specific and concrete but tainted and tampered or written without understanding the true context and facts. It has to be relied and handled cautiously since it is more based on informations received by the authors other than first hand information. When something is written on the basis of information received, the source from which the information has been received, the extent of clarity with which the information is conveyed the credibility of the informant as well as information, whether the information has been given impartially or with a biased mind, capacity and extent of understanding of the person receiving information, his capability of putting the same on paper, the extent of accuracy and several other similar factors would have to be considered otherwise the ultimate inference may result in drastic consequences.

4165. The Indian history in post 1600 AD has primarily been written by Europeans claiming that the same is based on an in-depth study of old manuscripts of Indian Literature as also the information they have collected from the available Indian Historians and local people. Though the printed material pre 1600 AD is also available but we cannot term it as primary source of evidence since the material is published later on and we have no manner of comparing the same with the primary source. The original manuscript is not available and in many of cases cannot be available at all.

4166. Normally one ought to proceed chronologically but since post 1600 authors have claimed their work to be very authentic and reliable, we intend to proceed in a reverse manner, i.e., first to consider and refer some of the historical and other books written in post 1600 AD and thereafter revert back to pre 1600 AD.

4167. The historical literature in post 1600 AD mostly has its credit to the people who came in India as merchants from England and turned the entire chapter of history in this part of

Asian Continent. Prior to it, one noticeable event is the visit of Vasco-da-Gama on 20th May 1428 alongwith four ships and 118 sailors. It is said that the route was guided to him by an Indian sailor. He returned to Lisbon with a cargo, the value of which it is said, was 60 fold the cost of his voyage to India. This opened the eyes of Europeans in the entire continent and thereafter attempts from different countries like England, France etc. were made to enter into trade with India. On 24th September, 1599 a group of merchants formed an association for entering into free trade in East Indies. Queen Elizabeth granted a Charter on 31st December, 1599 to Governor and Company of Merchants of London to trade freely in the East. Though it was not necessary to seek for a charter but the Company had two reasons for the same. One, to assure a reasonable prospect of success in the adventure the Company asked for a trade monopoly and special privileges which by the constitutional practice of the time could be conferred only by the Crown; and secondly; to make association sufficiently powerful to negotiate and deal with Indian potentates, to count on state aid, to drive off European competitors and to enforce discipline among its own servants.

4168. It is said that to begin with the East India Company had only 101 shareholders and could collect a sum 30133 pounds, 6 shillings and 8 pence only. Later on it was increased and reached up to 68373 pounds and number of shareholders increased to 217. The shareholders included besides merchants and traders, grossers, leather sellers, dyers, tailors and goldsmiths. The East India Company was tempted to enter into trade with Indian continent after being impressed with its economic prosperity. Some of the comments made by

Europeans supports it. Shakespeare called India as the "climax of the greatest opportunities in the world". The German philosopher Hegel in his book "The Philosophy of History" Newark 1956 Edition, page 142 described it as the "land of desire". The Vasco-da-gama himself called India as "Golden India" and Adam Smith said that "India was one of the wealthiest ancient country."

4169. The wealth drained out by the East India Company is an eye opener. James Mill in "History of British India" Vol.-I at page 22-23 has said that English East India Company in a short span made huge profits. In seven out of eight expeditions during 1603 AD to 1613 AD it made profits in general more than 200 times on the capital of the voyage. In 1600, in the First Charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, the company was described as "Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading into east Indies". It granted exclusive right of trading into and from the East Indies, in the countries and Ports of Asia and Africa, and into and from all the Islands, Ports, Harbours, cities, creeks, towns and places of Asia and Africa, America or any of them, beyond the cape of Bona Esperenza to the straits of Magellan for a period of 15 years. This grant was conditional on the trade proving profitable to the realm. This Charter was renewed by James First in 1609 AD and made "perpetual subject to determination after three years notice on proof of injury to the nation". Before 1612 AD, the members attributed on each occasion towards expenses of the each voyage reaping the whole profits of his subscription. In 1612 AD Joint Stock System was introduced and in the next four years, i.e., 1613 to 1616 AD the Company made a total profit of 87.5%. Maurice

Doble in "Studies in the Development of Capitalism (London, 1946)" at page 192 has mentioned that in 1617 AD the Company made a total profit of pounds 10 lacs on a capital of pounds 2 lacs. In 17th century AD the Company averaged a rate of profit of about 100%. The fortune it conferred to British youngsters was such that they become overnight affluent and rich. Thomas Pitt (1643-1726 AD), the grandfather of William Pitt became a multimillionaire in India and used to be called "Diamond Pitt" while Elihu Yale (1648-1721 AD) became one of the richest man in England. It is for this reason that no occasion of determination of Company did arose and instead the powers were enhanced from time to time vide Charters of 1661, 1669, 1677, 1683, 1686, 1726, 1753 and 1758 AD. We do not propose to give British history of India but in order to understand the mindset, the purpose, the objective, the motive, the degree of fairness in appreciation or understanding of the things etc. by the European authors in post 1600 AD probably each and every factor has to be examined since it has a cumulative effect which reflects in the mind and opinion of a person while making an observation in respect to life style of the natives including religious, cultural and other aspects of a country like India. Some of the broad features of the Charters referred above may be reminded at this stage in brief.

4170. Charter of 1661 AD empowered the Company to appoint Governors and other officers for the Government of Fortress, the dispatch ammunitions and wire material for defence of their factories, to erect poles and to appoint commanders and other officers with power to make peace and war with non-Christian nations. For better administration of justice the Governor and Council of each factory were authorised to judge all persons living under them, in all causes whether civil or criminal. Charter of 1669 AD granted to the Company, the Port and Island of Bombay investing it at the same time with powers of their civil and military government. The Company was authorised to coin money at Bombay by Charter of 1677 AD. Charter of 1683 AD granted full powers to Company to raise military forces, to exercise martial law in case of foreign invasion or domestic insurrection and to make peace and war with "heathen" nations. A Court of Judicature consisting of "one person learned in civil law" and two Assistants was established to adjudge mercantile and maritine cases. Charter of 1686 AD empowered it to raise naval forces, to appoint Admirals and other sea officers and to coin money in their Forts. One year thereafter, by virtue of power conferred by Crown, a Municipality was established at Madras.

4171. The progress and development of the Company caused some legal battle in England as others were also vying for entering in trade with East Indies. A question was raised in 1683-85 AD in East India Company Vs. Sandys, whether the Crown had the prerogative to grant a trade monopoly without the authority of parliament. The issue was decided in favour of the Company. Again in 1691 AD the issue was raised before the Privy Council but decided in favour of the Company. However, the Company when detained a private ship "Red Bridge" in the Thames alleging that it was bound for countries within the Charter limits of the Company, the legality of detention was questioned and brought to the notice of Parliament whereupon in 1694 AD a resolution was passed that all subjects of England had equal rights to trade with the East Indies unless prohibited by Act of Parliament. Consequently, by Act of 1698 AD trade monopoly was secured to the Company in return for loans made to the State from time to time. In 1708 AD the controversy of trade monopoly came to an end due to amalgamation of various companies under the name of "the United Company of Merchants of England Trading with the East Indies" and this name continued up to 1831 AD. The Company had expanded its activities to much wider fields and for effective management and operation thereof by Charter of 1726 AD Municipal and Judicial Institutions at Bombay, Madras and Calcutta were reorganised; Mayor's Courts were established by the Crown by Letters Patent and the Governor and Council of each Presidency were conferred powers of legislation in respect of inhabitants of towns and factories under their control. Charter of 1753 AD empowered for setting up of Courts on request for trial of petty cases. Suits and causes in which both the parties were Indians or non-European were excluded from the jurisdiction of the Mayor's Courts and directed to be determined amongst the parties themselves. Act of 1754 made provision for military forces of the Company corresponding to the provisions in the English Mutiny Acts. It also made offences committed by the Company's Presidents and Councils cognizable and punishable in England.

4172. Then came the moment which marked the process of English domination in India. The British Company won battle of Plassey in 1757 AD. This victory laid foundation of British supremacy in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa and paved way for the conquest in Northern India. Consequently by Charter of 1758

AD the Company was empowered to cede, restore, or dispose of fortresses, districts or territories acquired by conquest from Indian princes or Governments. Almost all the historians are in unionism in observing that this was the situation created in India by sudden collapse of Mughal empire. Within half a century of the death of Emperor Aurangzeb, the Mughal empire fell to pieces. Sikhs shattered it in Punjab, Marathas rose to supremacy in Peninsula, Rajput States declared their independence, the Governors in Oudh, Bengal and Deccan threw off their allegiance and Afghan soldier of fortune seized Rohilkhand. Two Maratha warriors, Holker and Sindhia partitioned Malwa founding new dynasties. In this state of confusion and anarchy, two strong European powers though rival, i.e., French and English East India Company established their foothold. The French East India Company which was also initially a mere trading concern, possessed the districts of Pondichary and Carical as well as a number of factories and forts at Surat, Mahi and Chandar Nagar. However, its influence in Deccan was watered down and shattered by the victories of Clive in 1752 AD. The battle of Plassey in 1757 AD made English Company virtually master of Bengal, Bihar and Orrisa.

4173. In 1760 AD Clive obtained the grant of Northern Sirkars for the Madras Government and in 1765 AD, to be more precise on 17th August, 1765, Emperor Shah Alam conferred on the Company “Deewani” or the right of collecting revenue and administering civil justice in Bengal, Bihar and Orrisa in return for any early payment of 26 lacs of rupees. Victory in Plassey battle made the company sovereign de facto in relation to Bihar, Bengal and Orissa and grant of Diwani made them sovereign de jure. This progress of the Company sought to be shared by the Crown in England and the Parliament passed in 1767 AD five Acts with reference to Indian affairs.

4174. To begin with, the Company was required to deposit into English Government's Exchequer an annuity of pound 4 lacs as a tribute to the State in consideration of their retaining the territorial acquisition and their revenue. In "Company India, A Comprehensive History of India (1757-1858)", J. Kumar at page 65 has observed that Company took advantage of its becoming de facto de jure sovereign after battle of Palasy and its servants collected a huge sum inasmuch as within less than a decade of the battle of Palasy two million pounds sterling from Bengal reached into pockets of the Company's servants by way of presents and other means. This resulted in Regulating Act, 1773 and Pitt's India Act, 1784.

4175. The ways in which the Company servants manage their affairs, Sir William Meredith said "merchants sovereigns are always dangerous for their rule of selling is to take as much as they please, and the rule by which they bye is to pay as little as they please". Regulating Act, 1773 appointed a Governor General and four Councils for the Government of Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. The Governor General and Council were given the power of superintending and controlling the Governments and the Presidencies of Madras, Bombay and Bencoolen (in Sumatra) which were required to pay due obedience in matters relating to peace and war and negotiations of treaties with Indian princes or powers. The Governor General and Council were also authorised to make and issue, Rules, Ordinances and Regulations for the good order and civil government of the Company's settlement and Fort William and other factories and places subordinate, as were deemed just and reasonable. These rules and regulations, however, were not to have the force of law until registered in the Supreme Court with its assent and approbation. It is said that the object of this proviso was to secure the conformity of Indian laws with the fundamental laws of England. The rules and regulations, however, could further be disallowed by the King in Council. The Government of two minor Presidency were required to send to the Bengal Government copies of all of their regulations and orders but the Governor General and Council were not empowered to legislate for the territories of Madras and Bombay. The Crown was empowered to establish by Charter and letters patent, a Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William consisting of a Chief Justice and three other judges, who were barristers of at least five years standing and were appointed by the Crown.

4176. We need not detail as to how the things functioned under this Act but the history books show that the sharp controversy between the Governor General and Council and the Supreme Court made the Governor General powerless before his own Council, the Council was powerless before the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court was immune from all responsibility for the peace and welfare of the country. Lord North on 9th April, 1781 observed in the House of Commons that it was desirable that the Governor of Bengal might in future be something more than a mere primus interpares. He further observed, "for his part he was an enemy to absolute power, but if the genius, the habits and religious prejudices of India were

inconsistent with a free Government, the necessity would justify Parliament with a degree of absolute power, to be exercised by him with moderation and distinction."

4177. This resulted in Bengal Judicature Act 1781 providing that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in matters concerning revenue or any act done in the collection thereof according to the usages of the country, or the regulations of Governor General and Council and that judicial officers of the Company's Courts were not liable in the Supreme Court for acts done in judicial capacity. The Governor General and Council were recognised as having appellate jurisdiction from the judgements of the Company's Courts. The Governor General and Council were empowered to make regulations for the Company's Courts which would not require registration in the Supreme Court. It provided that Rules and forms for the execution of process in Supreme Court were to be accommodated to the religion and usages of the people of India. The Supreme Court's jurisdiction as regards Indian was limited to the town of Calcutta. It further laid down that questions of inheritance and succession to land, rents and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party, were to be determined in the case of Muhammadans by the laws and usages of Muhammadans and in the case of Hindus by the laws and usages of Hindus.

4178. Though not directly but here was the time when simultaneously some other got indulged themselves to understand the culture & history of this part of the sub-continent. The first hurdle was language. The literature was in Sanskrit. Thus process of its translation commenced. The

"History of Sanskrit Literature" (1859) shows that major part of the translation work started in the later part of 18th century. Earlier, in 1651 AD "Abraham Roger" translated Sanskrit poet "Bhartrihari" into Dutch. Thereafter Voltaire in his essay "Essai sur les Moeurs et l'Esprit des Nations" shows his enthusiasm greeting the lore of the "Ezour Vedam", a work brought from India and introduced to his notice in the middle of the last century. It is said that this work was later proved to be a forgery made in the 17th century by a Jesuit Missionary. Thereafter one Dugald Stewart, Philosopher wrote an essay endeavouring to prove that not only the Sanskrit literature but also the Sanskrit language was a forgery made by the crafty Brahmans on the model of Greek after Alexander's conquest. Warren Hastings, the then Governor General, East India Company viewed in the advantage of ruling Hindus as far as possible according to their own laws and customs and caused a number of Brahmans to prepare a digest, based on the best ancient Indian legal authorities. An English version of this Sanskrit compilation, made through the medium of a Persian translation, was published in 1776.

4179. The first European said to have acquired knowledge of actual Sanskrit writing is said to be "Charles Wilkins" at Benares who got published in 1785 a translation of "Bhagwad-gita", or "The Song of the Adorable One" and two years later a version of the well known collections of Fables entitled "Hitopadeca" or "Friendly Advice".

4180. Thereafter the subsequent historians give real credit to "Sir William Jones" who in his brief stay of 11 years in India first aroused keen interest in the study of Indian Antiquity by founding “Asiatic Society of Bengal” in 1784, having acquired knowledge of Sanskrit, published translation of “Shakuntala” in 1789 which was appreciated by several other judges like Herder and Goethe and thereafter he translated “Code of Manu”.

4181. The first British Historian, who is said to have adventured on the Indian History is James Mill, author of “History of British India”. In “Autobiography J.S. Mill” London, reprinted in 1958, it is said that Mill was born in 1773 at a village in Scotland. His father (also called James) was a petty shoe maker and his mother Isabel Fentan was a farmer's daughter. He got higher education in the University of Edinburgh at the expenses of a fund established for educating young men of the Scottish Presbyterian Church. However, he had forsaken the Church and for a few years was a private tutor in various prominent families in Scotland. Thereafter, he came to England where he adopted journalism for his livelihood and wrote a number of articles in journals and periodicals like, Edinburgh Review, West Minister Review, London Review, Annual Review, etc. He also drafted some articles in Volume V of Encyclopaedia Britannica. In 1808, he came in contact with Jeremy Bentham. In 1819, he got a job and was appointed as Assistant Examiner of Correspondence at India House and served the East India Company till his demise in 1836. Thus, James Mill had never been in India, knew no Indian language and lacked personal acquaintance with Indians. His writing, however, in respect to India consisted of a number of articles, reviews, voluminous correspondences and despatches to the various authorities of the East India Company during 1819 to 1836, and a book. Some of his articles, namely, “Affairs on

India" (1810), "Wilk's History of Mysore" (1811), "East India Monopoly" (1812), "Malcolm on India" (1812) were published in Edinburgh Review during 1810-12. His famous work on India is "History of British India". It is said that he started work on this book in 1806 and in 1817 three volumes were first published. Again it was published in 1820. It was published in six volumes in 1826. During 1840-48, it was published in nine volumes with notes and contents of H.H. Wilson and in 1858 and 1872, it was reprinted in ten volumes.

4182. James Mill set out to display the history, character, religion, literature, arts and laws of India besides explaining the influence of the Indian climate. He aimed to look at the accumulated information of India within a wider theoretical frame work. The work begins with a preface in which Mill makes virtues of having never visited India and of knowing none of its native languages. To him these are guarantees of his objectivity and he says:

> "A duly qualified man can obtain more knowledge of India in one year in his closet in England than he could obtain during the course of longest life by the use of his eyes and years in India."

4183. Mill treated his work a monumental one and came on in his preface to say that his work is a critical, or judging history encompassing singularly harsh judgements of Hindu customs and denouncements of a backward category notable for superstition ignorance and the mistreatment of human.

4184. In the fifth edition of "History of British India" edited by H.H. Wilson, in the preface the editor mentioned something about the knowledge gained by James Mill for writing the said book and has commented on the same as under :

> "He acknowledges that his opportunities of consulting alleged authorities were sometimes transient and precarious, i.e., something unpublished documents of which he had need were not accessible to him; and that in the later portion of his work which may be regarded as almost temporary history, he was in want of much personal information which he believed to accept and might have rendered his narrative richer and perhaps more accurate in matters of detail."

4185. The same editor has further commented about the lack of knowledge of the Country and unacquaintance by James Mill. He has observed "Besides the defects occasioned by incomplete material, the History of British India presumes inaccuracies both of facts and opinion; which have arisen from the author's imperfect knowledge of the Country and unacquaintance with any of the language spoken in it. He has taken great pains to prove that these defects are of no consideration and that he had never been in India and is possessing but a slight and elementary acquaintance with any of the languages of the east are to be regarded rather as qualification than disqualification for the task which he had undertaken. His arguments are ingenious; they will carry conviction but to few. It is true that residence in a Country command of its dilates converseries, with its literature are but humble elements in the formation of the historical character but they are elements and cannot be disregarded without injury to the inconsistencies of incompleteness of the whole. It is also true that there are many circumstances in the position of the servants of the East India Company which are unprofitious to the development and cultivation of the talent and knowledge requisite to constitute a historian of India; but, although these circumstances may counter balance in the individual themselves; observatory benefits derivable from personal observation though do not therefor invalidate the reality of those benefits or render local sketch altogether valueless and may be reservation that no one person of the many who have been engaged in official duty in India or how have earned distinction as oriental scholar has yet brought to the attempt to write a history of India, the same degree of fitness as Mr. Mill; yet it cannot but be felt had Mr. Mill passed but a short time in the Country or been but moderately versed in any ....."

4186. He further wrote, "Acquaintance with the language and literature of India would have resolved Mr. Mill from some other mistaken conclusions. He states it as his conviction that even when he wrote, a sufficient stalk of information had been collected in the languages of Europe to enable and enquirer to ascertain every important point in the history of India. As far as this assertion may be considered applicable to the European part of Indian history. It is inconsistent with the defense history he had himself indicated. It is still more incorrect when applied to the history of the Hindus and Mohammedans of Hindustan. .....In the journals of several Asiatic Societies and the publications of various Hindu scholar's information almost entirely new and of exceed interest has been obtained within the last few years relating to the religion, philosophy and ancient history of Hindus whilst their later forbit ion ..... has been ..... illustrated by the history of Maratha's and Annals of Rajasthan, until, however, some of of the Puranas and the chief portion of the Vedas shall have been translated. It is safe to speculate on the point of scope and character of the primitive institutions of the Hindus and of more recent period, it is still essential to extend investigation in those chronicles of the native States which are known to have existence. ....."

4187. He further observed about prejudices of the author, "Exceptions even more comprehensive may be taken to his opinion. In many incidents, the intensity of his prejudices has dimmed the clarity and has blunted the acquittance of his intelligence."

4188. Then comes "Henry Thomas Colebrooke" who got published several texts, translation and essay of Sanskrit literature. Alexander Hamilton, an Englishmen, who it is said had acquired knowledge of Sanskrit in India happened to be passing through France on his way home in 1802 AD.

4189. The one longest work running in about 50 volumes we got is known as Max Muller "Sacred Books of East". He is better known for his extraordinary work in publication of the series of books under the title "Sacred Books of the East" running in 50 volumes. He was born on 6th December, 1823 in Dessau (Germany). His full name is Friedrich Max Muller. His father Wilhelm Muller, was a romantic poet and his mother Adelheide Muller was the eldest daughter of a Chief Minister of Anhalt-Dessau. He entered Leipzig University in 1841 where he left his early interest in music and poetry in favour of philosophy. He received Ph.D. in 1843 for a dessertation on Spinoz's Ethics. He also displayed an aptitude for languages, learning the Classical languages Greek and Latin, as well as

Arabic, Persian and Sanskrit. In 1844, he went to Berlin to study with Friedrich Schelling. He began to translate the Upanishads for Schelling, and continued to research Sanskrit under Franz Bopp (the gentleman is considered to be a first systemic scholar of the Indo-European languages). Schelling led Muller to relate the history of language to the history of religion. At this time, Muller published his first book, a German translation of the Hitopadesa, a collection of Indian fables.

4190. In 1845, he moved to Paris to study Sanskrit under Eugene Burnouf. It is said that it is Burnouf who encouraged him to translate the complete Reg Veda, using manuscript available in England.

4191. In 1846, Muller moved to England so as to study Sanskrit texts in the collection of the East India Company. For supporting himself, Muller wrote a novel German Love claimed to be popular in those days. His connections with the East India Company and with Sanskritists based at Oxford University led to a career in Britain, where he became the leading intellectual commentator on the culture of India which Britain controlled as part of its Empire at that time. It is said that this led to complex exchanges between Indian and British intellectual culture, especially through Muller's links with the Brahmo Samaj. Muller became a member of Christ Church, Oxford in 1851, when he gave his first series of lectures on comparative philology. He gained appointments as Taylorian Professor of Modern European Languages in 1854 and as Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford. Subsequently in 1860, he was defeated in the competition for the tenured Chair of Sanskrit but later on became Oxford's first Professor of Comparative Theology (1868 – 1875), at All Souls College.

4192. Muller attempted to formulate a philosophy of religion that addressed the crisis of faith engendered by the historical and critical study of religion by German scholars on the one hand, and by the Darwinian revolution on the other. Muller was wary of Darwin's work on human evolution, and attacked his view of the development of human faculties. His work was taken up by cultural commentators such as his friend John Ruskin, who saw it as a productive response to the crisis of the age (compare Matthew Arnold's “Dover Beach”). He analyzed mythologies as rationalizations of natural phenomena, primitive beginnings that we might denominate “protoscience” within a cultural evolution; Muller's "anti-Darwinian" concepts of the evolution of human cultures are among his least lasting achievements.

4193. Muller shared many of the ideas associated with Romanticism, which coloured his account of ancient religions, in particular his emphasis on the formative influence on early religion of emotional communion with natural forces.

4194. Muller's Sanskrit studies came at a time when scholars had started to see language development in relation to cultural development. The recent discovery of the Indo-European (IE) language group had started to lead to much speculation about the relationship between Greco-Roman cultures and those of more ancient peoples. In particular the Vedic culture of India was thought to have been the ancestor of European Classical cultures, and scholars sought to compare the genetically related European and Asian languages in order to reconstruct the earliest form of the root-language. The Vedic

language, Sanskrit, was thought to be the oldest of the IE languages. Muller therefore devoted himself to the study of this language, becoming one of the major Sanskrit scholars of his day. Muller believed that the earliest documents of Vedic culture should be studied in order to provide the key to the development of pagan European religions, and of religious belief in general. To this end, Muller sought to understand the most ancient of Vedic scriptures, the Rig-Veda.

4195. Muller was greatly impressed by Ramakrishna Paramhansa, his contemporary and proponent of Vedantic philosophy, and authored several essays and books on him.

4196. A 1907 study of Muller's inaugural Hibbert Lecture of 1878 was made by one of his contemporaries, D. Menant. It argued that a crucial role was played by Muller and social reformer Behramji Malabari in initiating debate on child marriage and widow remarriage questions in India.

4197. For Muller, the study of the language had to relate to the study of the culture in which it had been used. He came to the view that the development of languages should be tied to that of belief-systems. At that time the Vedic scriptures were little-known in the West, though there was increasing interest in the philosophy of the Upanishads. Muller believed that the sophisticated Upanishadic philosophy could be linked to the primitive henotheism of early Vedic Brahmanism from which it evolved. He had to travel to London in order to look at documents held in the collection of the British East India Company. While there he persuaded the company to allow him to undertake a critical edition of the Rig-Veda, a task he pursued doggedly over many years (1849 - 1874), and which resulted in the critical edition for which he is most remembered.

4198. For Muller, the culture of the Vedic peoples represented a form of nature worship, an idea clearly influenced by Romanticism. He saw the gods of the Rig-Veda as active forces of nature, only partly personified as imagined supernatural persons. From this claim Muller derived his theory that mythology is 'a disease of language'. By this he meant that myth transforms concepts into beings and stories. In Muller's view 'gods' began as words constructed in order to express abstract ideas, but were transformed into imagined personalities. Thus the Indo-European father-god appears under various names: Zeus, Jupiter, Dyaus Pita. For Muller all these names can be traced to the word 'Dyaus', which he understands to imply 'shining' or 'radiance'. This leads to the terms 'deva', 'deus', 'theos' as generic terms for a god, and to the names 'Zeus' and 'Jupiter' (derived from deus-pater). In this way a metaphor becomes personified and ossified. This aspect of Muller's thinking closely resembled the later ideas of Nietzsche.

4199. Nevertheless Muller's work contributed to the developing interest in Aryan culture which set Indo-European ('Aryan') traditions in opposition to Semitic religions. He was deeply saddened by the fact that these later came to be expressed in racist terms. This was far from Muller's own intention. For Muller the discovery of common Indian and European ancestry was a powerful argument against racism, arguing that "an ethnologist who speaks of Aryan race, Aryan blood, Aryan eyes and hair, is as great a sinner as a linguist who speaks of a dolichocephalic dictionary or a brachycephalic grammar" and that "the blackest Hindus represent an earlier stage of Aryan speech and thought than the fairest Scandinavians".

4200. In 1881, he published a translation of the first edition of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason. He agreed with Schopenhauer that this edition was the most direct and honest expression of Kant's thought. His translation corrected several errors that were committed by previous translators. In his Translator's Preface, Muller wrote, "The bridge of thoughts and sighs that spans the whole history of the Aryan world has its first arch in the Veda, its last in Kant's Critique.…While in the Veda we may study the childhood, we may study in Kant's Critique of Pure Reason the perfect manhood of the Aryan mind.…The materials are now accessible, and the English-speaking race, the race of the future, will have in Kant's Critique another Aryan heirloom, as precious as the Veda — a work that may be criticised, but can never be ignored."

4201. Muller's comparative religion was criticized as subversive of the Christian faith. According to Monsignor Munro, the Roman Catholic bishop of St Andrew's Cathedral in Glasgow, his 1888 Gifford Lectures on the "Science of Religion" represented nothing less than "a crusade against divine revelation, against Jesus Christ and Christianity". Similar accusations had already led to Muller's exclusion from the Boden chair in Sanskrit in favour of the conservative Monier Monier-Williams. By the 1880s Muller was being courted by Charles Godfrey Leland, Helena Balvatsky and other writers who were seeking to assert the merits of "Pagan" religious traditions over Christianity. The designer Mary Fraser Tytler stated that Muller's book Chips from a German Workshop (a collection of his essays) was her "Bible", which helped her to create a multi-cultural sacred imagery.

4202. Muller distanced himself from these developments, and remained within the Lutheran faith in which he had been brought up. He several times expressed the view that a "reformation" within Hinduism needed to occur comparable to the Christian Reformation. In his view, "if there is one thing which a comparative study of religions places in the clearest light, it is the inevitable decay to which every religion is exposed... Whenever we can trace back a religion to its first beginnings, we find it free from many blemishes that affected it in its later states". He used his links with the Brahmo Samaj in order to encourage such a reformation on the lines pioneered by Ram Mohan Roy.

4203. He was also influenced by the work Thought and Reality, of the Russian philosopher African Spir.

4204. Munro had argued conversely that Muller's theories "uprooted our idea of God, for it repudiated the idea of a personal God." He made "divine revelation simply impossible, because it [his theory] reduced God to mere nature, and did away with the body and soul as we know them." Muller remained profoundly influenced by the Kantian Transcendentalist model of spirituality, and was opposed to Darwinian ideas of human development, arguing that "language forms an impassable barrier between man and beast."

The translation of the Veda will hereafter tell to a great extent on the fate of India and on the growth of millions of souls in that country. It is the root of their religion, and to show them what the root is, I feel sure, is the only way of uprooting all that has sprung from it during the last 3000 years.

4208. His wife, Georgina Adelaide (died 1916) had his papers and correspondence carefully bound; they are at the Bodleian Library, Oxford. The Goethe Institutes in India are named Max Muller Bhavan in his honour.

4210. Maurice Bloomfield born on 23rd February, 1855 in Bielitz (Polish:Bielsko), in what was at that time Austrian Silesia (today it is in Poland). Went to the United States in 1867 and graduated from Furman University, Greenville, South Carolina in 1877. Thereafter he studied Sanskrit at Yale, under W.D. Whitney. He stayed at Berlin and Leipzig for about two years and in 1881 returned as Associate Professor at Johns Hopkins University and was promoted soon as Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology. In 1896 Princeton University bestowed the LL.D. degree upon him. He was considered as a Sanskrit Scholar and was an American Philologist. He translated for Max Muller's Sacred Books of the East, the "Hymns of the Atharva-Veda (1897)"; contributed to the section "Atharva-Veda and gopatha Brahmana (1899)". He was first to edit "Kauika-Sutra (1890)" and in 1907 published in the Harvard Oriental Series, "A Vedic Concordance". In 1905 he published Cerberus, the Dog of Hades, a study in comparative mythology. "The Religion of the Veda" appeared in 1908; "Life and Stories of the Jaina Savior Parasvanatha" and "Rig Veda Repetitions" in 1916. He died on 12th June, 1928.

4211. Macdonell, Arthur Anthony in his book "History of Sanskrit Literature (1900)" has said:

> "Hostalities breaking out afresh just then, a decree of Napoleon, directed against all Englishmen in the country, kept Hamilton a prisoner in Paris. During his long involuntary stay in that city he taught Sanskrit to some French scholars, and especially to the German romantic

poet Friedrich Schlegel. One of the results of these studies was the publication by Schlegel of his work "On the Language and Wisdom of the Indians (1808)". This book produced nothing less than a revolution in the science of language by the introduction on the cooperative and the historical method. It led to the foundation of the science of cooperative philology by Franz Bopp in his treatise on the conjugational system of Sanskrit in comparison with that of Greek, Latin, Persian and German (1816). Schlegel's work, moreover, aroused so much zeal for the study of Sanskrit in Germany, that the vast progress made since his day in this branch of learning has been mainly due to the labours of his countrymen."

4212. Macdonall has appreciated the importance of Ancient Indian Literature in the following words:

www.vadaprativada.com

"The importance of ancient Indian literature as a whole largely consists in its originality. Naturally isolated by its gigantic mountain barrier in the north, the Indian peninsula has ever since the Aryan invasion formed a world apart, over which a unique form of Aryan civilization rapidly spread, and has ever since prevailed. When the Greeks, towards the end of the 4th century BC, invaded the North-West, the Indians had already fully worked out a national cultural and their own, unaffected by foreign influences. And, inspite of successive waves of invasion and conquest by Persian, Greeks, Scythians, Muhammadans, the national development of the life and literature of Indo-Aryan race remained practically unchecked and unmodified from without down to the era of British occupation. No other branch of the Indo-European stock as experienced an isolated evolution like this. No other country except China can trace back its language and literature, its religious beliefs and rites, its customs and social customs, through an uninterrupted development of more than three thousand years.

A few examples will serve to illustrate this remarkable continuity in Indian civilization. Sanskrit is still spoken as the tongue of the learned by thousands of Brahmans, as it was centuries before our era. Nor has it ceased to be used for literary purposes, for many books and journals written in ancient language are still produced. The copying of Sanskrit Manuscripts is still continued in hundred of libraries in India, uninterrupted even by the introduction of printing during present century. The Vedas are still learnt by heart as they were long before the invasion of Alexander, and could even now be restored from the lips of religious teachers if every manuscript or printed copy of them were destroyed. ... The God Vishnu, adored more than 3000 years ago, has countless votaries in India at the present day."

4213. Arthur A. Macdonall was a professor of Sanskrit and fellow of Balliol at Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

4214. The F. Rosen, a German Scholar got published his work on Rig-veda which actually was brought out in 1838, shortly after his premature death. But in 1846 Rudolf Roth who is called the "Founder of Vedic Philology" published "On the Literature and the History of the Veda" in 1846.

4215. "Ancient Indian Historical Tradition" by F.E.

Pargiter was first published in 1922. Pargiter was a member of Indian Civil Service and retired from the office of Judge, High Court Calcutta. He sought to examine Puranik and Epic tradition as well as of the Rig-veda and Vedic literature to find out the Ancient Indian History. In his preface dated March, 1922 at Oxford he said that the current view about Ancient India is held by the scholars based upon an examination of Veda and Vedic literature but to the neglect of Puranic and Epic tradition. According to him the view of the scholars at that time was that Ancient Indian History has been fashioned out of compositions which are purely religious and priestly, which notoriously do not deal with history, and which totally lack the historical sense. Justifying his approach Pargiter said that it began with the study of the Epics and Puranas for Geographical information about Ancient India 30 years ago, during the translation of Markandaya Purana in order to elucidate its Geographical chapters. Geography included political divisions and lead to an examination of Ancient Kingdoms and so on to their dynastic genealogies and traditions-subjects that were generally regarded as of little or no historical value, and were practically included. He considered the views expressed in Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Journal of Asiatic Society of Bengal and Journal of America Oriental Society. He tried to find out the order of Rishis from the tradition by finding out the Chronological research from the publication “Rig-veda Repetitions” by Professor Maurice Bloomfield. He started with the preconceived notion that the evidence of language shows that Aryans entered into very early and established themselves ultimately throughout North India and in the North West of the Deccan (South).

4216. We may clarify that neither we have any intention to make adverse comments against anyone nor we would like to condemn outright what these gentleman have done. We appreciate and acclaim their work irrespective of the reason, motive or objective. We cannot lose sight of the fact that their initiative in making the vedic texts known to public at large by translating it in English ultimately has got before us the various facets of such a rich literature which otherwise might have not known. It is their diligence which has moved the world and has generated inquest to go for further study and research in this literature. For our purposes we only intend to say that while considering the religious old dispute between the two communities in respect whereto the members of third community, may be in the capacity of their official position or otherwise, have written something which has been relied or disputed by one or the other side in one or the other way, we have to exercise due care and caution in reading and understanding their contents. The facts as stated or noticed by these authorities if taken on their face value may result if not in a mistake, then a blunder.

4217. Though learned counsels appearing for Hindu parties have commenced their submissions placing before us the Hindu Scriptures starting from Rigveda, the first book said to have been handed over by lord Brahma to Manu and thereafter several vedic and other literature but with respect to the material, which directly reflects upon the issue identifying the disputed site with the place of birth of lord Rama, we find a clear mention of these facts in the certain traverller'a account written after 1600 A.D. as well as the gazetteers published in

18th and 19th Century onwards. The travellers account mainly relied in this regard are that Willium Finch, who visited Ayodhya between 1607 to 1611, Father Joseph Tieffenthaler between 1740 to 1760 and Minouchi which we have already reproduced while discussing the issues relating to date of construction.

4218. The History of Ayodhya as contained in various gazetteers has been placed before us in detail. Some of the part thereof we have referred to while discussing the issues relating to date of construction of the disputed building. However, regarding the issue as to the birthplace of Lord Rama at the disputed site, we may place on record the part of the gazetteers placed before us to buttress the submissions by the learned counsels for the Hindu parties. The first gazetteer is that of Walter Hamilton, first published in1828 (reproduced in 1993 published by Low Price Publications, Delhi under the title "East India Gazetter" containing particular descriptions of the Empires, Kingdoms, Principalities, provinces, cities, towns, districts, fortresses, harbours, rivers, lakes and, C. of Hindostan and the adjacent Countries, India beyond the Ganges and the eastern Archipelago. Before us is the second edition in two volumes bound in one. On page 348 under the heading 'Oude' (Ayodhya), it gives the following details :

(Ayodhya.)

This is one of the smallest provinces of Hindostan Proper, and is situated principally between the twenty-sixth and twenty-eighth degrees of north latitude. To the north it is bounded by various petty districts tributary to Nepaul,

from which it is separated by a range of hills and forests; to the south by Allahabad; on the east it has Bahar, and on the west Delhi and Agra. In length it may be estimated at 250 miles, by 100 the average breadth. The whole surface of this province is level, and extremely well watered by large rivers or copious streams which intersect the country, flowing all nearly in a south-east direction. When properly cultivated the land is extremely productive, yielding crops of wheat, barley, rice, and other grains; sugar-cane, indigo, poppies for opium, and all the richest articles raised in India. The air and climate are suited to the spontaneous generation of nitre, from the brine of which an impure culinary salt is procured by evaporation. Lapis lazuli is also a mineral production of Oude. The modern subdivisions are the same as the ancient, detailed by Abul Fazal in A.D. 1582. Of these Lucknow, Fyzabad, Khyrabad, Baraitche, with a section of Maniepoor, compose the king of Oude's reserved dominions, while the district of Goruepoor belongs to his British allies. The principal rivers are the Ganges which bound it to the west; the Goggra, and the Goomty; the chief towns are Lucknow, Fyzabad, Oude, Khyrabad, Baraitche, and Tanda.

The Hindoo inhabitants of Oude, Banares, and the Doab of the Agra province, are a very superior race, both in their bodily strength and mental faculties, to those of Bengal and the districts south of Calcutta, although the latter have fully as much acuteness, and more cunning. The Rajpoots or military class here generally exceed Europeans in stature have robust frames, and are possessed of many valuable qualities in a military point of view. From the long predominance of the Mahomedans a considerable proportion of the inhabitants profess that religion, and from both persuasions a great number of the Company's best sepoys are procured. Their martial habits were kept on the alert, for until the supervision of Oude was assumed by the British government the whole region was in a state of political anarchy. Every individual travelled with the prospect of having to defend himself against robbers, or of exercising that vocation himself, for both of which events he was provided. The peasantry sowed and reaped with their swords and spears, ready for defence or plunder, as the occasion offered; and the rents were collected by an irregular banditti, under the denomination of an army, which devastated the country it pretended to protect.

Oude is much celebrated in Hindoo history as the kingdom of Dasaratha, the father of the great Rama, who extended his empire to the island of Ceylon, which he also subdued. At an early period after the first invasion it was subdued by the Mahomedans, and remained, with different vicissitudes, attached to the throne of Delhi, until the dissolution of the Mogul empire after the death of Aurangzabe. The first ancestor upon record of the reigning family was Saadat Khan, a native of Rishapoor, in Khorasan, who was appointed soubahdar of Oude during the reign of Mohemed Shah. He was succeeded by his nephew Safdar Jung, who died in A.D. 1756, when the throne was acceded by his son Shuja ud Dowlah, who reigned until 1775. On his decease his son, Asoph ud

Dowlah, became his successor, and reigned until 1797, when the dignity was for a short time usurped by a spurious son named Vizier Ali, whose illegitimacy being discovered, he was dethroned by Lord Teignmouth, and the government confided to Baadet Ali, the late nabob's brother, who was proclaimed visier of Hindostan and nabob of Oude the 21st January 1798.

In A.D. 1790 the dominions of Oude occupied all the flat country lying on both sides of Ganges (with the exception of Rampoor) between that river and the northern mountains; as also the principal portion of the fertile tract between the Ganges and Jamna named the Doab, to within forty miles of Delhi. Ever since the pacification between Lord Clive and Shuja ud Dowlah, in 1765, this territory had been protected from external enemies, its internal peace preserved, and its dominions extended by the assistance of a British subsidiary force, the expense of which was defrayed by the nabobs of Oude. Subsequent to the breaking out of the French revolution the exigence of the times compelled a large augmentation of this standing army, and the disbursements increased proportionally; but owing to the mismanagement of the nabob's financial concerns an uncertainty attended its regular payment, although his revenues, under a proper administration, were not only equal to all the necessary expenditure, but capable, as the result verified, of realizing an enormous surplus. By a fatality attending the British influence in Hindostan, it was frequently obliged, in consequence of remote treaties, to maintain on the throne weak and

profligate princes, who without that support would, in the natural progression of events, have been supplanted by some more able competitors. Their dominions in the mean time suffered by their vices, and their subjects were abandoned to the capacity of the unprincipled associates of their low pleasures, who by their cruelty and extortion depopulated the country, and drove the inhabitants to a state of desperation. These observations more especially applied to the Oude territories during the long reign of Asoph ud Dowlah, and as an opportunity now occurred, the members of the Bengal presidency deemed it a duty imposed on them to endeavor to procure for the natives a better system of government, and at the same time remove the uncertainty which attended the payment of the subsidiary force.

In 1807 an extraordinary intrigue was discovered, in which Saadet Ali's second brother, commonly called Mirza Jungly, was implicated, which terminated in his removal from Lucknow to Patna. In 1808 the celebrated eunuch Almas Ali Khan died, on which event his wealth, which was considerable, was claimed both by the Bhow Begum (the nabob's mother) and by the nabob. The first grounded her pretensions on the circumstances of Almas Ali having been her servant; while the latter asserted that all the property having been acquired in the service of the Oude sovereignty, and from the resources of the country, the reigning prince was the legitimate heir of a person who could have no natural ones, and in this view of the subject he was supported by the supreme Government. Besides

this, many other petty and vexatious disputes arose between the two begums and the nabob, who always evinced a strong disinclination to employ British troops in suppressing the disturbances that occasionally broke out in the jaghires of the Bhow Begum, the younger Begum, and other persons under the direct protection of the British government; indeed he seemed to have no desire that they should be suppressed by any means. According to the construction of subsisting treaties, it did not appear that any other measures on the part of that government were admissible beyond those of remonstrance, and the resident was directed to endeavour to convince his excellency of the impolicy, as well as injustice, of countenancing disturbances within the lands of his jaghiredars and the danger to which the general tranquility of his country would be exposed, not to mention the injury his own reputation would sustain by tolerating insurrection within the limits of his own dominions.

Such, exclusive of some petty insurrections of reminders, were the principal causes of internal irritation. With his powerful allies of Bengal, various collusion of interest and authority took place, for the British functionaries on his frontier, after several years' experience, found that all their applications to the nabob for the apprehension of offenders who had sought refuge within his territories, almost invariably failed of success. Although on these occasions this potentate issued strict orders to his officers, they were either mere matters of form, or so considered by the persons to whom they were addressed. Of these two conclusions the latter seemed the most probable, as it would have greatly derogated from his excellency's character to have supposed him indifferent to the bringing of public offenders to justice, or that the orders issued by him on such occasions were not intended to be authoritative. Yet, when the feeble and inefficient system of all native administration is considered, it might reasonably be doubted whether he in reality possessed a degree of control over his officers sufficient to enforce their obedience, especially as the granting of an asylum within jurisdictions of offenders constituted a regular source of their profits.

On some occasions the nabob evinced a favourable disposition, by permitting British troops to act within his territories for the express purpose of apprehending delinquents; but at other times he proved restive, and withheld his consent without assigning any reason. The inconveniences resulting from this line of conduct, and the obstruction it occasioned to the due administration of justice within the British districts contiguous to those of Oude, were such, that one of the first stipulations entered into with his successor, authorized the British magistrates to pursue and seize public offenders within the reserved dominions of Oude. The interior management of Saadet Ali's territories was also extremely defective, and he was repeatedly urged by the Bengal government to adopt a line of conduct more creditable to himself, and more consistent with the obligations of existing treaties; but in vain, for although at one time he had given his consent to a reform,

he afterwords retracted it; and as no hopes of success could be entertained from any further endeavours, short of compulsion, the further prosecution of the original arrangement was desisted from, and all attempts at a modification were put an end to by his unexpected death.

In 1801 a treaty was concluded, by the conditions of which certain districts yielding a gross annual revenue of 1,35,23,274 rupees, were ceded to the British government*, in commutation of subsidy and of every other claim whatever. It was further stipulated, that until the formation of a commercial treaty, mutually beneficial, the navigation of the Ganges and of all the other boundary rivers of the two states should remain free and uninterrupted. When these arrangements were concluded, Saadet Ali assumed the uncontrolled management of his reserved territories, and being a man of abilities greatly superiors to the generality of native princes, and habitually disposed to business, he retained the conducting of the affairs of government under his own immediate direction until his death.*

This event happened on the 11th July 1814, when he was suddenly taken ill, and expired before medical assistance could be procured, supposed from apoplexy, or the bursting of a blood-vessel. On this emergency every necessary precaution was taken by the resident, and the occasion of the nabob Ghazi ud Deen Hyder took place without the smallest interruption or disturbance. He confirmed all the subsisting treaties; acceded with apparent alacrity to the adjustment of many questions long

pending with the British government; and, agreeably to the course followed on the accession of his father, Saadet Ali, assumed the title of vizier, without any reference to the Mogul at Delhi. In 1814 and 1815 he lent the British government two crores of rupees at six per cent*., exhibiting the novel spectacle of a native prince a creditor of the British government to an amount exceeding to millions sterling, and regularly receiving the interest thereon. At a subsequent period the transfer of the terriana, or low country, acquired from the Nepaulese, was made the means of redeeming one of the crores borrowed.*

For almost half a century the British government had been endeavouring to prevail on the sovereigns of Oude to establish an improved system of administration, especially in revenue matters, within their hereditary dominions, but uniformly without success. The accession of Ghazi ud Deen held out another opportunity, and at the recommendation of the British government tehsildars (native collectors), with a commission of ten per cent., were appointed, with a view of making a triennial settlement to ascertain the resources of the nabob's dominions, and fix the principles on which a future and permanent settlement should be made. Nazims (native judicial officers) were also appointed for the distribution of justice. With these measures, however, the nabob being very soon dissatisfied, he superseded them, and promulgated regulations of his own, the result of which threatened an extraordinary defalcation of the instalments for the approaching year, and a recurrence to the system of farming as established in the time of his father. Since that distant period (1814) to the present day (1827) nothing has occurred to shew that any improved revenue and judicial system has been seriously contemplated, far less established. Recently, indeed, his majesty has admitted the expediency of abolishing the farming system, and has expressed his willingness to introduce gradually the plan of collecting the revenue through officers immediately responsible to government for the amount of their actual collections, but no overt act towards the carrying of this scheme into execution has as yet taken place.

Under an Indian prince the department of acbar (intelligence) is a system of esplouage, which pervaded every district of this country, as well as the court and capital, during the life-time of Saadet Ali, and furnished daily grounds for the imprisonment of some subject or servant with a view to confiscation and forfeiture. The expense of it is nearly equal to an efficient police, and the channels of corruption and oppression which it opens, by encouraging false accusations, are destructive to the morals of the people and of the safety of their property, as well as of the true interests of the sovereign. On the accession of Ghazi ud Deen the acbar establishment was abolished, but the system is so congenial to the habits and principles of native chiefs, and to the personal character of the reigning king, that he soon revived it. At the earnest solicitation of the British government, soon after the commencement of his reign, he appointed ostensib's ministers for the transaction of public business; but in process of time, after much wavering and inconsistency, the arrangement terminated, first in their suspension, and afterwords in their dismissal. The inherent fickleness of the nabob's disposition, his ready and implicit belief in the scandalous reports of his news-writers, and of the intriguing persons around him, destroy the confidence and subvert the authority of his ministers, and preclude the beneficial exercise of any one of their functions, so that if one set retire or be dismissed, a similar state of affairs within a short period of time will be produced with respect to their successors.

On the 9th of October 1810 Ghazi ud Deen, the reigning nabob, renounced all titular subservience to the throne of Delhi, assuming the title of king instead of vizier of Oude, and issuing at the same time a new currency, impressed with his own name and legend, but of the same weight and standard as before. This change was cheerfully acquiesced in by the British government, whose interest it was to detach the rich and populous province of Oude from all subordination to the Mogul empire, or sympathy with the Mussulman cause generally. On this occasion the ex-nabob assumed many pompous titles, such as "king of the age," and "king conqueror of infidels," hitherto peculiar to the house of Timour, and not at all creditable to his majesty's common sense, or complimentary to his infidel allies. While the Marquis of Hastings was Governor-general he used to address that nobleman and the British government figuratively as his uncle, and the reply was addressed to the nabob as nephew; but so much familiarity appearing inconsistent with his augmentation of dignity, he requested the form might be abrogated, which was done accordingly, and he is now addressed as Ghazi ud Deen Hyder Shah (Padshahi Oude, king of Oude). In 1827 he lent the British government a crore of rupees.

The reserved territories of Oude occupy an area of about 21,000 square miles, and contain a population of at least three millions ; but the sovereignty is too dependent on the British government to be regarded as one of the political states of Hindostan*. On account of a defective system the revenue derived from such an extent of fertile country is very inferior to what it might be made to produce under a more enlightened system of taxation; but the income of the Oude sovereigns is to be estimated rather negatively than positively, rather from the absence of taxation than the magnitude of the receipts; for being relieved by their alliance with the British government from all external alarms, and having no funds or national debt, their expenses are merely fiscal and personal; and without diminishing the splendour of his court or the comfort of his style of living. Ghazi ud Deen might, with the alightest attention, annually lay aside (as was supposed to have been done by his father, Saadet Ali) half a million sterling--(Public MS. Documents, Marquis of Hastings, Major Baillie, Guthrie, Rennell, & c.)*

4219. The above discription from the face of it relates to Oudh as 'Province' as it stood at that time. The township of 'Oudh' has been narrated later on at page 353 onwards under the heading "Oude" and states:

"OUDE.--The ancient capital of the province of Oude, situated on the south side of the Goggra, seventy nine miles east from Lucknow; lat, 26^0 48′ N., lon. 82^0 4′ E. By Abul Fazel in 1582 it is described as follows. "Oude is one of the largest cities of Hindostan. In ancient times this city is said to have measured 148 coss in length and thirty-six coss in breadth. Upon sifting the earth which is round this city small grains of gold are sometimes found in it. This town is esteemed one of the most sacred places of antiquity."

4220. Dr. Buchanan was appointed to make a survey of the area within the reign of East India Company in early 19th century by an order of Lord Wellesley. Between 1807 to 1814 Dr. Buchanan surveyed the area which mainly consisted of Bengal, Bihar and Eastern part of the present U.P. including Ayodhya and sent his documents to the Head Office of the Company in London in 1816 but could not complete his report. Subsequently, it was studied by Robert Montgomery Martin, an official of the Company at London and he got published "Eastern India" in 1838 (supra) wherein the details of Oudh were mentioned in Vol. II, pages no. 331 to 337. The relevant extract of this book we have already quoted above in para 1600 of this judgment while discussing the issues relating to the person and period-who and when constructed the disputed building.

Descriptions of "Oudh" given by Sri Thornton on page 739 (Ex.5 Suit 5) was placed before us to show that it mentions about a Temple at Janamsthan, demolished for constructing mosque on the site.

4222. From preface of the book it does appear that the General Courts of the East India Company authorised 'Edward Thornton', Esq. to compile and publish an authentic Gazetteer of India. The said author had already prepared a "Gazetteer of India" in 1854 in four volumes. Thereafter under the authority of the Court of Directors of East India Company compiled a single volume of "Gazetteer of the Territories under the East India Company and of the native States on the continent of India". The book does not give any information about Edward Thornton, namely, about his qualifications, position he held at that time etc. The book which has been placed before the Court mentioned that it was first published in 1858 and reprinted in 4224. Thereafter again on page 739 (Ex.5 Suit-5) under the same title, namely, "OUDE" it has given the details of the town which we understand and also not disputed by the parties as to that referred to Ayodhya. The entire description of Oude town (Ayodhya) in the aforesaid Gazetteer 1858 by Thornton is as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

"OUDE.--A town in the kingdom of the same name. It is situate on the right bank of the river Ghogra, which Buchanan considers here to be "fully larger than the Ganges at Chunar," and which is navigable downwards to its mouth, upwards to Mundiya Ghaut, in the district of Bareilly. It extends about a mile in a south-east direction, from the adjoining recent city of Fyzabad; the breadth of the town is something less from north-east to south-west, or from the river landwards. The greater part of the site is on gently-swelling eminences; but to the north-west, or towards Fyzabad, is low. Most of the houses are of mud, and thatched, though a few are tiled. Here, in a large building a mile from the river, is an extensive establishment, called Hanumangurh, or Fort of Hanuman,

in honour of the fabled monkey-god the auxiliary of Rama. It has an annual revenue of 50,000 rupees, settled on it by Shuja-ud-daulah, formerly Nawaub Vizier. It is managed by a Malik or abbot, the spiritual superior; and the revenues are dispensed to about 500 bairagis or religious ascetics, and other Hindoo mendicants of various descriptions; no Mussulman being allowed within the walls. Other establishments of similar character are Sugrimkilla, Ram-Parshad-Ka-Kana, and Bidiya-Kund; maintaining respectively 100, 250 and 200 bairagis. Close to the town on the east, and on the right bank of the Ghogra, are extensive ruins, said to be those of the fort of Rama, king of Oude, hero of the Ramayana, and otherwise highly celebrated in the mythological and romantic legends of India. Buchanan observes, "that the heaps of bricks, although much seems to have been carried away by the river, extend a great way; that is, more than a mile in length, and more than half a mile in width; and that, although vast quantities of meterials have been removed to build the Mahomedan Ayodha or Fyzabad, yet the ruins in many parts retain a very considerable elevation; nor is there any reason to doubt that the structure to which they belonged has been very great, when we consider that it has been ruined for above 2,000 years." The ruins still bear the name of Ramgurh, or "Fort or Rama;" the most remarkable spot in which is that from which, according to the legend, Rama took his flight to heaven, carrying with him the people of his city; in consequence of which it remained desolate until repeopled by Vikramaditya, king of Oojein, half a century before the Christian era, and by him embellished with 360 temples. Not the smallest traces of these temples, however, now remain; and according to native tradition, they were demolished by Aurungzebe, who built a mosque on part of the site. The falsehood of the tradition is, however, proved by an inscription on the wall of the mosque, attributing the work to the conqueror Baber, from whome Aurungzabe was fifth in descent. The mosque is embellished with fourteen columns of only five or six feet in height, but of very elaborate and tasteful workmanship, said to have been taken from the ruins of the Hindoo fanes, to which they had been given by the monkey-general Hanuman, who had brought them from Lanka or Ceylon. Altogether, however, the remains of antiquity in the vicinity of this renowned capital must give a very low idea of the state of arts and civilization of the Hindoos at a remote period. A quadrangular coffer of stone, whitewashed, five ells long, four broad, and protruding five or six inches above ground, is pointed out as the cradle in which Rama was born, as the seventh avatar of Vishnu; and is accordingly abundantly honoured by the pilgrimages and devotions of the Hindoos*.* Ayodha or Oude is considered by the best authorities to be the most ancient city in Hindostan; *and Prinsep mentions that some of its coins in the cabinet of the Asiatic Society of Bengal are of such extreme antiquity that the characters in which their legends are graven are totally unknown. princes of all other Indian countries are sprung." Buchanan conjectures that it was founded by Brahmins, whom he considers as an immigrant race, more advanced in civilization than the indigenous Indians. "These personages came from western Asia, introducing with them the Sanskrit language, generally admitted to be radically the same with the Persian dialect; while the languages spoken among all the rude tribes that inhabit the fastnesses of India, and which are, probably, remains of its ancient tongue, have no sort of analogy to the languages of the West." This author supposes the city to have been founded by Vaiwaswata, one of this race, about 1,366 years before the Christian era. He considers that its renowned rule Rama perished A.C. 775, involved in the destruction of his city by the hostile confederacy of his sons; that being rebuilt, it suffered a similar fate under the reign of Vridhabala, A.C. 512; and having lain from centuries desolate, was rebuilt A.C. 57, by Vikramaditya, the celebrated king of Oojein. Tod, however, and Wilford, fond of large numbers, place the foundation of Ayodha in an era more than 2,000 years B.C. The former writer states, without comment, a tradition that Lucknow, distant eighty miles from the present city of Oude, was formerly one of its suburbs. The great decline of Oude is of comparatively recent date, as it is described in the Ayeen Akbery as one of the largest cities of Hindostan; and it is farther stated, "In ancient times this city is said to have measured 148 cose [perhaps 200 miles] in length, and thirtysix cose in breadth. It is esteemed one of the most 4225. "Archaeological Survey Of India Four Reports Made During the Years 1862-63-64-65" by Alexander Cunningham, Director General of the Archaeological Survey of India, first edition published in 1871, reprinted in 2000; (Book No. 43) (hereinafter referred to as "Cunningham's Report, 1871") dealt with Ayodhya from page 317 to 327. Ex. 6, Suit-5 (Register Vol. 20 Page 25-34) is a photocopy of the map i.e. Plate XLIX taken from Archaeological Survey of India Four Report 1862-63-64-65 Vol. 1 by Alexander Cunningham. It is sought to be pointed out that in the aforesaid map the disputed place in Ayodhya has been shown as Janam Sthan and there is no mention of any mosque existing when the said report was prepared. We find that in the aforesaid map Sarayu, Lakshmana Ghat, Janam Asthan, Hanuman Garhi, Mani-Parbat and tombs of Seth and Job are shown. From Pages 27-34 of Register Vol.20 are the photocopies of the pages No.320 to 327 of Vol.I of Alexander Cunningham's report i.e. Paper No.107C1/13-16A i.e. Ex.6, Suit-5. It also gives some description of the birth place temple of Rama, and other details. However, he mistook the city of "Visakha" described by "Hwen Thsang" or "Sha-chi" referred to by "Fa Hian" same as the Saket or Ayodhya. This

identification has not been found correct in the subsequent reports.

4226. Cunningham, before embarking upon the aforesaid work, it appears, submitted a memorandum proposing investigation of the archaeological remains of upper India and it's comments in respect to the work done till then regarding ancient history was mostly unreliable having been prepared cursorily or without any proper investigation. It would be useful to refer to his own comments contained on page III and IV of the Preface as under :

> "During the one hundred years of British dominion in India, the Government has done little or nothing towards the preservation of its ancient monuments, which, in the almost total absence of any written history, form the only reliable sources of information as to the early condition of the country. Some of these monuments have already endured for ages, and are likely to last for ages still to come; but there are many others which are daily suffering from the effects of time, and which must soon disappear altogether, unless preserved by the accurate drawings and faithful descriptions of the archaeologist,
>
> " All that has hitherto been done towards the illustration of ancient Indian history has been due to the unaided efforts of private individuals. These researches consequently have always been desultory and unconnected and frequently incomplete, owing partly to the short stay which individual officers usually make at any particular place, and partly to the limited leisure which could be devoted to such pursuits.

www.vadaprativada.com

" Hitherto the Government has been chiefly occupied with the extension and consolidation of empire, but the establishment of the Trigonometrical Survey shews that it has not been unmindful of the claims of science. It would redound equally to the honor of the British Government to institute a careful and systematic investigation of all the existing monuments of ancient India."

4227. He also gave a guiding factor, which he would follow stating that the footsteps of Chinese pilgrim Hwen Thsang would be the basis of his investigation as is evident from the following :

" In describing the ancient geography of India, the elder Pliny, for the sake of clearness, follows the footsteps of Alexander the Great. For a similar reason, in the present proposed investigation, I would follow the footsteps of the Chinese pilgrim Hwen Thsang, who, in the seventh century of our era, traversed India from west to east and back again for the purpose of visiting all the famous sites of Buddhist history and tradition. In the account of his travels, although the Buddhist remains are described in most detail with all their attendant legends and traditions, yet the numbers and appearance of the Brahmanical temples are also noted, and the travels of the Chinese pilgrim thus hold the same place in the history of India, which those of Pausanias hold in the history of Greece."

4228. It is this memorandum of Cunningham, which was forwarded for appointment by the Governor General of India in Council on 22nd January 1862.

4229. From the Chapter "Introduction" of Cunningham's

report, 1871, it would appear as to what was the earlier historical literature available to the English historians which was considered and available to Cunningham and other persons who had written Indian history and in particular the ancient. Just in brief, we propose to refer hereat the material, which was considered by Cunningham in his report so as to give an idea about its authenticity, correctness etc. and the depth of his study. Cunningham has admitted the commencement of work with the foundation of Asiatic Society of Bengal in 1784 by Sir William Jones having its first member Warren Hastings and Charles Wilkins who claimed themselves to be the first Englishman having acquired knowledge of Sanskrit and cut with his own hands the first Devanagari and Bengali types.

4230. As already noted Jones translated Sanskrit literature, namely, Sakuntala" and the institutes of Manu. His first work was to establish a systematic and uniform system of orthography for the transcription of Oriental languages, which, with a very few modifications, has since been generally adopted. It was followed by several essays- On Musical Modes- on the origin of the game of chess, which he traced to India and -On the Lunar Year of the Hindus and their Chronology. In his last paper he made the identification of Chandra-Gupta with Sandrakottos. He also suggested that Palibothra or Pataliputra, the capital of Sandrakottos, must be Patna and the Son River, which joins Ganges only a few miles above Patna, was also known as "Hiranyabahu" or the "golden-armed," which once re-called the Erranoboas of Arrian.

4231. William Jones died in 1794 resulting in disruption of the work he started. However, it was taken over by the Henry

www.vadaprativada.com

Colebrooke, who completed "Digest of Hindu Law", which was left unfinished by Jones. In the meantime, Charles Wilkins had translated several inscriptions in the first and second volumes of Asiatic Researches, but after the death of Jones, communication with him stopped. Some work by writing a paper on "Hindu astronomy cycle of Jupiter" was performed by Samuel Davis.

4232. An Engineer Officer, Francis Wilford said to be a Sanskrit scholar, commenced his work "Essay on the comparative Geography of India" but could not finish it due to his death though his said unfinished work was published in 1851.

4233. Henry Colebrooke referred above had a good knowledge of Sanskrit language. Besides translations of Visala Deva's inscriptions on the Delhi pillar and a few others he wrote "Essay on the Vedas," giving for the first time a full and accurate account of the sacred volumes of the Hindus to Europeans. He also wrote Essay on the Sanskrit and Prakrit languages; on the Philosophy of the Hindus; on the Indian and Arabian divisions of the Zodiac; on the notions of Hindu astronomers concerning the Precession; and on the Algebra of Brahma Gupta and Bhaskara. He left India in 1815 but continued with his studies and essays till his death, i.e., 10th of March 1837.

4234. The survey conducted by Dr. Buchanan (subsequently took the name of Hamilton) between 1807 to 1814, as already said, was ultimately published and edited by Sir Montgomery Martin in 1838.

4235. Around 1815 Horace Hayman Wilson became

www.vadaprativada.com

Secretary of the Asiatic Society. He translated “Megha-duta” of Kalidasa. In 1819, he got published “Sanskrit Dictionary” and in 1827 “Hindu Theatre”. Besides, he also translated stories from Sanskrit and of some episodes from Mahabharata. In 1825 he published an essay on the Hindu history of Kashmir but returned to England in 1833 where he continued with his Oriental studies. His two principal works are an account of the coins and antiquities of Afghanistan, contained in “Ariana Antiqua” and his translation of “Rig-Veda”.

4236. From 1833 to 1837 translation of some important inscriptions was provided by "Dr. Mill" considered to be "Sanskrit Scholar". Then comes "James Prinsep", said to be responsible for partial decipherment of the Arian Pali legends of the Bactrian Greek coins as well as decipherment of the Indian Pali legends of the coins of Surashtra, decipherment and translation of the edicts of Asoka on the pillars at Delhi and Allahabad. He was also in the process of decipherment of some other inscriptions etc. but fell ill hence returned to England and died on 22.07.1840. The work of Prinsep paved way and caused a great momentum to Indian Archaeology which was continued by "James Fergusson", "Markham Kittoe", "Mr. Edward Thomas", and by "Cunningham" in Northern India; "Sir Walter Elliot" in Southern India; and "Colonel Meadows Taylor", "Dr. Stevenson" and "Dr. Bhau Daji" in Western India.

4237. Cunningham noticed that from 1784 i.e. from the foundation of Asiatic Society by Sri William Jones till 1834 the Archaeological researches in India had been primarily literary besides a few notable exceptions. It had been confined to translations of books and inscriptions, with brief notes of the

some of the principal building at Delhi and Agra and other well known places. Exceptions are the essays by "Hones", "Wilford", "Colebrooke" and "Wilson" on the religion, the geography and the astronomy of the Hindus. He said that "True history was then but little known, and the lying gabble of Brahmans, which connected every place with the wanderings of Rama or the exile of the five Pandus, was accepted as the real voice of genuine tradition." It is claimed that the Masson's researches in Kabul Valley, Ventura's Court's explorations in Punjab, Cunningham's excavation of stupa at Sarnath, Banaras and of the ruins around gave some idea about the unknown Indian history. However, the facts available were found to be bare and unconnected, mere fossil fragments of the great skeleton of lost Indian history, though the entire skeleton yet was not available, but, the researchers thought to have got a complete or a fair knowledge of the general outline and of the various forms which it had assumed at different period. In this regard, the first archaeological publication was made by "James Fergusson", i.e., "Rock-cut temples of India, 1845". However, in respect to determination of period of the work, Fergusson was not very certain and of the view that inscriptions will not certainly by themselves answer the purpose. Cunningham, however, diferred with him on this aspect and said that "inscriptions are beyond all doubt, the most certain and the most trustworthy authority for determining the dates of Indian monuments, whether buildings or caves."

4238. Cunningham demonstrated the error in calculation of the period by referring to caves of Kanhari in Salset. Fergusson determined the period in the 4th or 5th century, but

based on decipherment of the inscriptions found thereat and particularly in one of the inscription the date of 30 of the Sakaditya-kala, or AD 108 was mentioned and thus Cunningham treated it of the first and second century of the Christian era showing difference of about 4 centuries between his and Fergusson's determination of period.

4239. Another illustration Cunningham has given at page XXI of the Chapter "Introduction" of the book "Report, 1871" which reads as under:

> "The Karle caves Mr. Fergusson is inclined to assign to the first, or even the second century before Christ. One of the caves is certainly older than the Christian era, as it possesses an inscription of the great Satrap King Nahapana. But there are two others of King Pudumayi, the sons of Vasithi, whom I place in the beginning of the second century of the Christian era, but whom Mr. Fergusson assigns to the middle of the fourth century, although in his chronology he admits that Ananda, also a son of Vasithi, and therefore most probably a brother of Pudumayi, and the founder of one of the gateways of the Great Sanchi Tope, lived towards the end of the first century."

www.vadaprativada.com

4240. Fergusson published some more books namely, "Picturesque Illustrations of Ancient Architecture in India", "Handbook of Architecture (1855)", "History of Architecture", "Illustrated History of Indian Architecture" and lastly "Tree and Serpent Worship".

4241. "Markham Kittoe" was an Officer in the Army of East India Company, appointed as Secretary Committee for a short period in 1838 and 1839 and then given charge of one of the division of the High Road from Calcutta to Bombay, leading through Chutia Nagpur till 1846 and then was appointed as "Archaeological Enquirer" to Government, went back to England in 1853. He wrote "Illustration of Indian Architecture in 1838". He prepared the design of Sanskrit College at Banaras which was approved and the building was constructed in his supervision. However, Cunningham expressed doubt about his scholarship and judgement as an investigator and gave the following illustration:

> "I may cite his continued doubts as to the identity of Asoka and Piyadasi, and his serious suggestion that the Barabar Cave inscription of Dasaratha, which Prinsep had truly assigned to the historical Dasaratha of Magadha, one of the immediate successors of Asoka, might probably be referred to the half fabulous Dasaratha of Ayodhya, the father of Rama."

4242. Kittoe, however, described himself in one of his letter dated 19.05.1852 sent to Cunningham as under:

> "Let me not lead you to suppose that I claim knowledge. I am woefully deficient. I am a self-educated man, and no Classic or Sanskrit scholar; I merely claim a searching eye and mind, and a retentive memory of figure and fact, and place or position. Hence my great success in finding inscriptions where many have searched in vain!--Cuttack and Gya to wit."

4243. "Edward Thomas" wrote several essays covering the period BC-246 to AD-1554. The list of some of which is as under under:

> "1. 1848--Journal of Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. IX.,--

4244. In South, Colonel Machenzie collected 8,076 inscriptions mainly in the Tamilian provinces to the south of Krishna River while Sir Walter Elliot collected 595 inscriptions mainly in ancient Karnataka, amongst the upper branches of the

www.vadaprativada.com

Krishna. Sir Elliot's first contribution was his Historical Sketch founded solely on the inscriptions of the principal dynasties which had rule over the countries between the Narbada and the Krishna for nearly 8 centuries. Of these Chalukya family was the oldest and the strongest and its line has been traced back to the early part of the 4th century by the discovery of other inscriptions. Sir Walter also illustrated the history of Chalukyas and other southern dynasties by their coins. He was the first to arrange the coins systematically. All the coins bearing the type of an elephant were assigned to the Gajapati dynasty, which was asserted to have reigned over Orissa; all those with a horse to the Aswapati dynasty; those with the figure of a man to the Narapati dynasty; and those with an umbrella to the Chhatrapati dynasty. These were believed to have been the titles of four tributary princes who held the four chief provinces of Southern India under the rule of one supreme sovereign of Delhi.

4245. In respect to Western India some work was done by Colonel Meadows Taylor and Reverend J. Stevenson but heir findings and observations have not been found to be much accurate by Cunningham. The work in Western India was continued by Dr. Bhau Daji, a local scholar who wrote essay on Poet Kalidasa and translated inscriptions in the Ajanta caves and that of Rudra Dama and Skanda Gupta at Junagarh and wrote "Inroads of the Scythians into India".

4246. All these works show that the antiquity of the country in one or the other manner continued to be revealed by process of excavation etc. but what could not be find out by the time or thereafter would not mean that it does not or did not exist.

4247. However, the part of the report of Cunningham referred to by Sri P.N.Mishra and R.L.Verma, Advocates is as under:

"XVII. SAKETA, OR AJUDHYA.

Much difficulty has been felt regarding the position of Fa-Hian's" great kingdom of Sha-chi, and of Hwen Thsang's Visakha, with its enormous number of heretics," or Brahmanists; but I hope to show in the most satisfactory manner that these two places are identical, and that they are also the same as the Saketa and Ajudhya of the Hindus*. The difficulty has arisen chiefly from an erroneous bearing recorded by Fa Hian, who places Shewei, or Sravasti, to the south of Sha-chi, while Hwen Thsang locates it to the north-east, and partly from his erroneous distance of 7+3+10=20 yojans, instead of 30, from the well-known city of Sankisa. The bearing is shown to be erroneous by the route of a Hindu pilgrim from the banks of the Godavery to Sewet, or Sravaati, as recorded in the Ceylonese Buddhist works. This pilgrim, after passing through Mahissati and Ujani, or Maheshmati and Ujain, reaches Kosambi, and from thence passes through Saketa to Sewet, that is, along the very route followed by Hwen Thsang. We have, therefore, two authorities in favour of Sewet being to the north of Saket. With regard to the distance, I refer again to the Buddhist books of Ceylon, in which it is record that from Sakespura (or Sangkasyapura, now Sankisa) to Sewet was a journey of 30 yojans. Now, Fa Hian makes the distance from Sankisa to Kanoj 7 yojans, thence to the forest of Holi, on* the Ganges, 3 yojans, and thence to Shachi 10 yojans, or altogether only 20 yojans, or 10 less than the Ceylonese books. That Fa Hian's statement is erroneous is quite clear from the fact that his distance would place Shachi in the neighbourhood of Lucknow; whereas the other distance would place it close to Ajudhya, or Faizabad, or in the very position indicated by Hwen Thsang's itinerary. Here, again, we have two authorities in favour of the longer distance. I have no hesitation, therefore, in declaring that Fa Hian's recorded bearing of She-wei from Sha-chi is wrong, and that "north" should be read instead of " south."

I have now to show that Fa Hian's Sha-chi is the same as Hwen Thsang's Visakha, and that both are identical with Saketa or Ajudhya. With respect to Sha-chi, Fa Hian relates that, on " leaving the town by the southern gate, you find to the east of the road the place where Buddha bit off a piece of his tooth brush, and planted it in the ground, where it grew to the height of seven feet, and never increased or diminished in size." Now this is precisely the same legend that is related of Visakha by Hwen Thsang, who says that " to the south of the capital, and to the left of the road (that is, to the east as stated by Fa Hian), there was, amongst other holy objects, an extraordinary tree 6 or 7 feet high, which always remained the same, neither growing nor decreasing. This is the celebrated tooth-brush tree of Buddha, to which I shall have occasion to refer presently. Here I need only notice the very precise agreement in the two descriptions of this famous tree, as to its origin, its height, and its position. The perfect correspondence of these details appears to me to leave no doubt of the identity of Fa Hian's Shachi with the Visakha of Hwen Thsang.

With respect to the identification of Visakha with the Saketa of the Hindus, I rest my proofs chiefly on the following points : — 1st, that Visakha, the most celebrated of all females in Buddhist history, was a resident of Saketa before her marriage with Purnna Varddhana, son of Mrigara, the rich merchant of Sravasti; and 2nd, that Buddha is recorded by Hwen Thsang to have spent six years at Visakha, while by the Pali annals of Turnour he is stated to have lived 16 years at Saketa.

The story of the noble maiden Visakha is related at great length in the Ceylonese books. According to Hardy, she erected a Purvvarama at Sravasti, whioh is also mentioned by Hwen Thsang. Now there was also a Purvvarama at Saketa, and it can hardly be doubted that this monastery was likewise built by her. She was the daughter of Dhananja, a rich merchant, who had emigrated from Rajagriha to Saketa. Now, amongst the oldest inscribed coins which have been discovered only at Ajudhya, we find some bearing the names of Dhana Deva and Visakha-Datta. I mention this because it seems to me to show the probability that the family of Dhananja and Visakha was of great eminence Saketa or Ayodhya; and I infer from the recurrence of their names, as well as from the great celebrity of the lady, that the city may possibly have been called Visakha after her name.

The other proof which I derive from the years of

Buddha's residence is direct and convincing. According to the Ceylonese annals, Buddha was 35 years of age when he attained Buddhahood; he then led a houseless life for 20 years, preaching in various places in Northern India, all of which are detailed; and of the remaining 25 years of his life he spent 9 in the Jetavana monastery at Sravasti, and 16 in the Pubharamo monastery at Saketapura. Now, in the Burmese annals, these numbers are given as 19 years and 6 years, and in the last figure we have the exact number recorded by Hwen Thsang. Nothing can be more complete than this proof. There were only two places at which Buddha resided for any length of time, namely, Sravaati, at which he lived either 9 or 19 years, and Saketa, at which he lived either 6 or 16 years; and as according to Hwen Thsang he lived for 6 years at Visakha, which is described as being at some distance to the south of Sravasti, it follows of necessity that Visakha and Saketa were one and the same place.

The identity of Saketa and Ayodhya has, I believe, always been admitted; but I am not aware that any proof has yet been offered to establish the fact. Csoma-de-koroa, in speaking of the place, merely says "Saketana or Ayo-dhya," and H. H. Wilson, in his Sanskrit Dictionary, calls Saketa "the city Ayodhya." But the question would appear to be set at rest by several passages of the Ramayana and and Raghuvansa, in which Saketnagara is distinctly called the capital of Raja Dasaratha and his sons. But the following verse of the Ramayana, which was pointed out to me by a Brahman of Lucknow, will be sufficient to establish the identity. Aswajita, father of Kaikeyi, offers to give his daughter to Dasaratha, Rajah of Saketanagara: -

Saketam nagaram Raja namna Dasaratho bali,

Tasmai deya maya Kanya Kaikeyi nama to jana.

The ancient city of Ayodhya or Saketa is described in the Ramayana as situated on the bank of the Sarayu or Sarju River. It is said to have been 12 yojans, or nearly 100 miles in circumference, for which we should probably read 12 kos, or 24 miles—an extent which the old city, with all its gardens, might once possibly have covered. The (distance from the Guptar Ghat on the west, to the Ram Ghat on the east, is just 6 miles in a direct line; and if we suppose that the city with its suburbs and gardens formerly occupied the whole intervening space to a depth of two miles, its circuit would have agreed exactly with the smaller measurement of 12 kos. At the present day the people point to Ram Ghat and Guptar Ghat as the eastern and western boundaries of the old city, and the southern boundary they extend to Bharat-Kund near Bhadarsa, a distance of 6 kos. But as these limits include all the places of pilgrimage, it would seem that the people consider them to have been formerly inside the city, which was certainly not the case. In the Ain Akbari, the old city is said to have measured 148 kos in length by 36 koa in breadth, or in other words it covered the whole of the Province of Oudh to the south of the Ghaghra River. The origin of the larger number is obvious. The 12 yojans of the Ramayana, which are equal to 48 kos, being considered too small for the great city of Rama, the Brahmans simply added 100 kos to make the size tally with their own extravagant notions. The present city of Ajudhya, which is confined to the north-east corner of the old site, is just two miles in length by about three-quarters of a mile in breadth; but not one-half of this extent is occupied by buildings, and the whole place wears a look of decay. There are no high mounds of ruins, covered with broken statues and sculptured pillars, such as mark the sites of other ancient cities, but only a low irregular mass of rubbish heaps, from which all the bricks have been excavated for the houses of the neighboring city of Faizabad. This Muhammadan city, which is two miles and-a-half in length, by one mile in breadth, is built chiefly of materials extracted from the ruins of Ajudhya. The two cities together occupy an area of nearly six square miles, or just about one-half of the probable size of the ancient Capital of Rama. In Faizabad the only building of any consequence is the stuccoed brick tomb of the old Bhao Begam, whose story was dragged before the public during the famous trial of Warren Hastings. Faizabad was the capital of the first Nawabs of Oudh, but it was deserted by Asaf-ud-daolah in A. D. 1775.

According to the Ramayana, the city of Ayodhya was founded by Manu, the progenitor of all mankind. In the times of Dasaratha, the father of Rama, it was fortified with towers and gates, and surrounded by a deep ditch. No traces of these works now remain, nor is it likely, indeed, that any portion of the old city should still exist, as the Ayodhya of Rama is said to have been destroyed after the death of Vrihadbala in the great war about B. C. 1426, after which it lay deserted until the time of Vikramaditya. According to popular tradition this Vikramaditya was the famous Sakari Prince of Ujain, but as the Hindus of the present day attribute the acts of all Vikramas to this one only, their opinion on the subject is utterly worthless. We learn, however, from Hwen Thsang that a powerful Prince of this name was reigning in the neighbouring city of Sravasti, just one hundred years after Kanishka, or close to 78 A. D., which was the initial year of the Sake era of Salivahana. As this Vikramaditya is represented as hostile to the Buddhists, he must have been a zealous Brahmanist, and to him therefore I would ascribe the re-building of Ayodhya and the restoration of all the holy places referring to the history of Rama, Tradition says that when Vikramaditya came to Ayodhya he found it utterly desolate and overgrown with jangal, but he was able to discover all the famous spots of Rama's history by measurements made from Lakshman Ghat on the Sarju, according to the statements of ancient records. He is said to have erected 360 temples, on as many different spots, sacred to Rama, and Sita his wife, to his brothers Lakashmana, Bharata, and Satrughna, and to the monkey god Hanumana. The number of 360 is also connected with Salivahana, as his clansman the Bais Rajputs assert that he bad 360 wives.

There are several very holy Brahmanical temples about Ajudhya, but they are all of modem date*, and without any architectural pretensions whatever.* But there can be no doubt that most of them occupy the sites of more ancient temples that were destroyed by the Musulmans. Thus Ramkot, or Hanuman Garki, on the east side of the city, is a small walled fort surrounding a modem temple on the top of an ancient mound. The name Ramkot is certainly old, as it is connected with the traditions of the Mani Parbat*, which will be hereafter mentioned;* but the temple of Hanuman is not older than the time of Aurangzib. Ram Ghat, at the north-east corner of the city, is said to be the spot where Rama bathed, and Sargdwari or Swargadwari the " Gate of Paradise." On the north-west is believed to be the place where his body was burned. Within a few years ago there was still standing a very holy Banyan tree called Asok Bat or the " Griefless Banyan," a name which was probably connected with that of Swargadwari, in the belief that people who died or were burned at this spot were at once relieved from the necessity of future births. Close by is the Lakshman Ghat, where his brother Lakshman bathed, and about one-quarter of a mile distant, in the very heart of the city, stands the Janam Asthan, or " Birth-place temple" of Rama. Almost due west, and upwards of five miles distant, is the Guptar Ghat, with its group of modem white-washed temples. This is the place where Lakshman is said to have disappeared, and hence its name of Guptar from Gupta, which means "hidden or concealed." Some say that it -was Rama who disappeared at this place, but this is at variance with the story of his cremation at Swargadvari.

The only remains at Ajudhya that appear to be of any

antiquity, are three earthen mounds to the south of the city, and about a quarter of a mile distant. These are called Mani Parbat, Kuber, Parbat, and Sugrib-Parbat. The first, which is nearest to the city, is an artificial mound, 65 feet in height, covered with broken bricks and blocks of kankar. The old bricks are eleven inches square and three inches thick. At 46 feet above the ground on the west side, there are the remains of a curved wall faced with kankar blocks. The mass at this point is about 40 feet thick, and this was probably somewhat less than the size of the building which once crowned this lofty mound. According to the Brahmans the Mani-Parbat is one of the hills which the monkeys made use of when assisting Rama. It was accidentally dropped here by Sugriva, the monkey-king of Kishkindhya. But the common people, who know nothing of this story, say that the mound was formed by the labourers shaking their baskets on this spot every evening on their return home from the building of Ramkot. It is therefore best known by the name of Jhowa-Jhar or Ora Jhar, both of which mean " basket-shakings." A similar story is told of the large mounds near Banaras, Nimsar, and other places.

Five hundred feet due south from the large mound stands the second mound called Kuber-Parbat, which is only 28 feet in height. The surface is an irregular heap of brick rubbish, with numerous holes made by the people in digging for bricks, which are of large size, 11 inches by 7 ¼ by 2. It is crowned by two old tamarind trees, and is covered with jangal. Close by on the south-west there is a small tank, called Ganes-Kund by the Hindus, and

Husen Kund or Imam Talao by the Musulmans, because their Tazias are annually deposited in it. Still nearer on the south-east there is a large oblong mound called Sugrib-Parbat*, which is not more than 8 or 10 feet above the ground level. It is divided into two distinct portions; that to the north being upwards of 300 feet square at top, and the other to the south upwards of 200 feet. In the center of the larger enclosure there is a ruined mound containing bricks 8 ½ inches square, and in the center of the smaller mound there is a well.*

Between the Mani and Kuber mounds there is a small Muhammadan enclosure, 64 feet long from east to west and 47 feet broad, containing two brick tombs, which are attributed to Sis Paighambar and Ayub Paighambar, or the "prophets Seth and Job." The first is 17 feet long and the other 12 feet. These tombs are mentioned by Abul Fazl, who says—"Near this city are two sepulchral monuments, one seven and the other six cubits in length. The vulgar pretend that they are the tombs of Seth and Job, and they relate wonderful stories of them." This account shows that since the time of Akbar, the tomb of Seth must have increased in length from 7 cubits, or 10 ½ feet, to 17 feet through the frequent repairs of pious Musulmans.

The mounds are surrounded by Musulmans tombs, and as it is the Muhammadan practice to bury the dead along the sides of the high roads close to their cities, I infer that the road which now runs close to the westward of the mounds, is one of the ancient high ways of the district. This is confirmed by the existence of an old masonry bridge of three arches over the Tildhi nala, to the north-west of the Mani-Parbat, as well as by the direction of the road itself, which leads from the south-end of the city straight to the Bharat-kund, and onwards to Sultanpur or Kusapura, and Allahabad or Prayaga. I notice this road thus minutely, because the identifications which I am about to propose are based partly on its position and direction, as well as on the general agreement of the existing remains with the holy places described by the Chinese pilgrims.

According to Fa Hian the place where Buddha planted the holy trees was to the east of the road, on issuing from the town by the southern gate. Hwen Thsang's account agrees with this exactly in placing the "extraordinary tree" to the south of the capital and to the left of the route. This tree was the celebrated " tooth brush," or twig used in cleaning the teeth, which having been cast away by Buddha, took root and grew to between 6 and 7 feet in height. Now, it will be observed that the ruined mounds that still exist, as well as the tombs of Seth and Job, are to the south of the city and to the east or left of the road. The position, therefore, is unmistakably the same as that described by the Chinese pilgrims, and as the actual state of the ruins agrees well with the details given by Hwen Tbsang, I think that there can be no reasonable doubt of their identity.

Hwen Thsang describes the city of Visakha as being 16 li, or 2 2/3 miles in circuit. In his time, therefore, the capital of Kama was not more than half of its present

size, although it probably contained a greater population, as not above one-third, or even perhaps less, of the present town is inhabited. The old city then possessed no less than twenty monasteries with three thousand monks and about fifty Brahmanical temples, with a very large Brahmanical population. From this account we learn that so early as the seventh century more than three hundred of the original temples of Vikramaditya had already disappeared, and we may therefore reasonably infer that the city had been gradually declining for some time previously. The Buddhist monuments, however, would appear to have been in good order, and the monks were just as numerous as in the eminently Buddhist city of Banaras.

The first monument described by Hwen Thsang is a great monastery without name, but as it was the only notable monastery, it was most probably either the Kalakarama of Saketa, or the Purvvarama, both of which are mentioned in the Ceylonese Mahawanso. The monks were of the school of the Samattiyas, and their monastery was famous for having produced three of the most eminent Buddhist controversialists. This monastery I would identify with the Sugrib Parbat which I have already described as being about 500 feet long by 300 feet broad. The great size and rectangular form of this ruin are sufficient to show that it must have been a monastery, but this is placed beyond all doubt by the existence of an interior well and by the remains of cloistered rooms forming the four sides of the enclosure. Its position to the south of the city, and to the east or left of the road, has already been specially noticed as agreeing with the recorded position of the monastery.

Beside the monastery there was a Stupa of Asoka, 200 feet in height, built on the spot where Buddha preached the law during his six years' residence at Saketa. This monument I would identify with the Mani-Parbat, which is still 65 feet in height, and which with its masonry facing must once have been at least as high again, and with the usual lofty pinnacle of metal may easily have reached a height of 200 feet. Hwen Thsang ascribes the erection of this monument to Asoka*, and I see no reason to question the accuracy of his statement,* as the mixed structure of half earth and half masonry must undoubtedly be very ancient. The earliest Stupas, or topes, were simple earthen mounds or barrows, similar to those that still exist in England. There are many of these barrows still standing at Lauriya-Navandgarh to the north of Bettiya, but this is the only place where I have yet seen them. They are undoubtedly the most ancient monuments of the Indian population, and I firmly believe that even the very latest of them cannot be assigned to a lower date than the fifth century before Christ. I base this belief on the known fact that all the monuments of Asoka's age, whether described by Hwen Thsang, or actually opened by myself near Bhilsa, are either of stone or brick. The earthen- barrows are therefore of an earlier age; but such as are Buddhist cannot possibly be earlier than the beginning of the fifth century before Christ. In the case of the Mani-Parbat at Ajudhya I infer that the earthen barrow,

or lower portion, may belong to the earlier ages of Buddhism, and that the masonry or upper portion was added by Asoka. At the foot of the mound I picked up a broken brick with the letter sh, of the oldest form, stamped upon it; but as this is almost certainly of later date than Asoka, it most probably did not belong to the Mani-Parbat building.

Hwen Thsang next describes the sites of the tooth-brush tree and of the monument where the four previous Buddhas used to sit and to take exercise, as being close to the great Stupa. These places I would identify with the court-yard containing the tombs of Seth and Job, which touches the south side of the Mani-Parbat. The two tombs I take to be the remains of the seats of the four previous Buddhas, and the paved court-yard to be the scene of their daily walks, although I was unable to trace their foot-marks, which were seen by the Chinese pilgrim.

The last monument described by Hwen Thsang is a Stupa containing the hair and nails of Buddha. This was surrounded by a number of smaller monuments which seemed to touch one another, and by several tanks which reflected the sacred buildings in their limpid waters. The Stupa I would identify with the Kuber-Parbat, which touches the south side of the enclosure round the tombs of Seth and Job, and is close to the west side of the ruined monastery. One of the tanks described by the pilgrim may be the Ganes- Kund, which has already been noticed; but all the smaller monuments have disappeared long ago, as they afforded cheap and ready materials for the construction of the numerous Muhammadan tombs, as well as of the neighboring bridge and mosque. If I am right in my identification of this mound as the remains of the Stupa containing the hair and nails of Buddha, I think that an excavation in the centre of the mound might, perhaps, verify the accuracy of my conclusions.

The people are unanimous in their assertion that the old city to the north of these mounds was called Bareta. Ayodhya or Ajudhya, they say, was the capital of Rama*, but the later city was called Bareta. As this name has no similarity either to Saketa or Visakha, I can only set it down as another appellation of the old town, for* which we have no authority but tradition*. I was disappointed when at Ajudhya in not hearing even the most distant allusion to the legend of the tooth-brush tree of Buddha, but the tradition still exists, as I heard of it quite unexpectedly at two different places immediately afterwards, first at Halila, distant 15 miles, and next at Gonda, 29 miles to the north of Ajudhya."*

4248. We also find from the aforesaid report of Cunningham that he also discussed A-yu-to or Ayodhya of Hwen Thsang and according to his view, it was not the Ayodhya of Lord Rama. The discussion is on page 293 to 296 and reads as under :

"XI. A-YU-TO, OR AYODHYA.

From Kanoj the two Chinese pilgrims followed different routes, Fa Hian having proceeded direct to Ska-chi (the modem Ajudhya, near Fyzabad on the Ghaghra), while Hwen Thsang followed the course of the Ganges to

www.vadaprativada.com

Prayag, or Allahabad. The first stage of both pilgrims would, however, appear to be the same. Fa Hian states that he crossed the Ganges and proceeded 3 yojans, or 21 miles, to the forest of Holi, where there were several Stupas erected on spots where Buddba had "passed, or walked, or sat." Hwen Thsang records that he marched 100 li, nearly 17 miles, to the town of Nava-deva-kula, which was on the eastern bank of the Ganges, and that at 5 li, or nearly 1 mile, to the south-east of the town there was a Stupa of Asoka, which was still 100 feet in height, besides some other monuments dedicated to the four previous Buddhas. I think it probable that the two places are the same, and that the site was somewhere near Nobatganj, just above the junction of the Isan River and opposite Nanamow Ghat. But as there are no existing remains anywhere in that neighborhood, the place has been most likely swept away by the river. This is rendered almost certain by an examination of the Ganges below the junction of the Isan. Formerly the river continued its course almost due south from Nanamow for many miles, but some centuries ago it changed its course first to the south-east for 4 or 5 miles, and then to the south-west for about the same distance, where it rejoined its old bed, leaving an island, some 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth, between the two channels. As Hwen Thsang's account places Nava-deva-kula on the very site of this island, I conclude that the town as well as the Buddhist monuments must all hare been swept away by the change in the river's course.

On leaving Nava'deoa-kula, Hwen Thsang proceeded

600 li, or l00 miles, to the south-east, and re-crossing the Ganges he reached the capital city of A-yu-to, which was 20 li, or upwards of 3 miles, in circuit. Both M. Julien and M. St. Martin have identified this place with Ayodhya, the once celebrated capital of Rama. But though I agree with them as to the probable identification of the name as that of the country, I differ with them altogether in looking for the capital along the line of the Ghaghra River, which is due cast from Kanoj, whereas Hwen Thsang states that his route was to the south-east. It is, of course, quite possible that the pilgrim may occasionally use the generic name of Ganges as the appellation of any large river, such, for instance, as the Ghaghra; but in the present case, where the recorded bearing of south-east agrees with the course of the Ganges, I think it is almost certain that the Ganges itself was the river intended by the pilgrim. But by adopting the line of the Ganges we encounter a difficulty of a different kind in the great excess of the distance between two such well known places as Kanoj and Prayag. According to Hwen Thsang's route, he first made 100 li to Nava-deva-kula, then 600 li to Ayutko, then 300 li by water to Hayamukha, and lastly 700 li to Prayaga. All these distances added together make a total of 1,700 li, or 283 miles, which is just 100 miles, or 600 li, in excess of the true distance. But as a part of the journey, viz., 300 li, or 50 miles, was performed by water, the actual excess may, perhaps, not be more than 85 or 90 miles; although it is doubtful whether the distance of 300 li may not have been the road measurement and not the river distance. It is sufficient for our purpose to know that Hwen Thsang's recorded measurement is somewhere about 100 miles in excess of the truth. The only explanation of this error that suggests itself to me is, that there may have been an accidental alteration of one set of figures, such as 600 li for 60 li, or 700 li for 70 li. Supposing that the former was the case, the distance would be shortened by 540 li, or 90 miles, and if the latter, by 630 li, or 105 miles. This mode of correction brings the pilgrim's account into fair accordance with the actual distance of 180 miles between Kanoj and Prayag.

By adopting the first supposition, Hwen Thsang's distance from Nava-deva-kula to the capital of Ayutho will be only 60 li, or 10 miles, to the south-east, which would bring him to the site of an ancient city named Kakupur, just 1 mile to the north of Seorajpoor, and 20 miles to the north-west of Cawnpoor. If we adopt the latter correction, the pilgrim's distance to Ayutho of 600 li, or 100 miles, will remain unchanged, and this would bring him via Manikpur, which is also an ancient place. By the first supposition the subsequent route would have been from Kakupur to Daundiakhera by boat, a distance of exactly 50 miles, or 300 li, and from thence to Prayag, a distance of more than 100 miles, which agrees with the 700 li, or 116 miles, of the pilgrim. By the second supposition the subsequent route would have been from Khara to Papamow by water, about 50 miles, and thence to Prayag, about 8 miles of land, which agrees with the 70 li of the proposed correction. In favour of this last supposition is the fact that the bearing from Khara to Papamow of east by south is more in accordance with Hwen Thsang's recorded east direction than the south-east bearing of Daundiakhera from Kakupur. I confess, however, that I am more inclined to adopt the former correction, which places the chief city of Ayutho at Kakupur, and the town of Hayamukka at Daundiakhera, as we know that the last was the capital of the Bais Rajputs for a considerable period. I am partly inclined to this opinion by a suspicion that the name of Kakupur may be connected with that Bagud, or Vagud, of the Tibetan books. According to this authority a Sakya, named Shampaka, on being banished from Kapila retired to Bagud, carrying with him some of Buddha's hairs and nail-parings, over which he built a chaitya. He was made King of Bagud, and the monument was named after himself (? Shyampaka Stupa). No clue is given as to the position of Bagud; but as I know of no other name that resembles it, I am induced to think that it is probably the same place as the Ayutho of Hwen Thsang, which was also possessed of a Stupa containing some hairs and nail-parings of Buddha. Kakupur is well-known to the people of Kanoj, who affirm that it was once a largo city with a Raja of its own. The existing remains of Kakupur consist of numerous foundations formed of largo bricks, and more particularly of a connected set of walls of some large building which the people call " the palace." I have not yet visited this place, winch lay out of my line of route, but I hope to have an opportunity of examining it hereafter."

Martin published another work in two volumes, i.e., "The History of the Indian Empire" first published in 1858 (1983 by Mayur Publications Delhi). In his Introduction part the author gave a very brief history of India and then the experience, Britishers had vis a vis Hindu and Muslims, and strategy to be adopted to consolidate their gains. This itself is revealing and an eye opener.

"INTRODUCTION.

The Anglo-Indian Empire! What do these words represent in the minds of the people of Britain?

They speak of dominion over a far-distant sunny land, rich in barbaric gold, precious stones, and architectural beauty, occupying upwards of a million square miles of the most varied, fertile, and interesting portion of this globe, and inhabited by more than one hundred million of the human race.

The early history of this wonderful country lies hid in deep obscurity. Not the obscurity that naturally attends insignificance, but, far otherwise, caused by the dense veil which Time drew around Ancient India, in thickening folds, during centuries of deterioration; leaving the ruins of magnificent cities, and widely-scattered records graven in mysterious characters on almost imperishable materials, to attest the existence of civilised races-regarding whom even tradition is silent-at a date long prior to the Christian era.

Whence India was peopled, is quite unknown; but thirty different languages, and an equal diversity of appearance and character, dress, manners, and customs, seem to indicate long-continued immigration from various quarters.

The Alexandrine era (B.C. 330) throws light on little beyond the Macedonian invasion of the north-western frontier; the Arab incursions (A.D. 709) afford only a few glimpses of the borders of the Indus; and the thirteen expeditions of Mahmood the Ghuznivede (A.D. 1000 to 1025), give little beyond a vague and general idea of the wealth of the country and the dense population of the Western Coast, whose idolatry Mahmood was empowered to scourge with the strong arm of an Iconoclast; though he himself was but an instrument in the hands of Providence; and in battering down guardian fortresses and destroying temples and shrines dedicated to false gods, had evidently no higher motive than that of pillaging the dedicated treasures, and carrying away the worshippers into slavery.

From this period we can faintly trace the progress of Mohammedan conquest in India, to the establishment of the dynasty known as the Slave Kings of Delhi (A.D. 1208.) Its founder, Kootb-oo-deen, originally a Turki slave, established the centre of Moslem dominion in the grand old Hindoo capital, chiefly by reason of the disunion which had arisen among the leading Rajpoot princes upon the failure of a direct heir, and the consequent jealousies and disputes regarding the succession.

Then the page of history becomes more and more legible until it records the invasion of Timur or Tamerlance (A.D. 1398), the terrible details of the siege of Delhi, and the general massacre in which it terminated; and all the horrors enacted before "the apostle of desolation" took his departure, carrying off men and women of all ranks and ages into slavery, and leaving the devoted city without a government, and almost without inhabitants.

The succeeding Indian annals, though confused, are tolerably full to the commencement of that important epoch which comprises the reigns of the Great Moguls. This brings us within the pale of modern history: we can note the growth and decay of Mogul dominion, and trace, at least in measure, the operating causes of its extension and decline. Viewed as a mere series of biographies, the lives of the Great Moguls attract by incidents, which the pen of fiction, fettered by attention to probability, would hardly venture to trace. The members of this dynasty had a decidedly literary turn, and several of them have left records not only of the public events in which they played a leading part, but also of the domestic scenes in which they figured as sons, husbands, or fathers.

The value of these memoirs in elucidating or corroborating the histories of the period, is, of course, very great, and their authenticity rests on solid grounds, apart from the strong internal evidence they afford of having been actually written by the persons whose names they bear.

Nothing can be more characteristic than the intense self-adulation with which Timur, or Tamerlane, narrates his perfidious and sanguinary career, except perhaps the peculiar power of observation and analysis brought to bear on new scenes which mark the autobiography of his descendant Baber, who, following in his footsteps, invaded

India from Cabool, and, after a fierce struggle on the plains of Paniput (A.D. 1526), gained easy possession of Delhi and Agra, and succeeded in laying the foundation of an extensive empire.

Humayun (A.D. 1530), Akber (A.D. 1556), Jehangeer (A.D. 1605), Shah Jehan (A.D. 1638), all encountered vicissitudes of the most singular and varied character; and the Mogul history increases in interest until it culminates in the long reign of Aurangzebe (A.D. 1658), the ablest and most powerful, but the most ambitious and bigoted of his race. During his sway the predatory hordes of Maharashtra were formed by the Hindoo adventurer, Sevajee, into a powerful state; the hated and despised Mahrattas grew strong upon the spoil of independent kingdoms demolished by the haughty emperor; and finally, his troops, worn by incessant toil, became mutinous for want of pay and provisions, and suffered their aged leader to be hunted even to the death by foes he had been accustomed to treat as utterly contemptible. The decay of the empire, which commenced several years before the death of Aurungzebe (A.D. 1707), then became rapid; usurping viceroys, rebelling against their government and warring with the rulers of neighbouring states or provinces, aggravated the internal disorganisation. Nor were external foes wanting to complete the work of destruction: adventurers of all creeds and complexions fought fiercely over the ruins; while, distancing meaner competitors, Nadir Shah (A.D. 1739) and Ahmed Shah (A.D. 1759), the robber kings of Persia and Affghanistan, swooped down like vultures to secure their share of the carcass; and the chief cities of India, especially Delhi, repeatedly witnessed the most sanguinary enormities, and continued to do so until, one by one, they became gradually included in the widening circle of British supremacy.

And why dwell thus on the past at such a crisis as this, when the magic circle of our power has been rudely broken- when Delhi, filled to overflowing with all the munitions of war, has been treacherously snatched from our unsuspecting hands- and when the Crescent, raised again in deadly strife against the Cross, has been reared aloft as if in testimony that the Moslems who came into India proclaiming war to the death against idolatry, have quite abandoned their claim to a Divine mission, and are affecting to make common cause with the Hindoos, whose creed and practice they formerly declaimed against with so much horror and disgust? Now Mohammedans and Hindoos unite in committing crimes of a character so deep and deadly, so foul and loathsome, that we find no parallel for them; not in the relentless, inventive vengeance of the Red Indians; not even in that crisis of civilised infidelity, that fierce paroxysm of the French Revolution, still shudderingly called the "Reign of Terror." The Red Republicans made public avowal of atheism; and awful was the depravity into which they sank, world-wide the shame they incurred: but recantation soon followed. These treacherous Sepoys, who have so suddenly risen in a body, violating every oath of fidelity, every tie of feeling and association-they, too, have their watchword: it is not "there is no God;" it is "Death to the Christians!"

As in France, no religions persecution, but rather a state of conventional apathy, leavened by the poison of Voltaire, Diderot, Condorcet, and their clique, preceded the atheistical and sanguinary outburst; even so has it been with India. Efforts for the extension of Christianity have been wholly exceptional; the rule has been tolerance, amounting to indifference, in all religious matters. Few who have been in the habit of reading Indian periodicals, much less of mixing in Indian society, will deny that, however manifest the desire for the diffusion of the Gospel might be in individuals, the government had remained markedly neutral.

The Mussulmans, let it be repeated, subjugated and governed India in the character of anti-idolaters. They tolerate—and barely tolerated—the heathenism around them, to which their aversion was, for the most part, quite undisguised; and they were always eager for individual conversions. Their open assertion of the superiority of their faith was viewed as natural by the Hindoos; nor does any angry feeling appear to have been excited, save in exceptional cases of actual persecution. Aurungzebe certainly alienated a large portion of his subjects by reviving a long-abandoned capitation-tax on infidels; and whether he did this from a desire to refill the treasury emptied by incessant warfare, or from sheer bigotry, the result was the same. Many causes (among which may be named, not as the avowed ones, but certainly not as the least powerful—sloth and sensuality, fostered by an enervating climate) have concurred in rendering the Indian followers of Mohammed comparatively regardless of that integral portion of their creed which enjoins its extension by all and every means. But no earnest believer in the Koran can be tolerant of idolatry; and therefore, when we hear of Moslem and Hindoo linked together in a most unprovoked crusade against Christians, it is manifest that the pretext is altogether false, and that the Mussulman, who is taught by the book he deems inspired never to name our Blessed Lord without reverence, or idols without abhorrence, cannot now be actuated by any religious motive, however perverted or fanatical, in violating the first principles of his faith and by affected sympathy with the professors of a creed heretofore declared utterly polluted and debasing, using them as dupes and tools in carrying out an incendiary plot, the planned details of which only Devil-worshippers, possessed by unclean spirits, could have been supposed capable of conceiving and executing. The conspiracy, beyond a doubt, has originated in the desire of the Mohammedans to recover their lost supremacy in India. Its immediate and secondary causes are involved in temporary obscurity; but the primum mobile must be sought for in the pages of history. It is true the flame has spread like wildfire: but the important question for those who are capable of grappling with the complicated bearings of this all-engrossing subject, is not—what hand applied the match? but how came such vast masses of combustibles to be so widely spread, so ready for ignition?

To understand this in any satisfactory degree, the inquirer must be content to begin at the beginning, by carefully weighing the fragmentary records we possess of the history and character of the Hindoos as a distinct people, nothing the causes which led to their gradual subjugation by the Moslems; next, those which paved the way for the introduction of European Power; and, lastly, the establishment and operation of British supremacy throughout India.

The indifference which the British nation and its rulers have so long evinced to the study of Asiatic history, has been most unfortunate. Wrapped in fancied security, we have been too ignorant to be anxious, too indolent to be watchful; and the few who have felt it an imperative duty to speak words of warning by bringing the experience of the past to bear upon the signs of the present, have found themselves set down as alarmists on this point at least, whatever their general character for ability and sound judgment. Yet the fact is certain, that almost every leading authority from the date of our earliest assumption of territorial power, has dwelt forcibly on the necessity for unsleeping vigilance in the administration of Indian affairs. This conviction has been the invariable result of extensive acquaintance with the natives, and it is abundantly corroborated by the recorded antecedents of both Hindoos and Mohammedans.

The history of India, whether in early times or during the Mohammedan epoch, is—as the brief outline sketched

in preceding pages was designed to indicate—no less interesting as a narrative than important in its bearing on the leading events of the present epoch, which, in fact, cannot, without it, be rendered intelligible. The struggles of European Powers for Asiatic ascendancy, form leading features in the annals of each of these states. Portugal was first in the field, and long and fierce was the combat she waged to maintain exclusive possession of the rich monopoly of Oriental commerce. The Dutch (then known as the Netherlanders) enjoyed a share of the profits in the capacity of carriers between the Portuguese factories and the northern nations of Europe; but when, in 1579, they formed themselves into a separate government in defiance of the power of Philip of Spain, that monarch, who then governed with an iron sceptre the united kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, forbade the employment of the Dutch as intermediaries - a prohibition which led to their trafficking on their own account, forming various trading settlements in the East in the commencement of the seventeenth century, and supplanting their former employers.

The first attempts of England were made, at the same period, by a company of London merchants, warmly encouraged by the Queen, who signed a charter on their behalf on the last day of the sixteenth century. During the following century the English continued to be simply traders, with no cravings for political or territorial aggrandisement - absorbed in the business of buying and selling, and anxious only for the safety of their fleet, which rapidly became more formidable and extensive in proportion to the rich freight it was destined to bear through seas infested with pirates, and frequently preoccupied by hostile European squadrons.

The eighteenth century opened upon an entirely new phase of Indian annals. The decay of Mogul power, which had, as has been stated, commenced before the death of Aurungzebe in 1707, was greatly accelerated by that event, and by the war of succession which followed, as a natural consequence, the death of a mogul emperor. The will of the deceased ruler decreed the division of his dominions among his sons; and had they consented to this arrangement, and cordially united in carrying it out, their allotted portions might possibly have been consolidated into distinct kingdoms. But brotherly love rarely flourished under the shadow of a despotic throne; and the House of Timur formed no exception to this rule, having evinced a remarkable tendency to fratricide throughout the entire period of its Indian career. The younger sons of Aurangzebe went to war with their elder brother, each on his own account, and died the death they had provoked, leaving the survivor, Bahadur Shah, to rule as best he might the scattered territories styled the Empire. Anything more devoid of organisation - of any approach to unity - than the so-called Empire, cannot well be conceived. When Auraungzebe snatched the sceptre from the hands of his father, Shah Jenhan, and condemned him to life-long captivity, the dominions he usurped were comparatively well governed, and might, under the sway of a ruler of such unquestionable ability, such indomitable perseverance,

have been consolidated into a comparatively homogeneous mass. But the unhallowed ambition at whose shrine he had sacrificed the liberty of his father and the lives of his brothers, still hurried him on, rendering him reckless of the internal decay which was manifestly at work in the very heart of his kingdom, while he was lavishing his resources in spreading desolation and ruin, famine and the sword, through every independent kingdom within his reach - extending his own only in name, throwing down governments and ancient land-marks, yet erecting none in their stead; becoming terrible as a destroyer, when he might have been great as a statesman and a consolidator.

A right view of the character of Aurungzebe, and a patient investigation of his career, is absolutely necessary to the obtainment of a clear insight into the state of India at the period when the English East India Company began to exchange their position of traders on sufferance for that of territorial lords. The first steps of this strange transformation can hardly be said to have been voluntary. The English merchants were still essentially traders. An examination of the East India House records (and no attempt had ever been made to garble or hide them away from friend or foe), will prove to the most prejudiced observer, that, as a body, they persistently opposed the acquisition of dominion. Nothing short of complete indifference can account for the excessive ignorance of Indian politics manifested in their official correspondence. It may, indeed, be urged that English factors in a foreign land, in addition to their characteristic reserve, are naturally much engrossed by the duties and cares of their calling, and, apart from prejudice, may well be excused for a degree of preoccupation which prevents them from making any very vigorous effort to penetrate the barriers of language and creed, manners and customs, which separate them from the people with whom they come to traffic. A time arrived, however, when the English could no longer be blind to the alarming political and social state of India. Every year, much more every decade, the disorganisation increased. Certain native Hindoo states, such as Mysoor, Travancore, the little mountainous principality of Coorg, and a few others, had been exempted, by their position or their insignificance, from Moslem usurpation. With these exceptions, strife and anarchy spread over the length and breadth of India. It was no organised struggle of race or creed; for Mussulman fought against Mussulman, Hindoo against Hindoo, and each against the other; Affghan warred with Mogul, Mogul with Rajpoot; Mahratta with all. The hand of every man was raised against his neighbour: the peasant went armed to the plough - the shepherd stood ready to defend his flock with his life; the energy and determination of local authorities kept up some degree of order in their immediate districts; but, in general, the absence of a government strong enough to protect its innocent subjects from internal vice or external vice or external aggression, was manifested in the fearful audacity with which the Pindarry, Dacoity, and Thug, the trained marauder, thief, and assassin, pursued their murderous avocations, in the blaze of noon as in the darkness of

www.vadaprativada.com

The Hindoos fell back upon the ancient village system, which the usurping Mohammedans had vainly striven to destroy; and the internal organisation of these little municipalities, each possessing its own Potail or Mayor, enabled them to parry, or at least rally from, attacks from without.

The English laboured for the effectual fortification of the various factories gradually established in different parts of India, and included, according to their situation, in the three presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. Armed neutrality, however, would have been barely practicable, even so far as the numerous warring native powers were concerned. The conduct of their European rivals rendered such a position quite untenable. The French East India Company had, so far as trade was concerned, proved a decided failure: its employes were very inferior to the English as factors; but as political agents, they possessed diplomatic instincts peculiar to themselves.

Dumas, Dupleix, and the gifted La Bourdonnais, saw clearly the opportunity afforded for the territorial establishment of their nation, and they eagerly took part in the quarrels around them, making offensive and defensive alliances with the neighbouring states, interfering in cases of disputed succession, and taking, with bold and unfaltering steps, the apparent road to political power. None of the English functionaries approached their rivals in ability; but they could not be blind to the increasing danger of their situation; and the example set by the

French, of drilling native troops and organising them as far as possible in accordance with European notions, was followed throughout the British settlements. Then came the inevitable struggle between the two powers whose unsleeping rivalry had so often evidenced itself in strife and bloodshed at the very ends of the earth. At first they met in indirect hostility as the auxiliaries of native princes; but the first indications of European war were eagerly seized on as a cause for direct opposition, and a fierce struggle ensued, which eventually left the English complete masters of the field. While the Carnatic, in which Madras is situated, was the scene of this context, the English in Bengal were subjected to the most oppressive exactions by the usurping Mohammedan governor, Surajah Dowlah, whose seizure and pillage of Calcutta in June, 1756, was marked by the horrible massacre of the "Black Hole"--a deed which, up to that period, even Mohammedan annals can hardly equal in atrocity; but to which, after the lapse of a hundred years, many terrible parallels have been furnished.

The tidings spread like wildfire through the British settlements, and the conviction became deep and general, that it would be madness to trust to the faith or humanity of such men as the depraved Surjah Dowlah and his Moslem compeers. The Mogul empire had become an empty name so far as the distant provinces were concerned, and there was absolutely no native state either strong enough to protect the English settlements, or just enough to be trusted. Never was the indomitable resolve of Britons in a foreign land more sternly tested, or more triumphantly evinced, than when their fortunes seemed at the lowest ebb —when the French and the Mohammedans, in different quarters, menaced their overthrow and extinction. "To drive these dogs into the sea!" was then, as now, the fervent aspiration of every Moslem regarding every European. But they wished to squeeze the orange before they threw away the rind. They were themselves divided, and had plans of individual aggrandizement to carry out against each other, and generally over the Hindoos; and they well knew the value of European co-operation and instruction in the art of war.

The recapture of Calcutta was speedily effected by a force of 900 European troops and 1,500 Sepoys, commanded by a ci-devant writer, who had turned soldier, and risen to distinction in the Carnatic war.

Robert Clive—for it was he—looked round and saw the opportunity offered for exchanging the precarious footing then occupied by his countrymen for one of far greater importance and security. The Hindoos were daily becoming more impatient of the Mohammendan yoke, and the haughty Mussulmans were themselves divided regarding their ruler, whose reckless profligacy and violent temper had given many of them provocation of a description which excites, in an Oriental, feelings of the fiercest and most enduring revenge. The English watched the course of affairs with deep anxiety, and soon ascertained that, in violation of a treaty entered into after the reconquest of Calcutta, Surajah Dowlah was plotting

with the French for their destruction. Unquestionably, this procedure justified them in adopting hostile measures against their treacherous foe; though it does not even palliate some of the minor details, in which the crooked policy of Clive appears in painful contract to his bravery as a soldier and his skill as a general. The result was the battle of Plassy (A.D. 1757), rapidly followed by the permanent establishment of British dominion in Bengal.

After this, the tide of success flowed on fast and full. If the reader will patiently peruse the pages of this history, he will see that our power has increased with marvellously little effort on our own part. As, when a stone is flung into a river, the first small circle expands and multiplies beyond calculation—so, in India, have we gone on extending our limits, as from the action of some inevitable necessity; less from our own will, than because we could not stand still without hazarding the position already gained. True, there have been most distressing instances of injustice and aggression; but these are the few and comparatively unimportant exceptions. So far as the general obtainment of political ascendancy in India is concerned, we may quote the apt comparison used by an old Rajpoot prince to Colonel Tod, in 1804, as conveying a perfectly correct idea of our process of appropriation. Alluding to a sort of melon which bursts asunder when fully matured, Zalim Singh said, "You stepped in at a lucky time; the p'foot was ripe, and you had only to take it bit by bit."

The manner in which we have acquired power in India, is one thing; the use we have made of its, is another

and more complicated question. For my own part, I have long watched the Anglo-Indian government with feelings of deep anxiety, and have laboured to the utmost of my ability to awaken the British nation to a sense of the responsible and critical situation they had been led to occupy. It is now close upon twenty years since I was permitted, by the East India Company, to edit the official records of a survey made by Dr. Buchanan in Eastern India; and the impression on my mind was so forcible, that I could not refrain from prefacing the selections with a declaration that the handwriting was on the wall, and nothing but a complete and radical alternation of our system of government, could avert the punishment justly merited by our misuse of the great charge committed to us.

The primary reason of this misuse I believe to be the false and wicked assertion, that "we won India by the sword, and must keep it by the sword." There is another aphorism, much older and of much higher authority, which we should do well to think on--"They that take the sword shall perish by the sword." We did not conquer India by violence: we came as peaceful traders and spent long years in that capacity; and during that time we succeeded in impressing on the minds of the natives as lively conviction of our energy, ability, and integrity. When the crisis came-as come it did, without our knowledge and greatly to our discomfiture—counting-houses were turned into barracks, bales of piece-goods helped to make barricades, clerks and writers were metamorphosed into military leaders, and, while themselves but learners, drilled the natives round

Thus was formed the nucleus of that army on which we have leaned as if that, land that alone, had been the means of our obtaining dominion in India. For the perfect organization of that mighty force, which lately numbered 300,000 men, we laboured with unwearied patience; and to this grand object we sacrificed every other. So long as the Sepoys were duly cared for, the condition of the mass of the people was a matter of comparative indifference. It was not the Great Ruler of the Universe, whose inscrutable decrees had placed this vast tract of heathendom in the hands of a people who professed to serve Him and Him only; rejecting every tradition of men; relying only on her mediation of His Son; resting for guidance only on His written word; asking only the interpretation His Holy Spirit;- not so! The Anglo Indian Dominion had nothing whatever to do with any such religious speculations. We were not bound to set before the people the example of the faith which we affect to believe the very leaven of the earth. Until the last few years we did not view it even as a case of stewardship. We were not even called upon to exert our energy for developing the physical resources of the country, and ameliorating the condition of the mass of the people. And why? Because free Britons, in the middle of the nineteenth century, have seen fit to assume the position of military despots, drowning the conviction that India was God-given trust, in the vague notion of its being "an empire of opinion;" and then sinking, by an easy transition, from rationalism into the more popular notion of sheer force--"

an empire of the sword," held by the might of our own strong arm.

Scepticism and cowardice lie at the root of our present disasters: deliberately have we chosen the fear of man, which blinds and enervates, rather than the fear of God, which enlightens and strengthens. With infatuated credulity we have nursed in our bosom the serpent that has stung us to the quick. Tolerance is, indeed, an essentially Christian quality; but who shall dare assume that praise for the Christianity which was made in the persons of high Protestant (?) officials, to bow its head before licentious profligacy of the Mussulmans, and the heathen abominations and disgusting impurities of the modern Brahminical priesthood, land to witness, in silence, the spiritual enslavement and physical degradation of the mass?

We though, perhaps, both Mussulmans and Brahmins too enervated by their respective orgies to be dangerous as enemies. This but proves our utter ignorance of the oriental character, especially as developed in the Mohammedans. Let the reader glance over the history of their founder (and I have striven to sketch it in a subsequent page, in faithfulness and not with the pain of a caricaturist), he will see in the False Prophet the type of sensuality, bigotry, ambition, grounded and rooted in the fiercest fanaticism; and that type has been perpetually reproduced, and will continue to be so until Mohammedanism shall be swept from the face of the earth.

How soon that may be, none can prophesy; but the

general rising now taking place among the Mussulmans in Africa and Syria, as well as in India, are pointed at by many observers as preceding and indicating the death-throes of this once powerful, but already deeply sunken race.

For us, if we would hope to conquer, it must be by turning to the Lord of Hosts, as a nation, in deep repentance and humility: then only may we justly look for present help and anticipate for the future that gift in which we have been so lamentably deficient-- "a right judgment in all things." Thus favoured, we shall not shrink from the responsibilities of an evangelized nation; but shall understand, that there is no surer way of obtaining respect in the eyes of the quick-written Hindoos, than by a consistent adherence to our religious professions; the means commend themselves to every unprejudiced person really versed in India affairs; and, assuredly, none other will be blessed of God. We cannot hope to pass off indifference for tolerance; the Mohammendans see through the flimsy disguise and bid the heathen throw off the ignominious yoke of Kafirs (infidels) Christianity they reverence and dread to see us manifest any tokens of it. Well they may; for nothing else will conquer our head in the day of battle. That day has come. May we now have grace to control the fearful passions provoked by the most horrible outrages; and may the memory of our own shortcomings towards God, enable us, if He gives the victory, to use it mercifully. Let us not forget, that the innocent blood spilt in the last few weeks, cannot blot out

the memory of the debt which England owes to India. The Parliament of Britain now must dictate the course to be followed in a matter of vital importance to the nation whose opinions it represents. The portion of the British public impressed with sound and practical religious views, is, happily, larger and more influential than would appear to superficial observers. The fact is indicated in the increase of missionary enterprise, the extension of education, and, indirectly, in the progress of public improvements, and the initiation of reformatory measures. The faulty judicial system the partial and vexatious land-tenure, the defective monetary circulation of India, have come under discussion; and if, as God in mercy grant, Britain is permitted to retain the brightest jewel in her crown-- the most valuable of her transmarine possessions —it is fervently to be desired that we may apply ourselves diligently to remedy all deficiencies, to repair, as far as possible, past neglects, and provide against future emergencies.*

The details of the present terrible episode will be given fully in subsequent pages; day by day that close seems approaching, with the record of which the Author hopes to be enabled to terminate this Work.

The pecuniary debt is wholly on the side of England. The cost, alike of civil and military government, including the payment of the royal troops, has been entirely defrayed from the Indian revenues: so, if we succeed, must be expenses of the present insurrection. The money remittances to England from the three Presidencies average*

five million sterling for the last sixty years. There is scarcely a county in the United Kingdom but has had the value of its landed property enhanced by the investment of fortunes, the fruit of civil or military services or of commercial succeeds in Hindoostan. Again, how many British statesman and commanders have had their genius elicited and educated in India. A noble field has been annually opened for the youth of Britain, and an expansive tone given to society by the constant discussion of great subjects.

The merchant and the manufacturer can best estimate the importance of a large, increasing, and lucrative market, free from high or hostile tariffs; and the advantage of an almost unlimited command of commodities, the regular obtainment of which is essential to the steady employment of their operations. Lastly—nor must it be forgotten, that Indian Imports and Exports, to the amount of thirty million sterling, now furnish profitable employment to the best class mercantile shipping."

"Oude, or Ayodhya, was famous in ancient Hindoo lore as the kingdom of Dasarath, the father of Rama, the hero of the famous epic the Ramayana. With the details of its fall as a Hindoo kingdom, and its history as a province of the Mogul empire, we are almost entirely unacquainted; but we know that it has retained its institutions to the present day, and that, in all respects, the Hindu element largely predominates throughout Oude." (Vol. II, page 59)

"In the meantime, the disorganisation of Oude was clearly on the increase, and one of its marked features was a rising

www.vadaprativada.com

spirit of Moslem fanaticism. It happened that a Mohammedan fast fell on the same day as a Hindoo feast; and Ameer Ali, a moolvee, or priest, of high repute, took advantage of the circumstance to incite his co-religionists to a fierce onslaught on the Hindoos. Troops were ordered out to quell the disturbances; but Ameer Ali seized and confined two of the officers, assembled 3,000 men, and declared his intention of destroying a certain Hindoo temple, and erecting a mosque in its stead. At length the British subsidiary force was employed by the king against the moolvee. An affray ensued, in which a body of Patans fought with the recklessness of fanaticism, and were cut down, standing shoulder to shoulder round their guns, by a party of Hindoo zemindars and their retainers. In all, 200 Hindoos and 300 Patans perished. This occurred in November, 1855. About the same time the Oude government became aware that some great change was in agitation. They asked the reason for the assembling of so large a force at Cawnpoor; and were, it is alleged, solemnly assured that it was intended to keep in check the Nepaulese, descent towards the district of Nanparah." (Vol II, page 77)

4250. Then comes the real detailed study conducted by a local official P. Carnegy who was posted as Officiating Commissioner and Settlement Officer, Faizabad.

4251. Sri Ravi Shankar Prasad, Sr. Advocate and other learned Advocates for Hindu parties placed strong reliance on the findings of P. Carnegy's Historical Sketch (supra) contained on page 5 to 7, 20 and 21 (Paper No.107C1/18, 19,

www.vadaprativada.com

20, 22, 23) and Appendix-A & B to the Book. P. Carnegy was officiating Commissioner and Settlement Officer, Faizabad. Sri Jilani, learned counsel for the plaintiff (Suit-4), however, assailed the said findings contending that Carnegy has prepared his report in 1870. There was no occasion for him to have personal knowledge of the ancient facts stated in the said report. He has not referred to any material which was relied upon by him in recording his findings and, therefore, whatever historical facts he has written are without any basis and cannot be taken as a gospel truth or treated as a fact proved. Moreover even in Carnegy's report, the list of important Hindu religious places in Ayodhya did not mention anything about Janambhumi temple.

4252. In the introductory part, Sri P. Carnegy has divided the facts relating to Ayodhya in 3 distinct ages and according to him the same were as under:

> "First, there is the mythic period of Rama and Vikramaditta, and bearing upon this, we have (1). The Ramayan of Valmiki, modernized by Tulshi Das in the days of Shahjehan, and treated in our own days historically by Wheeler, geographically by Cust, and poetically by Monier Williams and Griffiths. (2) The Raghuvansa of Kalidasa, and ornament of the Court of Vikramaditta, to the glory of whose line the work was composed nearly 2,000 years ago, and of which I am not aware that there is any complete English edition; and (3) the Ajudhia Mahatam (for an epitome see Appendix B) a far less known and more recent work, complied beyond doubt by Pandits subsequent to the restoration of Brahminism, the scope of which is to dilate on the special virtues of the different shrines in and around

www.vadaprativada.com

Ajudhia."

Second, the historic age, an acquaintance with which would necessitate the study of the writings of, (1) the Chinese travellers of the fourth and sixth centuries, with the light thrown upon them in these days by Elphinstone, Cowell and Cunningham; and (2) the Mahomedan geographers and historians, to the study of whose works Sir H. Elliot devoted a life.

Third, the modern age', or Oudh under its Nawabs and Kings, which would entail familiarity with a host of recent writers from Macaulay downwards."

4253. In 1870, Ayodhya was part of Pargana Haveli-Oudh and in respect to its creation, Sri P. Carnegy has given certain facts as under :

www.vadaprativada.com

"Pargana Haveli-Oudh takes its name from Oudh, the capital, and Haveli the name generally used to indicate the principal station of the chief revenue authorities of the Moghals. The pargana is bounded on the north and east by the River Gogra, on the south by the River Marha and Parganas Pachhamrath and Amsin, and on the west by Pargana Mangalsi.

In former days the revenue collections of the pargana, used to be made at the "Kala Mubarak" or blessed fort, which was situated at Lachhmanghat where now stands the recently built temple of Jugla Saran. In the days of Mansur Ali Khan, (A.D. 1739-54), they used to be made at "Rath Haveli," and in the time of the Bahu Begum, at or near the Dilkusha, both of which latter places are in the city of Fyzabad.

The pargana differs from all others in the district, inasmuch as there never were any of the usual Tappa sub-divisions. It contained in the King's time 329 townships. These were reduced under Summary Settlement to 242 in number; and they have now been further cut down to 181 demarcated villages, under the redistributions of the revised settlement."

4254. According to his investigation, the residents of the area mainly belong to following categories termed by him as "chief landed proprietors":

1. the Vasisht Brahmins
2. the Surajbans Chhatris
3. the Garagbans Chhatris
4. the Bais Chhatris
5. The Upadhia Brahmins
6. The Syads of Bhadarsa
7. The Kurmis of Maujadbanspur

www.vadaprativada.com

4255. It would be useful to refer his observations in respect to Vasisht Brahmins as under :

"The Vasisht Brahmins.-The members of this family assert descent from Vasisht Muni, the spiritual adviser of the immortal Ram Chandar, from whom that portion of the town which is still known as Vasisht Tola, takes its name, and whose sacred memory is still kept fresh by the annual visits of his votaries to the Vasisht Kund or reservoir, in the same quarter.

After the vicissitudes of the Budhist and Atheist periods when the Vedic faith was for the time, it is believed, locally suppressed, Ajudhia was again traditionally restored and brahminically re-peopled, through the exertions of Vikramajit of Ujain; and Kashiram and other members of the present Vasisht tribe, who now inhabit the ancient haunts of the family, aver that their ancestors were then re-called by the sovereign in question, from Kashmere, and received from him large assignments of revenue-free land. It is the further averment of these persons that they retained their possessions during the supremacy of the non-Brahminic Bhars, but it is almost needless to say that no proofs are extant either of their advent from Kashmere, or their steadfastness of faith under the Bhars. In the Ain-i-akbari, the oldest reliable historical record, Vasisht Brahmins are stated to be the prevailing caste of zamindars in this pargana.

The proprietary status of this family waned before the modern Surajbans clan the annals of which will follow, and it members are now reduced to the possession of exproprietary petty holdings (Sir) and dues (Sayer), in the Ranupali Anjna Narainpur and Luchhmidaspur estates, which comprise 32 villages in all, in which also they chiefly reside."

4256. Ayodhya, its area, topography etc. he has dealt with on page 5 of the Book reads as under :

"Ajudhia.- Ajudhia, which is to the Hindu what Macca is to the Mahomedan, Jerusalem to the Jews, has in the traditions of the orthodox, a highly mythical origin being founded for additional security not on the earth for that is transitory, but on the chariot wheel of the Great Creator himself which will endure for ever.

www.vadaprativada.com

In appearance Ajudhia has been fancifully likened to a fish, having Guptar as its head, the old town for its body, and the eastern parganas for its tail.

Derivation.- The name Ajudhia is explained by well-known local Pandits to be derived from the Sanskrit words, Ajud, unvanquished, also Aj, a name of Barmha, the unconquerable city of the Creator. But Ajudhia is also called Oudh, which in Sanskrit means a promise, in allusion it is said, to the promise made by Ram Chandra when he went in exile, to return at the end of 14 years. These are the local derivations; I am not prepared to say to what extent they may be accepted as correct. Doctor Wilson of Bombay thinks the word is taken from yudh to fight, the city of the fighting Chhatris.

Area.-The ancient city of Ajudhia is said to have covered an area of 12 jogan or 48 kos, and to have been the capital of Utar-Kausala or Kosala, (the Northern Treasure) the country of the Surajbans race of Kings, of whom Ram Chundar was 57th in descent from Raja Manu, and of which line Raja Sumintra was the 113th and last. They are said to have reigned through the Suth, Tireta, and Dwapar Jugs, and 2,000 years of the Kul or present Jug or Era."

4257. The history and alleged restoration and other events of Ayodhya, he has dealt with from page 6 to 13 as under :

"With the fall of the last of Rama's line, Ajudhia became a wilderness, and the royal race became dispersed even as the Jews. From different members of this dispersed people, the Rajas of Jaipur, Joudhpur, Udeypur, Jambu,

www.vadaprativada.com

&c., of modern times, on the authority of "Tirhut Kuth-ha," claim to descent. Even in the days of its desertion Ajudhia is said still to have remained a comparative Paradise, for the jungle by which it was over-run, was the sweet-smelling keordh, a plant which to this day flourishes with unusual luxuriance in the neighborhood.

Ban-Oudha.-In less ancient times when waste began to yield to cultivation, it took the name of Ban-Oudha or the Jangle of Oudh. With this period the name of Vikramajit is traditionally and intimately associated, when Budhism again began to give place to Brahminism.

The restoration by Vikramajit.- To him the restoration of the neglected and forest-concealed Ajudhia is universally attributed. His main clue in tracing the ancient city was of course the holy river Sarju, and his next was the shrine still known as Nageshar-Nath, which is dedicated to Mahadeo, and which presumably escaped the devastations of the Budhist and Atheist periods. With these clues, and aided by descriptions which he found recorded in ancient manuscripts, the different spots rendered sacred by association with the worldly acts of the deified Rama, were identified, and Vikramajit is said to have indicated the different shrines to which pilgrims from afar still in thousands half-yearly flock.

Ramkot- The most remarkable of those was of course Ramkot the strong-hold of Ramchandar. This fort covered a large extent of ground and according to ancient manuscripts, it was surrounded by 20 bastions, each of which was commanded by one of Rama's famous generals,*

after whom they took the names by which they are still known. Within the fort were eight royal mansions where dwelt the Patriarch Dasrath, his wives, and Rama his deified son, of whom it has been plaintively sung-

"Lord of all virtues, by no stain defiled,
The king's chief glory was his eldest child,
For he was gallant, beautiful, and strong,
Void of all envy, and the thought of wrong.
With gentle grace to man and child he spoke,
Nor could the churl his harsh reply provoke,
He paid due honor to the good and sage,
Renowned for virtue and revered for age.
And when at eve his warlike task war o'er,
He sat and listened to their peaceful lore,
Just, pure and prudent, full of tender ruth,
The foe of falsehood and the friend of truth;
Kind, slow to anger, prompt at miseries call,
He loved the people, and was loved of all,
Proud of the duties of his warrior race,
His soul was worthy of his princely place.
Resolved to win, by many a glorious deed,
Throned with the gods in heaven, a priceless meed
What though Brihaspati might hardly vie,
With him in eloquence and quick reply,
None heard the music of his sweet lips flow
In idle wrangling or for empty show.
He shunned no toils that student's life befit,
But learned the Vedas and all holy writ;
And even eclipsed his father's archer fame,

www.vadaprativada.com

So swift his arrow and so sure his aim.

To this praise for virtue his ancient father apparently had no pretension; for we are told that besides the three wives above marginally indicated, who caused him so much anxiety, there were 360 others of whom history says little. A prodigality of connubial happiness which in modern days found its parallel also in Oudh, in the Kesar Bagh Harem of Wajid Ali Shah.

Samundra Pal Dynasty.- According to tradition Raja Vikramaditta ruled over Ajudhia for 80 years, and at the end of that time he was outwitted by the Jogi Samundra Pal, who having by magic made away with the spirit of the Raja, himself entered into the abandoned body, and he and his dynasty succeeding to the kingdom they ruled over it for 17 generations or 643 years, which gives an unusual number of years for each reign.*

www.vadaprativada.com

The Siribastam Dynasty.- This Dynasty is supposed to have been succeeded by the trans-Gogra Siribastam family of which Tilokchand was a prominent member, a family which was of the Budhist-Jain persuasion and to which are attributed certain old Deoharas of places of Jain worship which are still to be found in Ajudhia, but which are of modern restoration.*

It was probably against the Siribastam dynasty that Syad Salar made his ill-starred advance into Oudh when in the earlier Mahomedan invasions, he and his army left their bones to bleach in the wilds of Baraich (see chronicles of Oonao Page 83-5).

But the hold of the trans-Gogra rulers of Ajudhia was

soon after this lost, and the place passed under the sway of the Rajas of Kanouj. Their power however, according to hazy tradition seems for a time to have been successfully disputed by the Magadh dynasty, whose temporary rule is still acknowledged. . . . .

The Kanouj dynasty.-Subsequently to this the Mahamedans made another partial advance into Hindostan in alliance with Kanouj whose Raja it again restored to sovereignty; but in these parts this sovereignty was altogether repudiated, and minor local rulers sprang up throughout the land, and a period of territorial confusion then prevailed which was only finally terminated by the Mahamedan conquest. A copper grant of Jai Chand the last of the Karouj Rahtors, dated 1187, A.D. or 6 years before his death, was found near Fyzabad when Colonel Caulfield was Resident of Lucknow. See A.S. Jour. Vol. X. Part I 1861.*

Sir H. Elliot mentions that on the occasion of Bikramajit's visit to Ajudhia he erected temples at 360 places rendered sacred by association with Rama. Of these shrines but 42 are known to the present generation, and as there are but few things that are really old to be seen in Ajudhia, most of these must be of comparatively recent restoration. A list of these shrines is given as Appendix A as well as of numerous Thakur-dwaras &c. which have been, or are daily being built by different nobles of Hindostan to the glorification of Ramchandar, his generals and other members of his royal race, to the glorification of Ramchandar, his generals and other members of his royal race. There are also six Mandirs of the Jain faith to which allusion has already been made.

The cradle alike of Hindus, Budhists and Jains.-It is not easy to over-estimate the historical importance of the place which at various times and in different ages has been known by the names of Kosala, Ajudhia and Oudh; because it may be said to have given a religion to a large portion of the human race, being the cradle alike of the Hindus, the Budhists, and the Jains.

In the earliest ages, the Hindus were divided into the two great lines of solar and lunar Chhatris, from whom all other Chhatris are, by courtesy, descended; and of the former line Kosala was at once the Kingdom and Capital. Of this territory Ikshawaku was the first solar King. When he lived is chronologically unknown, but Hindu Mythology takes him back to within a few removes of Brahma, the Creator. Thirty sixth in descent from Ikshawaku was Rama, the typical Chhatri subjugator of the South, and the glory of Ajudhia; the contemporary perhaps of Solomon, who was followed by some sixty more of his line before it became obliterated.

Of Budhism too, Kosala has without doubt, a strong claim to be considered the mother. Kapila and Kasinagara both in Gorakhpur and both of that country (Kosala) are the Alpha and Omega of Sakya Muni, the founder of that faith. It was at Kapila that he was born; it was at Ajudhia that he preached, perhaps composed those doctrines which have conferred upon him a world-wide fame; and it was at Kasinagara that he finally reached that much desiderated

stage of annihilation by sanctification, which is known to his followers as Nirvana B.C. 550.

Again it is in Ajudhia that we still see pointed out the birth-place of the founder as well as of four other of the chief-hierarchs of the Jain faith. Here it was that Rikabdeo of Ikshawaku's royal race matured the schism, somewhat of a compromise between Brahminism and Budhism, with which his name will ever be associated.

In Ajudhia then, we have the mother of the Hindus, as typified by Rama, the conqueror of the South; of the Budhists, as being the scene of the first great protest against caste by the originator of a creed whose disciples are still counted by millions; and of the Jains, as being the birth-place of the originator of doctrines which are still revered by several of our most influential mercantile families.

There are two traditions of the Jains that are at least curious. The one has just been mentioned that the founder of the Jain creed was of the Ajudhia solar race: the other, and it is maintained by the Khattria also, that only such Chhatris as are descended from Jains are pure. There is here a good deal of room for speculation. Abu was the fountain head of the Jain faith; there the founder of that faith lived and died, and on that mount there is still a temple to is revered memory nearly 1000 years old. It was at Abu too, it will be remembered, that a convocation of the gods recreated the Agnicula quartet of Chhatris, to put down the Budhists and atheists who had overrun the country. May not this mythical recreation point to the revival of Brahminism in even the very stronghold of the Jain faith? It is with this agnicula recreation on mount Abu that many of the oldest of our Chhatri clans seek to connect their origin. Such a recreation is of course absurd, but it is not absurd to suppose that Abu, peopled with the descendants of Ikshawaku, a solar prince of Oudh, may have been the scene of a Brahminical revival which spread far and wide, reaching in time the Chauhans of Mainpuri, and through one of them, Bariar Singh, the founder of at least 4 of our present chief families, extending itself into eastern Oudh also, where the darkness of the Magadh period was yet represented by the disbelieving caste neglecting Bhars.

The Sarju.- The origin of the river Sarju is highly fanciful. On an occasion of mirth tears of joy flowed from the eyes of Narain, the Supreme Being, which were reverently saved from falling to the ground by Brahma, the Creator, who caught them in his watercan (Kamandal) and carefully deposited them in the Mansarwar lake. When the city of Ajudhia had been fairly established the people longed for the sight of flowing water, and they made known their wishes to the far famed Local Divine Vasisht Muni (the ancestor of the Vasisht tribe of Brahmins). The latter entered into the spirit of their wishes and by severe penance and sacrifices to Brahma, the tear-preserved waters of Mansarwar were made to flow past the city of bliss. For these reasons the Sarju is still sometimes fancifully called the Vasisht-ki-kunnya, or the Vasisht nymph, and also Vasisht Gunga.*

The Ajudhia Mahatum.-No account of Ajudihia would be complete which did not throw some light on the Ramayan and the Ajudhia Mahatum. Of the former of these works, I need not speak, for through the writings of Wheeler, Cust, Monier Williams &c. most readers are familiar therewith. I will therefore confine my remarks to the Ajudhia Mahatum, which is comparatively unknown.

This work was prepared to the glorification of Ajudhia according to some, by Ikshawaku of the Solar race, while others with more probability aver that it is a transcript from the Askundh and Padam Purans, and is not the production of any Raja. Be that as it may it is well that the essence of the work should be made available to the public, and in this view Mr. Woodburn c.s. has been good enough to make a connected abstract for me, from a literal translation which I had made some years ago. This abstract is given as Appendix B.

Limits of Oudh.- It is not always easy to comprehend what is meant by the Oudh or Ajudhia of ancient times, for that territory has been subjected to many changes. So far as these are known to me, I give them below-

The Oudh of Rama.- Such intelligent natives as Maharaja Man Singh have informed me that at this period Oudh was divided into five portions, thus :- (1) Kosala or Utar Kosala, which included the present Trans-Gogra districts of Gorakhpur, Busti, Gondah and Baraich, (2) Pachhamrath, which included the country between the rivers Gogra and Gomti, extending westwards from Ajudhis

to Nimkhar in Sitapur. (3) Purabrath, or the territory between the same rivers, extending eastwards towards Jaunpur, the limit not being traceable. (4) Arbar being the country around Pertabgurh, lying between the rivers Gomti and Son, probably the same that it still known as Aror or Arwar : and (5) Silliana, which included some portion of the Nepal hills running along the then Oudh frontier.

The Oudh of Akbar.- Mention is made of the title of Subadar of Oudh as early as A.D. 1280, and it was one of the 15 Subas or Governorships into which Akbar subdivided the empire in 1590 A.D. The Mahamadan attempt to change the name from Oudh to Akhtarnagar, never seems to have succeeded fully.

The boundaries of the old Suba differed materially from those of the present day, and a large part of what is now the eastern portion of the Province, including Tanda, Aldemau, Manikpur, &c. was not in those days included in Suba Oudh, but in Allahabad. According to the Ain-i-Akbari the Suba then extended from and inclusive of Sirkar Gorakhpur, to Kanouj, and from the Himalayas to Suba Allahabad, 135 kos by 115 kos.

Suba Oudh contained five Sirkars, viz. (1) Oudh; (2) Lucknow; (3) Baraich; (4) Khyrabad; and (5) Gorakhpur. The details of these are given below, but they are only approximately correct, and in regard to some places my information is incomplete.*

The Oudh of Shuja-ud-Dowlah.-At this period Gorakhpur and Azimgarh were of the Province, and with the co-operation and aid of the English, Kurra, Allahabad*

and Rohelkhund wee added to it, Ghazipur and Benares were made over to the English during this reign.

The Oudh of Sadut Ali.- In this reign the province was reduced by the transfer to the British by treaty, of Rohelkhund, Allahabad, Farrakabad, Mainpuri, Etawa, Gorakhpur, Azimgarh, Cawnpur and Fattehpur, and in Ghazi-ud-din Haidar's reign which followed, the Nepal Terai, given back by Lord Canning after the Mutiny, was added by us to the Kingdom. So, with the exception of some changes of Parganas for mutual convenience, on the Allahabad, Gorakhhpur and Rohelkhund frontiers, the Province remained till we acquired it in 1856.*

The town of Ajudhia comprised the lands of four entire mauzas, (Barehta, which has been washed away, Faridipur, Bagh Kesari Singh and Rowza Shah Juran) and portions of three others; (Ranupali, Miraapur and Derabibi;) besides Kasbah Kirki. It contains the 26 mohallahs marginally named.

4258. About the Janamsthan and other temples/Babar's mosque and the dispute amongst the two communities, P. Karnegy has written on pages 20 and 21 as under :

www.vadaprativada.com

The Janamsthan marks the place where Ram Chandra was born. The Sargadwar is the gate through which he passed into Paradise, possibly the spot where his body was burned. The Tareta-Ke-Thakur was famous as the place where Rama performed a great sacrifies, and which he commemorated by setting up there images of himself and Sita.

If Ajudhia was then little other than a wild, it must at least have possessed a fine temple in the Janamsthan; for many of its columns are still in existence and in good preservation, having been used by the Musalmans in the construction of the Babari Mosque. These are of strong close-grained dark slate-colored or black stone, called by the natives Kasoti (literally touch-stone,) and carved with different devices. To my thinking these strongly resemble Budhist pillars that I have seen at Benares and elsewhere. They are from seven to eight feet long, square at the base, centre and capital, and round or octagonal intermediately.

Hindu and Musalman differences.-The Janamsthan is within a few hundred paces of the Hanuman Garhi. In 1855 when a great rupture took place between the Hindus and Mahomedans, the former occupied the Hanuman Garhi in force, while the Musalmans took possession of the Janamsthan. The Mahomedans on that occasion actually charged up the steps of the Hanuman Garhi, but were driven back with considerable loss. The Hindus then followed up this success, and at the third attempt, took the Janamasthan*, at the gate of which 75 Mahomedans are buried in the "Martyrs' grave" (Ganj-Shahid.) Several* of the King's Regiments wee looking on all the time, but their orders wee not to interfere. It is said that up to that time the Hindus and Mahomedans alike used to worship in the mosque-temple. Since British rule a railing has been put up to prevent disputes, within which in the mosque the Mahomedans pray, while outside the fence the Hindus have raised a platform on which they make their offerings*.*

The two other old mosque to which allusion has been made (known by the common people by the name Nourang Shah, by whom they mean Aurangzeb,) are now mere picturesque ruins.

4259. About other temples or religious places of Jains and Buddhists, he has also given certain facts which we are omitting at this stage. He has referred to the inscriptions found on the building in dispute on page 27 under Section VI.-Concluding Remarks Para (IV) under the heading "Buildings" which reads as under :

"(IV.) Buildings.- Of these we have; (1) the enshrined tomb of Syad Masud Behani, in the village of Behawan, Pargana Birhar, a reputed follower pf Suad Salar, A.D. 1030; (2), the tomb at Ajudhia, of Makhdum Shah Juran-Ghori, a lieutenant it is alleged, of Shahab-ud-din Ghori, the conqueror of Dehli and Kanauj, A.D. 1192-4; (3), the tomb at Ajudhia of the Sharki period, perhaps of Khawaja Jahan, the founder of the Jaunpur dynasty himself, who died A.D. 1399; (4), the enshrined tomb of Makhdum Ashraf at Kachhocha, the author of the Lataif-i-Ashrafi, and the contemporary of Ibrahim Shah of the Sharki

"APPENDIX-B.

EPITOME OF THE "AJUDHIA MAHATAM," WHICH AGAIN IS TAKEN FROM THE PURANS

The holy city of Ajudhia, of saving virtues and ancient renown, was built they say by Brahma, and given to his eldest son for an earthly dwelling-place. The earth

being but transitory, Brahma laid the foundation in his own discus, the Sudarsan Chakra, which still gives its shape to the city. On this was reared a stately capital for the son of God, and it was presented to him complete, fitted, declare the chronicles, with shrines, places, roads, markets, gardens, and fruit trees, glittering with jewels, and resounding with the melody of birds. Its men and women were holy, as befitted the subjects of a Divine King, and their righteousness was rewarded by incalculable wealth in elephants and oxen, horses and chariota. Its boundaries were fixed by the Sarju, and the Tons, and from Lachman Kund a jojan to the east and to the west.

In this city was supposed to reside a sanctifying virtues of extraordinary efficacy. When a man merely projected a pilgrimage to it, he purchased the salvation of his ancestors. Every step he took on his way had the efficacy of an aswa-medha jug. To him, who gave a pilgrim the road expenses of the journey, was assigned a passport to heaven with all his sons and grandsons. To him, who provided a weary pilgrim with conveyance, was promised a passage to the divine abodes in the chariots of the Gods. He, who fed a hungry pilgrim, reaped the benefit of many oblations at Gya and ablutions at Prag, and earned for his forefathers an eternity of happiness. He who anointed a pilgrim's feed with on, would obtain his desires in both worlds. The mere sight of Ajudhia absolved from all trivial sin*. To journey to it measuring the way with the outstretched body was penance, which atoned for the most heinous crime. The water of the Sarju washed away sin;*

obeisance to it removed all worldly trouble. He who lived in Ajudhia, redeemed his soul from the pains of transmigration; a residence of a night rehabilitated a man. Who had been degraded in his caste. Seven holy placed in India made up the body of Vishnu, and the boastful priest aver that Ajudhia was the head.

Similarly sacred was the origin of the Sarju. In the beginning of creation a lotus sprang from the naval of Narayana, which gave birth to Brahma. Then Brahma worshipped Narayana, and when he had worshipped fro a thousand years, Vishnu, gratified by such devotion, blessed him, with tears of affection in his eyes. The adoring Brahma caught the dropping tears in the hollow of his palm, and stored them in a wooden vessel, which he kept next his heart. Ages after, Manu, the first of the solar race, was king in Ajudhia. His son Iksawaku was so studious in his devotions, that the great Brahma, pleased, told him to ask a boon. Ikshwaku asked for a holy river, and Brahma gave him the treasured tears of Narayana, which thenceforward flowed as the Sarju. The bank of his river, nominally for a distance of 318 yards, bears the name of Swargdwar, the gate of Heaven. The Purans affirm it to be the holiest spot on earth*. He who dies there passes straight to heaven, receiving the pardon of the sins of a thousands births. Even Mahomedans, even animals, birds and insects, obtain there in death salvation in an eternal life with the Gods.*

In the gate of heaven are seven "Hars" or representations of Vishnu, Gupt Har, Chandra Har, Chakra

www.vadaprativada.com

Har, Vishnu Har, Dharma Har, Belma Har and Pun Har.

Chandra Har was fixed by Vishnu in honour of the moon, who had at that spot ended her pilgrimage and offered her prayers. Ho gets himself shaved there, fasts, bathes, and then visits Chandra Har, has his capital sins washed away and is secured of heaven. The season of greatest efficacy is the full moon of Jeth.

The only other important Har is the Dharma Har, but between the two Hars is Nageshwar, the origin of which was this:-Kush, the son of Ramchandr was bathing in the river, Kamudti, the sister of Sakun, a serpent that inhabited the Sarju, became enamoured of the handsome Kush, and stole his bracelet for a love-token. The bracelet was one on which Kush set great value, and when he discovered his loss on reaching the shore, in his rage he fitted to his bow an arrow of fire wherewith to dry up the waters of the offending Sarju. The Sarju fell at his feet for mercy, and denounced the real culprit. Then Kush muttered an incantation over the arrow, and discharged it against the serpent. The serpent with his sister immediately appeared and restored the ornament, praying for forgiveness. The serpent was a worshipper of Mahadeo, and the not-forgetful God appeared at this moment to shield his servant. He promised Kush he would grant any boon he asked if the serpent were forgiven, and it was accordingly ordained at the wish of the patriotic Kush, that the presence of Mahadeo should henceforth reside on the spot, and that whoever should bathe at Swargdwar and worship at Nageshwar, should be satisfied in every wish, and enjoy the fruits of an efficacious pilgrimage.

Dharma Har to the Sough-east of Nageshwar takes its name from the God of Virtue and Justice. Dharma composed here a hymn of such transcendent grandeur that Mahadeo decreed that the place should stand consecrated in their joint names, and that whoever should after bathing in the Sarju, read there this hymn, would be blessed with riches and the esteem of his fellows. The holy day at Dharma Har is the 11th of the lunar half of the month Asarh.

Opposite Dharm Har on the river is Janki Ghat, where they bathe on the 3rd of the lunar half of Sawan, and immediately below this is the Ram-Ghat, where the Swargdwar ends; all south of this is called Ajudhia Pith.

Behind Ram Ghat is Ram Sabha,where Ram Chandr is believed to sit enthroned, surrounded by his brothers, Sought of it is the Dhawan Kund, in which he who bathes on the 9th of the lunar half of Chait, is freed from all pride. On one occasion Kundani, a saint, had bathed in this pool and was engaged in prayer, when the wind suddenly blew his deer-skin mat into the water. To the astonishment of every one the deer-skin at once assumed the form of a glorious deity, seated on a magnificent throne, and to Ram Chandr the deity gave this history. He was at first a Vaisya, obdurate in his pride of riches and perversely disobedient to the Veds. But one day he unintentionally did a good action. He sprinkled water on a Tulshi shrub. For this he was made a deer, and his skin was given to a pilgrim bound for Ajudhia, and now the skin on touching the water of the sacred pond had changed into this heavenly body. The glorified shape prayed for admittance to heaven, and straightway passed in a chariot into the regions pf Ram Chandr, "whence there is no returning." It is in this pond, that Raghunathji, as the pandits say, "performs with the tooth brush."

In the heart of the city lies the great Ram Kot, the fort of Ram, with its gates guarded by the immortal monkeys who accompanied him on his return from Ceylon. On its western side is the Janam Bhum or Janam Asthan, the birth place of the hero. To visit this on the Ram-Nomi, that sacred ninth which falls in Chait, delivers the pilgrim from all the pains of the transmigration of souls. The virtue of this act is as if the pilgrim had given 1,000 cows, or performed a thousand times the sacrifices of the Raj Suiji or Agin-hotra, "but the fool, who eats on that day shall go to hell, where all the vicious are thrown into boiling oil" They say there was once a band of five thieves, who had been banished from their native country for highway robbery, adultery, murder of cows and other heinous crime. These five men spent their days alternately in robbing pilgrims and in riotous living. A party of pilgrims from Delhi passed through the forest in which was the den of these robbers, and the robbers joined them in the guise of travellers from a far country. But as they neared Ajudhia the guardian-angels of the holy city, who are stationed to prevent the entrances of the deliberately wicked, took visible shape and began to beat the robbers with their clubs. A sage who lived near by, Asit Muni, hearing their

cries, interfered in their behalf. They were released at his intercession, and in gratitude they obeyed their preserver's command to complete the pilgrimage to Ajudhia, and secure salvation by performing the prescribed ritual. As they entered the city Ajudhia appeared as a beautiful goddess, clad in white robes, and attended by her maidens. The men trembled with fear. On a sudden their sins arose before them, shrouded in the blue garbs of mourning, of horrible countenances, red-haired, blear-eyed , mis-shapen, their iron ornaments clanking like chains. Then the goddess beat the sins, and they fled out of the city and took refuge under a pipal tree, and the thieves went on rejoicing and bathed at Swargdwar, and kept the fast of Nomi, and worshiped at the birthplace of Rama, and they were purified from sin, and Yama called Chitra Gupta and recorder, and their sins were blotted out from the book of the Judge of the dead. Meanwhile the messengers of Yama traversing the earth fell in with the sins of the robbers, standing crying under the pipal tree. On these the messengers took compassion, and prayed of Yama that the sins might be re-united to the robbers. But Yama said that the advantages of bathing at Ajudhia were irrevocable, and retired to mediate on the banks of the Sarju. Ajudhia was pleased with the wisdom of Yama, and the place of his meditation she named Jama Asthal, and appointed a holy day in his honour on the 2nd of Katik, and the sins were destroyed under the pipal tree.

Just beside the birth-place of Rama is the "Kitchen" of Janki-ji. It is the shape like the ordinary

Indian "Chulha," and is supposed to be always filled with food. The sight of it satisfied every want; a daily visit keeps the house supplied with food. Close to this is the house of Kaikayi, where Bharat-ji was born. On the other side is that of Somitra, where Lachhman and Satrohan were born. South-east of this is the Sita Kup, the waters of which are said to give intelligence to the drinker.

Below Hanwant Kund is Sobarna Khar, called Sona-Khar by the people, from a shower of gold which happened in this wise. There was once a very learned sage named Vishwa Mitra, to whose door came one day another sage called Durbasa. Durbasa said, "I am very hungry, give me some food." Biswa Mitra immediately brought him a hot porringer of rice and milk, on which Durbasa asked him courteously to hold it till be came back from bathing. Having said this Durbasa went home, and Vishwa Mitra without feeling any passion, stood firm like a pole, with the vessel in his hand, for a thousand years. At the end of this period Durbasa returned, found him very happy, ate the rice and milk, was highly satisfied, and went home praising him greatly. ("he who hears this story, shall be freed from all his sins, and get salvation. There is not doubt of this") One Kanto Muni had been in Vishwa Mitra's service all this time, and Vishwa Mitra taught him fourteen sciences. Kanto wished his master to ask a fee, but this the sage twice refused to do, till at last, though patient with more than the patience of Job, he lost his temper and demanded fourteen crores of rupees. Kanto despaired of obtaining

this monstrous sum, but he went to Maharaj Ragho, King of Ajudhia, the greatest man in the world. Now Maharaj Ragho, after conquering all this foes and amassing a huge treasure, had at the instance of his wise men, performed the sacrifice of Vishn-jit, as part of which he distributed all his wealth among the poor. So complete was his generosity, that he had reduced himself to the use of dishes of clay. So when Kanto asked him for fourteen crores, the Raja was at a loss. He thought to himself, that the tributary Rajas had already been eased of all their goods, and that further demands from them would be unavailing, but he told Kanto to wait a day. In despair he at last appealed to Kober, the treasurer of the Gods. Kober knew the Raja's righteousness, and answered the prayer by showering gold for the space of nearly four hours. From this the Muni took what he required, and went on his way rejoicing.

South of this are the two pools of Nagriva and Bibhikan. Also the Jaga Vedi, where Ram Chandr performed sacrifices, and the Agna Kund or fire-pool. In the last the sacred day for bathing is the 1st of the dark half of Aghan, and an observance of this festival secures riches in this world and immortality in the next. Here the Tiloi and Sarju meet, and the spot of confluence is sacred and of sanctifying power. Beside it is Asok Batka the garden of Raghnath Ji, in the middle of which is Sita Kund, a pond constructed by Sita with her own hands. A bathing festival takes place there on the 4th of the dark half of Aghan. West of these are Biddia Kund and Bidia Debi, which may be visited on each ashtami of any mouth.

South of this is the Khajoha or Khanjur Kund, the bathing in which on Sunday cures all deceases, but especially the itch. Beside it is the Maniparbat or Mountain of Jewels, a hillock prepared by Ram Chandr for the amusement of Janki.

Beyond these is a string of ponds, which however have no peculiar virtues attached to them, Ganesh Kund, Dasrath Kund, Kosilya Kund, Somita Kund, Kakayi Kund, Dubar Kund and Mahabar Kund. The two last are named of the two brothers, whose offerings of flowers had been of a sweet smelling savour to Siva. Then come Jogni Kund, so named from the Jogis, who live there, and Urvashi Kund, whose water gives beauty. Urvashi was a lovely woman, whom Indra sent to disturb the devotions of a peculiarly ascetic sage of the Himalayas. The sage would not be temped, and on his curse she became ugly. Then he relented, and by his direction she bathed in this tank, became beautiful as ever, gave her name to the place, and ascended to heaven. There is a festival here on the 3rd of the lunar half of Bhadon. Next to it is the Birhaspati Kund, in which those who bathe avoid the evils, shadowed forth in their horoscopes. They bathe there on the 5th of the lunar half of Bhadon. Ruk Mani Kund gives children to the barren and riches to the poor that bathe in it on the 9th of the dark of Katik. Another place which has virtue for the childless is the neighboring pond of Chhirodak or Chhir Sagar. Here Dasrathji performed a sacrifice, in answer to which the God appeared with a golden vessel, containing a meal of rice and milk. This Dasrath divided into three parts, and distributed to his wives, Kosilya, Kakayi, and Somitra. Of these were born Ram, Bharat, and Lachhman and Satrohan. Then the place was called Chhirodak from the sacred preparation, the colour of which its waters still retain. The bathing there is on the 11th of the Lunar half of Kuar.

To the west again near Birhaspati Kund is Dhamjaksh or Dhanaicha (place of treasure). The King of Ajudhia, Hari Chandr, had placed there a vast treasure under the care of Yaksh. The only reward for this fidelity that the Yaksh asked was that his body might no longer give forth foul odours under the curse of Kober, whose rosewater he had pilfered. Hence it is the bestower of beauty, wisdom, and above all of perfume. Its holy day is on the 4th of the dark half of every month.

Close to the river is the shrine of Vishn Hari, sacred to the memory of Vishn Sharma, a famour recluse, and pools of Chakr Tirth, Basisht Kund, Sagar Kund and Brahim Kund. Beyond these are the Rin-Mochan which liberates from all manner of debt or obligation, and Pap-Mochan which cleanses from all sort of sin. Then comes the Lachchman Kund, the holy spot opened by Shesh ji for the descent of Lachhman when summoned from earth by death. Those who bathe and worship there go to heaven. To bathe there on the 5th of lunar half of Sawan frees from the fear of serpents. One who bathes there throughout the month of Baisakh will live for millions of ages in the regions of the Gods.

South of Bidya Kund is Vetarni, from bathing in which one escapes the Judgement of yama. Beside it is Suraj Kund or Goshark, the water of which heals wounds and purifies from leprosy. It is especially efficacious on Sunday, appropriately enough, and on certain other fixed occasions. It takes its name from Gosh, a king of the Solar race, who rested there in hunting one day, and whose wounded hand was cured whenever he put it in to draw water. The sun was pleased with his grateful praise and gave his name to the tank. West of it are Rut Kund, the giver of beauty, and Kam Kund, the giver of happiness, Mantreshwa Kund, Sitala Devi, where prayers are offered on Mondays for-delivery from small pox, Bandi Devi, where on Tuesdays those in prison are prayed for; and Chhutki Devi, in which one attains all his desires by snapping his fingers on the 14th day of any month.

To the west of these are Gupta Hari, where Vishnu in secret did his devotions, and Chakra Hari, where hari dropped his discus. North of Gupt-Hari is Gopirtar, a spot of peculiar holiness, as that in which Ram Chandr left earth for paradise. The chronicles say that Ram Chandr having found his duties on earth accomplished, prepared to depart to his celestial home. He performed the usual ceremonies, took a farewell of his ministers, and then passed out of the city, like the moon rising from the sea. As he went out, Lachhmi and Saraswati issued from his arms, commissioned to spread wealth and wisdom amongst the mortals of this world. With him went in a body his loving subjects, clothed in clean garments, with pure hearts sorrowing. The Gods saw and were moved. They came

gently through the air in their chariots and as they descended, flowers fell in peaceful showers on the vast procession. Then said Brahma the supreme Divinity, "Leave the visible body, and join us, four brothers." And Ram Chandr passed into heaven in the company of the Gods, and the people returned to their homes, "and the place is holy to this day," and he who bathes and worships there, becomes sinless and glorious, whatever his previous life. The name of the place is Gopirtar, that which carries across a river, for one is transported there from the shores of earth to those of heaven. Pilgrimages are made there on the 15th of Katik and Kuar.

In the neighborhood of Suraj Kund, are several holy ponds of no special note, Durga Kund, narsram, Narayana-gram, Tripurari Mahadeo, Bilwa Hari, a shrine for refuge from poverty, debt, and misfortune; Valmik Tirth named after a sage, whose pale and motionless body became enveloped in an ant-hill; the house of Singhi Rikh, the husband of Ramchandr's sister; Panhari, Bharat Kund, Nandi Gram, the residence of Bharat; Kalka Kund, Jata Kund, where Ramchandr and his companions were shaved on their return from their conquests Ajit Vishnu, Satrohan Kund, Gyakup, Pishach Mochan, which has a charm against ghosts; Manus or Puni-Nibas.

And these are the chief of the holy places of Ajudhia of which there is a fresh one to visit, they say, for every day of the solar years." of the said Gentleman is not contained in the book. Copy of pages No.6 and 7 of the aforesaid Gazetteer have been filed as Papers No.107C1/25-26 i.e. Ex.7, Suit-5 (Register Vol.20 Page 51-53). He has mentioned about Ajodhya from page 2 to 14 of the book. It appears that the details of the Ajodhya mentioned in the said Gazetteer has been written by P. Carnegy, Esq., Commissioner and the relevant extract thereof is as under:

"AJODHYA--(Ajodhya)--Pargana HAWELI OUDH--Tahsil FYZABAD--District FYZABAD.--A town in the district of Fyzabad, and adjoining the city of that name, is to the Hindu what Mecca is to the Muhammadans, Jerusalem to the Jews; it has in the traditions of the orthodox a highly mythical origin, being founded for additional security, not on the transitory earth, but on the chariot wheel of the Great Creator himself. It lies 26 47' north latitude and 82* 15' east longitude, on the banks of the Gogra. The name Ajodhya is explained by well-known local pandits to be derived from the Sanskrit words--ajud, unvanquished; also Aj, a name of Brahma,--'The unconquerable city of the creator.' But Ajodhya is also called Oudh, which in Sanskrit means a promise; in allusion, it is said, to the promise made by Ram Chandar when he went in exile, to return at the end of fourteen years. These are the local derivations; I am not prepared to what extent they may be accepted as correct. Dr. Wilson of Bombay thinks the word is taken from yudh, to fight, 'The city of the fighting Chhattris.'*

Area.--The ancient city of Ajodhya is said to have covered an area of 12 jojan or 48 kos, and to have been the capital of Uttar-Kausala or Kosala (the northern treasure), the country of the Surajbans race of kings, of whom Ram Chandar was fifty-seventh in descent from Raja Manu*, and of which line Raja Sumintra was the one hundred and thirteenth and last. They are said to have reigned through the Satya, Treta, and Dwapar yugs, and two thousand years of the Kali or present yug or era.*

With the fall of the last of Rama's line, Ajodhya became a wilderness, and the royal races became dispersed. From different members of this scattered people, the rajas of Jaipur, Udaipur, Jamber, &c., of modern times, on the authority of the "Tirhut Katha," claimed to descend. Even in the days of its desertion, Ajodhya is said still to have remained a comparative paradise; for the jungle by which it was overrun was the sweet-smelling Keora, a plant which to this day flourishes with unusual luxuriance in the neighbourhood*.*

Then came the Buddhist supremacy under Asoka and his successor; a Brahmanical revival then supervened. With this period the name of Bikramajit is traditionally and intimately associated, when Buddhism again began to give place to Brahmanism.

To Bikramajit the restoration of the neglected and forest-concealed Ajodhya is universally attributed. His main clue in tracing the ancient city was, of course, the holy river Sarju, and his next was the shrine, still known as Nageshwar-nath, which is dedicated to Mahadeo, and which presumably escaped the devastations of the Buddhist and Atheist periods. With these elues and aided by descriptions which he found recorded in ancient manuscripts, the different spots rendered sacred by association with the worldly acts of the deified Rama were identified*, and Bikramajit is said to have indicated the different shrines to which pilgrims from afar still in thousands half-yearly flock." (emphasis added)*

4264. About Janamsthan/Babar's Mosque, Benett has mentioned the facts virtually consistent to what has been observed by P. Karnegy and paragraphs 6 and 7 thereof we have already reproduced while discussing the issues relating to date of construction of the disputed building. However, since this is also relevant for these very issues, at the pain of repetition, we reproduce the same also as under:

"The Janamasthan and other temples.--It is locally affirmed that at the Muhammadan conquest there were three important Hindu shrines, with but few devotees attached, at Ajodhya, which was then little other than a wilderness. These were the "Janamasthan," the "Swargaddwar mandir" also known as "Ram Darbar," "Treta-ke-Thakur."

On the first of these the Emperor Babar built the mosque, which still bears his name, A.D. 1528*. On the second, Aurangzeb did the same, A.D. 1658 to 1707; and on the third, that sovereign or his predecessors built a mosque, according to the well-known Muhammadan principle of enforcing their religion on all those whom they conquered.*

The Janamasthan marks the place where Ram Chandar was born. The Swargaddwar is the gate through

which he passed into paradise, possibly the spot where his body was burned. The Treta-Ke-Thakur was famous as the place where Rama performed a great sacrifice, and which he commemorated by setting up there images of himself and Sita.

Babar's mosque.--According to Leyden's Memoirs of Babar, that Emperor encamped at the junction of the Serwa and Gogra rivers two or three kos east from Ajodhya, on the 28th March 1528, and there he halted seven or eight days, settling the surrounding country. A well-known hunting ground is spoken of in that work, seven or eight kos above Oudh, on the banks of the Sarju. It is remarkable that in all the copies of Babar's life now known, the pages that relate to his doings at Ajodhya are wanting. In two places in the Babari Mosque, the year in which it was built, 935 H., corresponding with 1528 A.D., is carved in stone, along with inscriptions dedicated to the glory of that Emperor.*

If Ajodhya was then little other than a wilderness, it must at least have possessed a fine temple in the Janamasthan; for many of its columns are still in existence and in good preservation, having been used by the Musalmans in the construction of the Babari Mosque. These are of strong, close-grained, dark-colored or black stone, called by the natives kasauti (literally touch-stone slate,) and carved with different devices. To my thinking these more strongly resemble Buddhist pillars than those I have seen at Benares and elsewhere. They are from seven to eight feet long, square at the base, centre and

www.vadaprativada.com

capital, and round or octagonal intermediately." (emphasis added)

4265. In respect to Hindu and Muslims relationship in Ayodhya on page 7 of the book it says as under:

"Hindu and Musalman.--The Janamasthan is within a few hundred paces of the Hanoman Garhi. In 1855, when a great rupture took place between the Hindus and Muhammadans, the former occupied the Hanoman Garhi in force, while the Musalmans took possession of the Janamasthan*. The Muhammadans on that occasion actually charged up the steps of the Hanoman Garhi, but were driven back with considerable loss.* The Hindus then followed up this success, and at the third attempt took the Janamasthan, at the gate of which seventy-five Muhammadans are buried in the "martyrs' grave" (Ganj-i-Shahidan.) Eleven Hindus were killed. Several of the king's regiments were looking on all the time, but their orders were not to interfere. It is said that up to that time the Hindus and Muhammadans alike used to worship in the mosque-temple*. Since British rule a railing has been put up to prevent disputes,* within which, in the mosque, the Muhammadans pray; while outside the fence the Hindus have raised a platform on which they make their offerings*. A second attempt was made shortly afterwards by Molvi Amir Ali of Amethi; the object was to seize the alleged site of an old mosque on the Hanoman Garhi.*

The two other old mosques to which allusion has been made (known by the common people by the name of

Naurang Shah, by whom they mean Aurangzeb) are now mere picturesque ruins. Nothing has been done by the Hindus to restore the old mandir of Ram Darbar*. The Treta-Ke-Thakur was reproduced near the old ruin by the Raja of Kalu, whose estate is said to be in the Panjab, more than two centuries ago; and it was improved upon afterwards by Aholya Bai, Marathin, who also built the adjoining ghat, A.D. 1784. She was the widow of Jaswant Rae, Holkar of Indor, from which family Rs. 231 are still annually received at this shrine." (emphasis added)*

4266. Then comes A.F. Millitt's "Report on Settlement of Land Revenue of the Faizabad" (supra) published in 1880, Several pages, namely, 104, 106, 110 and 230 were placed before us but when confronted that the facts about Ayodhya Janamsthan/Babar's Mosque etc. contained in Millet's report (supra) are virtually verbatim reproduction from P. Carnegy' Historical Sketch, none could dispute the same. Copies of the frontispiece as well as page No.218, 231, 235 and 236 have been filed as Paper No.107C1/27-30A i.e. Ex.8, Suit-5 (Register Vol.20 Pages 55-62).

4267. However, some relevant part of the report, we feel appropriate to refer hereat. Chapter I, Section 1, Part 2 shows that the district Fyzabad was constituted in the form in 1880 as it was in 1869. About the river, Chapter I, Section 1, para 8 says as under:

"8. The Gogra is " the great river of Oudh", It flows south-east, and has a fall of 67 feet between Ajudhya and where it leaves the province, the surface of the water being at those places respectively 302 and 235 feet above the level of the sea. Brahmanic lore relates how it had a sacred origin in the holy tears of Brahma. More prosaic accounts say that it takes its rise in the upper ranges of the Himalyas. Further west it is known by other names, but it commences to be called the Gogra (or Ghagra) at Bahramghat, and continues to bear that name throughout this portion of its course, though it is not uncommonly spoken of by the people as the Sarju- a name which it appears to have borne in the seventh century, and which is also applied to it in the Ramayana."

4268. About the Hindu population the details are given in Chapter I, Section 4, para 76 at page 30 and it says that "the Bairagi and Goshain require notice as holding a prominent place in the population of Ajudhya, though they do not together amount to 1 per cent. of that of the district."

4269. In respect to tenures he has given certain strange facts in para 185, Section VI, Chapter 1 at page 66 which reads as under:

"185. The origin of property in this district, as traditionally stated, was therefore in essentials and , as a rule, by usurpation. The lands of conquered country were parcelled out among the conquerors. Lands, formerly in the occupation of the conquered, were usurped; lands formerly in the possession of no one, were eventually occupied; and the title in either case was often confirmed by a formal grant. On the part of the ruling power to its conquering subjects. The families of the original owners, thus acquiring by usurpation or occupation with or without the imperial sanction, have in the process of centuries been mainly displaced by others. They have been bought out, or they have been transferred their possessions by gift, or they have been driven out by force, or they have been displaced by an imperial confiscation; or they have died out and their property has lapsed to the State, which again may have conferred a fresh title. And in this manner have sprung up the various tenures which it is my duty to describe."

4270. About the general history and aborigines he has given his comments in Chapter II, Section I, and paras 270 and 271 (Part 1) and 274, 275, 276, 277, 279, 280, 281, 282 and 283 (Part-2) he has said as under:

"270. Once upon a time the Bhars held sway. This is the starting- point in the annals of the aborigines of nearly every Chattri clan, and hence apparently has arisen the assumption that the Bhars were the aborigines of the district. They seem, however, to belong to a much more recent places in its history (para 308)."

"271. The Pandits of Ajudhya, again divide the human race into fourteen original sections, of which eight are said to have been indigenous to Hindustan, and six to have inhabited countries beyond its limits. As this arrangement professes to be based partly on the Shastras, it may be expected that it coincides pretty closely with what it is to be found in Manu. The two lists run as folloes:-

Pandit	Manu
Punderik, Hirat	Pundrakas,
Khas, Kamboh.	Odras, Draviras,
Udar, Darwar.	Kamhojas,
Yavanas,

www.vadaprativada.com

Haihai, Chin	Sakas, Paradas,
Shak, Pahlav, Parad, Darad.	Pahlavas, Chinas,
Taljangh, Barbar	Kiratas, Deradas,
	and Chasas.

"274. It was, it is supposed, about the time that Abraham, leaving Ur of the Chaldees, went to sojoun in the land which was in after generations to be the inheritance of the Jewish races, that another movement took place in Upper India, the result of which was to establish in Oudh the people were to rule it for many centuries. And in whom even now the ownership of the land of the province is generally vested. Nor, it may be noticed as a curious coincidence, was there only this apparent identity of dates in the two movements, for Ikhasvaku, or Iehwak, the Aryan, the founder of the Hindu kingdom of Oudh, was namesake or very nearly so, of Ishbak, one of the children of the Jewish patriarch.

"275. The Hindus were one of the numerous branches of the now widespread Aryan race, by whom the aborigines, whoever they were, were in this part of India reduced to complete subjection. On this point complete unanimity of opinion exists, but in what relation the conquerors and the conquered stood to each other ethnologically is still a vextia questio."

"276. Elphinstone suggests that the Hindus were, perhaps; a local tribe like the Dorians in Greece; or even nothing more than a portion of one of the native states : a religious sect, for instance, which had outstripped their fellow citizens in knowledge and appropriated all the advantages of the society to themselves. There is no reason whatever, he says, for thinking that the Hindus ever inhabited any country but their own; and if he admits the possibility of their having done so, it is only before the earliest trace of their records or traditions. Nor is the theory of community of origin for the Hindus and autochthones altogether foreign to Hindu mythology. Beni or Vena. Son of Ang, ruler of Ajudhya, one of many unfortunates of the same kind, is said to have fallen a victim to the anger of the Brahmans. He died childless, but his corpse, after the fashion of the ashes of the phoenix, gave birth to two sons, Nishada or Nekhad, sprung from his thigh, and Prithu from his right hand. Nekhad became the ancestor of the aborigines, and Prithu of the Solar race."

"277. A more recent author, on the other hand, in strong contrast with the above, writes " that our earliest glimpses of the "human family disclose two tribes of widely different origin! Struggling for the mastery. In the primitive time, which lies even on the hrizon of inductive history, a " tall, fair-complexioned race passed the Himalayas. They came of a conquering stock. They brought with them a store of legends and devotionals strains." And again, " the philologer can only assert that a branch of a noble stock won for themselves a home among numerous but inferior tribes, and that before the dawn of history the children of the soil had been reduced to villeinage or driven back into the forest."

"279. Manu particularizes three portions of Aryavatta, viz. Brahmavartta, Brahmarshi, and Madhyadesa, and invests them with degrees of sancitty inversely proportioned to their distance from the Saraswati : and Elphinstone assumes that this classification involves the history of the extension of the Aryan occupation. On this hypothesis, as " that country which lies between Himavat and Vindhya, to the east of Vinasana, and to the west of Pryagn, is selebrated by the title of Madhyandesa, or the Central Region," it follows that it was not until their third great onward movement that the Aryans reached Eastern Oudh."

"280. In what character they first appeared cannot be stated with certainty. The usual opinion is that there came at once a colony or army numbering in its ranks all the social elements contained in the community of which it was an offshoot; but it has also been suggested that the main body was preceded by the analogue of the Jesuit and settler, and that proselytizing Brahmans, urged by zeal for the propagation of the Vaidik faith, were the first wave of a flood tide of immigration, followed closely by a second composed of those who were actuated by still peaceful but less unselfish motives- the auri sacra fames, and this view is not without support. In the tradition, it is based on, it is said that it was in compliance with the solicitations. Of oppressed Brahmans that the Solar race first approached Ajudhya; and in the Mahabharata we find that it was with Brahmans (and no other caste is mentioned as being with them) that the Pandavas sojourned during their visits to Varanavata and Ekachara. In the latter of those placs, too, and Asura, not a Kshattriya, king was reigning ; and

Wheeler confidently broaches the theory that, at that period, there were no Aryan principalities so far east even as the former."

"281. In whatever character they first came it seems that it was with Ikhashvaku as their leader they established themselves as a dominant race at Ajudhya,and that Ikhasyaku was the first of the long line Solar kings who had their capital at that place."

"282. Respecting the extent of Ikhasvaku's dominion it is permissible to hazard a conjecture. His capital lay on the extreme east of the Middle Land, and was apparently, therefore, a border city; his western frontier touched Brahmarshi, in which Kanauj was included, whence we may infer that, in that direction, he reigned as far as the left bank of the Ganges; and as pryag was in the Middle Land, that river may also have formed his southern boundary. From this is follows that from the period of its earliest establishment, the Aryan kingdom of Ajudhya included the whole of the territory now known as Fyzabad."

"283. In Oudh. In common with other portions of he Middle land, it was that,in after days,the Brahmanic system was to reach its full development, an end, perhaps, in no slight measure furthered by the efforts of an hierarchy at Ajudhya. " In the Middle Land," says Dr. Hunter, " the simple faith of the singers was first adorned with stately rites and then extinguished beneath them. It beheld the race progress from a loose confederacy of patriarchal communities into several well knit nations, each secured by a strong central force, but disfigured by distinctions of caste destined in the end to be the ruin of the Sanskrit people. The compilers of the land law recorded in the Book of Manu, if not actual residents of the Middle Land, were so closely identified with it as to look upon it as the focus of their race;" and says the same author, " the civilization which is popularly supposed to have been the civilization of ancient India, which is represented by the Brahmanas and Book of Manu, was in its integrity confined to the northern country termed by Manu the " Middle Land." Following, then, the boundaries assigned by Manu to the Middle Land, and bearing in mind the vigorous growth to which Brahmanism there attained , I am led to the conclusion that,almost coincident with the present eastern boundary of Oudh, with Pryag and Ajudhya, under whatever names,as border cities, there long existed and ethnic frontier as sharply defined as that which Dr. Hunter so graphically describes as having subsequently formed the utmost limit of Aryan encroachment in Bengal. In one respect indifference between the two contiguous but antagonistic races in the former case than in the later; for, in proportion, it may be assumed , to the degree of development of Brahmanism, was the bitterness of hatred it bestowed on its opponents; and, so far as the formation of the national character is to be sought in historical events, to the " fierce shock of jarring contrasts"which the Aryans of the eastern border of the Middle Land had to sustain, may perhaps be in part attributed that warlike disposition by which their descendant still continue to be characterised."

4271. About Lord Rama he has dealt in para 286 at page

100 Chapter-II, Section-I, Part 2) as under:

> "286. Following the same scale of chronology as adopted for Ikhahvaku, Rama,who held " the two fold office of king and prophet,"must be placed a bout the time of Solomon, and it is universally agreed that in him we have a character who deserves a place in history; who actually once existed in the flesh,which (says his worshippers) was incarnation of the deity; who was beyond a doubt the most powerful sovereign of the age in which he lived ;who first led an Aryan army into Southern India and Ceylon, and more important than all these together, from the point of view of local history, raised Ajudhya to that pitch of splendour for which it has ever since been famous. His kingdom, mightier even than Ikhshvaku's or Sravastav's, stretched north and south from the Himalayas to the Ganges, and east and west from the Gandak to Nimkhar."

4272. He has dealt with Vikramaditya also from paras 291 to 297 (Chapter-II, Section-I, Part 3) and has recorded his conclusion in para 297 at page 105 as under:

> "297. Vikramaditya was an usurper; at least I have never heard it asserted that he was the rightful owner of Ajudhya. As a preliminary, then, to his restoration of that city, it was indispensable for him to acquire possession of it; and it cannot be supposed that the Buddhist princes tamely acquiesced in his appropriation of it, and yielded without a blow. The picture that presents itself to the mind's eye is that of Ajudhya and its vicinity the theatre of religious war; and I think we may discern therein the

beginning, in Eastern India, of those sanguinary and devastating wars which attended the revival of Brahmanism and its struggles with the creed of Buddha."

4273. His further details about Ayodhya are mainly based on the reports of P. Carnegy and General Cunningham and, therefore, need not be repeated but about the Mohomedan conquest of Ayodhya he has given details from paras 310 to 339 (Chapter-II, Section-I, Part-4). Some relevant paras, i.e., 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315. 316, 317, 318, 322, 323, 324, 331, 337 and 339 are as under:

*"310. From the time of Mahmud of Ghazni dates t*he commencement of the Mahomedan period- the period, that is, of Mahomedand demination. But this is not the full extent of the social changes which the Ghaznavid and his successors brought about. I have attributed the beginning of the work of Kshattriya colonization to Vikramaditya, but this is far from saying he effected its completion. It progressed by very slow degrees until the Hindu kingdoms of the west of India were thrown into confusion by the attacks of the Musulman invaders; and it then received a stimulus under the influence of which it continued to go on steadily for the next five centuries. "Almost all Rajput colonies in oudh," says Mr. C. A. Elliott, "will be found to belong to one of two great classes; and to owe their present position to the Mahomedan conquest, either indirectly, having been induced to leave their homes and to seek for liberty elsewhere by the loss of their ancestral independence, or else directly, having settled where we now find them as subjects, servants or grantees of the Delhi

Court"..... "The former class dates between 1200 A. D. and 1450 A.D. The latter from 1450 A. D. to 1700 A.D. From Babar to Alamgir". In point of date, at least, all the Kshattriyas of this district belong to the former of these two classes. Their history will be separately given in the second section of this chapter."

"311. The earliest Mahmedan invasion of this part of Oudh is locally believed to have occurred as far back as the time of Mahmud of Ghazni, under the leadership of Salar Masud Ghazi, Popularly known as Sayyid Salar the nephew of that prince: and, notwithstanding the silence on the subject of the early historians whose works are still extant, such was not improbably the case. The Mirat-ul-Asrar and the Mirat-i-Masudi, which give detailed accounts of the expedition, though admittedly modern composition profess, it must be remembered, to follow a now lost work of and author who was contemporary with the events and persons be described. Some weight must be attached also to the fact that the most prominent place in the pedigrees of numerous Mahomedan Families in various parts of Eastern Oudh, and in the Allahabad district also, is assigned to those who are said to have come to this country in the time of Sultan Mahmud; many of the Oudh families asserting that their ancestors actually accompanied Salar Masud."

"312. Mahmud himself, moreover, is said to have twice (A.H 410 and A.H. 413) penetrated as far east as Benares, having on the first of these occasions "made a few converts to the faith." A similar limit is also said to have been reached a few years afterwards by Ahmad Nailtigin, a natural son, it is supposed, of Mahmud, who, crossing the river Ganges, at what point is not stated,marched down the left bank until he arrived "unexpectedly" at Benares."

"313. From these two instances it is apparent that either in or close upon the time of Mahmud, the Mahomedan arms had been carried further east than Oudh; and in after days, the main road from Delhi to Bengal, crossing the Ganges at some ford not far west of the present city of Farukhabad, ran through Jaunpur and Benares. It is likely enough, therefore, that this was the route followed by Mahmud, if not by his son also, in which case they must have traversed a portion of this province. Under these circumstances, it is quite within the bounds of possibility that Mahmud's nephew, Salar Masud, also led and expedition in the same direction; if not absolutely the first to do so, he was probably the first to make any conquests there."

"314. Salar Masud, having incurred the bitter enmity of Mahmud's Wazir, whom Mahmud at the time deemed it prudent to conciliate, was told by his uncle that he must submit to a temporary absence from the court of Ghazni. He accordingly requested and obtained permission to make and expedition into Hindustan, promising that he would wrest from the pagans the kingdoms then in heir possession and cause the khutba to read threin in the Sultans name, Having collected and army of 1, 100,000 men, he set out on his journey, and, after various exploits, reached Kanauj and pitched his tents for a while on the banks of the river

Ganges from this he marched to Satrikh, and , fixing his head-quarters there, sent out armies on every side to conquer the surrounding country: Salar Saif-ud-din and Miyan Rajab were despatched against Bahraich, other against Mahona, others against Gopamau, and others against Benares and its neighbourhood."

"315. One day ambassadors arrived at Satrikh bearing this message from the Rais of Manikpur and Karrah:- " This kingdom has belonged to us and to our fathers from time immemorial. No. Musulman has ever dwelt here. Our Annals relate that the Emperor Zu-I-Karnain made and expedition against this country and reached Kannauj; and returned without having crossed the Ganges. Sultan Mahmud also with your father, came as far as Ajmir, Guzerat, and Kanauj, but spared our country ..... You had better take the prudent course of retiring."

"316. Now it chanced that, about this time, Salar Sahu, Father of Salar Masu, arrived at Satrikh; and letters having been intercepted which showed that the princes whose threatening embassy has just been mentioned were endeavouring to effect and alliance with those of Bahraich against their common foe, he set out without delay against them; and dividing his army into two bodies, sent one against Karrah and the other against Manikpur. Both of those places were reduced and Salar Sahu returned in triumph to Satrikh, leaving Malik Abd-ullah in the neighbourhood of Karaah, and Mir Kutab Haidar at Manikpur.

"317. During this period it probably was that the first

mahomedan armies reached this district, but no Mahomedan colonies were planted in it."

"318. Ajudhya, in spite of the expeditions sent from Satrikh against Benares and other places to he east, appears, for some unexplained reason, to have escaped the fate of its neighbours. It seems more plausible to look for the conqueror of Ajudhya among the lieutenants, perhaps relations also, of a later prince, Shahab-ud-din, better known as Muhammad Ghori. Shashab-ud-din, after defeating Jaya Chandra of Kanauj, with that keen attention to reaping substantial results from his victory which he usually displayed set off to plunder the treasury of his late enemy at Asni; he thus arrived on the right bank of Ganges, at a spot where that river now forms the boundary of Oudh, and after his departure thence marched on to attack Benares. The route he then pursued is not related, but it is at least incontrovertible that he had to cross over to the Oudh side of the river before he reached his destination. Now, the story about the town of Sultanpur is that its captor was a Ghori. Ajudhya contains " a tomb of Makhdum Shah. Juran Ghori, a lieutenants, it is alleged to Shahab-ud-din Ghori and coins belongings to the Ghori dynasty have been found near both of those places. Jaunpur also, with Benares, fell " finally under the sceptre of the Musalman when Shahab-ud-din defeated Jaya Chandra nor, though on the return of the Sultan to Ghazni, his lieutenants, Kutb-ud-din fixed his courts for sometime at Asni are any further hostilities asserted to have then taken place. Kutb-ud-din, was principally employed in receiving the homage of the rais and chief whose power had been already broken. It seems to follow,then that the overthrow of all such fortified posts in South-Eastern Oudh as declined to admit that their own subjection was involved in that of Kanauj (of which, as has been seen, they were dependencies) is to be attributed to the period of Shahab-ud-din's progress from Asni to Benares, or that of his homeward march."

"323. The Oudh here alluded to, it must at the same time be remarked, was very much smaller in extent than either the kingdom of Ram Chandra had been in early ages, or than the Subah to which it subsequently gave a name; for contemporary with the Qazi Jalal-ud-din above named, Nasir-ud-din Mahmud, afterwards emperor, held the northern portion of the provinces, which constituted the separate district of Bahraich, and in the opposite direction where Oudh marches with Manikpur, their mutual boundary line most likely cut across the south western corner of the Sultanpur district excluding a large tract from Oudh, and placing it in Manikpur, while Akbarpur and all the territory to the east of it probably lay in the government of Jaunpur (or Zafrabad)."

"324. Up to shortly before the establishment of the Sharqi kingdom, the jurisdiction of the governor of Jaunpur had been limited to 'Jaunpur and Zafrabad,' with such provinces to the eastward as were held neither by petty chiefs nor the lords of Lakhnauti; but, when in A.D. 1394, Mahmud Toghlak deputed his Wazir Khwaja Jehan to that important charge, he invested him with the newly created title of Malik-us-shirq, and at the same time extended his authority over the lover Doab and the provinces on the left bank of the Ganges When, therefore,later on in the same year, Khwaja Jehan, throwing off his allegiance to Delhi, assumed the emblems of royalty, Ajudya, and indeed the whole of Oudh, was in included in his kingdom."

"331. Akbar, as is well known, divided his empire into subabs or provinces, sarkars or divisions, and mahals or pargana. With respect to its internal constitution, it consisted of five sarkars, Oudh, Lucknow, Khairabad, Bahraich, and Gorakhpur, which collectively comprised 134 mahals.

About the place of special interest i.e., Hanumangarhi mention is made in para 653 (Chapter-II, Section-II). About various Akharas including Nirmohi Akhara details are given in paras 656 to 665 (Chapter-II, Section-II). This fort covered a large extent of ground, and, according to ancient manuscripts, it was surrounded by 20 bastion, each of which was commanded by one of Rama's famous general, after whom they took the names by which they are still known. Within the fort were eight royal mansions where dwelt the patriarch Das rath, his wives and Ram his deified son.....

the Ajudhya Mahatum, which is comparatively unknown. This work was prepared to the glorification of Ajudhya, according to some by Ikshawaku of the solar race, while others with more probability aver that it is a transcript from the Askundh and Padam Purans, and is not the production of any Raja."

"669. Hindu and Musalman difference.-The Janmasthan is within a few hundred paces of the Hanuman Garhi. In 1855, when a great rupture took place between the Hindu and Mahomedans, the former occupied the Hanuman Garhi in force, while the Musalmans took possession of the Janmasthan. The Mahomedans on that occasion actually charged up the steps of the Hanuman Garhi, but were driven back with considerable loss. The Hindus then followed up this success, and at the third attempt took the Janamsthan, at the gate of which 75 Mahomedans are buried in the "Martyrs" grave" (Ganj-shahid). Several of the king's regim ents were looking on all the time, but their orders were not to interfere. It is said that up to that time the Hindus and Mahomedans alike used to worship in the mosque temple. in 1904. Copy of pages No.168-169 have been filed as Paper No.107C1/40-41; Ex No.52, Suit-5. The author has given reference and details of the Hindu Muslim clash in regard to "Janam Asthan Temple" which is said to have occurred in 1853 at page 168, 169, 170 which read as under:

> "Shortly before annexation an incident occurred in this district, which may well be recorded as illustrative of the state of anarchy that then prevailed; unless the utter weakness of the Government be borne in mind, such occurrences would appear impossible. A brief reference to the affair is to be found in the article on Rudauli in the old Oudh Gazetteer, but a full account appeared in the "Pioneer" of the 20th of June, 1902 signed Thomas Catania, and entitled "An Episode in Oudh History." This I was enabled to verify through the kindness of Mr. H.J. Bose, I.C.S., who sent me a second narrative of the affair furnished by Raj Mahadeo Bali of Rampur in pargana Daryabad. It would appear that the event happened in the year 1853. The cause of the occurrence was one of the numerous disputes that have sprung up from time to time between the Hindu priests and Musalmans of Ajodhya with regard to the ground on which formerly stood the Janamasthan temple, which was destroyed by Babar and replaced by a mosque. Other mosques had been built there by Aurangzeb and others, and some of them had fallen into decay. The ground, being peculiarly scared to the Hindus, was at once seized by the Bairagies and others, thus affording a fertile source of friction. According to the "Pioneer" account, one of the Mahants had been expelled

by his brethren, and in revenge proceeded to Lucknow, became a Musalman, and spread the news that the Hindus had destroyed the mosque. At all events, the prime mover in the business was one Maulvi Amir Ali, a resident of Amethi in Lucknow and a well-known faqir. This man at once proceeded to proclaim a jihad in the city and was secretly assisted by the king. The latter sent orders to Fyzabad to enquire into the matter, but nothing was done. Thereupon the Maulvi returned to Amethi and collected a large and well-armed force of Muhammadans. Hearing of this, the king deputed Bashir-ud-daula to Amethi and summoned the Maulvi to Lucknow. Knowing the danger of allowing any religious disturbance to come to a head, the king openly proclaimed that no violent action should be taken, but that the mosque in question should be restored. Amir Ali was far from satisfied with this and returned to Amethi. Finding that no action was being taken, he marched with his force to Bansa, a village about three miles to the north of Safdarganj in this district, where is the tomb of the saint, Abd-ul-Razzaq. Here he collected more men, and on receiving the news of his proceedings the king summoned Sir James Outram, the Resident, and left it to him to put a stop to the movement in any way he could.

Consequently an order was sent express to the Nawab of Fyzabad, who despatched a large force to Bansa. Amir Ali, however, remained obdurate, and would only consent to withdraw on the condition that the mosque should be restored. The Governor's Council suggested that the King alone could move in the matter, and so the Nawab

was only too glad to have an excuse for doing nothing. The Maulvi on the other hand, after waiting for a month and finding that nothing was done, marched to Daryabad, where he remained for twenty days. The Nawab thereupon replied by sending four Muftis to preach obedience to the Maulvi's forces; and this action resulted in the reduction of Amir Ali's contingent by one-half. The remainder, however, stood by their leader, and persisted in their intention of marching to Ajodhya and destroying the Hanuman Garhi. Accordingly Colonel Barlow, who commanded the First Regiment of Oudh Irregular Infantry, was ordered to arrest his progress. He was assisted by Rai Abhairam Bali of Rampur, and came up with the Maulvi's force at Shujaganj, a large market on the old high road, and a hamlet of Phugauli, close of Hayatnagar. The insurgent force is said to have numbered 2,000 men, while the King's troops consisted of one regiment and two guns. On coming up with the rebels, Colonel Barlow gave the order to file, and when the Musalman gunner begun, out of sympathy with the Maulvi, to use grape instead of round shot, the Colonel killed him on the spot and worked the gun himself. The encounter was a desperate one, and a fierce hand-to-hand struggle was maintained for three hours. The day was decided by a flanking movement on the part of Colonel Barlow, and the rebels were then surrounded by Sher Bahadur Singh of Kamiar, Thakur Singh and the sepoys of Rai Abhairam Bali, who were waiting for their opportunity. The insurgents then broke and fled, but not before a large number of them had been slain, their estimated loss varying from 120 to 700, while the First infantry was almost destroyed. Amir Ali was killed while in the act of prayer, and his head was sent to the king at Lucknow. For some years after annexation his memory was preserved in a fair held in his honour at Rahimganj in Rudauli; but this has now dwindled to extinction."

4277. In "Fyzabad A Gazetteer being Vol. XLIII of the District Gazetteers of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh" by H.R. Nevill published in 1905 (Book No. 4), the history of Ayodhya is also mentioned. Photocopy of the pages no. 171 to 179 alongwith its frontispiece has been filed as Exhibit T5 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 43A1/2-11), Register 18, pages 5-23. In Chapter V it is said :

"To the Hindu the holy city of Ajodhya is especially dear from its connection with Rama and Sita, the types of perfect men and women. The great epic, called after its hero the Ramayana, has gained immensely in popularity by the production of a revision in the vernacular, and Talsi Das' poem is read and known all over Northern India. According to the Ramayana, Dasarath, of the Surajbans or Solar race, was king of Kosala in the third age of Treta Yug of the Hindu cosmogony. He had four sons, of whom Rama was the eldest. Sita was daughter of Raja Janak of Mithila, and Rama won his bride by breaking the bow which no one else could even bend. Owing to the jealousy of queen Kaikeyi, Dasaratha was induced to send Rama with Sita and his brother Lakshman into exile. Sita was enticed away by Ravana, king of Ceylon, but was recovered after much fighting with the help of Hanuman and his monkeys. It is not yet possible to say whether any of this story is really historical, and not even an approximate date can be assigned to it. That a kingdom of Kosala, with its capital at Ajodhya, existed some time before the birth of Christ, is, however, certain. Ajodhya was also an important city in Jain literature, and Adinatha or Vrishabha, Ajitanatha, Abhainandanatha, Sumatinatha and Anantanatha, the first, second, fourth, fifth and 14th Tirthankaras are said to have been born there." (emphasis added)*

4278. The access of Muslims in Oudh has been dealt with from Page 149 to 153, which is said to commence with the invasion of Saiyid Salar Masaud and reads as under :

"The first Musalman invasion of Oudh was, according to the popular tradition, that of Saiyid Salar Masaud*. The Mirat-i-Masaudi states that the youthful invador went from Multan to Ajodhya, where, after taking the city without a struggle, he remained hunting for some time and then set out for Dehli in 1030 AD. The route taken is remarkable and the story must be confused in some manner.* There is no mention of his passing through Ajodhya on his march from Satrikh to Mahraich, where he met his death; but popular legend steps in to fill the gap. All along the old Lucknow road are numerous tomba which the Muhammadans declare to be of the followers of Saiyid Salar*. Near Raunahi is an ancient mosque and the tombs of two martyrs, Aulia and Makan Shahid, ascribed to this period. Salary, presumably on their way back from the disastrous field of Bahraich. If the expedition passed through the district, as seems hardly probable, it at al events left no mark. It is said that an expedition came to Oudh in the reign of Sultan Ibrahim in 1080. If so, the tradition apparently refers to Hajib Taghatigin, who crossed the Ganges and advanced further into Hindustan than any army since the time of Mahmud. In 1194 Muizz-ud-din Muhammad bin Sam, commonly known as Shahab-ud-din Ghori, is said to have conquered Oudh after taking Kannauj*, and it is supposed that* either he himself or one of his lieutenants occupied Ajodhya*. It is not quite clear when Ajodhya, or Oudh as it is called by the historians, became the headquarters of a Musalman province in the kingdom of Dehli. The country was apparently subdued in the reign of Qutb-ud-din Aibak. One of his lieutenants was Malik Hisam-ud-din Ughlabak*, who was appointed to command in Koil in 1198, and* was afterwards transferred to the newly acquired province of Oudh*. Qutb-ud-din sent his officer, one Kaimaz Rumi, from Ajodhya to Bengal to receive the submission of the refractory chiefs, against whom he had to take the field. Soon after*, however, Ali Mardan founded the Bengal kingdom under the name of Ala-ud-din, and* Oudh became a separate province. It was under the sway of Shams-ud-din Altamsh, who made his eldest son, Nasir-ud-din Mahmud, governor in 1228*. The latter died in 1229, after having made a great name in the province. He crushed the Bhars, who had risen in rebellion and had put* to death, it is said, 120,000 Musalmans. He was apparently succeeded by his brother, Malik Ghias-ud-din Muhammad, who raised a rebellion in Oudh againt his elder brother, Rukh-ud-din, the successor of Altamsh*. During the reign of Rizia, however, the governor was Nasir-ud-din Tabashi Muizzi, who brought his forces to Delhi to aid his sovereign against her rebellious nobles.* In 1242 the province was in the charge of Qamar-ud-din Kairan, one of the patrons of Minhaj-us-Suraj, the author of the Tabakut-i-Nasiri*. He was, however, removed to Karra, and his successor was Malik Amir Khan Altagin, who held Oudh for twenty years, as in 1279 he was sent against the rebel Tughril of Lakhnauti. He was defeated, and for his failure was hanged over the tage of Ajodhya. Balban then marched to Oudh in person and collected there an immense army and a fleet of boats on the Ghagra for the expedition to Bengal. Balban died in 1286 and left his son. Bughra Khan, in possession of Bengal, while Dehli was held by the latter's son, Kaiqubad. It was at Ajodhya that the famous meeting occurred between father and son, which led to a reconciliation and a partition of the country between the two rulers. After this, Oudh was given to Khan Jahan, who remained there for two years. In 1289, when Jalal-ud-din ascended the throne, Malik Ali, a dependant of Balban, was governor of Oudh, and not unnaturally espoused the cause of Chhaju, Balban's nephew, who assumed the royal title in Karra. The Khiljis, however, prevailed and Ali was captured, but released by the clemency of Jalal-ud-din. Oudh was given shortly afterwards to Ala-ud-din, who requited his uncle's kindness by murdering him at Karra. When established at Dehli he gave Oudh with Karra to Malik Ala-ul-Mulk, the uncle of the historian, Zia-ud-din Barni. This man did not hold office for long, it would seem, as soon afterwards he was kotwal of Dehli.*

For some years nothing is heard of Oudh or Ajodhya, but the province was considered of much importance by the sovereigns of the Tughlaq dynasty. In 1321 Malik Tigin was ruler of Oudh, and was murdered by the Hindus, after having joined in the revolt against Ghias-ud-din Tughlaq. He was succeeded by Ain-ul-Mulk, who ruled the province wisely for many years together with Zafarabad to the east. About 1343 he was transferred to Daultabad, and thereupon raised a revolt against Muhammad Tughlaq. He was defeated near Bangarmau in Unao, and was taken prisoner, but was forgiven and restored.* Firoz Shah, the next sovereign, is said to have visited Oudh in the course of his expeditions to Bengal*; his itinerary in the first of these is doubtful, but* he certainly stayed here during the second, and it was on this occasion that he founded Jaunpur. It is not known who was governor of Oudh at this time, for Ain-ul-Mulk was transferred to the Panjab and his successor in Oudh is not mentioned*. It was during this prosperious reign that the tomb of Qazi Saiyid Taj was built at Lorpur near Akbarpur, in 782H., a description of which will be found in the article on that village.*

In 1376 the province of Oudh was placed in the charge of Malik Hisam-ul-Mulk and Hisam-ud-din Nawa*; but not long afterwards, during the confusion that ensued upon the death of Firoz, the Afghan nobles endeavoured to establish independent principalities.* About 1394 Khawaja-i-Jahan, the Wazir, took possession of OUdh and all the country between Bihar and Kannauj and assumed the royal state in Jaunpur. Here he strengthened himself during the civil wars at DEhli, and in this way he established a separate kingdom which endured for many years. OUdh declined in importance, being quite overshadowed by Jaunpur, and few references are made either to the province or to its capital. The Jaunpur kingdom was overthrown by Bahlol Ldi, who gave Oudh to the celebrated Kala Pahar Farmuli. This man held the province till his death in the reign of Ibrahim Lodi, and left his estate to his daughter, Fateh Malika, who was married to one Sheikh Mustafa, during whose lifetime the province passed under the away of the Afghan, Sher Sha. "After the defeat of Ibrahim at Panipat, the Afghatn nobles assembled at Jaunpur and thither Babar send Kamran with Amir Quli Beg in pursuit. The Afghans retired before him to Patna, and thus Oudh fell into the hands of the Mughal Invaders*. It was not for long, however, as in 1527 Hindal fled from his post at Jaunpur before the Afghan Sultan Muhammad. Another force was sent eastwards and Jaunpur again was occupied and given in charge to Mirza Juned. The country was retained by Babar*

There are, however, no references to Oudh during this period." (emphasis added)*

4280. Further it has referred to continuous dispute in respect to alleged desecration of the place and on page 174, it says :

"This desecration of the most sacred spot in the city caused great bitterness between Hindus and Musalmans. On many occasions the feeling led to bllodshed, and in 1855 an open fight occurred, the Musalmans occupying the Janamasthan in force and thence making a desperate assault on the Hanuman Garhi. They charged up the steps of the temple, but were driven back with considerable loss. The HIndus then made a counter-attack and stormed the Janamasthan, at the gate of which seventy-five Musalmans were buried, the spot being known as the Ganj Shahidan or the martyrs; resting place. Several of the king's regiments were present, but their orders were not to interfere. Shortly afterwards Maulvi Amir Ali of Amethi in Lucknow organized a regular expedition with the object of destroying the Hanuman Garhi; but he and his forces were stopped in the Bara Banki district. It is said that up to this time both Hindus and Musalmans used to worship in the same building; but since the mutiny an outer enclosure has been put up in front of the mosque and the Hindus, who are forbidden access to the inner yard, make their offerings on a platform which they have raised in the outer one*."*

4281. Some discussion has also been made in respect to continuous religious confliction between Muslims and Hindus and on page 175, the Gazetteers says:

"Near the Mani Parbat are two tombs which are venerated as those of the patriarchs Seth and Tob. They are mentioned in the Ain-i-Akbari as being of six and seven yards in length respectively. They are again spoken of in the Araish-i-Mahfil. To those Colonel Wilford adds that of Noah, which is still shown near the police-station. The story goes that they fell here fighting the Hindues and thus acquired the rank of martyrs; possibly there is some truth in the story, as it may be that certain Musalmans bearing these names were killed in one of the frequent religious conflicts some four centuries ago, the date which Colonel Wilford assigns to the erections. Other shrines held sacred by Musalmans include that of Shah Juran Ghori, who is said to have come with Shahab-ud-din and destroyed the Jain temple of Adinath in the Murao Tola near the Swargaddwar, giving his name to the mound on which his tome stands*; the shrine of Naurahni Khurd Makks, one of the earliest Musalman immigrants and a renowned saind, said to have been named Mir Ahmad and to have derived his cognomen from Naurahni whence he*

came, and from the muhalla of Ajodhya in which his tomb stands; that of Khwaja Hathi, a follower of Babar, whose enshrined tomb on the Kabir Tila, one of the chief bastions of Ramkot, is still revered; and that of Makhdum Shaikh Bhikha, a western devotee, who flourished some 200 years ago and was buried to the east of the city. The shrines of Shah Saman Fariad-ras and of Shah Chup are other relies of Muhammadan antiquity, of which all traditions are lost. The only remaining institutions of Musalman origin are the Hayat Bakhsh and the Farhat Bakhsh, formerly royal gardens which have now passed into Hindu hands. The former was assigned to Pandit Uma Datt by the British Government, and the latter is partly owned by the Raja of Jaipur and partly by the Digambari faqirs to who, it was made over in part compensation for the Guptar Park in cantonments.

The Hindus temples are all intimately connected with the history of Ajodhya. Most of them are of comparatively recent origin, as it would appear that almost all the ancient shrines were destroyed by Aurangzeb and other Musalman zealots. The sacred places of Ajodhya are exceedingly numerous. The spot according to HIndu mythology represents the forehead of Vishnu and is the seat of learning and the chief of the seven tiraths. It is undoubtedly the most important centre of Vishnu worship in Oudh, if not in the whole of Upper India, and claims precedence over Muttra and Hardwar. It is only natural, therefore, that the sacred places connected with Vishnu in his various incarnations and especially that* of Ram Chandra, the best known of all, should be many in number and should extend beyond the immediate precincts of the city, even as far as Bhadarsa and Bilharghat. In 1902 a local committee was formed with the object of commemorating the coronation of His Imperial Majesty King Edward VII, and a sum of over Rs. 1,000 was collected and expended on the erection of stone pillars marking the sacred spots in Ajodhya and its neighbourhood*. This work has been carried out and no fewer than 145 such stones have been erected; their ostensible purpose being to preserve the memory of the various holy spots and to serve as a guide to pilgrims and others interested in the place. A complete enumeration would be useless without some descriptive and historical account of each, and only the mere important need be here mentioned.*

"Imperial Gazetteer of India--Provincial Series--United Provinces of Agra and Oudh"-Vol. II (1908) (Book No. 16) was published by Superintendent of Government Printing Calcutta in 1908 and on page 388-389 (Ex.10 Suit-5; Paper No.107C1/37-39) thereof in respect of "Ajodhya Town", it reads as under:

"Ajodhya Town (in Sanskrit Ayodhya; now known as Ajudhia).--Town in Fyzabad District, United Provinces, situated in 26 48' N. and 82* 12' E., on the right bank of the Gogra, and on a branch of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. Population (1901) 21,584. With the fall of the last of the Solar line, Raja Sumintra, the one hundred and thirteenth monarch, Ajodhya became a wilderness and the royal family dispersed. From different members of this scattered stock the Rajas of Udaipur, Jaipur, &c., claim descent. Tradition relates that Ajodhya was restored by king Vikramaditya of Ujjain, whose identity is a matter of dispute. Ajodhya was of small importance in Muddhist times, when Saketa became the chief city of Kosala. It is still uncertain where Saketa was situated, and it has been suggested that it occupied part of the ancient city of Ajodhya. Numismatic evidence points to the rule of a line of independent Rajas, in or near Ajodhya, about the commencement of the Christian era. 4283. H.R. Nevill published another Gazetteer i.e. "Fyzabad-A Gazetteer being Volume XLIII of the District Gazetteers of the United Provinces of Agra & Oudh" in 1928 (Paper No.107C1/49-53; Register 20, Pages No.99-107). It says:

"Ajodhya is pre-eminently a city of temples, and apart from these there are but few points of interest in the place. Not all of these places of worship are connected with the Hindu religion. There are six Jain shrines which have been already mentioned in Chapter III in connection with Jainism in this district; and there are also the Musalman mosques and tombs. It is locally affirmed that at the time of the Musalman conquest there were three important Hindu shrines at Ajodhya and little else*. These were the Janamasthan temple, the Swargaddwar and the Treta-ka-Thakur, and each was successively made the object of* attention of different Musalman rulers. The Janamasthan was in Ramkot and marked the birthplace of Rama*. In 1528 A.D. Babar came to Ajodhya and halted here for a week.* He destroyed the ancient temple and on its site built a mosque, still known as Babar's mosque. The materials of the old structure were largely employed, and many of the columns are in good preservation; they are of close-grained black stone*, called by the natives kasauti, and carved with various devices. Their length is from seven to eight feet, and the shape square at the base, centre and capital, the rest being round or octagonal. The mosque has two inscriptions, one on the outside and the other on the pulpit; both are in Persian and bear the date 935 Hijri. Of the authenticity of the inscriptions there can be no doubt, but no record of the visit to Ajodhya is to be found in the Musalman historians. It must have occurred about the time of his expedition to Bihar.*

This desecration of the most sacred spot in the city caused great bitterness between Hindus and Musalmans. On many occasions the feeling led to bloodshed, and in 1855 an open fight occurred, the Musalmans occupying the Janamasthan in force and thence making a desperate assault on the Hanuman Garhi*. They charged up the steps of the temple, but were driven back with considerable loss. The Hindus then made a counter-attack and stormed the Janamasthan, at the gate of which seventy-five Musalmans were buried, the spot being known as the Ganj Shahidan or the martyrs' resting-place. Several of the king's regiments were present, but their orders were not to* interfere. Shortly afterwards Maulvi Amir Ali of Amethi in Lucknow organized a regular expedition with the object of destroying the Hanuman Garhi; but he and his forces were stopped in the Bara Banki district. It is said that up to this time both Hindus and Musalmans used to worship in the same building; but since the mutiny an outer enclosure has been put up in front of the mosque and the Hindus, who are forbidden access to the inner yard, make their offerings on a platform which they have raised in the outer one*.*

The other mosques were built by Aurangzeb and are now in ruins. That on the Swargaddwar replaced an ancient temple which has never been restored. The Treta-ka-Thakur marked the place where Rama performed a great sacrifice and set up images of himself and Sita. This was reproduced by the Raja of Kulu in the Punjab more than two centuries ago it was improved by Ahalya Bai, the widow of Jaswant Rai Holkar of Indore in 1784, and the same person built the adjoining ghat. As the temple could not commemorate her name, she built another called after herself and gave an annual assignment of Rs.231 to it, the sum being still paid by the ruler of Indore. The ancient images were said to have been recovered from the river where they had been thrown by Aurangzeb, and were placed in the new Treta-ka-Mandir. This temple is always closed during the day and is only opened at night on the 11th of the dark and light halves of each month, and for two or three nights on the occasion of the Ramnaumi and Katki fairs. The temple is endowed with two or three villages in

Near the Mani Parbat are two tombs which are venerated as those of the patriarchs Seth and Tob. They are mentioned in the Ain-i-Akbari as being of six and seven yards in length respectively. They are again spoken of in the Araish-i-Mahfil. To these Colonel Wilford adds that of Noah, which is still shown near the police-station. The story goes that they fell here fighting the Hindus and thus acquired the rank of martyrs; possibly there is some truth in the story, as it may be that certain Musalmans bearing these names were killed in one of the frequent religions conflicts some four centuries ago, the date which Colonel Wilford assigns to the erections. Other shrines held sacred by Musalmans include that of Shah Juran Ghori, who is said to have come with Sahab-ud-din and destroyed the Jain temple of Adinath in the Murao tola near the Swargaddwar, giving his name to the mound on which his tomb stands; the shrine of Naurahni Khurd Makka, one of the earliest Musalman immigrants and a renowed saint, said to have been named Mir Ahmad and to have derived his cognomen from Naurahni whence he came, and from the muhalla of Ajodhya in which his tomb stands; that of Khwaja Hathi, a follower of Babar, whose enshrined tomb on the Kabir Tila, one of the chief bastions of Ramkot, is still revered; and that of Makhdum Shaikh Bhikha, a western devotee, who flourished some 200 years ago and was buried to the east of the city. The shrines of Shah Saman Faraidras and of Shah Chup are other relies of Muhammadan antiquity, of which all traditions are lost.

The only remaining institutions of Musalman origin are the Hayat Bakhsh and the Farhat Bakhsh, formerly royal gardens which have now passed into Hindu hands. The former was assigned to Pandit Uma Datt by the British Government, and the latter is partly owned by the Raja of Jaipur and partly by the Digambari faqirs to whom it was made over in part compensation for the Guptar Park in cantonments.

Regarding disputed construction, on pages 351, 352 and 353 it says as under:

> "Ayodhya (which means invincible) is a place of great antiquity. According to Hindu mythology it represents the forehead of Vishnu and is the chief of the seven cities (saptpuri) of pilgrimage in India. As Carnegy puts it, "Ajudhia, which is to the Hindu what Mecca is to the Mohammedan, Jerusalem to the Jews, has in the traditions of the orthodox, a highly mythical origin, being founded for additional security not on earth for that is transitory but on the chariot wheel of the Great Creator himself which will endure for ever." It is intimately connected with the mass of legend relating to Rama and the Suryavanshi (Solar) race and was certainly the capital of several reigning dynasties. It is one of the most important centres of Vaishnava worship*. Buddhist tradition mentions Saket as the place where Buddha spent 16 summers and some scholars consider Ayodhya and Saket to be identical. In the fifth century A.D. it came under the sway of the Imperial Guptas and became a flourishing trade centre. Probably the Chinese pilgrims Fa-hien and Hiuen Tsang visited this place.* Nothing of antiquity has survived as many acts of vandalism were perpetrated by the different invaders*. For a long period from the seventh century A.D. onwards*

the place appears to have been almost deserted. In early mediaeval times it rose again in importance under the Muslim rules who made it the seat of government of a large province. That it was still regarded as a holy spot by the Hindus is clear from the fact that it was desecrated by Babur and Aurangzeb and that the presence of a Muslim governor and his court contrived to keep the Hindu shrines continually in the back-ground. Ayodhya was also a mint town under some of the Mughal kings. It is not clear when it first began to assume its present proportions; the change presumably occurred about the middle of the 18th century when the capital of the Muslim rulers was removed from Ayodhya to the new city of Faizabad and the Qila Mubarak or fort of Saadat Khan (near Lachhman Ghat in Ayodhya) was abandoned for his country residence at the Bangla. With the departure of the court, the Hindus were left to themselves and numerous temples and monasteries sprang into existence*. Nawal Rai, the deputy of Nawab Safdar Jung, built a fine house in Ayodhya which still stands on the river front. Probably this rise in importance was due to the growing popularity of the Ramcharitmanasa of Tulsidas and the progress of this place became even more rapid after the annexation of Avadh by the British. Before the middle of the nineteenth century Ayodhya was regarded as a stronghold of Hinduism although the great family of Sakaldvipi Brahmanas, whose representative bore the title of 'Maharaja of Ayodhya', had but little to do with the place and even the fine place of the Maharaja in the east of the city and its adjoining temple are not very old.*

It is said that at the time of the Muslim conquest there were three important Hindu shrines here and little else, the Janmasthan temple*, the Swargadwar and the Treta-ke-Thakur.* The Janmasthan was in Ramkot and marked the birthplace of Rama. It seems that in 1528 A.D. Babur visited Ayodhya and under his orders this ancient temple was destroyed and on the site was built what came to be known as Babur's mosque*. The material of the old temple was largely employed in building the mosque and a few of the original columns are still in good preservations; they are of cloe grained black stone (kasauti) bearing various Hindu bas-reliefs (see Plate I), the outer beam of the main structure being of sandal wood. The height of the columns is seven to eight feet, the shape of the base, the middle section and the capital is square, the rest being round or octagonal.* There are two inscriptions in Persian, one on the outside and the other on the pulpit bearing the date 935 Hijri*.* Subsequently Aurangzeb also desecrated the shrines of Ayodhya which led to prolonged bitterness between the Hindus and Muslims. The latter occupied the Janmasthan by force and also made an assault on Hanuman Garhi. Attacks and counter-attacks continued, culminating in the bloodshed of 1855 under the leadership of Maulvi Amir Ali. As a result, in 1858 an outer enclosure was put up in front of the mosque and the

Since 1949 the position has changed and the Hindus have succeeded in installing the images of Rama and Sita in the mosque owing to which the spot has become the object of much litigation. Now the inner yard is protected by an armed guard and only a few Hindu pujaris (priests) are allowed access to the inner sanctum." (emphasis added)*

4286. Now we turn to some Hindu texts which refers to Ayodhya as well as Lord Rama which have been relied heavily by all the learned counsels appearing for Hindu parties.

4287. It was suggested that the origin of Aryan in Indian Sub-continent itself is not traceable to several thousand of years to co-relate them with Lord Rama and a search of his place of birth at the disputed site does not travel to such length of time as being argued. For this purpose an attempt was made to show the meaning of the word "Hindu" in the book Hinduism by Sir Monier Williams. Let us consider this.

4288. Mr. Monier Williams was born in Bombay on 12th November 1819. His father, Colonel Monier Williams was surveyor-general in the Bombay presidency. He matriculated at Oxford from Balliol College in 1837 but left University in 1839 since nominated for the East India Company's civil services. While undergoing his training course at Haileybury, he got the information of death of his brother in India. He relinquished his nomination and returned to Oxford. He entered University College to study Sanskrit in 1841-44. He gained Boden Scholarship in 1843. After obtaining his degree, he became Professor of Sanskrit, Persian and Hindustani languages.

Married in 1848 on the suggestion of Professor H.H. Wilson in 1851 he started working on a scientifically arranged Sanskrit-English dictionary. In 1860, he was elected Boden Professor of Sanskrit at Oxford after a contest with Professor Max Muller. In the Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia the bio data of Monier Williams has been given wherein it is mentioned after his appointment to the professorship, Williams declared that the conversion of India to Christian religion should be one of the aims of the orientalist scholarship. In his book "Hinduism" he predicted the demise of the Hindu religion and called for Christian evangelism to ward off the spread of Islam. His first version of Sanskrit-English dictionary was published in 1872. He founded Indian Institute at Oxford in 1883 which also provided training ground for Indian Civil Services. He visited India in 1883 itself to solicit the moral and financial support of the native princes and other leading men.

4289. The controversy which we are shouldering upon to adjudicate largely involved historical, religious, philosophical, social and sociological aspects. The development in growth of Hindu religion runs concurrent as per beliefs of some about four thousand years and for others ranging from eight to ten thousands years to more than a crore years. This itself makes the complexity of the problem patent. To appreciate the historical developments, it would be of some interest if we have the idea and broad features of Hindu religion in this part of Asian continent which we now call India or Hindustan or Bharat. The first and foremost aspect of the matter would be whether Hindu religion by itself is only a religion or it talks of a particular set of people known by some common features of social and

behavioural pattern including the religious one or denoted by geographical sense or otherwise. Though there is a lot of diversion of opinion and presently a serious thought is otherwise under current amongst the scholars. Upto now the general accepted version by scholars has been that the word “Hindu” had its genesis in the river Sindhu, otherwise known as “Indus” flowing from Punjab. Sir Moniar Williams in his Book “Hinduism” has said:

> “That part of the great Aryan race, which immigrated from Central Asia, through the mountain passes into India, settled first in the districts near the river Sindhu (now called the Indus). The Persians pronounced this word Hindu and named their Aryan brethren Hindus. The Greeks, who probably gained their first ideas of India from the Persians, dropped the hard aspirate, and called the Hindus "Indoi".

4290. “The Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics”, Vol. VI, has described "Hinduism" as the title applied to that form of religion which prevails among the vast majority of the present population of the Indian Empire.

4291. As observed by Dr. Radhakrishnan; "The Hindu civilization is so called, since its original founders or earliest followers occupied the territory drained by the Sindhu (the Indus) river system corresponding to the North-West Frontier Province and the Punjab. This is recorded in the Rig Veda, the oldest of the Vedas, the Hindu scriptures which give their name to this period of Indian history. The people on the Indian side of the Sindhu were called Hindu by the Persian and the later western invaders".

4292. What Hindu religion is we have already said while dealing with Issue No. 17 (Suit-3). As we have seen, if not impossibly, it is very difficult to define this term or even to adequately describe it. Hindu religion does not claim any one prophet, it does not worship a single God, it does not subscribe to one dogma, does not believe in one philosophical concept, does not follow any one set of religion, rites or performance. Broadly speaking, it does not appear to satisfy the traditional features of any religion or creed as is known in other religions which narrow down its area of spread and influence. Broadly, it is described as a way of life and nothing more. The people lacking in depth knowledge of concept of Hinduism surprise as to what this name seems to without any content. Is it a museum of beliefs, a medley of rites, or a mere map, a geographical expression? Dr. Radhakrishnan posed these questions which disturbed foreigners when they think of Hinduism and then explained that the term "Hindu" had originally a territorial and not a credal significance. It implied residence in a well-defined geographical area. A boriginal tribes, savage and half-civilized people, the cultured Dravidians and the Vedic Aryans were all Hindus as they were the sons of the same mother. The Hindu thinkers reckoned with the striking fact that the men and women dwelling in India belonged to different communities, worshipped different gods, and practiced different rites. That is how Hinduism has steadily absorbed the customs and ideas of peoples with whom it has come into contact and has thus been able to maintain its supremacy and its youth. Hindu religion is a reflection of the composite characters of the Hindus, who are not one people but many. It is based on the idea of universal receptivity. It has always aimed to accommodate itself to circumstances, and has carried on the process of adaptation through more than three thousand years. It has first borne with and then, so to speak, swallowed, digested, and assimilated something from all creeds. Monier Williams observed that it must be borne in mind that Hinduism is far more than a mere form of theism resting on Brahmanism. It presents for our investigation a complex congeries of creeds and doctrines which in its gradual accumulation may be compared to the gathering together of the mighty volume of the Ganges, swollen by a continual influx of tributary rivers and rivulets, spreading itself over an ever-increasing area of country and finally resolving itself into an intricate Delta of tortuous streams and jungly marshes.

4293. Normally, any recognised religion or religious creed subscribes to a body of set philosophic concepts and theological beliefs but it does not apply as such to Hindu religion. Philosophy in ancient India was not an auxiliary to any other science or art, like other countries but always held a prominent position in independence. The Mundaka Upanisad speaks of Brahma-vidya or the science of the eternal as the basis of all sciences, 'sarva-vidya-pratishtha'. Philosophy is the lamp of all the sciences, the means of performing all the works, and the support of all the duties according to Kautilya. Dr. Radhakrishnan said that in all the fleeting centuries of history, in all the vicissitudes through which India has passed, a certain marked identity is visible. It has held fast to certain psychological traits which constitute its special heritage, and they will be the characteristic marks of the Indian people so long as they are privileged to have a separate existence. The development of Hindu religion has always been inspired by an endless quest of the mind for truth based on the consciousness that truth has many facets. Truth is one, but wise men describe it differently. The Indian mind has, consistently through the ages, been exercised over the problem of the nature of godhead and problem that faces the spirit at the end of life, and the interrelation between the individual and the universal soul. If we can abstract from the variety of opinion and observe the general spirit of Indian thought, we shall find that it has a disposition to interpret life and nature in the way of monistic idealism, though this tendency is so plastic, living and manifold that it takes many forms and expresses itself in even mutually hostile teachings, says Dr. Radhakrishnan. The monistic idealism which can be said to be the general distinguishing feature of Hindu Philosophy has been expressed in four different forms : (1) Non-dualism or Advitism; (2) Pure monism; (3) Modified monism; and (4) Implicit monism. These different forms of monistic idealism purport to derive support from the same ancient literature that we called vedas, Upanishads, Puranas etc. Shankaracharya, Ramanujam, Vallabhacharya and Madhvacharya all based their philosophic concepts on what they regarded to be the synthesis between the Upanishads, the Brahmasutras and the Bhagavad Gita. Philosophic concepts and principles evolved by different Hindu thinkers and philosophers varied in many ways and even appeared to conflict with each other in some particulars, they all had reverence for the past and accepted the Vedas as the sole foundation of the Hindu philosophy. It appears that since its beginning, it was realized by

Hindu religion that truth by truth was many-sided and different views contained different aspects of truth which no one could fully express. This knowledge inevitably bred a spirit of tolerance and willingness to understand and appreciate the opponents point of view. That is how the several views set forth in India in regard to the vital philosophic concepts are considered to be the branches of the self-same tree. The short cuts and blind alleys are somehow reconciled with the main road of advance to the truth. As soon as we appreciate this broad sweep of the Hindu philosophic concepts, it can be realised that under Hindu philosophy, there is no scope for ex-communicating any notion or principle as heretical and rejecting it as such. Max Muller had observed, the longer I have studied the various systems, the more have I become impressed with the truth of the view taken by Vijnanabhiksu and others that there is behind the variety of the six systems a common fund of what may be called national or popular philosophy, a large manasa (lake) of philosophical thought and language far away in the distant North and in the distant past, from which each thinker was allowed to draw for his own purposes. The development of Hindu religion and philosophy shows that from time to time saints and religious reformers attempted to remove from the Hindu thought and practices elements of corruption and superstition and that led to the formation of different sects despite his common and divergent respective views of such saints and religious reformers; underneath there is a kind of subtle indescribable unity which keeps them within the sweep of the broad and progressive Hindu religion. Whether it is Buddhism of Gautam Buddha or Jainism of Mahavir, Lingayat founded by Basava, Varakari cult initiated by Dnyaneshwar and Tukaram, Sikhism inspired by Guru Nanak Arya Samaj founded by Dayananda and Bhakti cult commenced with Chaitanya has found the teachings of Ramakrishna and Vivekananda etc. All of them revolted against the dominance of rituals and the power of the priestly class with which it came to be associated; and all of them proclaimed their teachings not in Sanskrit which was the monopoly of the priestly class, but in the languages spoken by the ordinary mass of people in their respective regions. Beneath the diversity of philosophic thoughts, concepts and ideas expressed by Hindu philosophers who started different philosophic schools, their lie certain broad concepts which can be treated as basic, though all accept Veda as the highest authority in religious and philosophic matters. It implies necessarily that all the systems claim to have drawn their principles from a common reservoir of thought, i.e., the Veda. Then all of them accept the view of the great world rhythm. Vast periods of creation, maintenance and dissolution follow each other in endless succession. The systems of Hindu philosophy believe in rebirth and pre-existence. We do not find that all the Hindu worship the same temples or the same God. There are certain sections of the Hindu community which do not believe in the worship of God. In the Hindu Pantheon, numbers of idols are worshipped by the Hindus. It presents the spectacle of a very large number of gods who are worshipped by different sections of the Hindus, but many a times idols in a temple or a temple as such may not be necessarily to profess the beliefs of Hinduism. We have discussed these aspects in some detail while considering the issues relating to juridical personality of deities

We are of the view that the historicity of Lord Rama cannot be restricted by any preconceived notion since, if any such attempt is made not only in respect to Lord Rama but in other matters also, that may result in havoc and will amount to playing with the sentiments and belief of millions of people which are bestowed upon them from generations to generation and time immemorial.

"21. On the Navami day the man should observe the holy vow. By the power of the holy bath and charitable gifts, he is liberated from the bondage of births."

"22. By visiting the place of birth one attains that benefit which is obtained by one who gives thousands of tawny-coloured cows everyday."

"23-25. By seeing the place of birth one attains the merit of ascetics performing penance in hermitage, of thousands of Rajasuya sacrifices and Agnihotra sacrifices performed every year. By seeing a man observing the holy rite particularly in the place of birth he obtains the merit of the holy men endowed with devotion to mother and father as well as preceptors."

"28. By (visiting) the city of the Son of Dasarath (i.e. Rama) in Kali Yuga, it is said, one gets that merit which is obtained by persons who perform Gayasraddha and then visit Purusottama (Jagannathapuri)."

"32. By visiting the city of Dasarath's Son in Kaliyuga (even) for half a moment one obtains the merit of taking a holy plunge in Ganga for sixty thousand years."

For those offering 'Hawan' in fire, 'Bhagwan' (God) is present in fire. For the wise and the Yogis, God exists only in their respective hearts, and for those having a little intellect, God exists in statues. The Sivapurana (Kotirudra—samhita) chap. 1 names the twelve Jyotirlingas and chapters 14-33 narrate the legends connected with the twelve lingas. The Skandapurana I (Kedarakhanda) chap. 7 verses 30-35 enumerate several lingas including most of the twelve Jyotirlingas. The Barhaspatyasutra (edited by Dr. F.W. Thomas) mentions eight great tirthas each of Visnu, Siva and Sakti, that yield all siddhis." (pages 677-678)

4308. Sri Mishra submits that Ayodhya and its relation with Lord Rama as his place of birth is well recognised and mentioned in ancient Hindu Literature. The existence of "Vedi" at the disputed place is mentioned by Father Joseph Tieffenthaler in his work, translated in French titled as "Description Historique Et Geographique Del'inde" first published in 1787 by Jean Bernoulli.

4309. He points out that "Sanskrit Hindi Kosh" written by Waman Shivram Apte, first published in 1966 (reprinted in 1993) at page 1139 shows that "Vedi" in Sanskrit is known as

www.vadaprativada.com

"sthandilam" and he also placed reliance on "Sanskrit English Dictionary" by Sir Monier Williams (first published in 1899) (reprinted in 1997) (by Motilal Banarasidass) which defines "sthandila" as "an open unoccupied piece of ground, bare ground, an open field, a piece of open ground (levelled, squared, and prepared for a sacrifice)".

4310. Referring to "Narsingh-Puranam" published by Geeta Press, Gorakhpur 1999 (Samvat 2056), Adhyaya 62 at page 263 he submits that "sthandil" and "idols" are also worshipped as God by Hindus. He placed the Verse No. 6 which reads in Sanskrit as under:

> "अतोअग्रो हृदये सूर्ये स्थण्डिले प्रतिमासु च।
> एतेषु च हरेः सम्यगर्चनं मुनिभिः स्मृतम्।।
> इसलिए अग्नि, सूर्य, हृदय, स्थण्डिल (वेदी) और प्रतिभा–इन सभी आधारों में भगवान् का विधिपूर्वक पूजन मुनियों द्वारा बताया गया है। भगवान सर्वमय हैं, अतः स्थण्डिल और प्रतिमाओं में भी भगवत्वपूजन उत्तम है।"
>
> "The saints have ordained for due worship of God in all these bases-fire, the Sun, heart, altar and idol. God is omnipresent; so, it is also a good thing to worship God as represented in altars and idols." (E.T.C.)

4311. Before proceeding further let us have some other history books relied on by learned counsel of the parties.

4312. Sri R.L. Verma, in order to show that Lord Rama was born at the site in dispute placed before us firstly the Kalhana's Rajatarangini-A Chronicle of the Kings of Kasmir (Book No. 63) translated with an introduction, commentary and appendices by M.A. Stein. The book was first published in 1900 AD in London and reprinted in Delhi in 1961. We had before us the reprint of 1989 cited from the aforesaid book para 125, 3rd

www.vadaprativada.com

book, page 83 which reads as under:

"125. At that period there lived at Ujjayini as the sole sovereign of the world the glorious Vikramaditya who (also) bore the second name of Harsa."

4313. From the note given in respect to para 125 at the bottom he said that Vikramaditya referred to therein was the same within whose period Kalidasa lived and composed his legendary works. He said that the Vikramaditya referred to in Kalhana's Chronicle was the same king who reconstructed Ayodhya and got 360 temples constructed thereat. However, despite our deepest thought and study of the above work we fail to understand as to how reference to the above book gives any clue about the birthplace of Lord Rama or whether there existed temple at the disputed site before construction of the disputed structure in 1528 AD. Despite repeated query, Sri Verma could not throw any light on the question and simply said that his attempt is to clarify the fact that the Vikramaditya referred to in Kalhana's Rajatarangini, 3rd Book, para 125 was the same Vikramaditya who was mentioned by Hiuen-tsiang as successor of Siladitya who ruled about 580 AD in Malwa. Meaning thereby king Vikramaditya ruled at Ujjayini in the first half of the 6th Century and Kalidasa was his contemporary.

4314. Next he cited English translation of the Raghuvamsa of Kalidasa by M.R. Kale-reprinted in Delhi in 1972, 1991 and 1997 by Motilal Banarasi Dass Publishers Pvt. Ltd. Delhi (Book No. 48). He placed Chapter 'Introduction' at page 19 which contains story of King Dasratha and Lord Rama and reads as under:

"CANTO IX. After his father, Dasaratha rules over

Ayodhya as nobly as his predecessors. His greatness was such that even Indra himself on occasions asked his assistance in his own wars. Once, having enjoyed all the pleasures of the spring season with its attendant festivities, he plans a long hunting trip. He spends several days in that engrossing and delightful sport. One morning he starts after a deer, alone and without followers. In his pursuit he comes to the river Tamasa, where he hears the noise of a pot being filled with water. He mistakes it for the trumpet of a wild elephant, and discharges an arrow in that direction, aiming at the sound only, as he could not see the mark. As a matter of fact a young ascetic-boy was filling his jar there; and the arrow hit him fatally. His parents, who were blind, were at hand. The King, who was horrified at what he had unwillingly done, related to them what had happened. As the boy died, his sorrow-stricken father cursed the King as the author of his bereavement, with the words: "You, too, like me, shall die, in your old age, grieving for your son." The king had no son then; so he received the curse as a sort of qualified blessing, since it meant that at any rate a son was bound to be born to him before he died. The aged couple burned themselves on the funeral pyre of their son, and Dasaratha returned to his city, full of grief not unmixed with a little anticipatory joy at the prospect of a son.

CANTO X. Some ten thousand years pass, but still Dasaratha remains without the expected son. At last, holy sages proceed to perform on his behalf a special kind of sacrifice intended to bring about the birth of a son. Now at about this time it so happens that the gods, who were continually harassed and persecuted by the dreaded and powerful demon Ravana, carry their tale of grievances to their lord Vishnu, who tells them how, by virtue of a boon given by Brahma, Ravana was immune from death at the hands of all except human beings, whom he despised and hence had left out of the boon. Vishnu, therefore, promises that he would be born as a man, as a son of King Dasaratha of Ayodhya, and that at his hands Ravana would meet death.-Now, out of the fire of that sacrifice which was being performed for Dasaratha, there arises a being who gives consecrated food (charu) to the King, who gives it to his three wives. Into this food Vishnu had entered spiritually, and thus Dasaratha's wives, who conceive afterwards, all bear sons who are partial incarnations (avataras) of Vishnu. Rama was the eldest of them, born of Kausalya. Of Kaikeyi was born Bharata, and of Sumitra were born the twins, Lakshmana and Satrughna.

CANTO XII. King Dasaratha, who had grown old ad was nearing his end, declares his intention to set Rama on the throne, when Kaikeyi contrives, by means of two boons which her husband had promised her, to have Rama exiled for fourteen years and to have her son Bharata installed King. Rama quite willingly undertakes to go to the forest, and the old King, grieving at being separated from his beloved son, dies heart-broken, thus fulfilling the old man's curse-(Canto IX). Bharata declines to accept the sovereignty earned by intrigue, and after vainly trying to persuade Rama to come back, himself remains a sort of exile at Nandigrama, and from that place he rules the kingdom as Rama's representative. In his journey to the forest Rama is accompanied by Sita and Lakshmana. He there kills Viradha, Dushana, Khara, and other demons, the news of whose death is carried to Ravana in Lanka by his sister Surpanakha, whom Lakshmana had disfigured. Ravana comes and carries off Sita in Rama's absence. Rama makes friends with Sugriva, the monkey-Chief, and through his retainer Maruti discovers the whereabouts of Sita. Building a bridge over the sea, Rama with Sugriva's army crosses into Lanka, and is engaged in a series of battles with the hosts of Ravana, whose death he finally accomplishes. Rama recovers Sita, gives Ravana's kingdom to his brother Vibhishana, and starts back for Ayodhya in the well-known aerial car, Pushpaka, along with Sugriva and Vibhishana and their armies.

CANTO XIII. The journey of Rama from Lanka to Ayodhya by air is here described. Rama points out to sita the various objects and places of interest on the way, including, in order, Janasthana, the mountain Malyavat, the lake Pampa, the Godavari, Panchavati, the dwelling-places of the sages Agastya Satakarni and Sarabhanga, the mountain Chitrakuta, the stream Mandakini, the rivers Ganga and Yamuna, and lastly the Sarayu. After they had seen the Sarayu they observe Bharata advancing with an army to welcome the home-coming king. Rama gets down from the Pushpaka, and the meeting of the brothers is touchingly described. Then Rama again gets into the car and arrives at last in a garden outside Ayodhya, his capital.

CANTO XIV. There in the garden Rama and Lakshmana see their mothers who greet them with joy. Rama is then formally crowned King of Ayodhya with due pomp and ceremony. He then gives the armies of Sugriva and Vibhishana leave to depart, and restores Pushpaka to its original rightful owner, Kubera. In course of time Sita shows signs of pregnancy. She expresses a desire again to visit the once-familiar regions along the banks of the Gangas. While Rama promises her that, a scandal reaches his ear about his unquestioning acceptance of Sita after her residence in a stranger's house for a long time. A strong sense of duty towards his subjects both as the dispenser of law and justice ad the up-holder of social order compels him to abandon Sita as a concession to this scandal, although he knew her to be pure and innocent. He, therefore, orders Lakshmana to take Sita away and leave her on the banks of the Ganges near the hermitage of Valmiki who, he thinks, would find her and take due care of her. Lakshmana very reluctantly performs this task; and when Sita knows why she is abandoned, she cries loud and long, though she would not blame Rama so much as she blamed herself. Valmiki takes her to his hermitage where afterwards in due time she gives birth to twins. Rama continues to discharge his kingly duties as usual, but without marrying again."

www.vadaprativada.com

4315. Our very sincere reading of the above passages leads us nowhere to find any support or help for adjudication of the issues as quoted above with regard to the site of birth of Lord Rama. He also placed before us page 130 Sl. 31 of Canto V of the above book to show that the name of Ayodhya is mentioned in Kalidasa's Raghuvamsa. But even that does not help us to march even a single step either in support or otherwise on the aforesaid issues. When we made query from the learned counsel he simply says that the Kalidasa, whose existence relate back to the 6th Century (first half of 6th Century), has referred to Ayodhya, King Dasarath and Lord Rama which he wanted to show to the Court.

4316. With due respect to the learned counsel, we find that the learned counsel for the Muslim parties have already made their statement under Order X Rule 2 C.P.C. on 22.04.2009 that neither they dispute that Lord Rama existed nor that he was born in Ayodhya nor that the present Ayodhya is the same as is believed to be the birthplace of Lord Rama for the purpose of present case. We do not find any reason as to why the aforesaid literary work of legendary Sanskrit Poet of 6th Century has been relied by Sri Verma though it throws no light on the issues which are up for adjudication. We may also refer here that in the Sanskrit verse of Raghuvamsa the word "Ayodhya" as such has not been used but it is the word "Saket" as is evident from the following:

> "जनस्य साकेत*निवासिनस्तौ द्वावप्यभूतामभिनन्धसत्त्वौ ।* > गुरुप्रदेयाधिकनिःस्पृहोअर्थी नृपोअर्थिकामादधिकप्रदश्च ।।"

4317. Since the great scholar has dealt with the story of Solar Kings i.e., the Kings of the Race of Raghu which rule with their capital at Ayodhya, the word "Saket" has been read as Ayodhya in the aforesaid work and translation of Sri Kalidasa. We also noticed from the very introduction part of the author where he has discussed the matter to ascertain the date of

www.vadaprativada.com

Kalidasa and he himself is found that it is a vexed question which is yet to be finally settled. According to the author Sri M.R. Kale the period of Kalidasa swing between 1st Century B.C. to 7th Century B.C. but has expressed his views in favour of the existence of Kalidasa in the first half of the first century B.C. for which besides other he has given the following reasons:

> "Now, Kalidasa was an original poet borrowing his subjects from Valmiki and other ancient authors; Asvaghosha was more a philosopher than a poet, and may, with greater probability, be supposed to have borrowed his ideas from Kalidasa, The date of Asvaghosha is given as 78 A.D.; and if we suppose him to have borrowed from Kalidasa, the latter will have to be placed earlier than 78 A.D. And in this view Dr. Peterson also concurs when he says 'Kalidasa stands near the beginning of the Christian era, if, indeed, he does not overtop it."

4318. For the purpose of the dispute in the case in hand, however, it is not necessary for us to go into all these aspects for the reason that whether Kalidasa existed in the first century B.C. or in 7th Century B.C. It would make no difference since it has not been disputed by the other side that the existence of Lord Rama as per belief of Hindus is much more older. The reference of Lord Rama in Kalidasa's Raghuvamsa (supra) has also not been disputed by the other side. However, since the said literary work gives no indication to adjudicate the issue regarding the exact place of birth of Lord Rama in Ayodhya city as also about the existence of a Hindu temple and in particular temple of Lord Rama in 16th Century at the disputed site, we find reference to the said book and reliance thereon is futile and misconceived.

4319. The next reference book is (Book No. 22) "SI-YU-KI", Buddhist Records of the Western World (hereinafter referred to as "Si-Yu-Ki"), translated from Chinese of Hiuen Tsiang (A.D. 629) by Samuel Beal in two volumes (bound in one), first published in 1884 and reprinted in 1995 published by Low Price Publications (A Division of D.K. Publishers Distributors (P) Ltd., Delhi. Sri Verma placed before us Book 10 page 206 under the title "Kong-U-To" (Konyodha) which reads as under:

"KONG-U-T'O (KONYODHA?)

This kingdom is about 1000 li in circuit; the capital is 20 li round. It borders on a bay (angle of the sea). The ranges of mountains are high and precipitous. The ground is low and moist. It is regularly cultivated and productive. The temperature is hot, the disposition of the people brave and impulsive. The men are tall of stature and black complexioned and dirty. They have some degree of politeness and are tolerably honest. With respect to their written characters, they are the same as those of Mid-India, but their language and mode of pronunciation are quite different. They greatly respect the teaching of heretics and do not believe in the law of Buddha. There are some hundred Deva temples, and there are perhaps 10,000 unbelievers of different sects.

Within the limits of this country there are several tens of small towns which border on the mountains and are built contiguous to the sea. The cities themselves are strong and high; the soldiers are brave and daring; they rule by force the neighbouring provinces, so that no one can resist them. This country, bordering on the sea, abounds in may rare and valuable articles. They use cowrie shells and pearls in commercial transactions. The great greenish-blue elephant comes from this country. They harness it to their conveyances and make very long journeys.

From this going south-west, we enter a vast desert, jungle, and forests, the trees of which mounts to heaven and hide the sun. Going 1400 or 1500 li, we come to the country of Kie-ling-kia (Kalinga)."

4320. He submitted that in 629 AD when the Hiuen Tsiang visited India, he has noticed in his Travellers Account existence of 100 of Deva Temples thereat. However, from the very narration of the passages relied by him it appears to us that it did not refer to Ayodhya but to a city bordering on the sea near Kalinga. Meaning thereby a place somewhere in the State of Orissa in presenti. From the foot note in the aforesaid book this appears to be a view expressed by Cunningham according to him this place must be Ganjam. The said foot note being of some use is reproduced as under:

"Cunningham supposes this place to be Ganjam. The origin of the name Ganjam is not known. When Hiuen Tsiang returned to Magadha he found that Harshavardhana had just returned from a successful expedition against the king of Ganjam. Cunningham thinks that Ganjam was then annexed to the province of Orissa (Robert Sewell, Lists, Vol. i, p.2). Mr. Fergusson remarks that "Khordhagar in the neighbourhood of Bhuvaneswar is just 170 miles south-west from Midnapur, and it is impossible to mistake the Chilka Lake as the great bay and the two seas of the text. Perhaps Hiuen Tsiang stopped here to visit the caves in the Khandagiri and Udayagiri hills."

4321. When confronted with the said foot note as also relied on passages mentioning that the country is bordering on the sea and contiguous to the sea meaning thereby it cannot be referable to Ayodhya since there is no sea up to such a distance of Ayodhya he could not dispute the same.

4322. However, we find that in above translation "Si-Yu-Ki (supra), Book-V page 225 deals with 'O-YU-T'O (Ayodhya) but in the entire report there is no mention about Lord Rama or his place of birth. The only two lines with respect to the temples of other religion are as under:

"There are ten Deva temples; heretics of different schools are found in them, but few in number."

4323. The rest of the report is only in respect to Buddha legend and the religious places of Buddhist. It, however, cannot be disputed that according to the said report there used to be a large number of Buddhist religious places at Ayodhya, when Hiuen Tsiang visited. He appears to be not a general traveller or historian but from the introductory chapter of the above book where the detail of Hiuen Tsiang is given, we find that Hiuen Tsiang was born in the year 603 AD at Ch'in Liu in the province of Ho-nan in China. One of his brother was a Monk belonging to the Shing-tu temple and Hiuen Tsiang was ordained in the community of Monk at the age of 13 years. After having fully ordained as Bhikshu or priest, he began to travel through the provinces in search of the best instructor, he could get and so came at length to Chang'an. Here he was strained up by the recollection of Fa-hian and Chi-yen and resolved to go to western region to question the sages on points that troubled his mind. His travelogue, therefore, contains mostly the details of Buddhist religion i.e. religious places of importance etc. and throw virtually no light on the other local conditions etc. particularly in reference to Ayodhya though in respect to some other places there are some details about the people, their social and political conditions etc. We need not go further in these aspects of the matter since the issue before us is limited i.e. about the disputed site at Ayodhya and we are not expected to travel in the history, geography etc. of other places of different period since neither it is germane to the issues nor we should travel beyond what is necessary for the proper adjudication of the case.

4324. Sri Verma also placed reliance on page 85, Book-III of Hiuen Tsiang "Life of Hiuen-Tsiang" by Shaman Hwui Li, first published in 1911 at London, reprinted in 2001 by Low Price Publications, Delhi (Book No. 20). He placed reliance and read the following passages from pages 85 to 90 which reads as under:

> From this, going 600 li or so to the south-east and crossing the Ganges, on the south of the river we come to the kingdom of 'O-yu-to (Ayodhya). There are near about one hundred temples with several thousand priests*, who study both the Small and the Great Vehicle.*
>
>
> North-west of the city four or five li, and by the side of the river Gages, is a great Sangharama, in which is a

www.vadaprativada.com

Stupa about 200 feet high. This was built by Asoka raja on the spot where Buddha in old days delivered the Law for three months.

By the side of this Stupa is a spot where the four Buddhas of the past age walked for exercise.

To the south-west of the city five or six li, is an old Sangharama; this is the place where Asangha Bodhisattva explained the Law. The Bodhisattva, during the night, ascended to the Tusita heaven, and received from Maitreya Bodhisattva the Yoga-sastra, the Alamkara-Mahayana-sastra, and the Madhyanta-vibhangha-sastra. The next day he descended from the heaven, and declared the Law for the sake of the community.

Asangha, who is also called Wu-cho, was a man of Gandhara. He was born in the middle of the thousand years following the Nirvana of Buddha, and became a disciple in the school of the Mahisasakas. Afterwards he joined the school of the Great Vehicle. His brother, Vasubandhu, became a disciple in the school of the Sarvastivadins, but afterwards joined the Great Vehicle. Both these brothers were, in point of endowments, vessels full of wisdom and holiness. Asangha possessed vast ability in composition, and wrote many sastras, in explanation of, and comment on, the Great Vehicle. He was the principal composer of sastras in India. For example, he wrote the Mahayana-samparigraha-sastra, the Prakaranaryavacha-sastra-karika, the Abhidharma sastra, the Vidyamatra-sastra, the Kosha-sastra, and others.

having paid reverence to the sacred traces, and following the course of the river Ganges, proceeded eastward, being on board a vessel with about eighty other fellow-passengers. He wished to reach the kingdom of 'O-ye-mu-khi (Hayamukha). After going about a hundred li, both banks of the river were shrouded by the thick foliage of an Asoka forest, and amid these trees on either bank were concealed some ten pirate boats. Then these boats, propelled by oars, all at once burst forth into the midstream. Some of those in the ship, terrified at the sight, cast themselves into the river, whilst the pirates, taking the ship in tow, brought it to the bank. They then ordered the men to take off their clothes, and searched them in quest of jewels and precious stones.

Now these pirates pay worship to Durga, a spirit of heaven, and every year during the autumn, they look out for a man of good form and comely features, whom they kill, and offer his flesh and blood in sacrifice to their divinity, to procure good fortune. Seeing that the Master of the Law was suitable for their purpose, both in respect of his distinguished bearing and his bodily strength and appearance, they exchanged joyful glances, and said, "We were letting the season for sacrificing to our god pass by, because we could not find a suitable person for it, but now this Sraman is of noble form and pleasing features—let us kill him as a sacrifice, and we shall gain certain good fortune."

The Master of Law replied, "If this poor and defiled body of mine is indeed suitable for the purpose of the sacrifice you propose, I, in truth, dare not grudge (the offering), but as my intention in coming from a distance was to pay reverence to the image of Bodhi and the Gridhrakuta Mountain, and to inquire as to the character of the Sacred Books and the Law (or, the Law of the Sacred Books), and as this purpose has not yet been accomplished, if you, my noble benefactors (danapatis) kill this body of mine, I fear it will bring you misfortune (instead of good fortune).”

Moreover, his fellow-passengers all, with one voice, asked them to spare him, and some even prayed to be allowed to die in his stead; but the pirates would not consent.

Then the captain of the gang dispatched some men with water to arrange the ground, and to erect in the midst of the flowering grove an altar besmeared with mud. He then commanded two of the company to take their drawn knives ad to bind the Master of the Law upon the altar. And now, when they were about to use their knives for the purpose of sacrificing him, the master of the Law showed no sign of fear in his face, insomuch that all the pirates were moved to astonishment.

When he saw there was no escape, however, he spoke to the pirates and begged them to allow him a little time and not to crowd round him painfully—but “let me”, he said, “with a joyous mind, take my departure.”

Then the Master of the Law, with an individual mind bent on the courts of Tusita heaven, thought on the Bodhisattva Maitreya, and earnestly prayed to be born in that place, that he might pay reverence and his religious offerings (to the Bodhisattva), and receive from him the Yogachariya-bhumi-sastra, and listen to the sound of the excellent Law. Then having perfected himself throughout in wisdom, "let me return (he prayed) and be born here below, that I may instruct and convert these men, and cause them to practise themselves in doing good and to give up their evil deeds, and thus by diffusing, far and wide, the benefits of religion, to give rest to all the world."

Then the Mater of Law, paying worship to the Buddhas of the ten regions, collected his mind into perfect composure, and sitting still, fixed his thoughts on Maitreya without any interruption. Thus he seemed in his innermost thoughts as if he rose up above Mount Sumeru and successively ascending one, two, three heavens, he gazed upon the courts of Tusita, the place of Maitreya, with its excellently precious adornments (galleries) and the multitude of devas surrounding him on every side. At this time his body and soul were ravished with joy, he knew nothing of the altar on which he was, he had no recollection of the robbers. And now, whilst hims fellow passengers gave way to cries and tears, suddenly a black tempest (typhoon) arose from the four quarters of heaven, smiting down the trees; clouds of sand flew on every side, and the lashing waves of the river tossed the boats to and fro. The robbers and their company, greatly terrified, asked the companions of the Master, "Whence comes this Sraman?--what is his name and title? and so on. They, answering, said: "He comes from the country of China--he is the renowned person who is in search of the Law; if you, my masters, kill him, your guilt will be immeasurable; look now and see the winds and waves--these are but indications of the anger of the spirits of heaven: haste then to repent!"

The pirates then, filled with fear, urged each other to repentance and confession of their fault; then with bowed heads they made profound obeisance (or, they embraced the religion of Buddha). And now one of the robbers accidentally touching the Master of the Law with his hand (or, touching the hand of the Master of the Law), he opened his eyes and said to the robber, "Has the hour come?" The robber answered: "We dare not hurt the Master! we pray you accept our repentance!" the Master then accepted their reverence and confession of faults, and then preached to them about the future punishment in Avichi of those who gave themselves up to murder, robbery, and impious sacrifices, and other evil deeds. "How would you then risk the woes of the long-during asankheya of ages for the sake of this body of yours, which is but in point of time as the lightning flash of the dew of the morning?"

The robbers then bowed their heads and confessed their faults, saying: "We indeed, individually, were perverted by a foolish tone of mind, and led to do what we ought not to do, and to sacrifice (pay religious rites) to what we ought not to sacrifice. If we had not met with the Master--whose religious merit has moved even the mysterious powers of heaven--how should we ever have been led to repentance? And now we ask to give up from the present day these evil ways of ours, and we pray the Master to be witness to our sincerity!"

On this they each encouraged one another to deeds of amendment, and collecting their various instruments of robbery together, they cast them into the river, and whatever clothes or private property they had taken, they restored these to their rightful owners, and then they took on themselves the five obligations of a laybeliever.

Then the winds and the floods subsided, and the pirates were all overcome with joy, and bowed their heads in adoration. His fellow voyagers, moreover, were filled with surprise and admiration more than ever, whilst those present and absent who heard of the event would not help exclaiming with wonder at the occurrence: "If it were not for the power of his high resolve in seeking for the Law, this could not have come to pass!"

4325. However, having gone through the entire passages and the aforesaid work, we find that in no way it helps us in deciding the issues up for consideration namely as to whether Lord Rama was born at the disputed site and whether there existed any temple at the time when the mosque was constructed i.e. in 1528 AD at the disputed site. The entire passage from the book read by Sri Verma nowhere mentions at all either about birthplace of Lord Rama or his temple in Ayodhya. In fact it could not discern any reason as to why Sri Verma placed before us and read for days together the above books without showing as to how they are helpful and gives us some material to find out the solution and answer to the issues which are up for consideration.

4326. Existence of temple at the site in dispute, its destruction and construction of mosque has also been mentioned in the book published by Archaeological Survey of India "The Monumental Antiquities And Inscriptions In The North-Western Provinces And Oudh" by A. Fuhrer (supra) (Book No.94) (See Ex.9 Suit-5 Register 20 Pages 67-73). The matter pertaining to Ayodhya has been dealt with from paged 295 to 300 of the aforesaid book. We find it appropriate to reproduce the contents thereof as under:

"1. AJUDHYA, famous place of pilgrimage, in pargana Haveli Audh of tahsil Faizabad, on the right bank of the river Ghaghra, lat. 26°-47' N., long. 82°-15' E., two miles east of head-quarters, is the ancient city of Ayodhya, described in the Ramayana as situated on the bank of the Sarayu, or Sarju river. It is said to have been 12 yojanas, or nearly 100 miles in circumference, for which we should probably read 12 kos, or 24 miles,-an extent which the old city with all its gardens might once possibly have covered. The distance from the Guptar Ghat on the west to the Ram Ghat on the east is just six miles in a direct line; and if we suppose that the city with its suburbs and gardens formerly occupied the whole intervening space to a depth of two miles, its circuit would have agreed exactly with the smaller measurement of 12 kos. At the present day the people point to Ram Ghat and Guptar Ghat as the eastern and western boundaries of the old city, and the southern boundary they extend to Bharatkund near Bhadarsa, a distance of six kos. But as these limits include all places of pilgrimage, it would seem that the people consider them to have been formerly inside the city, which was certainly not the case. In the Ain-i-Akbari the old city is said to have measured 148 kos in length by 36 kos in breadth, or in other words, it covered the whole province of Audh to the south of the Ghaghra river. The origin of the larger number is obvious. The 12 yojanas of the Ramayana, which are equal to 48 kos, being considered too small for the great city of Ramachandra, the Brahmanas simply added 100 kos to make the size tally with their own extravagant notions. The present city of Ayodhya, which is confined to the north-east corner of the old site, is just two miles in length by about three-quarters of a mile in breadth; but not one-half of this extent is occupied by buildings, and the whole place wears a look of decay. There are no high mounds of ruins covered with broken statues and sculptured pillars, such as mark the sites of other ancient cities, but only a low irregular mass of rubbish heaps, from which all the bricks have been excavated for the houses of the neighbouring town of Faizabad. This Musalman city, which is two miles and a half in length by one mile in breadth, is built chiefly of materials extracted from the ruins of Ayodhya. The two cities together occupy an area of nearly six square miles, or just about one-half of the probable size of the ancient capital of Rama.

According to the Ramayana, the city of Ayodhya was founded by Manu, the progenitor of all mankind. In the time of Dasaratha, the father of Rama, it was fortified with towers and gates, and surrounded by a deep ditch. No traces of these works now remain, nor is it likely, indeed, that any portion of the old city should exist, as the Ayodhya of Rama is said to have been destroyed after the death of Brihadbala, after which it lay deserted until the time of Vikramaditya of Ujjayini, who, according to tradition, came in search of the holy city, erected a fort called Ramgarh, cut down the jangal by which the ruins were covered, and erected 360 temples on the spots sanctified by the extraordinary actions of Rama. The Vikramaditya of this story, General Cunningham takes to be Chandragupta II, of the Imperial Gupta dynasty, A.D. 395-415, whose rule certainly extended to Ujjayini, as his inscriptions have been found at Sanchi and Udayagiri Bhilsa.

There are several very holy Brahmanical and Jaina temples about Ayodhya, but they are all of modern date and without any architectural pretensions whatever; but there can be no doubt that most of them occupy the sites of more ancient temples that were destroyed by the Musalmans. Thus Ramkot, or Hanuman Garhi, on the east side of the city, is a small walled fort surrounding a modern temple on the top of an ancient mound. This fort is said to have formerly covered a large extent of ground, and, according to tradition, it was surrounded by 20 bastions, each of which was commanded by one of Rama's famous generals after whom they took the names by which they are still

known. Within the fort were eight royal mansions, where dwelt Dasaratha, his wives, and Rama, his deified son. The name Ramkot is certainly old, but the temple of Hanuman is not older than the time of Aurangzib. Ram Ghat, at the north-east corner of the city, is said to be the spot where Rama bathed, and Svargadvaram, also called Ram Darbar, on the north-west, is believed to be the place where his body was burned. Treta-ke-Thakur is famous as the place where Rama performed a great sacrifice, and which he commemorated by setting up there images of himself and Sita. Close by is the Lakshmana Ghat, where his brother Lakshmana bathed, and about one quarter of a mile distant, in the very heart of the city, stands the Janmasthanam, or "birth-place temple," of Rama. Almost due west, and upwards of five miles distant is the Guptar Ghat, with its group of modern white-washed temples. This is the place where Lakshmana is said to have disappeared, and hence its name of Guptar, from gupta, "hidden or concealed." Some say that it was Rama who disappeared at this place, but this is at variance with the story of his cremation at Svargadvaram.

There are five Digambara temples at Ayodhya which were built in Samvat 1781, in the time of Shuja-ad-daulah, to mark the birth-places of five Tirthamkaras, viz., Adinatha, Ajitanatha, Abhinandanatha, Sumatinatha, and Anantajit, who are said to have been born at Ayodhya. The temple of Adinatha is situated near the Svargadvaram on a mound, known as Shah-Juran-ka-tila, on which there are many Musalman tombs and a masjid. According to the local Musalman tradition, Makhdum Shah Juran Ghori, who came to Audh with Shahab-ad-din Ghori, destroyed the ancient temple of Adinatha and erected on its ruins the Musalman edifices which gave to the mound the name by which it is still known. Besides these five temples of the Digambaras there is a sixth temple of the Svetambaras, dedicated to Ajitanatha, which was built in Samvat 1881.

It is locally affirmed that at the Musalman conquest there were three important Hindu temples at Ayodhya; these were the Janamasthanam, the Svargadvaram, and the Treta-ke-Thakur. On the first of these Mir Khan built a masjid, in A.H. 930, during the reign of Babar, which still bears his name. This old temple must have been a very fine one, for many of its columns have been utilized by the Musalmans in the construction of Babar's Masjid. These are of strong, close-grained, dark-coloured, or black stone, called by the natives kasauti, "touch-stone slate," and carved with different devices; they are from seven to eight feet long, square at the base, centre and capital, and round or octagonal intermediately. On the second and third Aurangzib built masjids, which are now mere picturesque ruins. A fragmentary inscription of Jayachchhandra of Kanauj, dated Samvat 1241, and recording the erection of a temple of Vishnu, was rescued from the ruins of Aurangzib's Masjid, known as Treta-ke-Thakur, and is now in the Faizabad Museum.

The only remains at Ayodhya that appear to be of any antiquity are three earthen mounds to the south of the city, and about a quarter of a mile distant. These are called Maniparbat, Kuberparbat, and Sugribparbat. The first, which is nearest to the city, and whose ancient name is said to have been Chhattarban, is an artificial mound, 65 feet in height, covered with broken bricks and blocks of kankar. The old bricks are eleven inches square and three inches thick. At 46 feet above the ground on the west side there are the remains of a curved wall faced with kankar blocks. The mass at this point is about 40 feet thick, and this was probably somewhat less than the size of the building which once crowned this lofty mound. According to the Brahmanas the Maniparbat is one of the hills which the monkeys made use of when assisting Rama, it was accidentally dropped here by Sugriva, the monkey-king of Kishkindhya. But the common people, who know nothing of this story, say that the mound was formed by the labourers shaking their baskets on this spot every evening on their return home from the building of Ramkot. It is therefore best known by the name of Jhawwajhar, or Orajhar, both of which mean "basket-shakings." A similar story is told of the large mounds near Banaras, Nimkhar, Sahet-Mahet, and other places. An inscription of Raja Nandivardhana of Magadha is said to have been discovered buried in this mound during the reign of Nasir-ad-din Haidar of Lakhnau; but the inscription has never been published and the original plate cannot now be traced.

Five hundred feet due south from this large mound stands the second mound, called Kuberparbat, which is only 28 feet in height. The surface is an irregular heap of brick rubbish, with numerous large holes made by the people in digging for bricks. It is crowned by two old tamarind trees and is covered with jangal. Close by on the south-west there is a small tank, called Ganesakund by the Hindus and Husain Kund or Imam Talao by the Musalmans. Still nearer, on the south-east, is a large oblong mound, called Sugribparbat, which is not more than 10 feet above the ground level. It is divided into two distinct positions, that to the north being upwards of 300 feet square at top, and the other to the south upwards of 200 feet. In the centre of the larger enclosure there is a ruined mound containing bricks eight and-a-half inches square, and in the centre of the smaller mound there are the remains of a baoli, which is said to be the Ganapatikunda of the Puranas.

Between the Maniparbat and Kuberparbat there is a small Musalman enclosure, 64 feet long from east to west and 47 feet broad, containing two brick dargahs, which are attributed to Sis Paighambar and Ayub Paighambar, or the "prophets Seth and Job"; the first is 17 feet long and the other 12 feet. These tombs are mentioned in the Ain-i-Akbari and in the Ardish-i-Mahfil. About a mile off, near the police station, there is the dargah of Nuh, or Noah.

The mounds are surrounded by Musalman tombs, and as it is the Musalman practice to bury the dead along the sides of the high roads close to their cities, General Cunningham infers that the road which now runs close to the westward of the mounds is one of the ancient highways of the district. This is confirmed by the existence of an old

masonry bridge of three arches over the Tilahi Nala, to the north-west of the Maniparbat, as well as by the direction of the road itself, which leads from the south end of the city straight to Bharatkund, and onwards to Sultanpur or Kusapura, and Allahabad, or Prayaga.

There can be no reasonable doubt that Hiuen Tsiang's Pi-so-kia, or Visakha, with its enormous number of heretics, or Brahmanas, is the same as the Ayodhya of the Hindus. He describes the city of Visakha as being 16 li or two and 2/3 miles in circuit. In his time, therefore, the capital of Rama was not more than half of tis present size, although it probably contained a greater population, as not above on-third, or even perhaps less, of the present town is inhabited. The old city then possessed no less than 20 samgharamas and 3,000 priests, and about 50 Brahmanical temples. From this account we learn that so early as the seventh century more than 300 of the original temples of Vikramaditya had already disappeared, and we may therefore reasonably infer that the city had been gradually declining for some time previously. The Buddhist monuments, however, would appear to have been in good order, and the monks were just as numerous as in the eminently Buddhist city of Banaras.

The first monument described by Hiuen Tsiang is a large samgharama without name. This monastery General Cunningham identifies with the Sugribparbat, being about 500 feet long by 300 feet broad. The great size and rectangular form of this ruin are sufficient to show that it must have been a monastery, but this is placed beyond all doubt by the existence of an interior well and by the remains of cloistered rooms forming the four sides of the enclosure. Its position to the south of the city, and to the east of the road, agrees with the recorded position of the monastery.

Beside the monastery there was a stupa of Asoka, 200 feet in height, built on the spot where Buddha preached the law during six years. This monument General Cunningham identifies with the Maniparbat, which is still 65 feet high, and which with its masonry facing must once have been at least as high again, and with the usual lofty pinnacle of metal may easily have reached a height of 200 feet. He infers that the earthen or lower part of the mound may belong to the earlier ages of Buddhism, and that the masonry or upper part was added by Asoka.

Hiuen Tsiang next describes the sites of the toothbrush tree and of the monument where the four previous Buddhas used to sit and take exercise, as being close to the great stupa. These places General Cunningham identifies with the courtyard containing the dargahs of Sis and Ayub, which touches the south side of the Maniparbat. The two tombs he takes to be the remains of the seats of the four previous Buddhas, and the paved courtyard to be the scene of their daily walks, although he was unable to trace their footmarks which were seen by the Chinese pilgrim.

The last monument described by Hiuen Tsiang is a stupa containing the hair and nails of Buddha. This was surrounded by a number of smaller monuments which followed one another in succession, and by several tanks which reflected the sacred buildings in their limpid waters. The stupa General Cunningham identifies with the Kuberparbat, which touches the south side of the enclosure round the dargahs of Sis and Ayub, and is close to the west side of the ruined monastery. One of the tanks described by the pilgrim may be the Ganesakund; but all the smaller monuments have disappeared long ago, as they afforded cheap and ready materials for the construction of the numerous Musalman tombs, as well as for the neighbouring bridge and masjid.

The people are unanimous in their assertion that the old city to the north of these mounds was called Bareta; Ayodhya, they say, was the capital of Rama, but the latter city was called Bareta. As this name has no similarity to Visakha, we can only set it down as another appellation of the old town, for which we have no authority but tradition."

"Dilli Saltanat (711-1526 A.D.)" by Dr. Ashirvadi Lal Srivastava (Book No. 151), first published in 1952 and the new revised edition published by Shivlal Agarwal and Company, Agra is the next book relied by Sri Verma. He placed before us page-314 to 316 of the book under the heading "Architecture (स्थापत्य)" which reads as under :

"स्थापत्य;

"सुल्तानों को स्थापत्य से बहुत प्रेम था। जिस समय तुर्कों ने हमारे देश को विजय किया उस समय तक मध्य एशिया की विभिन्न जातियॉ स्थापत्य की एक विशिष्ट शैली विकसित कर चुकी थीं। वह शैली वहॉ की स्थानीय शैलियों तथा ट्रान्स–ऑक्सियाना, ईरान, अफगानिस्तान, मैसोपोटामिया, मिस्र, उत्तरी अफ्रीका, दक्षिणी–पश्चिमी यूरोप के देशों तथा मुस्लिम अरेबिया की शैलियों के सम्मिश्रण से बनी थीं । इस प्रकार 13वीं

शताब्दी के अन्तिम दशक में तुर्की विजेजा स्थापत्य की जो शैली भारत में लाये वह न तो पूर्णरूप से इस्लामी थी और न अरबी। इस स्थापत्य की मुख्य विशेषताएँ थीं– 1. गुम्बज, 2. ऊँची मीनारें, 3, मेहराब, तथा 4, भूमिगृह (तहखाना)।

जब तुर्क हमारे देश में आये तो यहाँ उन्हें स्थापत्य की एक अत्यधिक विकसित शैली मिली, किन्तु विजेता होने के नाते इस देश में इमारतों के निर्माण में अपने विचारों तथा कला रूपों को प्रचलित करना उनके लिए स्वाभाविक ही था। किन्तु वे ऐसी इमारतें बनाने में सफल नहीं हुए जो उनकी मध्य एशियाई इमारतों का प्रारूप होतीं। उनकी इमारतों पर देशी कला–परम्पराओं का गम्भीर प्रभाव पड़ा, इसलिए स्थापत्य की जिस नई शैली का जन्म हुआ वह न तो पूर्णतया विदेशी थी और न शुद्ध देशी। कुछ ऐसे तत्व कार्य कर रहे थे जिनके कारण स्थापत्य की भारतीय तथा विदेशी शैलियों का समन्वय सम्भव हो सका। सर्वप्रथम, विदेशी शासकों को भारतीय शिल्पियों और संगतराशों से काम लेना पडा। भवन निर्माण के सम्बन्ध में उनके अपने स्पष्ट विचार तथा तरीके थे, इसलिए उन्होंने बिना जाने मुस्लिम इमारतों में भी सजावट तथा शैली–सम्बन्धी ब्यौरे की उन अनेक चीजों का समावेश कर दिया जिनका इस देश में शताब्दियों से प्रचार था। दूसरे, प्रारम्भिक तुर्क–विजेताओं ने लगभग बिना अपवाद के अपनी मस्जिदों, महलों और यहाँ तक कि कब्रों का भी निर्माण उन हिन्दू तथा जैन मन्दिरों की सामग्री से किया जिन्हें उन्होंने निर्दयतापूर्वक नष्ट कर दिया था। तीसरे, हिन्दू तथा मुस्लिम शैलियों में स्पष्ट अन्तर होते हुए भी कुछ ब्यौरे की चीजों में उनकी इमारतें एक–सी दिखाई देती हैं, इसलिए कभी–कभी दिल्ली सुल्तानों ने हिन्दू तथा जैन मन्दिरों की चौरस छतों को तोडकर उनके स्थान में गुम्बज तथा मीनारें बनाकर उन्हें मस्जिदों का रूप दे दिया। सर जॉन मार्शल के मतानुसार हिन्दू मन्दिरों तथा मुस्लिम मस्जिदों में एक समानता यह थी कि दोनों में एक खुला हुआ ऑगन होता था जिसके चारों ओर कमरे तथा स्तम्भों की पंक्तियॉ खडी होती थीं। इस योजना में बने हुए मन्दिर सरलता से मस्जिदों में परिवर्तित किये जा सकते थे इसलिए विजेता लोगों ने अपना उददेश्य पूरा करने के लिए सर्वप्रथम उन्हीं में रूपान्तर किया होगा। इसके अतिरिक्त

सजावट एक अन्य मूल विशेषता थी जो हिन्दू तथा इस्लामी शैलियों को मिलाने के लिए उभयनिष्ठ कडी का काम करती थी। सजावट दोनों ही शैलियों का प्राण थी और उनका अस्तित्व ही उन पर निर्भर था।

स्थापत्य के क्षेत्र में कुतुबद्दीन ऐबक की सर्वप्रथम कृति दिल्ली की कुवत–उल–इस्लाम नाम की मस्जिद थी जिसका निर्माण 1195 ई0 में प्रारम्भ और 1199 ई0 में समाप्त हुआ था। वह एक हिन्दू मन्दिर के चबूतरे पर तथा अनेक हिन्दू मन्दिरों की सामग्री से बनी थी। इस मस्जिद के अधिकतर स्तम्भ, उनके शिखर तथा मध्य भाग मूलतः हिन्दू मन्दिरों के अंग रह चुके थे और मुस्लिम मस्जिद की आवश्यकताओं के अनुसार शीघ्रता से उनमें हेर–फेर कर लिया गया था। स्तम्भों, उनके शिखरों तथा मध्य भागों पर जो चित्र आदि उत्कीर्ण थे, उन्हें मिटा दिया गया था अथवा लौट–पलटकर छिपा दिया गया था। इस इमारत में इस्लामी शैली की केवल एक ही विशेषता है – सामने एक पत्थर की जाली है जिस पर मुस्लिम ढंग की डिजायनें तथा सजावट है और कुरान की आयतें खुदी हुई हैं। अजमेर में ढाई दिन का झोंपडा नामक तुर्की इमारत भी एक मस्जिद ही है। इसका निर्माण भी कुतुबुद्दीन ऐबक ने ही करवाया था। यह इमारत वास्तव में एक संस्कृत विद्यालय था जिसे सम्राट विग्रहराज ने बनवाया था। इसके उपरी भागों को तोड–फोडकर गुम्बज तथा मेहराबें बना दी गई थी। स्तम्भों पर और यहाँ तक कि भीतर कब्रों पर भी अगणित मानव–चित्र हैं जिनके चेहरे तथा हाथ–पैर मिटे हुए हैं। कुतुबमीनार तुर्की स्थापत्य का तीसरा महत्वपूर्ण आदर्श है। इसकी योजना ऐबक ने 1199 ई0 से कुछ पहले तैयार की थी और इल्तुतमिश ने उसे पूरा किया था। मूलतः यह मीनार मुअज्जिन के लिए बनायी गई थी जो इस पर चढकर मुसलमानों को नमाज के लिए एकत्र करने की अजॉ दिया करता था। किन्तु आगे चलकर यह विजयस्तम्भ के रुप में विख्यात हुई। इस इमारत की योजना तथा रुप मूलतः इस्लामी है। इल्तुतमिश ने कुतुबमीनार को पूर्ण करने के अतिरिक्त कुछ नयी इमारतों का भी निर्माण कराया, उनमें सबसे अधिक महत्वपूर्ण उसके ज्येष्ठ पुत्र का मकबरा है जो सुल्तानगढी के नाम से विख्यात है। भारत में तुर्कों द्वारा निर्मित यह पहला मकबरा था, इसलिए कुतुबमीनार के विपरीत स्थापत्य सम्बन्धी ब्यौरे की बातों तथा सजावट की

दृष्टि से यह इमारत हिन्दू–शैली के अधिक निकट है। अन्य किसी मकबरे में हिन्दू–शैली का इतना प्रभाव नहीं दीख पडता। इल्तुतमिश के समय से सुल्तानों की इमारतों में इस्लामी तत्वों का अधिक समावेश होने लगा। उसने कुवत–उल–इस्लाम मस्जिद को परिवर्द्धित किया और उसमें एक पत्थर की जाली बनवा दी। उसने 'ढाई दिन का झोपडा' में भी कुछ परिवर्द्धन किया। बलवन ने अपने लिए लालमहल नामक एक भवन का निर्माण कराया। दिल्ली में स्थित उसका मकबरा शुद्ध इस्लामी शैली का है। मकबरे के द्वार की मेहराब भारत की तुर्की मेहराबों में सर्वोत्तम है। खलजी सुल्तान अलाउद्दीन महान निर्माता था। उसने अनेक इमारतें बनवायीं जिनमें दो अधिक उल्लेखनीय हैं– निजामुद्दीन औलिया के मकबरे के पास जमैयतखाना मस्जिद तथा कुतुबमीनार के पास अलाई दरवाजा नाम की प्रसिद्ध मस्जिद। इन दोनों में इस्लामी स्थापत्य–विचारों का प्राधान्य है। तुगलक–युग की इमारतें इतनी शानदार नहीं हैं जितनी कि गुलाम तथा खलजी–युग की। वे सरल, शुष्क तथा कर्कश है। इस परिवर्तन के दो कारण प्रतीत होते हैं। तुगलक सुल्तानों के पास धन का अभाव था, इसलिए ये इमारतों पर भारी रकमें नहीं व्यय कर सकते थे। इसके अतिरिक्त अपने धार्मिक विचारों तथा रुचि में वे बडे कट्टर थे। उनकी इमारतों की दीवारें उतार–चढाव की तथा मोटी हैं और देखने में काली–सी लगती हैं। तुगलकशाह का मकबरा, तुगलकाबाद का नगर तथा कोटला फीरोजशाह तुगलक स्थापत्य के महत्वपूर्ण आदर्श हैं। सैय़यद तथा लोदी सुल्तानों ने खलजी इमारतों के ओज तथा लालित्य को पुनर्जीवित करने का प्रयत्न किया किन्तु इसमें उन्हें आंशिक सफलता मिली। एक दक्ष कलामर्मज्ञ का मत है कि वे तुगलक–युग के निस्तेज करने वाले प्रभाव से अपने को मुक्त न कर सके। पठान इमारतों में सिकन्दर लोदी के वजीर द्व ारा निर्मित मोठ की मस्जिद सर्वश्रेष्ठ है। आलोचकों के मतानुसार लोदी स्थापत्य का यह सर्वोत्तम आदर्श है ।''

4329. We have looked into these books also but find no help for issues in question.

4330. The personal credentials of Dr. Srivastava mentioned in the earlier part shows that he was M.A., Ph.D. and D.Lit. from Lucknow and Agra and had written the said book for the benefit of undergraduate students. It appears that he had earlier written a book in English under the title "Saltanat of Delhi" and the present one is the Hindi versions of the said book. In the absence of any reference material, we are not in position to verify the correctness of what the author has said but even otherwise the only thing which he has said in the above passage is that the Delhi Saltanat rulers destroyed Hindu and Jain Temples and used the material for construction of Mosque, pave sages and even graves. In some cases by minor variation or alternation the Hindu or Jain Temples were converted in Mosque. It is a general statement but does not show that it has anything in connection with the disputed site or disputed construction. In the entire book, we could not find any reference to Ayodhya and in particular the disputed site, i.e. Ramjanam Bhumi /Babari Masjid. In fact, this book deals with the period upto 1526 and, therefore, mentions only about the defeat of Ibrahim Lodi by Babar in 1526 and does not say anything for the period subsequent thereto. We, therefore, are not able to derive any assistance from the above work of Dr. Srivastava for adjudication of the issues engaging attention of this Court in these cases.

4331. Next is the (Book No. 76) "History of Kanauj to the Moslem Conquest" by Rama Shankar Tripathi. Its first edition came in 1964 and the book available to the Court is a reprint Delhi 1989 by Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi. Sri Verma in particular has placed before us certain passages from page 248, 253 and 305. Page 253 shows that there was a great literary person Rajasekhara in the Court of King Mahendrapala who has written several literary productions including "Bala-Ramayana" relating to the story of Rama from Sita's Svayamvara to the death of Ravana, and the return to Ayodhya after Sita's fire-ordeal. He pointed that King Mahendrapala reigned upto about 885 A.D. and the story written by one of his literary courtiers shows that worship of Lord Rama as incarnation of Vishnu was well recognised even at that time. However, nothing of these facts helps us to travel our journey towards solution of the seriously disputed above referred two issues for the simple reason that the antiquity or genuineness or correctness of Lord Rama or his birth at Ayodhya has not been disputed by the learned counsels for the Muslim parties and in this regard, they have gone to the extent of even making a statement under Order

X Rule 2 C.P.C. Therefore, the factum of recognition of Lord Rama's story in 9th century is now wholly irrelevant. Sri Verma also placed before us the following passage from page 324 of the book :

> "As to the north, the phrase "borders of China" may be presumed to denote that the kingdom extended upto the foot of the Himalayas; while in the east it must have comprised the Gaya region, where an inscription presumably belonging to Jayachandra's reign records that a hermit named Srimitra served as spiritual guide to the king of Benares (Kasisa), who was attended by a hundred Chieftains (nripa-sata-krita-sevah). It is also definitely known from inscription that Allahabad, Benares, and the surrounding tracts were included within Jayachandra's kingdom. The Gahadavala connection with Benares was more intimate, and perhaps because of the habitual residence of the kings there, or owing to its religious importance advantageous situation "in the centre of the country of Hind," it became a sort of second capital almost from the beginning of their rule. Indeed, the Moslem historians significantly style Jayacandra "Rai of Benares,"[1]...."
> [1] Ibid., pp. 222, 223, 300, etc. Firishta calls Jayachandra "the prince of Kanauj and Benares (Briggs, I. p. 178)."

4332. The aforesaid reference has been shown probably in view of the fact that an inscription said to have been obtained from the time of demolition of the disputed structures on 6.12.1992 which according to the Hindu parties, shows that Gahadavala rulers constructed a Vishnu Hari Temple at the disputed site. The aforesaid passage shows that the Gahadavala ruler Jayachandra having its capital at Kanauj had within its reign Allahabad and Benaras also. The book gives the detail of Gahadavala rulers from page 292 and onwards of which Chandradev was one. At this stage, whether Gahadavalas in 11, 12 or in 13 centuries ruled at Kanauj and exercised their authorities upto Allahabad and Benaras which included Ayodhya also need not be examined further for the reason that for our purpose the aforesaid facts as such do not meet our requirement necessary for adjudication of the dispute. Though it appears that Gahadavala were very religious people and they declared themselves as Paramamahesvara, i.e. devout worshippers of God Siva but they constructed large number of temples including that of Vishnu Temple. In this regard some details we find on page 351 to 355 under the heading "Religion" as under :

www.vadaprativada.com

www.vadaprativada.com

> "The Gahadavala kings, like the Pratiharas whose religion has already been started, did not confine their devotions to one member only of the great Hindu pantheon. Thus, while they officially describe themselves as Paramamahesvara, i.e., devout worshippers of the god Siva, their records also invoke in the beginning the blessing of Sri (Lakshmi), the goddess of prosperity, and Damodara (Ganesa), and on the seals attached to the copper-plates there are representations of the flying Garuda and conch-shell (Pancajanya conch?), which may indicate their predilections towards Vaisnavism. Indeed, one of the Kamauli inscriptions even asserts that Jayachandra was initiated, with the consent of his father, as a devotee of the god Krisna on the 10th tithi of the bright half of the month of Asadha of the Vikrama year 1224, corresponding to Sunday, the 16th of June, 1168 A.D.- the day of his installation to the dignity of Yuvaraja. But so marked was the royal eclecticism that according to a Bodhgaya inscription in later life Jayachandra, out of reverence for a Budhist monk named Srimitra, himself became his disciple with a pleasing heart and an indescribable hankering. Moreover, we are uniformly told in their documents that the Gahadavala monarchs made grants after having worshipped the sun (surya), after having praised him (Siva), after having performed adoration to Vasudeva, and after having sacrificed to the fire an oblation of abundant milk, rice and sugar, and after having offered oblations to the manes.

Turning now to the matter of popular religion, the outstanding features during both the Pratihara and Gahadavala periods were the worship of idols and the variety of gods. Temples were built in large numbers, being known as "devagrihas" or "caityas". With their lofty spires, rich ornamental designs, and graceful sculptures, the construction of these elaborate structures must have entailed great engineering skill and workmanship. Sometimes, it is interesting to note, they were even hewn out of a single piece of rock. But unfortunately almost all these noble monuments of the liberality and religious zeal of the princes and peasants alike have disappeared owing to the ravages of time, or were razed to the ground by the iconoclastic fury of the victorious Moslems. For instance, the Taj-ul-Maasir and Firishta's account testify that in

Benares alone Sihabuddin Ghori destroyed more than one thousand temples, and raised mosques on their foundations.

Among the gods, Visnu was the most highly venerated. The Siyadoni inscription gives several names for him such as Visnubhattaraka, Narayanabhattaraka, Vamanasvamideva (also mentioned in the Ahar inscription), Cakrasvamideva, Tribhuvanasvamideva, and Murari. In the Gwalior inscription of Bhoja, he is called Narakadvisa, and in the Buckala record the term Paramesvara occurs for his image. The Pehoa inscription, however, simply describes him as the god riding on garuda (Visnu garudasana). The Gahadavala copper plates often allude to the God Vasudeva and the temple of Adikesava at the confluence of the Varuna and Ganges. We may also add here that the Ahar epigraph (No. VII) refers in general terms to all the ten incarnations of Visnu, but in other documents there is specific mentions of only three manifestations of the deity, viz., Krisna or Hrisikesa, Varaha, and Vamana.*

www.vadaprativada.com

The inscriptions further mention such gods as :

1.Surya, also called Tarunadityadeva, Indraraja-dityadeva or Indradityadeva, or Gangaditya. Another form of the sun was Lolarka, whose festival is even now annually celebrated in Benares during the rainy season. In the Siyadoni inscription occurs the term Bhaillasvamideva, which according to a Bhilsa record was a designation of the sun.

2.Siva (Jhusi inscription), also called Umamahesvara (Siyadoni inscription) or simply Mahesvara

www.vadaprativada.com

(Gahadavala plates), Trilocana, Lacchukesvara Mahadeva, so named after Mathanadeva's mother (Rajor inscription), Yogasvamin, Pasupati, and Sambhu (Haddala grant).

3.Vinayaka or Damodara (Gahadavala plates).

4.Kumara (Kartikeya) with his host of Matrikas i.e., female companions who performed wonderful deeds.

5.Mahakala (Partabgarh inscription) or Kalapriya (Cambay plates) in Ujjain.

Among other names and temples of gods we come across Nityapramuditadeva, Aghoresvara, Indramadhava, Laudesvara, Panocomkara, Krittivasas etc.

The inscriptions refer to names of goddesses also, such as Bhagavati or Durga (Partabgarh inscription) or Vatayaksnidevi; Sri Amba Lohidevi (Siyadoni inscription); Kanakadevi or Kancanadevi, Gandhadevi, Sarvamangaladevi (Ahar inscription); Sri or Lakshmi (Gahadavala inscriptions); Vasudhara etc."

4333. Sri Rajendra Singh, DW 1/1 deposed his statement to show that Guru Nanak visited Ayodhya and also had the benefit of Darshan of Lord Rama at the disputed site, i.e., birthplace. To discredit the said statement, a lot of literature relating to Guru Nanak's visit to Ayodhya has been placed before us.

4334. Ex. 68 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 208C1/1-4 is an extract of a book "Bhai Bale Wali-Sri Guru Nanak Dev Ji ki Janam Sakhi" 7th Edn. 1999 published by Bhai Chatar Singh Jeevan Singh, Amritsar. Pages 361 and 263 have been filed. It shows that Guru Nanak Dev Ji visited Ayodhya and told to the people who accompanied him that Ayodhya is the city of King Ram Chandra, who incarnated as Ram in Treta Yug. When enquired that Ram Chandra had taken the entire city of Ayodhya with him then how it has appeared, Guru Nanak Dev Ji said, Maryadapurushottam Sri Ram Chandra Ji had not taken the houses and constructions with him but only the religious men and women folk had gone with him in his supreme world and if the people pray for the God and remain in shelter of Guru Govind they can also achieve the same. Therefrom he proceeded to Prayagraj (Allahabad). Sri Jilani, in reference to the above, said that there is no mention of any place of birth of Lord Rama what to say of place in dispute.

4335. Ex.69 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 210C1/1-10) is an extract of the book titled as "Sikhs and Sikhism" written by W.H. Mcleod first published in 1999 paper book 2004 by Oxford University Press. Pages 5 to 8 and 33 to 36 have been placed before us. It discussed with the biography of Guru Nanak. From page 5 and 6, it discern that the author did not find according to him any reliable data other than what is said in various Janam Sakhis written or published by different people/institutions to throw light on the life sketch of Guru Nanak. The Adi Granth contains the work of Guru Nanak but did not give much assistance to know about the biography of Guru Nanak. It says that Guru Nanak was born in 1469 at village Talvandi and died in 1539 during which period he travelled a large number of places including those of religious importance for Muslims and Hindus both. About the working of Guru Nanak, at the instance of third Guru, Amar Das, a collection was prepared which was ultimately utilized by Sri Guru Arjan while compiling the Adi Granth, i.e., Guru Granth Sahib. The teachings of Guru Nanak are discussed throughout his works but therefrom it is not possible to find out anything about his own biography though it is possible to reconstruct a coherent theology. The basis of his theology is a belief in a personal God, the omnipotent Creator of the universe, a Being beyond time and human comprehending yet seeking by His grace the salvation of man and for this purpose revealing Himself in His own creation. To the offer of salvation man is called to respond by a life of meditation on the divine self-revelation and of conformity to it. If man responds he progressively grows into the likeness of God and ultimately into an ineffable union with the Timeless one. If he refuses he follows the path of spiritual death and remains firmly bound to the wheel of transmigration.

4336. Chapter 2 starts at page 33 with the heading "The Sources". The author has discussed that the obvious place to seek information concerning the life of Guru Nanak is the Adi Granth, or Guru Granth Sahib compiled by Guru Arjan in 1603-04. It contains numerous works by Guru Nanak which can safely be accepted as authentic but it provides little information concerning the actual events of his life. It contains more than nine hundred of his compositions and yet the biographical details therein are negligible. There is no explicit reference at all to any incident in his life, no sabad or Slok. The author says that the Chapter Babar-vani though positivity suggests that Guru Nanak witnesses something of Babar depredations, but nothing more than that. He, ultimately, says that in the absence of receiving any information regarding the biography of Guru

www.vadaprativada.com

Nanak in Adi Granth, the only source which can be relied on for the same purpose remains the Janam Sakhis. He points out that several sets of Janam Sakhis are prevalent, i.e., Puratan, Miharban etc. and, therefore, a cautious and careful approach is needed to find out the actual reliable informations contained therein instead several legends mentioned therein lacking anything to corroborate and to prove their authenticity.

4337. Chapter 3 starting from Page 34 with the heading "The Life of Guru Nanak According to the Janam-Sakhis" gives some description of the journeys undertaken by Guru Nanak. It says that Guru Nanak ascended Mount Sumeru and thereat held discourse with Gorakhnath and other eighty-three Siddhs who questioned him about the condition of the world below. Guru Nanak informed them about the darkness, sin and corruption. Ultimately, Guru emerged victorious from the debate. Then there is reference of his visit to Mecca and it gives the following information :

> "Next he proceeded to Mecca and there went to sleep with his feet pointing towards the mihrab. Observing this evident blasphemy a Muslim named Jivan kicked him and dragged his feet away from the direction of the miharab. When he did this, however, the whole of Mecca miraculously moved in the same direction as his feet. A discourse followed in which Guru Nanak emphasized that Ram and Rahim, Hindu and Muslim names for God, designate one and the same God.
>
> Having left his sandals in Mecca as a relic, the Guru proceeded on to Medina, and from there to Baghdad where, with Mardana the Bard, he camped outside the city. From

www.vadaprativada.com

there he uttered the call to prayer whereupon the city at once became silent. A pir named Dastgir went out to investigate the newcomer's credentials and entered into a debate with him. In response to Dastgir's request for enlightenment the Guru took the pir's son, ascended with him into the air, and in the twinkling of an eye revealed to him the multitude of heavens and underworlds. The two then descended into the regions below the earth and from there brought a bowl of karah prasad, the sacramental food of the Sikhs."

4338. Thereafter the reference of his visit to Kartarpur. Multan etc. is given. In our view, though the above extract of the document gives some idea about Guru Nanak's visits, but we find no reason as to how the above extract either way helps the plaintiffs (Suit-4) for adjudication of the questions in dispute.

4339. Ex. 86 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 212C1/1-4 is an extract of the book "Sri Guru Granth Sahib" with Hindi translation by Dr. Manmohan Sahgal, 6th Edn. 2001 published by Bhuvan Vani Trust. Pages 33 and 34 of the said book have been filed. The verses contained on page 33 and 34 are as under :

"1 ओं सतिनाम करता पुरखु निरभउ निरवैरु अकाल मूरति अजूनी सैभं गुर प्रसादि।।

ओंकार एक है, सत्य उसका नाम है। वह सृष्टि का रचयिता पुरुष है। वह भय से रहित है, उसे किसी से वैर नही; (भय और वैर द्वैत की उत्पत्ति हैं), वह कालातीत (अर्थात् भूत भविष्य, वर्तमान से परे) है, इसलिए नित्य है। वह अयोनी है अर्थात् जन्म–मरण के चक्र से मुक्त है, वह स्वयंभू है (स्वयं प्रकट होनेवाला है), उसकी लब्धि मात्र सतिगुरु की कृपा से ही सम्भव है।"

4340. From perusal of the above, it seems that the real teachings of Guru Nanak is about the self created supreme being who has no shape etc. but is beyond all the worldly and other activities. His existence even prior to the commencement of the four Yugas is believed by Hindus. However, so far as the questions in dispute before us are concerned, the reference of the above verses by the plaintiffs (Suit-4) we find of no use since they do not help in adjudication of the matter either way. It is no doubt true that Guru Nanak professed for the existence of a supreme being, who has no shape behind creation or destruction etc. but that by itself does not throw any light with respect to the issues up for consideration in these cases.

4341. Exhibit 70 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 229C1; 230C1/1-10) contains pages No. IV, V, XXII, XXIII, LXX to LXXIII, LXXXVI, LXXXVII, 261, 322, 382 and 383 of the book titled as "The Sikh Religion-Its Gurus Sacred Writings and Authors" by Max Arthur Macauliffe in six volumes, first published in 1909 and reprinted in 1996, 1998 by Low Price Publications, Delhi. The extract before the Court is volume-I of the above book. The pages contains the preface, introduction and some part of hymns of Guru Nanak. We, however, find that the said writing is neither a fair nor impartial study of the matter. In the preface Page No. XXII (Paper No. 230C1/4), learned author has observed:

> "It is admitted that a knowledge of the religions of the people of India is a desideratum for the British Officials who administer its affairs and indirectly for the people who are governed by them so that mutual sympathy may be produced. It seems, at any rate, politic to place before the Sikh soldiery their Guru's prophecies in favour of the English and the texts of their sacred writings which foster their loyalty."

4342. The tenor of the book also fortifies the same and we proposed to refer some extract as under:

> "When Taimur had spread anarchy and devastation over Northern India, a dynasty of Saiyids, or descendants of the Prophet Muhammad, aspired to rule in

www.vadaprativada.com

Dihli in the name of Mughal conqueror. To Dihli there was hardly any territory attached, and Ala-ul-din, the last of the Saiyid rulers, in contemptuous disregard for the small and troublesome dominion meted out to him by destiny, retired to the distant city of Badaun to end his days in religious and political tranquility. He left Dihli and the fortunes of empire of Bahlol Khan Lodi, a man whose ancestors had been enriched by commerce, and whose grandfather had been Governor of Multan under the favour monarch Firoz Shah Tughlak.

Bhahol Khan Lodi reigned from A.D. 1450 to A.D. 1488, and it was consequently near the middle of his reign that Guru Nanak, the founder of the Sikh religion, was born. After the accession of Bahlol Khan Lodi, Daulat Khan, a relative of his, obtained power in the Panjab, and governed under the paramount authority of his kinsman. He lived in state at Sultanpur till defeated and deprived of his possessions by the Emperor Babar. The Panjab appears to have been already parcelled out to Musalman chiefs who were retainers of the sovereigns of Dihli. One of these chiefs, called Rai Bhoi, a Musalman Rajput of the Bhatti tribe, had been Zamindar or proprietor of Talwandi. After his death his heritage descended to his son Rai Bular, who governed the town at the birth and during the youth of Nanak.

Talwandi is said to have been originally built by a Hindu king called Raja Vairat. It was sacked and destroyed by fire and crowbar, like most Hindu towns and cities, during the Musalman invasions. Rai Bular restored it and built a fort on the summit of the tumulus, in which he lived the secure and happy ruler of a small village, some limited acres of cultivated land, and boundless wilderness.

Although the age was one of religious intolerance and persecution, Rai Bular appears to have been the very reverse of a bigot. His father and he were converted Hindus, doubtless added to the ranks of Islam by a hasty circumcision and an enforced utterance of some Arabic sentences which they did not perfectly comprehend.

. . . . . Kartik, there being a considerable difference between these forms of chronology. The partisons of the lunar Kartik, however, prevailed, the lunar month being the earlier form of calculation, and consequently the most acceptable to all persons whose religion is based on any form of Hinduism. Generally the confusion of solar and lunar chronology is the cause of much perplexity and qualms of conscience to the pious." (pages lxx, lxxi and lxxxvi)

"The late Bhai Gurumukh Singh, who first gave the author these details, afterwards put himself at the head of a deputation to move the Government of the Panjab to declare the fictitious anniversary of Guru Nanak's birth a public holiday. That Government accordingly added a second Sikh holiday to the already long list of Christina, Hindu, and Muhammadan holidays sanctioned in its calendar. The other special Sikh holiday is the Hola Mahalla, the day on which the tenth Guru held a mimic battle for the instruction of his troops." (page lxxxvi)

4343. However, apart from the other aspects of the matter,

author has referred to the preachings of Guru Nanak and also about his biography. He has referred to a Janamsakhi written by Sewa Das. He claims to possess the manuscript of the said book written in 1588 AD, i.e., 16 years before compilation of Granth Sahib by Guru Arjan Singh which took place in 1604 AD. After some discussion he found that the said Janamsakhi was most authentic and he made the same basis for giving details of the life of Guru Nanak but supplementing it whereever necessary by culling out from the later life of Guru. It is pointed out that Guru Nanak teaches against idol worship and did not accept Lord Rama as incarnation of God. Reference is made to the following hymns of Guru Nank contained at page 382 (Paper No. 230C1/10):

"If Ram had been God he would not have lost his queen Sita, and he would himself have healed his half-brother Lachhman instead of calling on Hanuman to do so:--

Ram Chandar mourned in his soul for Sita and Lachhman.

He remembered Hanuman, and he came to meet him.

The misguided demon Rawan did not know it was not Ram but God who did this.

Nanak, God is independent: Ram could not erase his destiny."

4344. The hymns teachings against idol worship are at page 323 (paper No. 230C1/9) as under:

"Guru Nanak orders man to repeat God's name and engage not in idol worship:--

If the heart be made the scraper, the Name the

www.vadaprativada.com

sandal,

And good acts be mixed with it as kungu, that shall be the real worship of God in the heart.

Worship God by meditating on his name, for without the name there is no worship.

If any one were to wash his heart as the surface of the idol is washed,

His impurity should be removed, his soul should become pure and he should depart to deliverance.

Even beasts have their merits; for the oil-cake they eat they give milk, but the Brahmans make no return for the offerings made them.

Without the Name accursed is man's life and the acts he performeth.

www.vadaprativada.com

God is near, think Him not distant; He ever careth for and remembereth us.

Eat what He giveth, said Nanak verily.

The Guru's God is superior to the demigods of the Hindus:--

Brahma sprang from the lotus of Vishnu's navel, and having attuned his throat began to recite the Veds;

Yet he could not see God's limits, and remained in the darkness of transmigration.

Why should I forget the Beloved who is the support of my soul."

4345. Preaching contained in "Shri Guru Granth Sahib (Chauthi Sainchi)" translated by Dr. Manmohan Sehgal 4th Edition 1995 published by Bhuwan Badi Trust, Lucknow, Exhibit 71 (Suit-4) (Paper No. 231C1 and 232C1/1-57),

The part of the verses relates to the period when Guru Nanak had travel to eastern part of India and then some part of Punjab is contained in Chapter VI and VII. The relevant extract thereof is as under:

"The Guru returned from Kamrup by the great river Brahmaputra, and then made a coasting voyage to Puri on the Bay of Bengal, where Vishnu of Krishan under the name of Jagannath, lord of the world, is specially worshipped. When the lamps were lit in the evening the Guru was invited by the high priest to stand up and join in the god's worship, which was of a gorgeous and imposing character. In that rich temple offerings to the god were made on salvers studded with pearls. On the salvers were place flowers and censers. A fan was employed to excite the flames of the incense, while the lamps around threw light over the temple. But the use of these articles showed artificial worship, while the expanse of the firmament, the sun and the moon, the procession of the stars, the natural incense of the sandal, the winds and forests, were the fitting accessories of Nanak's purer worship of the God of creation. The Guru therefore, instead of accepting the high priest's invitation to adore the idol, raised his eyes to heaven, and gave utterance to the following hymn:--

www.vadaprativada.com

The sun and moon, O Lord, are thy lamps; the firmament, Thy salver; the orbs of the stars, the pearls enchased in it.

The perfume of the sandal is Thine incense; the wind is Thy fan; all the forests are Thy flowers, O Lord of light.

What worship is this, O Thou Destroyer of birth? Unbeaten strains of ecstasy are the trumpets of Thy worship.

Thou hast a thousand eyes and yet not one eye; Thou hast a thousand forms and yet not one form;

Thou hast a thousand pure feet and yet not one foot; Thou hast a thousand organs of smell and yet not one organ—I am fascinated by this play of Thine.

The light which is in everything is Thine, O Lord of light.

From its brilliancy everything is brilliant;

By the Guru's teaching the light becometh manifest.

What pleaseth Thee is the real arati.

O God, my mind is fascinated with Thy lotus feet as the bumble-bee with the flower: night and day I thirst for them.

Give the water of Thy grace to the sarang Nanak, so that he may dwell in Thy name.

While at Jagannath, Guru Nanak met a Brahman who kept his eyes and nose closed so as to receive no pleasure from these organs. He averred that in that state he with his mental eyes saw the secrets of the world. Nanak hid his lota and the Brahman could not find it, so Nanak by the following hymn in the Dhanasari measure twitted him on his want of omniscience:--

This is not the age, there is no longer acquaintance with Jog; this is not the way of truth.

The holy places in the world have fallen; the world is thus ruined.

In this Kal age God's name is the best thing.

Thou closest thine eyes and holdest thy nose to deceive the world.

Thou holdest they nose with they thumb and first two fingers, and sayest that thou seest the three worlds.

But thou seest not what is behind thee, this is a wonderful thing."

4347. Chapter VII shows that Guru Nanak after coming back from Eastern India visited shrine of Shaikh Farid a Muslim saint at Ajodhan (now called Pak Pattan in the southern part of Punjab Province) and there also he expressed similar sentiments though in respect to muslim religious shrine.

4348. Exhibit 73, Suit-4 (Paper No. 235C1 and 236C1/1-5) is the extract of pages no. 20 to 27 from "The Evolution of the Sikh Community" by W.H. Mc Leod published by Oxford University press (some other pages of this book are already exhibited as Exhibit 69, Suit-4). With reference to the travel of Guru Nanak a mention on page 23 of the said book was made. It says:

> "Itineraries are now devised and incidents which already had a particular location are set in appropriate places in the travel narrative. Other incidents which previously had no specific location are now given one. At first the Guru's travels are relatively modest in extent, but as the years pass from the eighteenth into the nineteenth century we find him reaching Peking in the East and Europe in the West. One relatively recent contribution relates a meeting with the Pope in Rome, an opportunity which Guru Nanak utilizes to denounce the sale of indulgences."

4349. Exhibit 74, Suit-4 (Paper No. 237C1 and 238C1/1-5) contains pages no. 221 to 224 of the book titled as "The Sikh World-An Encyclopaedic Survey of Sikh Religion and Culture" by Ramesh Chandra Dogra Urmila Dogra 2003 Edition published by UBS Publishers' Distributors Pvt. Ltd., New Delhi. It also contains the comments of the author with respect to the various Janamsakhis of Guru Nanak and the extent of authenticity thereof.

4350. Exhibit 75 contains photocopies of the title page, preface and pages no. 17, 39, 84 to 87 and 299 to 303 of "A History of the Sikhs" by Khushwant Singh, Vol. I, 1469-1839, first published in 1963 and 9th impression 2002 by Oxford University Press.

4351. Suffice it to mention at this stage about the aforesaid evidences that neither the authenticity of any of the Janamsakhi is involved in these matters nor otherwise we have to consider in any manner about the teachings etc. of Guru Nanak. The reference of Guru Nanak has been made by learned counsels appearing for Hindu parties mainly to show that he also visited Ayodhya and after taking bath at Saryu had visited Janamsthan also and this fact is mentioned in the books of Sikh religion while Sri Jilani has tried to show that there is no such reference in any of the books relating to Sikhism. We may mention that though at some places it is found that Guru Nanak while travelling to various places also came to Ayodhya but there is nothing to show that he at any point of time actually visited the disputed place and the learned counsel for the defendants in Suit-4 and plaintiffs in other suits could not show anything to persuade us to take a different view. In this way we find no relevance of the above documents in these cases.

4352. Before embarking upon the question as to whether the site in dispute is that where Lord Rama was born, we have to first consider the question about the historicity of the matter. The issue which relates to the faith of Hindus about the birth of Lord Rama at Ayodhya etc. in so far as relates to the faith, the learned counsels have already made their statements under Order 10 Rule 2 C.P.C. not disputing the same and that being so, no further enquiry on that aspect need be gone. This by itself does not end the matter for the reason that the issue with respect to the birth of Lord Rama at the disputed place has not been framed merely on the basis of faith of Hindus but is a direct issue. The arguments of the learned counsel for the Muslim parties are that so far as the faith is concerned, the things may be said to be beyond the pail of judicial review but where a positive issue arises as to whether a particular thing happened or not, that is a pure question of fact and can be investigated provided the historicity of the matter is proved. It is suggested that the Ramayana has been held to be a great epic and therefore, being a mythical story, the question of actual birth of lord Rama is beyond any comprehension and hence the question of place of birth also becomes redundant.

4353. Sri P.R. Ganpati Ayyier faced with the situation in fact sought to argue that issue No.11 (Suit 4) needs recast, inasmuch as, it ought to be whether the property in suit as per the faith of Hindus is the site of Janam Bhumi of Sri Ram Chandra Ji and he submits that issue however framed ignoring the words 'faith of Hindus' has made the said issue faulty for the reason that something which occurred or said to have occurred thousands of years cannot be asked to prove.

4354. It is said that Ayodhya is an ancient city. Goswami Tulsidas in his renowned work Sri Ramcharit Manas besides others has also referred to the celebration of Janam Mahotsav of Lord Rama at Ayodhya and the belief of Hindus about the Supreme Being therein to fulfil the wishes of the worshippers or even a person who visits Ayodhya for once and refers to the following verses from the Chapter of "Uttarkand" (Exhibit T4, Suit-4), Register Vol. 18, pages 59-71, Paper No. 43A1/29-35:

''तब तब अवधपुरी मैं जाऊँ। बालचरित बिलोकि हरसाऊँ।।

जन्म महोत्सव देखउँ जाई। बरष पॉच तहँ रहउँ लोभाई।।

निज प्रभु जन्म अवध सुनि जायउँ। निर्भर प्रेम हरषी उठि धायउँ।।

देखउँ जन्म महोत्सव जाई। जेही विधि प्रथम कहा मैं गाई।।

जब मैने अपने स्वामी का अवधपुरी में जन्म होना सुन पाया, तब प्रेम से भरकर, मै हर्षपूर्वक उठ दौड़ा। जाकर मैने जन्म–महोत्सव देखा, जिस प्रकार से कि मैं पहले वर्णन कर चुका हूँ।''

4355. In support of the submissions that the disputed site is birthplace of Lord Rama since time immemorial, the idol of Lord Rama is worshipped thereat since long time and also to contradict the suggestion of the learned counsel for the Sunni Central Wakfs Board and other Muslims parties that Ramjanamsthan Mandir was different, i.e., towards the north of the disputed site across the road etc., Sri M.M. Pandey, counsel for the plaintiff (Suit-5) placed reliance on the following part of the depositions of witnesses:

PW-1, Mohd. Hashim

''यह बात मैंने सुनी है कि अयोध्या में ज्यादातर जो मन्दिर हैं वे राम–जानकी या सीताराम के मन्दिर हैं। जिस मोहल्ला में विवादित स्थल है मोहल्ला रामकोट उस मोहल्ले में अधिकतर बहुत प्राचीन मन्दिर है। उसमें कनक भवन मन्दिर भी है।'' (पेज 38)

"I have heard that most of the temples in Ayodhya are the temples of Ram-Janaki or Sitaram. The locality in which the disputed site is situated, that is, the Ramkot locality mostly have very old temples. Kanak Bhawan temple is one of them." (ETC)

''विवादित स्थल के अलावा राम जन्मस्थान के मन्दिर के अलावा जो मशहूर मन्दिर हैं उनके नाम ही मैं जानता हूँ, जो बाबरी मस्जिद के इर्द–गिर्द है। बाबरी मस्जिद के इर्द–गिर्द जन्मस्थान मन्दिर के अलावा मैं और किसी मन्दिर का नाम नहीं बता सकता। यह भी नहीं बता सकता कि बाबरी मस्जिद के इर्द–गिर्द कितने मन्दिर हैं। 22/23 दिसम्बर, 1949 को जिस स्थान की कुर्की हुई, हिन्दू लोग उसे राम जन्मभूमि कहते थे और मुसलमान बाबरी मस्जिद कहते हैं। गोपाल सिंह विशारद के दावे में भी हिन्दू लोग इसे राम जन्मभूमि मन्दिर और मुसलमान लोग बाबरी मस्जिद कहते हैं।' (पेज 40)

"Besides the disputed site/Ramjanmsthan temple, I know only the names of famous temples situated in the vicinity of the Babri mosque. Except for the Janmsthan temple in the vicinity of the Babri mosque, I cannot tell the name of any other temple. I cannot even tell how many temples are there in the vicinity of the Babri mosque. The Hindus called the place attached on 22nd - 23rd December, 1949, Ram Janam Bhumi and the Muslims call it Babri mosque. In the claim of Gopal Singh Visharad too Hindus call it Ramjanmbhumi temple and Muslims call it Babri mosque." (ETC)

''जैसे मक्का मुसलमानों के लिए अहमियत रखता है उसी तरह अयोध्या भगवान राम को लेकर हिन्दुओं के लिए महत्व रखता है।' (पेज 44)

"As Mecca holds importance for Muslims, similarly Ayodhya holds importance for Hindus because of Lord Rama." (ETC)

''जो जगह ए. बी. सी. डी. में दिखाई गई है यह वह है जिसे हम मस्जिद कहते हैं और हिन्दू जन्मस्थान कहते हैं। जो जगह चबूतरा की सूरत में हिन्दू लोगों के कब्जे में है।' (पेज 113)

"The place which is marked as A. B. C. D. is the place which we call mosque and Hindus call Janmsthan, which is in possession of Hindus in the shape of Chabutara." (E.T.C.)

''यह ठीक है कि अयोध्या हिन्दुओं का एक तीर्थस्थल है। यह गलत है कि 22 दिसम्बर, 1949 से राम जन्मभूमि पर हिन्दू लोग देश–विदेश से आकर पूजा–अर्चना करते रहे हैं। (अजखुद कहा) सिर्फ एक पुजारी पूजा करता रहा है। यह ठीक है कि 22 दिसम्बर, 1949 से इस भूमि पर जो मुकदमा में मुतदाविया है, हिन्दू लोग देश–विदेश से दर्शन करने के लिए आते हैं। मुझे मालूम नहीं कि इस परिसर में तब ही से हिन्दू धर्म के लोगों के धार्मिक आयोजन गाह–बगाहे होते रहते हैं' (पेज 120)

"It is true that Ayodhya is a place of pilgrimage for Hindus. It is incorrect that since 22nd December 1949 Hindus have continued to come from within the country and abroad to perform Pooja-Archana at Ramjanmbhumi. (Stated on his own) Just one priest has been performing Pooja. It is true that from 22nd December, 1949, Hindus come from within the country and from abroad to have darshan on this land, which is disputed in litigation. I do not know that religious functions of Hindus are held off and on in this premises since then."(E.T.C.)

"The Savan Jhula fair is held; fairs of Hindus are held in the months of Kartika and Chaitra as well. Panchkosi and Chaudahkosi circumambulations are also performed. Hindu travelers come to attend them. Ayodhya gets thronged but I cannot say whether they are thousands or lakhs in number. In my view, the Hindus must have had the darshan of this place as birthplace of Lord Rama " (E.T.C.)

''...मैं अयोध्या में रहता हूँ, इसलिए कुछ हिन्दुओं से और पंडितों से भी मेरी मेल–मुलाकात होती रहती है। ब्याह–शादी में दावत–तवाज़ा भी होता रहता है। उनका यह अकीदा है कि यह श्री राम का जन्म स्थान है। (अजखुद कहा कि उनका अकीदा उनके साथ है) हिन्दू लोग इस जगह को पाक और पवित्र समझकर इसकी पूजा करते हैं।'' (पेज 71)

"I reside at Ayodhya; so, I meet some Hindus and Pandits (scholarly persons) too. Feasts-dinners are also organized at weddings. It is their belief that it is the birthplace of Lord Rama. (Stated on his own that there belief is their own.) Hindus worship this place taking it to be holy and sacred." (E.T.C)

''There are Hindu temples in the vicinity of the disputed property. On the way from this property to Hanumangarhi there are large Hindu temples such as Kanak Bhawan, Ram Janam Sthan and Hanumangarhi. Ram Janam Bhumi temple is also situated in Ramkot locality." (ETC)

"I have come to a conclusion that Ayodhya is a religious town as well. In these books and the Puranas, it is somewhere mentioned and somewhere not mentioned that Lord Vishnu incarnated himself as Rama in Ayodhya. It is true that some people believe in him and have been worshiping Sri Rama as God for centuries but such people are followers of the Vaishnavite sect or Rama-worshipers. It is also true that these people visit different places in Ayodhya as part of their pilgrimage." (E.T.C)

describe the location of Ramjanmbhumi. In my view, it would not be correct to say that in Ayodhya Mahatmya, the boundary of Ramjanmbhumi and its status are mentioned. . . . . . After reading the above verse, the witness stated that I have understood its meaning. The boundary of Janmbhumi is not clear in it. Then stated that boundary has not been given. The learned counsel asked the witness to read again the 18th and 19th lines of the verse, and after reading them, the witness stated: 'the aforesaid boundary is not clear from this verse'. The boundary of Ramjanmbhumi is not evident in these verses. The four directions which are necessary for a boundary are not mentioned therein. It is correct that in the aforesaid verse, Pindarak, Vighneshwar, Vashishta and Lomesh are mentioned. On hearing the first line of 18th verse from the learned counsel conducting cross-examination and after reading the same, the witness replied that one has to go to the north-east direction from this place for visiting Janmbhumi (place of birth). The meaning of the second line of the same stanza is that one has to visit the 'place of birth' for salvation. The term 'parvartate' means one who goes. The term 'Vighneshwarah Poorvabhage' means in the eastern part of Vighneshwar. The term Vashishthatah Uttare means 'in the north of Vashishtha'; the term Lomashat Paschime bhage means 'in the western part of Lomash'; Janmsthanam Tatah means 'the place of birth from there'. ''रामायण में यह उल्लिखित है कि भगवान राम का जन्म अयोध्या में हुआ। अयोध्या का वर्णन हमारे वेदों में है, उपनिषदों में तथा संहिताओं में एवं अष्टादश उप पुराणों में, स्मृतियों में है और भारत के संस्कृत जगत में जो मान्य साहित्य उपलब्ध है, उस भगवान का जन्म स्थान अयोध्या माना गया है।'' (पेज 7)

"This place was to the north of the Ramchabutra. Beneath the dome, were two idols and one 'Batiya' of Saligram, which has been brought out in the courtyard by the priest. Both the idols were of Ramlala, which were big and small idols respectively. Out of the idols present beneath the dome, there was no idol of Sita Ji, I do not remember whether the idol of Hanuman Ji was there or not. प्रश्न : 1934 में मध्य शिखर के नीचे आप जिस स्थान को जन्मभूमि समझते थे, उसकी लम्बाई, चौड़ाई क्या थी ?

उत्तर : मैं यह निश्चित नहीं कह सकता कि उस स्थान की लम्बाई–चौड़ाई क्या थी परन्तु परिक्रमा मार्ग को लेकर सम्पूर्ण भूमि को मैं जन्मभूमि का हिस्सा मानकर उसकी परिक्रमा करता था।

– जन्मभूमि उसी स्थान को समझता हूँ, जहाँ पर राम का जन्म हुआ था। यह जन्म राजा दशरथ के महल में प्रसव गृह में हुआ था। गर्भगृह तथा प्रसवगृह जन्म की दृष्टि से एक ही हैं, मेरा तात्पर्य भगवान

"The photograph no.10, paper no. 154/13, taken by the aforesaid Commissioner was shown to the witness. It is the same place where idols existed earlier and later on idols were again installed over there. These idols appear to have been placed above platform. The platform had been built. The place where idols are installed at present, was the sanctum sanctorum in 1934 (or) earlier, in 1949 and even today.

Question: What was the dimension of the place beneath the Central dome in 1934, which you considered to be Janmbhumi?

Answer: I consider the entire place beneath the central dome as well as the adjoining places, to be Ramjanmbhumi.

www.vadaprativada.com

Question: Would the length-breadth of any part of that land, have been 100x100 feet or more?

Answer: I cannot tell definitely the dimension of that place, but I used to perform circumambulation of the entire land including the circumambulation path, by treating it to be part of Janmbhumi.

-(I) consider Janmbhumi to be the same place, where Rama was born. This birth took place in the labour room of king Dashrath's palace. Sanctum sanctorum and labour room, are the same from the point of view of birth. I mean the place of birth of Lord Rama. "(E.T.C)

''प्रश्न :– विवादित भवन में गर्भगृह उसी स्थल पर होने के सम्बन्ध में जहाँ पर आप बताते हैं, आपका विश्वास किस पुस्तक व प्रमाण पर आधारित है ?

उत्तर :– वेदों में जन्मभूमि का वर्णन है। अथर्ववेद के मंत्र :–

अष्टाचक्र नवद्द्वारा सादेवत नाम पुः अयोध्या तस्यामहिरण्मयः कोषः लिखा है, जिसका शब्दार्थ है–आठ वक्रों पर यह अयोध्या नगरी बसी हुई है और आगे आठों वक्रों के आठ देवताओं का वर्णन रुद्रयामल तक में आता है। उससे सम्बंधित श्लोक निम्न है :–

जन्मभूमिं हनुमन्तं नागेशं सरयूशिवाम्
लक्ष्मणं वेणु तीर्थम बन्दे हाटक मन्दिरम् ।।

इस श्लोक में प्रथम च्रक के देवता राम जन्म भूमि का होना उल्लिखित है।'' (पेज 103)

"Question:- On which book and evidence is your belief based regarding the existence of 'Garbh-grih' (sanctum sanctorum) in the disputed structure at the same place where you claim so?

Answer:- The Janmbhumi is described in the Vedas. The meaning of Atharvaveda's hymn reading as 'Ashtachakra Navadwara Shadevnam Puh Ayodhya Tasyamahiranyamayah Koshah' is that 'the city of Ayodhya exists over eight 'Chakras' (wheels)', and the description of the eight Gods of the eight 'Chakras' (wheels) is found in Rudrayam. The concerned verse is as under:

'Janmbhumim Hanumantam Nagesham Saryushivam Laxmanam Venu Tirthavbande Hatak Mandiram'.

This verse gives the Ramjanmbhumi to be the God of the first 'Chakra' (wheel)."(E.T.C) contention i.e. King Vikramaditya had built a temple at the disputed site but so far as the second part of the question is concerned, I have so heard that attempts were made on various occasions to demolish the temple over there and a mosque was also built by demolishing (the temple), but it was never used as a mosque."(E.T.C)

''अथर्ववेद में राम का जन्म का विशेष स्थान पर होना लिखा हुआ है। इस विशेष स्थान का अथर्ववेद के किस अध्याय में जिक्र है, मुझे याद नहीं है, पर मैं पुस्तक देखकर बता सकता हूँ। पर मुझे वह मंत्र याद है जो निम्न प्रकार है–

'अष्टाचक्रा नवद्वारा देवानां पूरयोध्या,

तस्यां हिरण्यमयः कोशः स्वर्गो ज्योतिषावृतः।

गवाह ने किताब दिखवाकर प पढ़वाकर मंत्र संख्या बताई, जो दशम् काण्ड द्वितीय अनुवाद मंत्र संख्या 31 है।'' (पेज 39)

"In the Atharvaveda, Lord Rama is mentioned to have been born at a place particular. I do not remember as to in which chapter of the Atharvaveda is this place particular mentioned, but I can tell after going through the book. However, I remember that hymn, which reads as under:

'Ashtachakra Navadwara Devnam Puryodhya,

Tasyam Hiranyamayah Koshah Swargo Jyotishavritah'.

The witness gave the number of the hymn by getting the book shown and read, which is hymn no.31 of the 'Dasham Kand–II translation'."(E.T.C)

''इस मंत्र में 'हिरण्यमयः कोशः स्वर्गः' इन तीन शब्दों से भगवान राम के जन्मस्थल का स्पष्ट संकेत होता है और चूंकि अथर्ववेद अपौरुषेय है इसलिए इसमें इतना ही संकेत मिलता है। कहने का तात्पर्य यह है कि उस अयोध्या में एक हिरण्यमयः अर्थात स्वर्ण का मण्डपाकार भवन है, जहाँ प्रकाश से सम्पन्न साकेत लोक से आकर परमब्रह्म श्रीराम जन्म लिए थे। उपरोक्त शब्दों के आधार पर ही मैंने व्याकरण शास्त्र के अनुसार यह निष्कर्ष निकाला है कि विवादित स्थल पर ही भगवान राम का जन्मस्थान है।'' (पेज 40)

hymn, clearly point towards the birthplace of Lord Rama and since Atharvaveda is 'Apaurusheya' (not authored by any Purusha or human mind i.e. they have no human origin), as such only this much indication is found in it. The implication of this is that in said Ayodhya there is a 'Hiranmayah' i.e. a golden domed shaped building where the Supreme Being Lord Rama was born from the radiant 'Saketlok'. It is on the basis of the above words that I have drawn the conclusion according to grammar that the birthplace of Lord Rama is at the disputed site."(E.T.C)

''मैंने अपने दिनांक 7.08.2003 के बयान पेज 47 के अन्तिम 2 पंक्तियों में जो यह कहा है कि जिस स्थान पर राम का जन्म हुआ, उसे हम जन्मभूमि के नाम से संदर्भित करते हैं। सही कहा है। जन्मस्थान उस सम्पूर्ण परिसर को कहते हैं, जो जन्मभूमि के चारों तरफ चारदीवारी से घिरा हुआ होता है, अर्थात राम जी का जिस महल में जन्म हुआ, वह तो जन्मभूमि कहलाएगी और उस महल के आसपास का उससे सम्बंधित और घिरा हुआ स्थान जन्मस्थान कहलाएगा।'' (पेज 72)

"My statement given yesterday on 07.08.2003 in last two lines of page-47 as 'the place where Lord Rama was born, is referred as Janmbhumi by us', is correct. The entire premises is referred as Janmsthan, which is bounded by the boundary on all sides of the Janmbhumi i.e. the palace in which Lord Rama was born would be called Janmbhumi and the area adjoining, related and covered by that palace would be called Janmsthan."(E.T.C)

I have no knowledge as to what happened when the commander of Babar carried out invasion to convert this temple into mosque and even demolished it and also removed the idol. The idol of Lord Shri Ramlala, which existed at time of the invasion by Babar and which had been removed, did not re-appear till the appearance of the deity Himself and till that time people used to have darshan of the vacant place."(E.T.C)

''उपरोक्त गजेटियर के अध्ययन से स्पष्ट होता है कि विवादित स्थल हिन्दुओं के आराध्य भगवान श्रीराम की जन्मस्थली है जहां हिन्दुओं द्वारा सदैव से अपने आराध्य भगवान श्रीराम की जन्मभूमि के रूप में पूजा की जाती रही है तथा इसी स्थल पर श्रीराम जन्मभूमि मंदिर पूर्व काल में भी स्थित था जिसे 1528ईं में ध्वस्त करके विवादित ढांचा बाबर के आदेश पर मीरबाकी द्वारा बनाया गया।'' (पेज 4)

"By study of the aforesaid gazetteer, it transpires that the disputed site is the birthplace of Lord Sri Rama, revered by Hindus, where Hindus have always paid their reverence as the birthplace of their revered Lord Sri Rama and the Sri Ramjanmbhumi temple existed at this very place in past, which was demolished in 1528 AD and the disputed structure was built by Mir Baqi under the command of Babur."(E.T.C)

''मेरी पुस्तक का निष्कर्ष यह है कि मैं विवादित स्थल को श्रीराम की जन्म

स्थली मानता हूं। मैं अपने अनुभव के आधार पर इतना जानता हूं कि राम जन्मभूमि पर जो मूर्ति थी, उसकी पूजा अर्चना, भोग, सम्मइया आदि वहां के साधु लोग करते थे। रिसीवर की नियुक्त के बाद रिसीवर लोग तथा उनके नियुक्त कर्मचारी लोग यह कार्य करते थे।'' (पेज 23)

"The conclusion of my book is that I consider the disputed site to be the birthplace of Lord Sri Rama. On the basis of my experience, I know only this much that the prayer, worship, 'Bhog', 'Sammaiya', etc. of the idols at the Ramjanmbhumi, were carried by the saints present over there. English Translation (By the Court)

"On the west of Ram Janam Bhumi lies a place of Pindara, a famous and great sage and great human being. We should worship this adorable place with scent, flowers, rice-grains, etc. (13)

Due to that worship human beings can attain Siddhi(accomplishment). Hence, human beings should duly worship it. (14)

After taking a dip in the water of Saryu one should worship Pindarak. The sinners suffering from weak understanding and from attachment should always do the said worship. (15)

Journey to it should be done in the Pushpa Nakshatra of Navratri. In the west part of Ram Janam Bhumi, we should worship Ganesha Ji, remover of obstacles. (16)

As a result of whose darshan human beings do not have any obstacle and pain, even a little sorrow such Vighneshwar is worthy of worship as provider of results of all desires. (17)

On the north-east of that place lies Ram Janam Bhumi (where at present Ram Lala is presiding). The same Ram Janam Bhumi is known as Ram Janam Bhumi Sthan or expressed in the said manner and it is a provider of liberation, etc. (18)

We should remember Janam Bhumi as located in the east part of 'Ganesha Ji' , remover of obstacles, and in the north part of Vashishtha Kunda and in the west part of Lomash. (19)

www.vadaprativada.com

After having darshan of Sri Ram Lala presiding at that very Ram Janam Bhumi one is liberated from rebirth. Even without making any gift, without practising austerities and without making sacrifices, one attains liberation only with darshan of Ram Janam Bhumi, that is to say, one does not have to take birth from mother's womb again. (20)

One who keeps fast on the ninth day, has a dip in Saryu and offers gifts in Ayodhya, gets liberated from the bondage of birth. (21)

The darshan of Sri Ram Janam Bhumi provides the same results that a man may have by gifting one thousand Kapila cows everyday. (22)

The result that hermits and ascetics residing in Ashrams have, is the same that people have on performing one thousand Rajsuya Yajnas have and on offering 'havans' in fire-pits. (23)

www.vadaprativada.com

From the darshan of Ram Janam Bhumi one may get the same results as one may get from having darshan of Ram Ji particularly at Sri Ram Janam Bhumi or from rendering dedicated service to parents, teachers and gentle persons. (24)

One may get the same results from darshan of Lord Ram Lala presiding at Sri Ram Janam Bhumi. (25)"

We have another publication of Valmiki Ramayan, Critical Edition by G.H.Bhatt published by Oriental Institute Baroda, Maharaja Sayajirao University of Baroda in 1960. Vol.-1 at page 43 and 44 contends the same Shlokas which are shown in Ex. J-3. It is not in dispute that Valmiki Ramayana is the first document, which gives entire details of Lord Rama known to us. A perusal of the critical edition of Valmiki Ramayana shows that they collected manuscripts requesting across the country for publishing a most authentic version of Valmiki Ramayan and in their endeavor they got the oldest Manuscripts of 1020 AD said to be in Nepali version. It is said in the introduction part that there is an entry in the Manuscripts that it was copied by Sri Gopati, S/o Pt. Shri Shri Tara on the 4th day of the dark half of the month of Aashad in Samvat year 1076 (AD 1020). Besides they also received Manuscripts in different languages i.e. Newari, Maithli, Bengali, Devnagari, Telgu and Malyalam. The oldest version in Maithli is of 1360 AD, Bengali 1688 AD, Devnagari 1455 AD, Malyalam 1512 AD.

''अयोध्या नगरी

इसी प्रकार ही पहाड़ी क्षेत्रों में से चलते हुए गुरु जी श्रीराम चन्द्र जी के जन्म स्थान अयोध्या नगरी आ गये। बहुत से लोग और पंडित गुरु जी के करीब एकत्र हो गये। गुरु जी ने एक पंडित से पूछा कि हमने सुना था कि अयोध्या नगरी को श्री राम चन्द्र जी अपने साथ ही बैकुण्ठ को ले गये थे, फिर यह तो यहीं की यहीं है? पंडितों ने कहा, वह केवल अयोध्या नगरी के जीवों को ही साथ लेकर गये थे, महल आदि और सब कुछ यहाँ ही रहा था। गुरु जी ने कहा उन लोगों ने श्री राम चन्द्र जी के दर्शन किये थे जिस के लिए वह उनके साथ ही बैकुण्ठ को चले गये थे। परन्तु तुम लोग जब तक गुरु उपदेश के द्वारा भक्ति धारण नहीं करोगे तब तक तुम बैकुण्ठ नहीं जा सकते। उन्होंने कहा गुरु तो कई प्रकार के हैं, हम किस गुरु को धारण करें? गुरु जी ने कहा– जिसके अपने मन में पूर्ण ज्ञान हो, मोह माया से निर्लेप हो, वह आप भी मुक्त हो जाता है और दुसरे भी जो उसके साथ चलते हैं वह अन्त समय बैकुण्ठ को जाते हैं। गुरु जी के यह वचन सुन कर पंडितों ने कहा महाराज ! हमें आप ही उपदेश दो। तब आप जी ने उनको सत्यनाम का उपदेश देकर सौभाग्यशाली बनाया।''

4361. Two more exhibits, i.e., Exhibit J-5 (Suit-4) (Register Vol.13, page 39-45) is a photocopy of pages no.682, 683, 678, 679 and Appendix-U page lxxvi, lxxvii, lxxviii, lxxix of A.S. Vol. XLIII of the District Gazetteers of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh by H.R Nevill, 1905. We have already dealt with these documents and, therefore, no occasion to refer further.

4362. Reference is also made to Exhibit 118 and 119 (Suit-

It has been filed to show that the placement of idol under the central dome inside the disputed structure in the inner Courtyard. The appropriate time was calculated by the experts and that was the most suitable time. Exhibit 118 (Suit-5) (Register 23, Page 671) is also to the same effect and this has been written by one Pt. Harisharan Dwivedi of Allahabad. Both these documents, however, were not proved and even otherwise are not relevant for the issue.

4363. One more book, i.e., "Ain-i-Akbari" is also cited. One of the earliest work wherein Ayodhya has been referred is the work of Abul-Fazl Allami. It is a Persian treatise titled as A-in-i Akbari (the Institutes of Akbar) (Akbar-Nama). He was a Minister of the Mughal Emperor Akbar and has given the geography, physical and historical descriptions of the Emperor accompanied by statistical table. It described in detail the sixteen Subhas of the Government of which the Mughal Emperor was then composed with minute exactitude. Initially, in 1783 Francis Gladwin published unabridged English version of the said work encouraged by the Governor General Warren Hastings but it was found to be highly defective. Later on an English translation was published in 1873 by H. Blochmann. The original book is said to be in five volumes and with respect to its contents etc. in the preface stated on 23rd September, 1873, Blochmann said :

> "The A-in-i Akbari is the third volume of the Akbar-nama, by Shaykh Abu'l Fazal, and is by far the greatest work in the whole series of Muhammadan histories of

www.vadaprativada.com

India. The first volume of the this gigantic work contains the history of Timur's family as far as it is of interest for the Indian reader, and the reigns of Babar, the Sur Kings, and Humayun whilst the second volume is devoted to the details history of nearly forty-six years of the reign of the Great Emperor. The concluding volume, the A-in-i-Akbari, contains that information regarding Akbar's reign, which, though not strictly historical, is yet essential to a correct understanding of the times, and embodies, therefore, those facts for which, in modern times, we would turn to Administration Reports, Statistical compilations, or Gazetteers. It contains the a-in (i.e. mode of governing) of Akbar, and is, in fact, the Administration Report and Statistical Return of his government as it was about A.D. 1590. The contents, therefore, of the A-in are naturally varied and detailed. The first of its five books treats of Akbar's household and court, and of the emperor himself, the soul of every department, who looks upon the performance of his duties as an act of divine worship, and who enters into the details of government in order to create a harmonious whole. Vouchsafed as king with a peculiar light from on high, his person is prominently p8ut forward as the guide of the people in all matters temporal and spiritual; in whose character and temper the governed find that rest and peace which no constitution can give, and in whom, as the author of a new and advanced creed, the dust of intoleration is for ever allayed.

The second book treats of the servants of the throne, the military and civil services, and the attendants at court whose literary genius or musical skill receives a lustre from the encouragement of the emperor, and who in their turn reflect a brilliant light on the government.

The third book is entirely devoted to regulations for the judicial and executive departments, the establishment of a new and more practical era, the survey of the land, the tribal divisions, and the rent-roll of the great Finance minister whose name has become proverbial in India.

The fourth book treats of the social condition and literary activity, especially in philosophy and law, of the Hindus, who form the bulk of the population, and in whose political advancement the emperor saw the guarantee of the stability of his realm. There are also a few chapters on the foreign invaders of India, on distinguished travellers, and on Muhammadan saints and the sects to which they respectively belong.

The fifth book contains the moral sentences and epigrammatical sayings, observations, and rules of wisdom of the emperor, which Abu 'l-Fazl has gathered as the disciple gathers the sayings of the master."

4364. Blochmann's translation was published second time in 1927 which was edited by Lieut. Colonel D.C. Phillott and he has given an explanation in his preface written in 1927 as under :

"Some explanation is needed of the present edition. Blochmann's original translation has for some time been out of print. The Asiatic Society of Bengal has asked me undertake the preparation of a reprint, and I lightly accepted the task, not realizing the amount of labour

involved. Blochmann's translation and notes form a work of infinite detail and thorough scholarship; and though it has seldom been necessary to correct, it has often been necessary to investigate. This present edition is, however, in the main a mere reprint. This of itself is no small testimony to Blochmann's thoroughness. The transliteration, however, has been brought into line with a more modern system, and a few additional notes [in a square brackets] have been added; those with a suffixed B. are Blochmann's own MS. Notes from a printed copy in my possession; I have not incorporated all of them, as many I was unable to decipher. Notes to which a P. is suffixed are my own."

4365. It appears that after the death of H. Blochmann on 30th July 1878 it was found by Asiatic Society of Bengal which had published the translation of A-in-i Akbari that the work was only to the extent of the First Volume and, therefore, it entrusted the unfinished work to Lieut. Colonel H.S. Jarrett who finished the printing of translation of the second Volume in 1891. This work of Jerrutt was revised by Sri Jadunath Sarkar in 1949 and its latest re-print of 2001 distributed by D.K. Publishers Distributors P. Ltd., New Delhi has been placed on record before us. The Subah of Audh is on page 181 and onwards and the relevant part thereof referred by the parties is as under :

winter are nearly temperate. Its principal streams are the Saru (Sarju), the Ghaghar (Gogra) the Sai and the Godi (Gumti). In the first mentioned, divers aquatic animals and forms of strange appearance show themselves. Agriculture is in a flourishing state, especially rice of the kinds called Sukhdas, Madhkar, and Jhanwan, which for whiteness, delicacy, fragrance and wholesomeness are scarcely to be matched. They sow their rice three months earlier than in other parts of Hindustan. When the drought begins, the Sai and the Gogra rise high in flood and before the beginning of the rains, the land is inundated, and as the waters rise, the stalks of rice shoot up and proportionately lengthen : the crop, however, is destroyed if the floods are in full force before the rice is in ear. Flowers, fruits and game are abundant. Wile buffaloes are numerous. When the plains are inundated the animals take to the high ground where the people find sport in hunting them. Some of the animals remain all day in the water and only at night approach the dry ground and breathe in freedom. Awadh (Ajodhya) is one of the largest cities of India*. ''।। तिलंग महला 1।। जैसी मैं आवै खसम की वाणी तैसड़ा करी गिआनु वे लालो। पाप की जंञ लै काबलहु धाइआ जोरी मंगै दानु वे लालो। सरमु धरमु दुई छपि खलोए कूडु फिरै परधानु वे लालो। काजीआ बामणा की गल थकी अगदु पड़ै सैतानु वे लालो। मुसलमानीआ पड़हि कतेबा कसट महि करहि खुदाई वे लालो। जाति सनाती होरि हिदवाणीआ एहि भी लेखै लाइ वे लालो। खून के सोहिले गावीअहि नानक रतु का कुंगू पाई वे लालो।। 1।। साहिब के गुण नानकु गावै मास पुरी विचि आखु मसीला। जिनि उपाई रंगि रचाई बैठा देखै दखि इकेला सचा सो साहिबु सचु तपावसु सचड़ा निआउ करेगु मसोला। काइआ कपडु टुकु टुकु होसी हिन्दुस्तानु समालसी बोला। आवनि अठतरै जानि सतानवै होरु भी उठसी मरद का चेला। सच की बाणी नानकु आखै सचु सुणाइसी सच की बेला।।2।।3।। 5।।

करेगा। अब (सैयदपुर में) मनुष्य का शरीर रूपी वस्त्र टुकड़े–टुकड़े हो रहा है। यह एक ऐसी भयानक दुर्घटना है, जिसे हिन्दुस्तान कभी नहीं भुला सकेगा। आज मुगल लोग सम्बत् अठहत्तर में आए हैं, ये सम्बत् सत्तानबें मे चले जाएँगे, कोई दूसरा शूरवीर इनके विरूद्ध उठा खड़ा होगा। नानक तो सत्यस्वरूप प्रभु की गुणस्तुति करता है, आजीवन यह गुणस्तुति करता रहेगा, क्योंकि यह मनुष्य–जन्म की अवधि गुणस्तुति के लिए ही मिली है।।2।।3।।5।।''

4369. He contended that the above narration show the atrocities of Babar when he invaded India. We, however, pointed out to him that it mentions the treatment of both Hindus and Muslims of India in the hands of Babar in equally adverse conditions, meaning thereby Babar killed the people without caring as to whether he was Muslim or Hindu.

4370. Exhibit 79 (Suit-4) (Register Vol. 16, pages 41-58) contains title page and pages no. 8 to 17, 226 to 229 and 400 to 401 of "Sri Guru Granth Sahib (Dusari Sainchi)" translated by Dr. Manmohan Sahgal. Sri Jain, learned Counsel, placed before us the following Hindi translation from page 226 of the book:

''(उनका) धन और यौवन, जिनका उन सुन्दरियों को बहुत अभिमान था, आज दोनों ही उनके बैरी बने हुए है। (बाबर ने) क्रूर सिपाहियों को हुक्म दे दिया है, वे उनकी प्रतिष्ठा गवॉकर उन्हें ले जा रहे हैं। (जीवों के कुछ वश नहीं) यदि परमात्मा को उपयुक्त लगे तो जीवों को आदर–सम्मान देता है, यदि उसकी रजा होवे तो सजा देता है।।4।। यदि पहले ही (अपने–अपने कर्तव्य को) याद करते रहें, तो ऐसी सजा क्यों मिले? (यहॉ के) हाकिमों ने ऐश–आराम के चाव में अपना कर्तव्य भुला दिया था। (अब, जब) बाबर की आवाज आई है, तो कोई पठान शहजादा भी रोटी नहीं खा सकता।।5।। (जालिमों के पंजे में आकर) मुसलमानी स्त्रियों के नमाज के वक्त छिन गए हैं, हिन्दू स्त्रियों की पूजा का समय जा रहा है। (जो पहले बड़ी ही औपचारिक विधि के साथ पूजा करती थी, अब) वे न स्नान करके टीके लगा सकती हैं, न ही उनके चौके पवित्र रह गए हैं। (जिन्होंने धन–यौवन के नशे में) कभी राम को स्मरण नहीं किया था, अब उन्हें खुदा,

खुदा कहना भी नहीं मिलता।।6।। (बाबर की कैद से) बचकर जो विरले मनुष्य अपने–अपने घर आते हैं, वे परस्पर मिलकर कुशल–क्षेम पूछते हैं। उनकी किस्मत में यह विपत्ति पूर्व–लिखित थी, वे एक दूसरे के पास बैठकर अपने–अपने दुख रोते हैं। (पर) हे नानक! मनुष्य बेचारे क्या करने योग्य हैं? वहीं कुछ होता है, जो उसे भला लगता है।।7।।''

4371. Here also we find that the act of Babar was equally adverse to both Muslims and Hindus of the then Hindostan.

4372. To our mind instead of puzzling ourselves in so much literature etc., certain aspects which emerge from whatever we have mentioned above may be summarised which probably may give some idea as to how the questions are to be answered. The antiquity of Ayodhya is not disputed. It is also not disputed that Ayodhya is known as the principal place of religion and mainly concerned with Vaishnavites, i.e., the followers of Lord Rama. Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya and ruled thereat. The religious texts like Valmiki Ramayan and Ramcharitmanas of Goswami Tulsidas and others like Skandpuran etc. mention that Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya and it is his place of birth but do not identify any particular place in Ayodhya which can be said to be his place of birth. On the one hand we do not get any idea about the exact place or site but simultaneously we can reasonably assume that once it is not disputed that Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya there must be a place which could be narrowed down at the site of his place of birth. It is true that a search of a place of birth after long time even today may not be very easy if one tried to find out in this regard just three or four generations back. Therefore, for making such kind of inquiry in a matter of such an antiquity is almost impossible. But when a dispute in such a manner is raised then we go by the well accepted principle in law of evidence

4373. The Evidence Act defined (proved) vide Section 3 as under:

> "A fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it the Court either believes to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition with it existence."

4374. The only thing the Court should not do is to base its conclusion on mere conjectures and surmises. Here we have not to consider the historicity of Ayodhya or Lord Rama but only to find out whether the place in dispute according to the belief, faith and traditions of Hindus is the site where Lord Rama was born. Even if we have to draw an inference whether this is a place where Lord Rama is born we need not record a finding like mathematical calculation but it has to be decided on the preponderance of probability. As we have already said that if Lord Rama was born at Ayodhya then there must be a place which can be identified for such purpose. It is no where suggested by plaintiffs (Suit-4) for the muslim parties that except the property in dispute there was any other place in Ayodhya which is believed by the Hindu people as place of birth of Lord Rama. What they submit is that there was another temple on the north side of the property in dispute which is called Janamsthan temple and, therefore, that can be the place of birth. But the antiquity of that temple goes back to only about 200-300 years, i.e., not beyond 18th or 19th century. The possibility of that area gets ruled out for more than several

4375. The first document which is available to us is that of William Finch Travellers Account who visited Ayodhya sometimes between 1608-1611 and there he has referred to a place known as fort of Ramchandra where he is born. It does not talk of any Janamsthan temple at this stage but talk of a fort in a ruined condition. He also mentioned that the people use to visit it for worship. Therefore, at that time also there was only one place which the Hindus people know to be a place of birth of Lord Rama or in any case a place which is related to Lord Rama. It has referred as Fort which obviously must have been quite bigger when it is said that it was on a mount and was the highest area in Ayodhya.

4376. The next document available to us was published in 1786, i.e., of Joseph Tieffenthaler who was an Australian Christian Priest and came to India sometime in 1740. He visited Awadh area between the 1766-1771. He was a highly educated Orientalist knowing several languages including Sanskrit and Persian. It is he who has given some detail about the place in dispute as also mentioned in detail the place in dispute including the disputed building and also says very clearly that the people believe that Lord Rama was born here where exist its house which was demolished and thereafter the building was constructed. The size of the house whether he called Hindu temple as a house is not known but for our purposes it is sufficient that in the bigger area of the fort of Lord Rama there was a part on which the disputed building was constructed and in this disputed building the people at that time also believed that it included the place of birth of Lord Rama and used to visit and worship despite knowing that a new building has been raised which is a mosque. The territory was reigned by muslim rulers and despite taking risk the Hindu people if were entering a mosque for worship believing it to be the place of birth of Lord Rama, this faith, their determination and their attitude must have some basis and cannot be taken lightly.

4377. Plaintiffs (Suit-4)'s one of the witnesses Suvira Jaiswal, an expert, (Historian) claims to have made special study on Lord Rama and has represented to have special knowledge in this regard. With respect to her religious followings, she said:

4379. Apparently, there are some contradictions, but broadly she has not been confident in denying the historicity of Lord Rama and also admits that his worship started much before the Christian era. It is not said that the worship of Lord Rama at Ayodhya or the custom of Darshan of birthplace of Lord Rama started after the construction of the disputed structure or after 1528 as suggested and argued by learned counsels for Muslim parties. In the excavation by ASI, artefacts of religious nature of Gupta period and even earlier thereto have been found.

4380. Having considered the entire evidence as also the recorded material including Hindu religious texts, historical books, gazetteers etc. one thing is clear that Ayodhya though is held to be a place of much antiquity but its real fame, piety and sacredness relate to the name of Lord Rama and none else. He is considered to be a manifestation (Avtar) of Lord of Lords Vishnu according to the Hindu faith, customs and belief. Is the concept of Avtar is something a fairy tale or is a kind of deep spiritual theory and practice, needs to be pondered over.

4381. It is no doubt true that the sentiments, emotions, faith, belief, confidence etc., whatever term we use, but millions of people of this country believe that Lords of Lord manifested in living form in the materialistic world i.e. earth, time and again. In this vast country, those different forms in different ways and means, but substantially with the tradition, common factor of belief, are worshipped. Commonly they are known as 'Avtaar', which means a form of God when He descended into

this materialistic world. Many a places, they are referred to as incarnations of God. There is some dispute even about the fine distinction between 'Avtaar' and 'incarnation'. One said that incarnation is not correct, for it means when someone or something reincarnates or takes another materialistic body of flesh and blood. Quite often it is in this context and with this understanding that people at large use the word incarnation. It is said by the learned Dharmacharyas that God does not take a material form. His form is always spiritual, transcendental to the norms and laws of material nature. He descend from the spiritual data as He is or in a form to do a specific activity/mission or carry out a particular purpose. The Supreme Being has many names considering his form and activities that he displays in his cosmic creation. In this country we have different religions and among them also a multi-fold system of faith, sects etc., but all have a common object of attaining salvation with the Almighty i.e. Lord of Lords or whatever name one may call it. All the major religions are having some sects which are the result of some differences in the system of worship but the common objective of all is indisputably same. The major religions in this country are Hindu, Muslims and Christians. Some say that Hindu by itself is not a form of religion but a way of life, living etc. On this aspect we have also said something above but at this stage we may clarify that the term Hindu may intend to use as it is known in common parlance in contra distinction to the terms used for other religions i.e. Muslims and Christians. Hindu religion is the oldest one. Whether it is 3000 year old or 5000 year old or more than a few lacs year old may not be of much consequence for us.

Today, Christianity is more than 2000 and Islam 1430 years old. We should not be understood saying that before Islam as propounded by Prophet Muhammad or Christianity as per the teaching of the Jesus Christ, there was no religion whatsoever, but this is what normally or commonly understood. The religious scriptures and literatures of the religions therefore, though in abundance conform to the point of view, requirement and necessities of the corresponding period. Because of its own certain antiquity amongst Hindu scriptures, we find sometimes, mention of such things which become difficult to digest on our conceivable notion and logic and the limitation of our understanding which we have in the light of the information available to us currently.

4382. May be on account of non availability of the reliable feed back some of the aspects of Hindu scriptures are termed by others as Myth, legend, epic etc., doubting its historicity, ignoring the fact that the common people are so deep embedded in blood that it is beyond imagination for them to even think of a situation where those faith and belief can be termed as a mere fiction and not a matter of historicity. For example, the two of the world's biggest works known as 'Ramayana' and 'Mahabharatha' of Hindu scriptures, other people started to call it 'Epic' and that we have followed since the days of British India and now also. Initially the European writers in their own understanding find it unthinkable even the existence of such an antique society and culture and that too so perfect and so well defined, sophisticated, but complicated in different facets. With the passage of time the thoughts and approach have undergone a sea of change and now we find quite a sectionable intelligentsia

who is changing its views and that is not merely on some kind of altered hypothesis etc., but due to the cemented, reliable information, they have collected in the mean time. In brief, it can be said that merely because one is not able to trace his history of succession it will not mean that he would not have a chain of succession. One's inability in finding something cannot result in a conclusion that actually nothing existed. There has to be much more. The mathematical, astronomical calculation of the learned people in ancient India have been found to be reasonably correct though they are presumed to lack so called advanced technology for arriving at such conclusions. It is easy to discard something at the threshold but difficult to find reason and logic behind its existence. Difficulty cannot be a reason to opt for an easier method instead of the cumbersome one. If Indian culture and society could have survived for such a long time even though other ancient cultures, whether Egyptian, Greek or Roman have lost behind the time, then one has to find out the reason for its sustenance. It cannot be brushed aside loosely. This is a kind of approach, thoughts, faith and belief of one part of the litigants before us and their contemporary opponent wants existence of positive material irrespective of the time and antiquity the matter relates to. The reason being that the issue has been brought in a Court of law which is presently governed by the system we have inherited from a totally different culture i.e. British legacy where they have told us to decide the dispute only on getting evidence and not otherwise. The issues relating to faith and belief and that too, which had continued from generations to generations, from hundreds and thousands years neither depend on the so called existence of evidence nor one can shake such custom which they have received by tradition for want of evidence. It is not totally a different concept and notion, independent in its own ways. In the erstwhile territory of India, before entry of the far east people or from other parts of world it appears that natives had their own traditions, system, faith and belief, and the society had different kinds of religious concept. The subsequent scholars tried to bifurcate this religious system of ancient India into that of Aryan and Dravidian but what we find is that barring a few differences in the matter of system of worship etc., the core belief and faith remained same. The entire society remained connected with a common thread of religious faith. This difference, more or less, was political. It is in this system, where we find the people in ancient India believed in the Avtaars of God which found mention in Vedic texts. All these Avtaars in one or the other way, we find, had a specific objective and ultimately helped to save the world, human being and other creatures and also to guide the living being in lives, and some are to attract the people back to the spiritual domain.

4383. On the one hand when modern day's science believe in the system of universe controlled by various principle of energy, then Indian Society was glued with a common platform by the learned sages and others telling that the Supreme Lord maintains all the planets and universe. It is He who assume roles and incarnation to perform pastimes to reclaim those in the mode of goodness. They were led to believe that throughout the many millions of Universe in which the Supreme Being appears, the objective is to apprise Society and bring it to senses, in particular, one who are in the higher grades of consciousness, receptive to understand their spiritual relation with him. He also sends his pure representatives and instruction to guide people. The object is common i.e. to bind the living beings back towards the spiritual world. It is also said that source of various Avtaars within this cosmic creation is the Lord of the Universe i.e. Garbhodakashayi Vishnu (see Srimad Bhagwatam 1.3.5). The form of the Lord, that descends to the material world to create, is called Avtaar.

4384. We are not going into that various Avtars of Lord Vishnu according to the Hindu tradition and in details thereof. Since Ayodhya is known by the name of Lord Rama and, therefore, one can presume that the religious structures must have connection with Lord Rama in one or the other way. The stone inscription found in 1992, as we have already discussed, at least show this much that a temple of Vishnu Hari was constructed by the erstwhile Gahadwal King in 11th or 12th century, i.e., much before the visit of Babar near Ayodhya. In no other record, reference of Vishnu Hari Mandir at Ayodhya has been pointed out, meaning thereby, before the history of Hinduism started in writing in a proper way, that temple must have disappeared for one or the other reason. At Ayodhya, the people used to visit for Darshan of Lord Rama's places is also evident from the record of Sikh religion showing that Guru Nanak Dev Ji came to Ayodhya in 1510 or 1511, told his companion that it is the birthplace of Lord Rama and then went for Darshan. Even for a moment we are not drawing any inference that the Sikhs religious texts anywhere identify the place of birth of Lord Rama but this is sufficient to point out that even before the entry of Babar in the then Hindustan,

Ayodhya was already a well established Hindu Tirtha for the followers and believers of Lord Rama. The custom of worship of Lord Rama has already begun long back.

4385. Then we find the record of William Finch, who mentioned about a fort, which is said to be Rama's fort in ruined condition, but the people were visiting at a particular place and worshipping thereat. The nature of worship and that specific place Finch could not point out, may be he might not have been allowed to go there being a non Hindu person or whatever other reason, at least this much is evident that in an area which was covered and known as fort of Lord Rama, there was a place which was used to be visited by the people for worship believing it the place of birth of Lord Rama.

4386. Then comes, the next record of Joseph Tieffenthaler. By the time he visited Ayodhya, the building in dispute had come into existence. Tieffenthaler very categorically said that locally he was told that the building in dispute was constructed by demolishing a Temple, which existed at a place believed to be the birthplace of Lord Rama. Here by custom, tradition and practice, we narrowed down to the area whereat the place of birth of Lord Rama was believed to be or existed to be discovered by the people several hundred years ago and they used to visit and worship it. It may be a discovery by faith and belief or discovery by chance or a kind of discovery which we may term as symbolic discovery, but this faith and custom we trace back to almost five hundred years from today, which had continued as such atleast since then.

4387. No one is supposed to point out place of birth of Lord Rama like finding out a correct residential address in the present time but one has to adjudge the matter in the given set of facts and circumstances in a reasonable and plausible manner, which is not almost impossible.

4388. If history as written about construction of the disputed structure by Mir Baki in 1528 AD can depend solely on two inscriptions, which nobody knew whether installed by Mir Baki himself or came into being as a result of any subsequent manipulation, we fail to understand why something written almost two and half century ago by a person who was well conversant in the local languages at that time, whose motive in writing those facts is not doubted, ought not be believed. Further it may be considered in the light that some facts were written by different people after about 40 or 50 years from the visit of Tieffenthaler having no knowledge of his work. They also repeated except the distinction that this time they refer to an inscription also relying whereon the local belief was discarded by them, i.e., Martin's Eastern India (supra).

4389. Had there been no reason, we fail to understand why Hindus would have continued to persuade their faith at the site in dispute particularly when there was muslim rule and they could have least expected any support therefrom.

4390. In the middle of 19th century, i.e., as we have already observed, between the 1853 to 1855 there appears to be a major confrontation between Hindu and Muslims at Ayodhya resulting in hundreds of deaths. Some says that 75 muslims were slained while others say that the actual figure was about 200 Hindus and 75 Muslims. Be that as it may, that is not very relevant for the point in issue. We are concerned as to what impelled the two communities to fight so frightfully that resulted in such a large number of casualties, if the disputed place was an ordinary place of worship of muslims having no other history or antiquity attached with it. The conduct, the attitude, the insistence on the part of Hindus, continuously, atleast as is evident from the record, i.e., from the time of Tieffenthaler and onwards, show that it was for something really serious on account whereof Hindus were not able to give up their claim. Probably for this reason, despite all odds, they continued to pursue their claim at the place in dispute.

4391. Sri Zilani sought to argue that had there been such a mass casualty, at Ayodhya it would have been noticed by R.C. Majumdar, a well known, historian in his work. Exhibit D3, Register 38, Suit-5, page 295 is a photocopy of the extract of the book "The History and Culture of the Indian People-British Paramountcy and Indian Revaissance" Part II (Vol. 10) edited by R.C. Majumdar, published by Bhartiya Vidya Bhawan, Bombay. It contains its frontispiece, pages VII, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334. The above document has been filed on behalf of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) to show what has been written by the learned historians on Hindu Muslim relations during British Rule and that they have referred to certain communal riots but it did not include alleged riot of Ayodhya in 1855. Hence it is contended that no such riot actually took place.

4392. It is no doubt true that in the said chapter there is no reference of the riots of Ayodhya in 1853 or 1855 but having gone through it carefully, we do not find any claim of the author that the details contained therein are exhaustive. The chapter mainly deals with the British policy of divide and rule and how the members of two communities behaved at that time but nothing more than that. Some part thereof may be reproduced herein:

> "The contribution of the British rule to the cleavage between the Hindus and Muslims should be considered in its proper perspective. It must be frankly admitted that the roots of the cleavage lay deep in the soil, and it was already manifest even early in the nineteenth century. The British did not create it, but merely exploited the patent fact to serve their own interests. Reference has been made above to the growing difference between the elites of the two communities, even before a fillip was given to it either by the Aligarh Movement or the definite policy of Divide and Rule adopted by the British Government. The relations among the masses, though normally cordial, occasionally took a very ugly turn in the shape of communal riots, showing that the volcanic mountains, calm on the surface, had not altogether lost their eruptive tendency and power. Early in the nineteenth century there was such a violent outbreak in Varanasi (Banaras). In October, 1809, the Hindu mob of the city stormed the great mosque of Aurangzeb. Though well-authenticated details are lacking, it is reported that about fifty mosques were destroyed, the city was given up to pillage and slaughter, and a large number of Muslims were put to death. In 1820 the Muslims assaulted a Durga Puja procession in Calcutta.
>
> Communal riots and tensions during the great outbreak of 1857 have been noted above. Hindu-Muslim riots with heavy casualties occurred at Bareilly and other localities in U.P. During 1871-2. Two such riots took place in Bombay.

An article in a magazine, edited by a Parsi youth, gave an account of the Prophet of Arabia which lacked "that sentiment of respect and tolerance which is due to a sister community." The lithographed portrait of the Prophet, which was given with the article, also gave umbrage, and "an undiscovered villain added fuel to the fire by posting a copy of the picture, with ribald and obscene remarks underneath, on the main entrance of the principal mosque." Large crowds of Muhammandans assembled in the mosques of the town with the Qur'an in one hand and a knife in the other. At a meeting held on October 7, 1851, they proclaimed a Jihad (holy war) against the Parsis. They overwhelmed the small police force on duty and marched triumphantly to the Parsi quarters of the Bombay town. The Parsis were "belaboured mercilessly by the rioters". "For weeks together, that part of Bombay was a scene of pillage and destruction, and the Parsis had to put up with shocking atrocities such as defilement of corpses". "Only after the editor had been compelled to tender a written apology a truce was declared". "In connection with this disturbance the Parsi community looked in vain to the police for protection. If not altogether hostile, they were indifferent. Dadabhai Naoroji, who witnessed the tragedy, hastened the publication of the 'Rast Goftar' and wrote strong articles against the Government for indifference and failure of duty. He also rebuked the cowardly Parsi leaders for having tamely

submitted to such outrages."

Another riot took place in 1874 of which there is an eye-witness' account by the great Indian leader Pherozeshah Mehta. In a book written by a Parsi vaccinator there was a reference to the Prophet which was regarded as objectionable by the Muslims. The publication was accordingly suppressed by the Government and the author was made to apologize for any affront he might have inadvertently offered. Nevertheless, there was "a brutal and unwarranted attack on Parsis by a mob of Mohamedans", on 13 February, 1874. They "invaded Parsi places of worship, tore up the prayer-books, extinguished the sacred fires and subjected the fire-temples to various indignities. Parsis were attacked in the streets and in their houses and free fights took place all over the city. Thanks to the weakness and supineness of the police and the Government, hooliganism had full play and considerable loss of life and damage to property were caused". The riot continued for several days till the military was called out.

Pherozeshah Mehta, like Dadabhai Naoroji, none of whom one would accuse of having any special animosity against the Muslims or the British Government, has laid emphasis on the callousness of the police and the indifference of the Government. "The attitude of the Commissioner of Police was particularly hostile and objectionable. The Governor told a Parsi deputation that waited on him that the conduct of the community had been injudicious and unconciliatory and advised it to make its peace with the Muhammadans and to learn the lesson of

defending itself without dependence on the authorities."

Communal disturbances grew in volume and frequency, particularly between the years 1835 and 1893. Serious communal riots broke out at Lahore and Karnal (1885), Delhi (1886) where military had to be requisitioned, Hoshiarpur, Ludhiana, Ambala, Dera Ghazi Khan (1889), and Palakod in the Salem District of Madras (1891). The year 1893 was one of the worst and there were grave outbreaks over a large area in Azamgarh District (U.P.), Bombay town (lasted for 6 days) and interior, and Isa Khel (Mianwalli District, Punjab). Muharram and Dusserah processions, and cow-killing at Baqr'id were the causes, and murders, demolition of mosques and temples, and looting of shops, the chief characteristics of these riots. Detailed accounts of a few riots are given in the Appendix. It is not perhaps unreasonable to assume that this increased tension between the masses of the two communities was the direct consequence of the growing cleavage between their leaders.

Thus towards the end of the period under review the Hindus and Muslims represented almost two opposite camps in politics, and the ground was prepared for this, throughout the nineteenth century, by the frankly communal outlook of the Muslims, both in their general political evolution as well as in the Wahabi and Aligarh movements. The Muslim political ideas were generally inspired by the consideration of purely Muslim interests. But in forming a proper estimate of the Muslim politics in the nineteenth century it would be unfair to look at it only from the standpoint of modern nationalist outlook, and several important factors, which are generally overlooked, should be taken into consideration.

In the first place, it should be remembered that neither the Wahabi nor the Aligarh Movement represented the Muslim community as a whole. Large elements stood outside both, and even in the heyday of Aligrah Movement, the masses were mostly indifferent, and a number of distinguished Muslims co-operated in political matters with the Hindus.

Secondly, if the Muslims were communal and lacking in an all-India outlook, the Hindus were partly responsible for this. The Hindu intelligentsia cherished a definitely anti-Muslim bias from the very beginning of the nineteenth century, as has been noted above, though some of them, like Peary-chand Mitra, realized the need of a united front and publicly expressed this view. It is not without significance that the formation of a Muhammadan Association in 1856 (or 1855) was welcomed by the British Indian Association. The Hindus regarded it as quite natural, and evidently looked upon the Muslims as a separate political unit. Far more significant is the justification offered by the authorities of the Hindu Mela for forming a National Society. To the objection that a Society with membership confined to Hindus could hardly be called national, the National paper answered as follows on December 4, 1872: "We don not understand why our correspondent takes exception to the Hindus who certainly form a nation by themselves, and as such a society

established by them can very properly be called a National Society."

No wonder that soon after the foundation of the Hindu Mela and National Society, the National Muhammadan Association was founded in Calcutta. It would be obvious from the above that while genuinely all-India national outlook was not altogether absent, there was a general feeling among large sections of both Hindus and Muhammandans that they formed two separate political units or nations.

Thirdly, it is to be considered very carefully why the Hindus gradually outgrew this narrow separatist tendency and imbibed a truly national spirit, while the Muslims failed to do so during the period under review. The Hindus had a start of at least half a century over the Muslims in their political evolution, and this margin of time should be normally allowed for similar development. But there were special difficulties in the adoption of a national outlook by the Muslims. They were in a hopeless minority as compared with the Hindus, and in any democratic form of government, they were sure to occupy only a position of secondary importance. As noted above, this view was publicly expressed at the time of the legislation for local self-government. This apprehension of the Hindus obtaining superior authority would naturally increase with every advance of self-government on democratic lines. The same fear worked upon the minds of the Muslims even in comparatively minor matters like recruitment to higher posts by open competitive examination, which was strongly advocated by the Hindus. Nobody could deny that it was the best mode of recruitment that could be conceive, but the Muslims opposed it on the ground that these were sure to be filled up mostly by the Hindus, not only because they were more numerous, but also because they were more advanced in education.

This feeling was brought to a head at the evidence given before the Public Service Commission in 1886. In his evidence Dadabhai Naoroji urged the necessity of holding simultaneous examinations in England and India. This was, however, strongly opposed by the Muslims "who feared that an examination held in India would lead to a preponderance of Hindus in the Civil Service to the detriment of the interests of their own community."

With the greatest chagrin Dadabhai learnt, after he returned to London, that his friend Dazi Shahabuddin had also joined in the opposition. On July 15, 1887, he wrote to Dazi in anguish:

"How your action has paralysed not only our own efforts, but the hands of our English friends and how keenly I feel this, more so because you have based your action on selfish interests, that because the Muhammadans are backward, therefore, you would not allow the Hindus and all India to go forward.....In the House of Commons I think Mr. Bright has stoutly urged the necessity of an examination in India to put us on an equality with English candidates. To-day when he would and could have urged the same thing with ten times the force, he feels himself staggered, and owing to your opposition he feels puzzled

and cannot help us. What a blight you have thrown upon our future and how you have retarded our progress for a long time to come. This discussion will hurt us in a variety of ways. I do not know whether I can hope that before the Commission's work has ended, you will still undo the mischief in some way."

But the sentiment against which Dadabhai thundered was not confined to a few individuals; it was shared by the Muslims in general all over India. The Central Muhammadan Association, Madras, sent a memorial requesting the Government that the recommendations of the Public Service Commission for the abolition of the Statutory Civil Service and for the introduction of a system of competitive examination should not be accepted, for in that case the Hindus would get the full advantage and the "result would be disastrous to the Muslim Community."

There can be no gainsaying the fact that the Muslim apprehensions were well-founded, that in all human probability every advance in democracy in India would increase the dominance of the Hindus, and an open competitive examination would give preponderance to the Hindus over Muslims in all higher posts under the Government. There is, however, nothing to show that this patent fact was recognized by the Hindus who were too much imbued with nationalistic ideas to take a realistic view of things.

Dadabhai, however, touched the crux of the whole problem when he observed that the attitude of the Muslims was "based on selfish interests, that because the

Muhammadans are backward, therefore, they would not allow the Hindus and all India to go forward". In all human probability there would never be a time, at least within measurable distance, when the Muslims would be equally advanced with the Hindus in point of education. If, therefore, the Muslims persisted in their present attitude, nobody could foresee a period, even in distant future, when they would readily join the Hindus in political fight for democracy or nationalism. The Hindu political leaders hoped that a consideration of this dismal prospect would induce the Muslims to give up communal for national interest in the hope that ultimately even the communal interest would be better served by following this course. But it is easy to explain why the Muslims as a body could not or would not follow this advice.

As always happens, a community, as a whole, is guided by the considerations of immediate interest involved rather than those of a remote ideal of which very few have any clear conception. Particularly, as in this case, the idea of an Indian nationality was generally lacking both among Hindus and Muslims. The Muslims could not forget that they were masters of the Hindus not long ago. To be subject to the British was bad enough, but subjection to Hindu domination would be far worse. This mentality may be regarded as ignoble from the higher standpoint of Indian nationality, but it is difficult to say that it is unnatural.

It would have been an act of great sacrifice on the part of the Muslims to join the Hindus in their political demands. But what were the inducements to such a sacrifice? In social and religious matters a deep gulf separated the two. Historical traditions and memories created a wide barrier between them. The name of Shivaji was an inspiration to the Hindus who held Aurangzeb in open contempt. The reverse was the case with the Muslims. The Rajput heroes like Rana Pratap were the idols of the Hindus and enemies of the Muslims. The Third Battle of Panipat was the occasion of national mourning for the Hindus but of a great deliverance for the Muslims. Such instances can be easily multiplied.

It may be argued with a great deal of plausibility, that in spite of all this a fusion of Hindus and Muslims into one nation was not an impossible ideal. Even if this be admitted, it must not be forgotten that what was at best merely a possible ideal should not have been mistaken for an actual fact, either already accomplished, or nearing completion. But the most eminent Hindu political leaders committed this fatal mistake. They took for granted what was at best a remote contingency, not to be achieved without great difficulty. They never understood, nor even cared to understand, the real feelings and impulses of the Muslim community. They never appreciated the motives which guided their policy and actions. The result was that they could not realize the patent fact that the Hindus and Muslims were, as yet, two different political units. In their new-born zeal for democracy and nationalism the Hindus forgot that large section of the people, for very good reasons, refused to accept these ideals. They, therefore, could not conceive any possible opposition to them from any quarter, far less brook it when it occurred. In the voluminous political literature of the period one looks in vain for a just assessment of the Muslim point of view on the part of the Hindus. The Hindu leaders made the great mistake of taking Badrudding Tyabji and a few men of his views as the only real representatives of the Muslims. They failed to read the sign of the times and had no patience to listen sympathetically to the grievances of the Muslims, which might not excuse, but could at least satisfactorily explain, their attitude towards the Hindus.

The indifference or apathy of the Muslim masses to all political questions probably contributed largely to the mistaken notion of the Hindus about the Muslim attitude. Confronted by the opposition of educated Muslims, they consoled themselves with the idea that the Muslim masses were not with the latter, and the opposition was after all confined to the educated few. In arguing thus they committed the same mistake as the British rulers did when they ignored the demands of Indian politicians because they represented, in their eyes, a "microscopic minority". But as a prominent Hindu pointed out in reply, "the educated community represented the brain and conscience of the country, and were the legitimate spokesmen of the illiterate masses, the natural custodians of their interests'.

The Hindus, however, forgot that what they urged on behalf of the country at large applied equally well to a distinct and strong minority community. They should have foreseen that ultimately the Muslim masses were bound to fall in line with the views of their leaders."

4393. He also referred to the work of Rahul Sankritayan. Exhibit D22, Register 38, Suit-5, pages 325-349, a photocopy of the extract from the book "Meri Jiwan Yatra-1" by Rahul Sankrityayan (First Paperback Edition:1996) published by Radhakrishna Prakashan Pvt. Ltd., New Delhi containing preface as also pages no. 163-170. It shows that in the earlier 20th century Rahul Sankrityayan had visited Ayodhya. It is contended that the learned author has not said anything about the disputed site which shows that it was not treated to be a place of importance by Hindu people at that time also. Having carefully gone through the above document, we do not find that it intended to give details of various places at Ayodhya. The purpose and objective was totally different, hence reliance is totally misconceived.

4394. One of the most crucial document which corroborates records is the letter dated 30th November, 1858 [Exhibit 20 (Suit-1) (Register 5 Page 65)] of Mohd. Asgar, who said that in the inner courtyard, Hindus had been worshipping for several hundred years. We find no reason even to ignore this document. The statements of several witnesses, we have already referred above, also fortify this fact.

4395. The place of birth of Lord Rama is not to be searched elsewhere in Ayodhya but it has to be in the disputed site or near about as is evident from pleadings of the Muslim parties, which show that they also do not dispute the existence of place of birth of Lord Rama along with the temple, though an attempt is made that such temple is not the disputed one but one existing on the north side at about 200 meters. In para 27 (Suit-1), the defendants 1 to 5 have said:

''अयोध्या में एक मन्दिर मौसूमा बमन्दिर जन्मस्थान श्री रामचन्द्र की जनम भूमि पर मुद्दत मदीद से कायम व मौजूद है।''

"A temple at the birthplace of Lord Rama (known as 'Mandir Janamsthan) has had been in existence from ancient times " (E.T.C.)

The defendants no. 1 and 2 are co-plaintiffs in Suit-4 also.

4396. In Suit-3 also, the defendants no. 6, 7 and 8 have made several pleadings in Para 28 of their written statement:

''अयोध्या में एक मन्दिर मौसूमा बमन्दिर जन्मस्थान श्री रामचन्द्र की जनम भूमि पर मुद्दत मदीद से कायम व मौजूद है।''

"A temple at the birthplace of Lord Rama (known as 'Mandir Janamsthan) has had been in existence from ancient times " (E.T.C.)

Here also the defendant no. 7, Mohd. Faiq is a co-plaintiff in Suit-4.

4397. The existence of birthplace as well as the temple thereon, therefore, was pleaded as long back as in 1950, i.e., at the first opportune. Thereafter, in the subsequent pleadings etc. this has been tried to explain. What is suggested is the temple which is referred to is the one on the northern side of the disputed structure across the road. We are not concerned with the existence of that temple but what we intend to point out is that the existence of birthplace in this very area is an admission by the plaintiffs. The persons, jointly interested in a suit, are bound by the admission made by any one of them. The Janamstham temple along with the place in dispute has also been noticed by Tieffenthaler and he has called it as "Sita Rasoi', but the fact is where he has referred to an earlier temple, which was demolished so as to construct disputed building, he has not referred to that temple (Sita Rasoi), but the present site which is in dispute. It could not be explained by the learned counsels for the plaintiffs (Suit-4) as to how there exists a 'Vedi' in the premises of the disputed structure known as a mosque and that 'Vedi' in the place in dispute continued to be worshipped by Hindus by lying prostrate on the ground and going for three Parikramas.

4398. It is not improbable that the people at that time took all possible efforts to continue with the worship of the place which they believed to be the birthplace of Lord Rama and for that purpose, whatever attempt they could make, the same were taken. We can easily understand the difficulty since they were under Muslim rule and the system, culture, traditions during such time were totally different.

4399. When the things became a bit easier, the Hindus succeeded in staking their claim partially inasmuch the British Government allowed the partition of the building in dispute with the instructions that the Hindus shall worship in the outer courtyard. Whether this was a resolution of a dispute between the two communities or not is a different aspect, but at least it had recognized the right and belief of Hindus about the place of birth of Lord Rama at the site in dispute.

4400. As we have further discussed, the Hindus did not desist from entering inner courtyard and continued not only to enter therein but to worship the place as well as the images on the black kasauti pillars. What was the structure of the erstwhile temple before the construction of the disputed structure is not known but it appears that due to affixation of black kasauti pillars mainly at the entry point of central dome after the construction of the new structure, the Hindu people continued to worship thereat believing the same as the central point of the birthplace of Lord Rama. Since, we do not find any detail as to how it was being worshipped earlier, but from the subsequent conduct, practice and traditions, in the absence of anything contrary, one can reasonably believe that the in the past also it must be the same.

4401. From the subsequent Gazetteers and other records, we find that while referring to Rama's fort at the mount, the disputed structure was mentioned as a part of such land. The entire fort if as per the belief of people was that of Lord Rama, obviously it was the most sacred and pious place and therein also by traditions and practice, if the Hindu people worshipped a particular place believing it to be the place of birth of Lord Rama, in the absence of any location elsewhere, or existence of another place of birth at Ayodhya, we find no reason not to accept and uphold the said belief.

4402. Suvira Jaiswal (PW 18), during cross examination, though tried to mislead by observing that according to her research, she found several places claiming birth place of Lord Rama at Ayodhya, but when asked as to which are those places, she could not reply and said that she don't know.

4403. Sri Jilani contended that the Gazetteers and other record of Europeans, wherever they have said that an existing temple was demolished to construct the mosque in question, did not refer any basis for such observation and, therefore, he submits that the same is unreliable. In normal course, his submission may not have been brushed aside easily, but in a case like this, where we are concerned with respect to a dispute going deep in history, the situation is slightly different. We can look into the matter from this another angle also as to why all of them have mentioned only this fact if it had no basis at all. Had the facts been otherwise, when they discard the local belief of the people that demolition was made by Aurangzeb and sought to support the stand that the demolition was by Babar, based on an inscription fixed thereat, if there would have been anything otherwise, in the same manner, they could have disbelieved Hindus' version about demolition of a temple.

4404. It is true that several confrontations amongst Hindus and Muslims in respect to the property in dispute are not on record of the history books, but there are some indications.

4405. In H.R. Nevill's Barabanki Gazetteer at pages 168-169 (Exhibit 52, Suit 5), it says, "The cause of the occurrence was one of the numerous disputes that have sprung up from time to time between the Hindu priests and the Musalmans of Ajodhya with regard to the ground on which formerly stood the Janamasthan temple, …".

4406. The words "disputes that have sprung up from time to time" clearly refer to some other and earlier disputes also though the details thereof are not on record.

4407. Once we find that by way of faith and traditions, Hindus have been worshipping the place of birth of Lord Rama at the site in dispute, we have no reason but to hold in a matter relating to such a kind of historical event that for all practical purposes, this is the place of birth of Lord Rama.

4408. The matter does not end here. Can it be said that it is the entire premises at the site in dispute which can be said to be the place of birth of Lord Rama or within this premises there is a smaller area which is actually believed by Hindus to be the place of birth. There could have been two fold inquiry into this matter. Whether Hindus by custom, tradition, faith and belief, handed down from generations to generation, treat the entire area covered by the disputed structure as well as its outer boundary wall constituting the place of birth of Lord Rama or Hindus actually believed a smaller space within this very premises to be, precisely, the place of birth of Lord Rama. Area of the premises in dispute is near about 130 feet in length and 80 feet in width, i.e., roughly about 10400 sq. feet (.2387 acre). This measurement is not exactly but near about. Suppose within this area there is another place of 10x10 or 20x20 or as the case may be, which had been identified by Hindus, believing to be the place of birth of Lord Rama, then the entire disputed area cannot be said to constitute the place of birth of Lord Rama for the purpose of the issues in question.

4409. The reason being that the Hindu parties have virtually interchangeably used two terms which have different meaning, i.e., Birthplace temple and the birthplace. On the one hand they contend that the disputed area is such where existed temple of Lord Rama, constructed since it was the birthplace and, therefore, it is of special significance for Hindus, inalienable and cannot be departed. On the other hand, they plead that within the area in dispute, there is a small area, which had been identified by Hindus as the birthplace of Lord Rama since time immemorial and, therefore, the peculiarity and speciality vis a vis place is attached with that area only and rest of the part is of an erstwhile temple whereon a mosque was constructed but then the label of special significance for the entire area shall extinguish.

4410. In other words, the precise issue, in terms of the "birthplace", as we could understand, is in the following terms:

I. According to faith and belief of Hindus, a particular smallest area in Ayodhya which they treat as the sanctum sanctorum i.e 'Garbh Grah' that is where Lord Rama was born.

II. A temple constructed in the area which included sanctum sanctorum and the place covered by that temple which is termed as 'Janam Bhumi temple' or 'Ram Janam Bhumi temple.

III. There is a complete unanimity amongst all Hindu parties as also deposed by their witnesses that under the central dome lie the sanctum sanctorum, i.e. 'Garbh-Grah' since lord Rama was born thereat and it was part of a bigger holy structure, i.e., a temple, which was constructed and known as "Janam Bhumi temple" or "Ram Janam Bhumi temple" which included the rest of the area occupied by the disputed structure.

4411. The witnesses, produced by Hindu parties to depose about the custom, tradition, faith and belief in respect to the place of birth i.e. sanctum sanctorum i.e. Garbh-Grih, where Lord Rama was born, making a distinction between the said place as well as the place occupied by the temple which obviously must have been constructed later on, are as under:

4412. A bare reading of all the above statements makes it very clear and categorical that the belief of Hindus by tradition was that birthplace of Lord Rama lie within the premises in dispute and was confined to the area under the central dome of three domed structure, i.e., the disputed structure in the inner courtyard.

4413. In arriving to this conclusion we do not find any difficulty since the pleadings in general and particular also do not detract us. When the Hindu parties have referred to the entire disputed site as a place of birth, this Court can always find out and record a finding for, instead of the entire area, a smaller area within the same premises. The pleadings are not to be read in a pedantic manner but the Court has to find out substance therein as to whether the parties knew their case or not. The evidence adduced by the parties and what the witnesses have said on behalf of Hindu parties fortify the case set up by the defendants.

4414. In Jamshedji Cursetjee Tarachand Vs. Soonabai, ILR (1909) 33 Bom. 122 the Bombay High Court said:

"if this is the belief of the community.....a secular judge is bound to accept that belief - it is not for him to sit in judgment on that belief."

4415. We are also of the view that once such belief gets concentrated to a particular point, and in totality of the facts, we also find no reason otherwise, it partakes the nature of an essential part of religion particularly when it relates to a matter which is of peculiar significance to a religion. It, therefore, stands on a different footing. Such an essential part of religion is constitutionally protected under Article 25.

4416. In N. Adithayan Vs. Travancore Devaswom Board, 2002 (8) SCC 106 on page 123 the Court observed:

> "as to what really constitutes an essential part of religion or religious practice has to be decided by the Courts with reference to the doctrine of a particular religion or practices regarded as parts of religion."

4417. In Commissioner of Police and others Vs. Acharya Jagadishwarananda Avadhuta and another, 2004 (12) SCC 770 the Court said:

> *"9. The protection guaranteed under Articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution is not confined to matters of doctrine or belief but extends to acts done in pursuance of religion and, therefore, contains a guarantee for rituals, observances, ceremonies and modes of worship which are essential or integral part of religion. What constitutes an integral or essential part of religion has to be determined with reference to its doctrines, practices, tenets, historical background etc. of the given religion. (See generally the Constitution bench decisions in Commr., H.R.E. Vs. Sri Lakshmindra Swamiar of Sri Srirur Mutt, AIR 1954 SC 282, Sardar Syedna Taher Saifuddin Saheb V. State of Bombay, AIR 1962 SC 853, and Seshammal Vs. State of Tamilnadu (1972) 2 SCC 11, regarding those aspects that are to be looked into so as to determine whether a part or practice is essential or not). What is meant by "an essential part or practices of a religion" is now the matter for elucidation. Essential part of a religion means the core beliefs upon which a religion is founded. Essential practice means those practices that are fundamental to follow a religious belief. It is upon the cornerstone of essential parts or practices the superstructure of religion is built. Without which, a religion will be no religion. Test to determine whether a part or practice is essential to the religion is - to find out whether the nature of religion will be changed without that part or practice. If the taking away of that part or practice could result in a fundamental change in the character of that religion or in its belief, then such part could be treated as an essential or integral part. There cannot be additions or subtractions to such part. Because it is the very essence of that religion and alterations will change its fundamental character. It is such permanent essential parts is what is protected by the Constitution. No body can say that essential part or practice of one's religion has changed from a particular date or by an event. Such alterable parts or practices are definitely not the 'core' of religion where the belief is based and religion is founded upon. It could only be treated as mere embellishments to the non-essential (sic essential) part or practices."

4418. 4419. In this category fall issues no. 27 (Suit-4) and 1 (Suit-3).

4420. Issue No.27 (Suit-4) reads as under:

> "Whether the courtyard contained Ram Chabutara, Bhandar and Sita Rasoi? If so, whether they were also demolished on 06.12.1992 along with the main temple?"

4421. While discussing the issues relating to limitation and possession, as also issue no.24 (Suit-5), it is already held that at the premises in the outer courtyard, there existed Ram Chabutara, Bhandar and Sita Raoi, which stand confirmed from the two maps also i.e. of 1885 and 1950 (Appendix Nos. 3 and 2). The parties also admit during the course of argument that all these three structures were demolished on 06.12.1992 when the disputed structure was demolished. Issue 27 (Suit-4) is accordingly answered in affirmative.

4422. Issue No.1 (Suit-3) read as under:

> "Is there a temple of Janam Bhumi with idols installed therein as alleged in para 3 of the plaint?"

4423. Before answering it, once again we reiterate that this suit pertains only to the premises within inner courtyard including the disputed structure. We have already held that the disputed structure was constructed as a 'mosque' and always treated and called 'mosque' by Hindus and Muslims both, alike, for the last almost one and half century before the date of attachment. DW 20/5 Jayanti Prasad Srivastava on page 31 of his statement, has clearly said:

www.vadaprativada.com

"The disputed structure was a three domed structure. It was known as Babri Masjid. It was a mosque."

4424. However, we have also held that despite the structure constructed as a 'mosque', and, termed and called by the people at large as 'mosque', the Hindus continuously entered

www.vadaprativada.com

and worshipped the place since according to their belief, it was the place of birth of Lord Rama and therefore, could not have been desecrated so as to extinguish in any manner. The idols were kept in the inner courtyard under the central dome on 22/23 December, 1949. The plaintiffs, however, claim in para 3 of the plaint as under:

> "3. That the said Asthan of Janma Bhumi is of ancient antiquity and has been existing since before the living memory of man and lies within the boundaries shown by letters A.B.C.D. in the sketch map appended hereto within which stands the temple building of Janma Bhumi marked by letters E.F.G.K. P N M L E and the building denoted by letters E F G H I J K L E is the main temple of Janma Bhumi wherein is installed the idol of Lord Ram Chandra with Lakshmanji, Hanumanji and Saligramji."

4425. Therefore, the manner in which the plaintiff has depicted the premises in dispute and claimed it to be a temple is not correct in view of our findings recorded above. The premises in dispute cannot be treated to be a temple in the manner it is being pleaded and claimed by the plaintiffs (Suit-3). Though there are other aspects of the matter which we have already discussed, subject to those findings, as pointed out above also, in our view, issue No.1(Suit-3) has to be answered in negative. It is decided accordingly.

4426. (L) Identity of the property: In this category fall issues no. 1(B)(a) (Suit-4) and 5 (Suit-5).

4427. Issue No.1(B)(a) (Suit-4):

> "Whether the building existed at Nazul plot no.583 of the Khasra of the year 1931 of Mohalla Kot Ram Chandra known as Ram Kot, City Ayodhya (Nazul Estate) Ayodhya?

www.vadaprativada.com

If so its effect thereon?"

4428. It is not disputed by the parties before this Court that the Nazul plot, in which the building in dispute existed, was recorded as Nazul, plot no. 583, Khasra of 1931 of Mohalla Kot Ram Chandra known as Ramkot, City Ayodhya (Nazul Estate Ayodhya). In the revenue records, plot number is different. The Nazul number of the plot in which the building in dispute situate is not disputed. It is also admitted by all the parties that the plot in which disputed building existed was recorded Nazul in the First Settlement 1861 and had continued so even when the suit in question was filed.

4429. "Nazul land" means land owned by the Government. It is the own pleading of Sunni Board in para 24(B) of the written statement filed in Suit-5.

4430. In the Legal Glossary 1992, fifth edition, published by the Legal Department of the Government of India at page 589, the meaning of the word "Nazul" has been given as "Rajbhoomi i.e. Government land". It is an Arabic word and it refers to a land annexed to Crown. During the British Regime, immoveable property of individuals, Zamindars, Nawabs and Rajas when confiscated for one or the other reason, it was termed as "Nazul property". The reason being that neither it was acquired nor purchased after making payment. In the old record, we are told when they used to be written in Urdu, this kind of land was shown as "Jaidad Munzabta".

4431. For dealing with such property under the authority of the Lt. Governor of North Western provinces, two orders were issued in October, 1846 and October, 1848 wherein after the words "Nazul property" its english meaning was given as "Escheats to the Government". Sadar Board of Revenue on 20th

May, 1845 issued a circular order in reference to Nazul land and in para 2 thereof it mentioned "The Government is the proprietor of those land and no valid title to them can be derived but from the Government." The Nazul land was also termed as confiscated estate. Under circular dated 13th July, 1859, issued by the Government of North Western Provinces, every Commissioner was obliged to keep a final confiscation statement of each district and lay it before the Government for orders. The kingdom of Oudh was annexed by East India Company in 1856. It declared the entire land as vested in the Government and thereafter settled the land to various individuals Zamindars, Nawabs etc.

4432. At Lucknow revolt against the British Company broke up in May, 1857 which is known as the first war of independence which very quickly angled a substantial part of north western provinces. After failure of the above revolution, the then Governor General Lord Canning on 15th May, 1858 issued a proclamation confiscating propriety rights in the soil with the exception of five or six persons who had given support and assistance to British Officers. This land was resettled first for a period of three years and then permanent propriety rights were given to certain Talukdars and Zamindars by grant of 'Sanad' under Crown Grants Act. In the meantime we all know that under the Government of India Act, 1858 the entire Indian territory under the control of East India Company was placed under Crown w.e.f. First November, 1858. A kind of first settlement in summary we had undergone in Oudh in 1861 wherein it appears that the land in dispute was shown as Nazul and since then in the records, the nature of land is continuously being mentioned as Nazul.

4433. In respect to Revenue records as well as Nazul, DW 2/1-2, Sri Ram Sharan Srivastava who happened to be Collector, Faizabad between July 1987 till 1990 and claimed to have seen the record, made the following statement:

''मेरे अधीन राजस्व अभिलेखागार में तीन रेवेन्यू सेटिलमेट्स सन् 1861, 1893–94, व 1936–37 के अभिलेख उपलब्ध थे, जिनका मैंने अध्ययन किया था। इन अभिलेखों में खसरा, खतौनी, खेवट शामिल थे और तीनों सेटिलमंट्स की रिपोर्ट इनके अलावा अलग से उपलब्ध थीं। उपरोक्त159 280 19 तीन सेटिलमेंट्स व रिपोर्ट के अतिरिक्त सन् 1931 में हुए नजूल भूमि के सर्वे से संबंधित रिपोर्ट भी सम्मिलित थीं। उसी 1931 के सर्वे के आधार पर तैयार किये गये खसरा, खतौनी व खेवट भी उपलब्ध थे। इन तीनों बन्दोबस्ती और नजूल के सर्वे के अभिलेखों में विवादित स्थान को जन्मस्थान लिखा हुआ है और कहीं–कहीं रामजन्मभूमि भी लिखा हुआ है। इन उल्लेखों के आधार पर ही मैंने यह निष्कर्ष निकाला कि विवादित स्थल भगवान श्री राम का जन्मस्थान है। उपरोक्त संदर्भित तीनों सेटिलमंट और 1931 के सभी अभिलेखों को मैंने मूल रूप में अपने जिलाधिकारी कार्यालय में मंगवाकर देखा था, अभिलेखागार में जाकर नहीं। सेटिलमेंट की तीनों रिपोर्ट अंग्रेजी भाषा में थीं और प्रत्येक रिपोर्ट 50 पेज तक की थी। ये सभी रिपोर्ट्स टाइपशुदा थीं। तीनों रिपोट्र्स में सर्वेकर्ता या लेखक का नाम लिखा हुआ था, परन्तु मुझे उनमें से किसी का नाम याद नहीं है। पहले एवं दूसरे सेटिलमेंट के तीनों अभिलेख यानी खसरा, खतौनी और खेवट उर्दू में थे। परन्तु जहां तक मुझे याद है, तीसरे सेटिलमेंट के अभिलेख हिन्दी में थे।'' (पेज 54–55)

''The records of three revenue settlements of year 1861,1893-94 &1936-37 were available in the revenue record room under me. These records included khasra, khatauni, khewat and the reports of the three settlements were available separately besides them. The survey report of 1931 in respect of nazul land, was also included besides the three settlements and reports. The khasra, khatauni & khewat prepared on basis of survey of 1931, were also available. In the records of all the three settlements and the nazul survey, the disputed site has been mentioned as Janmsthan and at places Ramjanmbhumi has also been mentioned. On basis of the said mentions, I drew the conclusion that the disputed site was the birth place of Lord Rama. I had summoned and perused the original record of the above-referred three settlements & 1931 survey, in my District Magistrate office and did not peruse them in the record room. The three reports of settlements were in English language and each report ran into fifty pages. All these reports were in typed form. All the three reports bore the name of the surveyor or the scribe, but I do not remember any of those names. The three records of the first and second settlement viz. khasra, khatauni and khewat were in Urdu. However, to the best of my memory, the records of the third settlement were in Hindi." (E.T.C.)

''सभी अभिलेखों की हिन्दी प्रतियां भी मौजूद थीं। वह हिन्दी प्रतियां पहले से रिकार्ड पर उपलब्ध थी, मैंने नहीं बनवाई थीं। ये हिन्दी प्रतियां भी राजस्व अभिलेखागार से ही मेरे पास आई थीं। 1931 के नजूल सर्वे के अभिलेख भी उर्दू में थे, जिनकी प्रतियां राजस्व अभिलेखागार से मूल अभिलेखों के साथ आई थीं।'' (पेज 55)

"The Hindi copies of all the records were available. The Hindi copies were already available in the records, and I had not got them prepared. These Hindi copies had also come to me from the revenue record room. The records of nazul survey of 1931, were in Urdu, whose copies had come along with original records from the revenue record room." (E.T.C.)

''तीनों संटिलमेंट और चौथे, नजूल सर्वे के अभिलेख में कोट रामचन्द्र का ही नाम लिख हुआ था।'' (पेज 55–56)

"Only Kote Ramchandra was mentioned in the records of three settlements and the fourth , nazul survey."(E.T.C.)

"आखरी सेटिलमेंट के नम्बरान 159, 160 व 160 ए थे, जो हमें याद नहीं हैं। उन सभी नम्बरान में जन्मस्थान लिखा हुआ था। हर सेटिलमेंट में प्लाट की संख्या बदल जाती थी, जिन प्लाट के नम्बरान मैंने 159 व 160 बताये हैं, वे आखिरी बन्दोबस्त के नम्बरान थे। नजूल के सर्वे में उससे संबंधित नम्बरान 583, 586 थे, जो मुझे याद है।" (पेज 56)

"The numbers of the last settlement were 159, 160 and 160A, which I do not remember. Janamsthan was written against all these numbers. The plot number changes in every settlement. The plot numbers 159 and 160 given by me, were the numbers of the last settlement. The numbers concerned to it in the Nazul survey were 583, 586, which are within my memory." (E.T.C.)

"नजूल सर्वे से संबंधित अभिलेखों में विवादित स्थल से संबंधित नम्बरों में मस्जिद शाह बाबर या मस्जिद जन्मस्थान नहीं लिखा था, बल्कि सिर्फ़ जन्मस्थान लिखा था। विवादित स्थल से संबंधित नजूल नम्बरों में कब्रिस्तान नहीं लिखा था।" (पेज 56)

"In the records related to the nazul survey, neither 'Masjid Shah Babar' nor 'Masjid Janmsthan' was written in the numbers related to the disputed site and instead only Janmsthan was mentioned. Graveyard was not mentioned in the concerned nazul numbers of the disputed site."(E.T.C.)

"पहले व दूसरे बन्दोंबस्त के अभिलेखों में किसी नम्बर में मस्जिद, शाही मस्जिद या जन्मस्थान मसिजद नहीं लिखा था। तीसरे बन्दोबस्त के खसरा, खतौनी व खेवट में किसी–किसी रिकार्ड में इन्टरपोलेशन थे, जिसमें विवादित स्थल के कुछ नम्बरान में जन्मस्थान मस्जिद या कहीं जामा मस्जिद इण्टरपोलेशन के द्वारा लिखे गये थे। इसकी रिपोट्र मैंने भेजी थी। इस संबंध में मैंने रिपोर्ट 1989 में बोर्ड आफ़ रेवेन्यू को भेजी थी। मेरी रिपोर्ट पर जॉच हुई थी। कोई अधिकारी रेवेन्यू बोर्ड से आये थे। जॉचकर्ता,

बोर्ड आफ रेवेन्यू के सचिव के नीचे के अधिकारी थे, मेम्बर नहीं। जिन रिकार्डस में इण्टरपोलेशन किये गये थे और जिनकी रिपोर्ट मैंने भेजी थी, उन्हें कभी ठीक नहीं किया गया क्योंकि मौजूदा मामला अदालत में पेंडिंग था।'' (पेज 56–57)

''In no number of the records of first and second settlement, there was any mention of mosque, royal mosque or Janmsthan mosque. In certain records of khasra, khatauni & khewat of the third settlement, there were interpolations and Janmsthan Masjid or Jama Masjid were interpolated in certain numbers of the disputed site. I had sent its report. I had sent the report in this behalf to the Board of Revenue in 1989. An enquiry was held on my report. Some officer of Board of Revenue had come. The investigator was an officer subordinate to the Secretary, Board of Revenue and was not a member. The records in which interpolation had been made and whose report I had submitted, were never corrected because the matter was pending in Court." (E.T.C.)

4434. We may have another aspect. In para 24(B) of the written statement in Suit-5, Muslim parties (U.P.Sunni Central Board of Waqf) have said:

"The land in question undoubtedly belonged to the State when the mosque in question was constructed on behalf of the State and as such it cannot be said that it could not be decided for the purposes of the mosque."

4435. The claim of the muslim parties is that the entire territory which came in the control of Babar after defeating Ibrahim Lodhi and others became his land since king was the owner of the land and no system of private ownership was recognized and therefore, he was at liberty to direct for any kind of construction on such land and the land could not have been treated to be owned by any private individual or anyone else.

4436. Let us consider this aspect also in the context of the theory of 'Nazul'. Such kind of land cannot be a Nazul land. If the entire territory during Mughal regime would be that of a king, as soon as the territory annexation or otherwise changed its hand with the East India Company, they would have entered into the shoes of the Mughal king and got the same rights, obligations, privileges etc. on the land. The status of the land would not have changed in such a manner. Such a land could not be confiscated since it was already the land of the king but when a proclamation was issued for confiscating the land, meaning thereby the East India Company or the British Government did not follow the same principle. In our view, in such a matter, even the doctrine of "escheat" or "bona vacantia" may not be applicable

4437. On the question as to who could have been owner of the land in 1528 AD when alleged disputed building was constructed by Babar through his Commander Mir Baqi, the concept sought to be canvassed is that the law, whether Islam or Hindu Shastras, do not recognise any personal right of ownership upon immoveable property. The entire property within the suzerainty of the king belong to him, who had right to tax its subject in the form of tax or otherwise by realising share in the agricultural or other income in the immoveable property. The percentage of share may differ and that may not be relevant for our purpose.

4438. The second aspect of the matter is that since ancient time the right of ownership proceeded with possession and is recognized by the well known principle "possession follows title". The individual right of ownership therefore was well

recognized in the various personal laws and the only right the king had to acquire the land in known valid means, namely by purchase or gift etc. The obligation upon the king is to protect the subject and his property from enemies and for that purpose he used to raise revenue from the subject in the form of tax and/or share from the income of the property etc. It is said that the King, by virtue of its authority, was not the sole owner of the entire immoveable property within his suzerainty but though the immoveable property was subject to his suzerainty, the individual right of the owner on the property continued to be recognized. Besides, the fact that the land could have been acquired by the king by valid means like purchase, gift etc., meaning thereby other modes of acquisition of immoveable property by King existed otherwise no private owner of the land in question would have been there within his suzerainty.

4439. The learned counsel for the parties on this aspect referred to the doctrine of Escheat/bona vacantia. We find that the right of the King to take property by escheat or as bona vacantia was recognized by common law of England. Escheat property was the lord's right of re-entry on real property held by a tenant dying intestate without lawful heirs. It was an incident, of feudal tenure and based on the want of a tenant to perform the feudal services. On the tenant dying intestate without leaving any lawful heirs, his estate came to an end and the lord was in by his own right and not by way of succession or inheritance from the tenant to re-enter the real property as owner. In most of the cases the land escheated to the Crown as the lord paramount, in view of the gradual elimination of intermediate or mesne lords since 1290 AD. The Crown takes as bona vacantia goods in which no one else can claim property. In Dyke Vs. Walford 5

Moore PC 434 = 496-13 ER 557 (580) it was said "it is the right of the Crown to bona vacantia to property which has no other owner." The right of the Crown to take as bona vacantia extends to personal property of every kind. Giving a notice at this stage that the escheat of real property of an intestate dying without heirs was abolished in 1925 and the Crown cannot take its property as bona vacantia. The principle of acquisition of property by escheat i.e right of the Government to take on property by escheat or bona vacantia for want of a rightful owner was enforced in the Indian territory during the period of East India Company by virtue of statute 16 and 17 Victoriae, C. 95, Section 27.

4440. We may recollect having gone through the history that several estates were taken over by British Company by applying the doctrine of lapse like Jhansi which was another kind of the above two principles. The above provisions had continued by virtue of Section 54 of Government of India Act, 1858, Section 20(3)(iii) of Government of India Act, 1915 and Section 174 of the Government of India Act, 1935. After the enactment of the Constitution of independent India, Article 296 now provides :

> "Subject as hereinafter provided, any property in the territory of India which, if this Constitution had not come into operation, would have accrued to His Majesty or, as the case may be, to the Ruler of an Indian State by escheat or lapse, or as bona vacantia for want of a rightful owner, shall if it is property situate in a State, vest in such State, and shall, in any other case, vest in the Union."

4441. The Apex Court in Pierce Leslie and Co. Ltd. (supra) has considered the above principles in the context of sovereign India as it stands under its constitution after independence and has observed that "in this country the Government takes by escheat immoveable as well as moveable property for want of an heir or successor. In this country escheat is not based on artificial rules of common law and is not an incident of feudal tenure. It is an incident of sovereignty and rests on the principle of ultimate ownership by the State of all property within its jurisdiction."

4442. The Apex Court placed reliance on Collector of Masulipatam Vs. C. Vencata Narainapah 8 MIA 500, 525; Ranee Sonet Kowar Vs. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (2) LR 3 IA 92, 101, Bombay Dyeing & Manufacturing Co. Vs. State of Bombay (1958) SCR 1122, 1146, Legal Remembrancer Vs. Corporation of Calcutta (1967) 2 SCR 170, 204.

4443. The Judicial Committee in Cook Vs. Sprigg 1899 AC 572 discussing what is an act of state, observed :

www.vadaprativada.com

> "The taking possession by Her Majesty, whether by cession or by any other means by which sovereignty can be acquired, was an act of State."

4444. This decision has been followed in Raja Rajinder Chand Vs. Mst. Sukhi and others AIR 1957 S.C. 286.

4445. In Vajesingji Joravarsingji Vs. Secretary of State AIR 1924 PC 216, Lord Dunedin said :

> "When a territory is acquired by a sovereign State for the first time, that is an act of State. It matters not how the acquisition has been brought about. It may be by conquest, it may be by cession following on treaty, it may be by occupation of territory hitherto unoccupied by a recognised ruler. In all cases the result is the same. Any inhabitant of the territory can make good in the municipal

www.vadaprativada.com

Courts established by the new sovereign only such rights as that sovereign has, through his officers, recognised. Such rights as he had under the rule of predecessors avail him nothing."

4446. In Dalmia Dadri Cement Co. Ltd. Vs. Commissioner of Income-tax AIR 1958 SC 816, the Court said :

"The expression 'act of State' is, it is scarcely necessary to say, not limited to hostile action between rulers resulting in the occupation of territories. It includes all acquisitions of territory by a sovereign State for the first time, whether it be by conquest or cession."

4447. In Promod Chandra Deb Vs. State of Orissa AIR 1962 SC 1288, the Court said, " 'Act of State' is the taking over of sovereign powers by a State in respect of territory which was not till then a part of its territory, either by conquest, treaty or cession, or otherwise."

4448. To the same effect was the view taken by the Constitution Bench in Amarsarjit Singh Vs. State of Punjab AIR 1962 SC 1305 in para 12 as under :

"It is settled law that conquest is not the only mode by which one State can acquire sovereignty over the territories belonging to another State, and that the same result can be achieved in any other mode which has the effect of establishing its sovereignty."

4449. In Thakur Amar Singhji Vs. State of Rajasthan AIR 1955 SC 504, in para 40, the Court said :

"The status of a person must be either that of a sovereign or a subject. There is no tertium quid. The law does not recognise an intermediate status of a person being

www.vadaprativada.com

partly a sovereign and partly a subject and when once it is admitted that the Bhomicharas had acknowledged the sovereignty of Jodhpur their status can only be that of a subject. A subject might occupy an exalted position and enjoy special privileges, but he is none the less a subject ..."

4450. In State of Rajasthan and Others Vs. Sajjanlal Panjawat and Others AIR 1975 SC 706 it was held that the Rules of the erstwhile Indian States exercised sovereign powers, legislative, executive and judicial. Their firmans were laws which could not be challenged prior to the Constitution. The Court relied on its earlier two decisions in Director of Endowments, Govt. of Hyderabad Vs. Akram Ali AIR 1956 SC 60, and Sarwarlal Vs. State of Hyderabad AIR 1960 SC 862.

4451. In Promod Chandra Deb Vs. State of Orissa A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1288 "act of the State" was explained in the following words:

"an "act of State" may be the taking over of sovereign powers either by conquest or by treaty or by cession or otherwise. It may have happened on a particular date by a public declaration or proclamation, or it may have been the result of a historical process spread over many years, and sovereign powers including the right to legislate in that territory and to administer it may be acquired without the territory itself merging in the new State."

4452. This decision has been followed later on in Biswambhar Singh & Anr. Vs. The State of Orissa & Ors. 1964(1) Supreme Court Journal 364.

4453. Sri Jilani, learned counsel for the applicant,

however, submitted that the State has already given up and is not contesting the matter though it is a party in the suit. In the circumstances, whosoever may have in the possession in the Nazul record of the Government, it would not result in treating the land in dispute owned by the Government or belonging to the Government. Hence the matter has to be decided between the parties other than the Government, who has given up its case and has made a statement that it is not contesting the matter.

4454. Sri S.P.Srivastava, learned Additional Chief Standing Counsel has made a statement to this effect before us that as per his instructions, the State Government is not contesting the suit.

4455. In view thereof and fortified by the law laid down in State of Bihar and others Vs. Sri Radha Krishna Singh (supra) despite the fact that building is shown to be continued as Nazul plot no.583 of Khasra of the year 1931 of Mohalla Kot Ram Chandra, we find that it will not make any impact upon the claim of the various parties of the two communities since the State of U.P. is not claiming any right over the property in dispute and has specifically taken a stand of no contest. The issue 1(B)(a) (Suit-4) is answered accordingly.

4456. Issue No.5 (Suit-5) is as under:

> "Is the property in question properly identified and described in the plaint?"

4457. This issue pertains to the identification of the property in dispute as described in the plaint. Counsel for defendants No.4 and 5 submitted that the suit as framed shows the property in respect whereto relief was sought as mentioned in the annexures no.1, 2 and 3 to the plaint and do not specify the boundaries of the property in respect whereto Suit-5 was filed. However, so far as the disputed site and structure is concerned, there is no dispute between the parties in respect thereto either about its identification or description. After the decision of the Apex Court in Dr. M. Ismail Farooqui's case (supra) holding acquisition of property by the Central Government under Act, 1993, except the site in dispute, valid, the only area which is now required to deal with by us in all these cases is that which comprises of the outer and inner courtyard including disputed structure.

4458. In the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case since the property in dispute against which now the Court is required to consider whether the plaintiffs are entitled for relief or not is well identified and known to all the parties, there is no ambiguity. Issue No.5 is answered in affirmative i.e. in favour of the plaintiffs.

4459. (M) Issues relating to Specific Relief Act:

4460. Issues no. 8 (Suit-1) and 18 (Suit-5) falls in this category which read as under:

> Issue No. 8 :-"Is the suit barred by proviso to Section 42 Specific Relief Act?"
>
> Issue No. 18:-"Whether the suit is barred by section 34 of the Specific Relief Act as alleged in paragraph 42 of the additional written statement of defendant no.3 and also as alleged in paragraph 47 of the written statement of defendant no.4 and paragraph 62 of the written statement of defendant no. 5?"

4461. In Suit-1 issue 8 has been framed in view of the pleadings of defendants no. 1 to 5 (i.e. para 17 of the written statement) as well as para 17 of the written statement of defendant no. 10 which read as under:

www.vadaprativada.com

Written statement of defendants no. 1 to 5

''दफा 17. यह कि मुद्दई का कब्जा या कोई हक बाकी नहीं रहा और न है। इस वजह से दावा इस्तकरारिया हसब दफा 42 कानुन दादरसी खास नाकाबिल फजीराई अदालत है।''

"Para 17. That right or possession of the plaintiffs remained no more and, therefore, this suit for declaration under Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not maintainable. (E.T.C.)

Written statement of defendant no. 10

"17. That as the plaintiff has never remained in possession or occupation of the building in suit, he has no right, title or claim over the said property and as such the suit is even barred by the provisions of Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act."

4462. In Suit-5 para 42 of the additional written statement of defendant no. 3, para 47 of the written statement of defendant no. 4 and para 62 of the written statement of defendant no. 5 read as under:

"42. That site plan annexure II attached to the abovenoted plaint does not bear any plot no's (settlement or Nazul) nor it is bounded as to give any definite identity of property. Temple Shri Vijay Ragho ji Sakshi Gopal has never been subject matter of the any of the suit O.O.S. 4/89 or O.O.S. 3/89 pending before this Hon'ble Court. Maharaj through Ram Das Nirmohi who is Guru of Raj Mangal Das. Mah Ram Das of Sumitra Bhwan is recorded in settlement plot no. 168 to 174 as qubiz. Similarly Lomash Chaura Mandir, Sita Koop Mandir, Kuti shown in said map has distinct Deity of Bhagwan Ram Lalaji by the other panches of Nirmohi Akhara namely and respectively Mahant Dwarika Das, Mahant Naval Kishore Das and Ram Gopal Das who are all panches of Nirmohi Akhara. Sankat Mochan temple have been omitted in the said map whereas it did exist on the date of this suit. It has its deity Sankat Mochan Hanomanji and Thakur Ram Janki represented by Sarbarakar Ram Dayal saran Chela of Ram Lakhan saran. Late Ram Lakhan Saran and also belong to the spiritual family of Nirmohi Akhara as he was Naga chela of Goliki Ram Lakhan Das, one of the old panch of Nirmohi Akhara. Other Samadhis in the name of famous sages have been owned and claimed by answering defendant no. 3 as Samadhies of old Sadhus of Nirmohi Akhara. Panches and Sadhus of Akhara are living in the surrounding since before the human memory. The outer Sahan carried a little temple of Bhagwan Ram Lalaji along with other place which are regularly worshipped according to the customs prevailing amongst Rama Nandi Vairagies. The outer part with this temple of Ram Lallaji and other deities have ever been in management and charge of Nirmohi Akhara as sheibiat till this outer portion with Bhandar was attached U/s 145 Cr. committed by Dharam Das. Mr. Deoki Nandan Agarwal has named himself to be witness of Dharam Das. Therefore suit for all these properties by plaintiff 3 is not maintainable for want of possession and is barred by provision of sec. 34 of specific Relief Act.

47. That the suit is barred by the provisions of Section 34 of the Specific Relief Act also.

62. That the plaint is liable to be rejected for want of a real and subsisting cause of action and not seeking relief of possession u/s 34 Specific Relief Act and as per plaint averment there is on surviving cause of action in favour of the plaintiffs."

4463. Issue 8 (Suit-1) relates to Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963 (hereinafter referred to as "Act, 1963"). It would be useful first to have a glance over the said provision:

www.vadaprativada.com

42. Injunction to perform negative agreement.-- Notwith-standing anything contained in clause (e) of Section 41, where a contract comprises an affirmative agreement to do a certain act, coupled with a negative agreement, express or implied, not to do a certain act, the circumstances that the court is unable to compel specific performance of the affirmative agreement shall not preclude it from granting an injunction to perform the negative agreement:

Provided that the plaintiff has not failed to perform the contract so far as it is binding on him.

4464. Before enactment of Act, 1963 the field was governed by the Specific Relief Act, 1877 (in short Act, 1877). The corresponding provision in the earlier enactments was Section 47 pari meteria with the present Section 42. Section 41(e) of Act, 1963 recognizes a general rule that an injunction

ought not be granted to prevent breach of contract, the performance of which would not be specifically enforced. For example a contract of personal service is not specifically enforceable. Therefore, no injunction should be granted to restrain its breach and this is what is recognised and specifically provided in Section 41(e) of Act, 1963.

4465. To this general rule enunciated in Section 41(e), the legislature has recognised an exception and has embodied it in Section 42. Where a contract contains both, a negative and an affirmative stipulation, the Court will interfere by injunction to restrain breach of the negative portion of the contract without referring to the question whether or not the whole contract is capable of specifically enforced. It is said that this provision is in recognition of the view expressed in Lumley Vs. Wagner, (1865) 1 Eq. 411. It appears that before the decision in Lumley Vs. Wagner (supra) the British Courts were of the view when it may not enforce the positive part of contract, it ought not to restrain by injunction any breach of the negative part. This view was overruled in Lumley Vs. Wagner (supra) and Lord St. Leonards observed:

> "Wherever this Court has no proper jurisdiction to enforce specific performance it operates to bind men's conscience as far as they can be bound to a true and literal performance of their agreement and it will not suffer them to depart from their contracts at their pleasure leaving the party with whom they have contracted to the mere chance of any damages which a jury may give."

4466. During the course of the argument learned counsel for the defendant-muslim parties have not addressed us as to how Suit-1 deserves to be defeated by virtue of Section 42. The claim of the plaintiff is neither based on any contract nor agreement but it is a personal right of his own, enforcement whereof he has sought by seeking a declaration that he has a right to worship at the place in dispute, i.e., a place for which Suit-1 is confined, i.e., the inner courtyard and secondly that the objects of his worship exist thereat be not disturbed and he should not be obstructed in observance of his personal right of worship. It would have been a different thing if the argument would have been that the obstruction, if any, by the official defendants is in performance of their official duties and enforcement of a statutory order passed by the Magistrate under Section 145 Cr.P.C., hence an injunction restraining them from creating a so called obstruction which is nothing but the compliance of the statutory order cannot be granted, which could have been considered in its context but here the specific objection is with reference to Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act which in our view is ex facie not attracted in this case. Issue 8 (Suit-1) is accordingly answered in negative. It is held that the suit is not barred by proviso to Section 42 of Act, 1963.

4467. Issue 18 (Suit-5) relates to Section 34 of Act, 1963 and here also it would be prudent to have a glance over the relevant provision:

> "34. Discretion of court as to declaration of status or right . - Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief:
> Provided that no court shall make any such declaration

www.vadaprativada.com

where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so.

Explanation.-A trustee of property is a "person interested to deny" a title adverse to the title of some one who is not in existence, and for whom, if in existence, he would be a trustee.

4468. The basic submission of defendants no. 3, 4 and 5 (Suit-5) in persuading this Court to hold the suit not maintainable by virtue of Section 34 of Act 1963 is that the plaintiffs being out of possession of the property for which the suit in question has been filed, cannot seek a mere declaration and injunction unless a relief for possession is also claimed in absence whereof the suit is barred by Section 34 of the Act. This we have already dealt with in detail at various stages earlier also but since it is a substantial objection raised by the defendants and persuaded at length by Sri R.L. Verma, Advocate for Nirmohi Akhara we shall deal here in detail.

4469. Suit-5 has been filed by two plaintiffs, i.e., the idol and the place, i.e., Sri Ramjanambhumi Asthan as deity with the status of juridical personality through next friend for the protection of themselves and the property vests in them. On the date when the suit was filed, both the deities were at the site in dispute despite of the premises under attachment and the management in the hands of a Receiver. We have already held that the plaintiffs no. 1 and 2 are juridical persons. Both are at the site in dispute. It is nobody's case that the deity is not existing or present at the disputed site though by its very nature the management and care has to be taken by a natural person and since the date of attachment it is in the hands of a Receiver. The possession of Receiver is, therefore, qua deity and is like that of a shebait or a manager. Since the deities are already there residing and existing, for their purpose it is sufficient to seek a declaration about their status as well as that of property and nothing more is required except where if they have any apprehension of obstruction etc., in the enjoyment of their status or property, they can always seek an injunction for prevention of such obstruction.

4470. Where an action is brought to obtain a declaration of a person's right vis a vis a property, in such a case bar provided under Section 34 of Act 1963 would not be attracted. In Limba Bin Krishna and others Vs. Rama Bin Pimplu and anothers, 1889(13) ILR (Bom) 548 while considering the question of applicability of Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 in a case where the plaintiffs sought a declaration regarding his right to perform worship of an idol, it was held that such a suit is maintainable and not barred by Section 42 of Act 1963. A Division Bench of Bombay High Court relied on a Calcutta High Court in Mitta Kunth Audhicarry Vs. Neerunjun Audhicarry, 14 Beng. L.R. 166, Couch C.J., described the right of a plaintiff to perform worship of an idol as 'property' subject to partition, the joint owners being entitled to perform the worship. It also relied on Pranshankar Vs. Prannath Mahanand, 1 Bom H. C. Rep. 12 wherein it was held that an action would lie to obtain a binding declaration of a person's right to perform the duties of a Pujari and to receive the proceeds of the Mandir.

4471. In Surayya and another Vs. Annapurnamma, 1919(42) ILR (Mad.) 699 the Court held that a suit for declaring a will allegedly executed by a family member forged is maintainable and not barred by Section 42 of Act 1877.

4472. In a different context, but involving a similar situation, a suit by deity seeking a declaration for the property and injunction restraining the defendants from interfering in the user of the property was held maintainable at the instance of deity. In Monindra Mohan Banerjee and others Vs. The Shamnagar Jute Factory Co. Ltd. and another, 1938-39 (43) CWN 1056 a Division Bench of Calcutta High Court considered a suit filed by the worshippers seeking following reliefs:

> "(1) That the land in dispute may be declared to be the Debsthan of the Shiva Linga deities and a public place of worship of the Hindu public and that the public had acquired an absolute and indefeasible right to the use of the same as a Debsthan by long and uninterrupted user from time immemorial and to build the temples of the deities and for a declaration that the Shamnagar Jute Factory has not right and title thereto or any right to interfere with the building of the temple on the disputed land;
> (b) for declaration that the action of the Defendant Municipality in refusing sanction for the construction of the temple of the deities was illegal and ultra vires;
>
> (c) for declaration that the action of the Defendant in prosecuting the Plaintiffs under sec. 501 of the Bengal Municipal Act was illegal;
>
> (d) for an injunction restraining the Defendant Municipality from proceeding with the prosecution;
>
> (e) for an injunction upon the Defendants from interfering with the public right of worship and entry on the land;
>
> (f) for costs of the suit and

www.vadaprativada.com

(g) for any other relief which they might be entitled under law."

4473. The Court recorded its finding with respect to the maintainability of suit on pages 1058-1059 and said:

"On hearing the learned Advocates on both sides, it appears to me that the plaint was undoubtedly defective but at the same time the defects were not of such a character as would justify a dismissal of the entire suit. From the plaint as it is framed it is quite obvious that the suit was not instituted by or on behalf of the deities. It would have been quite in order if the deities themselves had brought the suit through the Plaintiffs as their representatives. They might have prayed for a declaration of their title to the property in suit and for an injunction restraining the Defendants from interfering with their possession and user of the same. As the plaint stands, however, the Plaintiffs who claim to represent the Hindu public of Garulia, come in not as shebaits or as representatives of the idols but as worshippers and some amount of confusion has been introduced in the plaint by mixing up the rights of the deities and those of the worshipping public. From paragraph 9 of the plaint as well as from prayer (a) it will appear that the Plaintiffs want in the first place that the land in suit might be declared to be a Debsthan of the idols and in the second place they want it to be declared that it is a public place of worship and that the Hindu public has, by prescription, acquired an indefeasible right to use the same and to build temples upon it. The right to build temples is therefore claimed by the Plaintiffs as members of the public as a part of their rights as worshippers. It is not claimed by or on behalf of the deities as a necessary adjunct of the proprietary right which the deities might have had in the land in suit. I cannot accept the proposition of law put forward by Mr. Mukherji that as the deities are said to be public deities the Hindu public of the locality constitute shebaits de jure. In case of a public deity the public undoubtedly have a right of worship but from that it does not necessarily follow that they are the shebaits of the deity in the sense that they are the only people to manage the temporal affairs of the deity and look after its worship. As a matter of fact no such case was attempted to be made in the plaint, which proceeds on the footing that it is a public place of worship and the rights of user which the public have got, carry with them the right to build temples upon the land. Accepting therefore the position that the Plaintiffs have instituted the suit in the capacity of persons interested in the worship of these deities and not as shebaits or as representatives of the idols, I think it was quite competent for them to sue for a declaration that the property in suit belonged to the idols. This is clear from the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdur Rahim Vs. Mahomed Barkat Ali, L.R. 55 I.A. 96. The deity is not a necessary party to such a suit though it may be desirable to make it a party so that the decision might be made conclusive and binding for all times to come. Similarly the Plaintiffs are entitled to have a declaration in this suit that the land in suit is a public place of worship and that they have a right to use it as such. The deity would also not be a necessary party to a suit for a declaration of this character."

4474. Applicability of Section 34 can be seen from another angle. The deity being an artificial personality, the right of possession as per the Hindu law text vests in the natural person who is responsible of taking care, i.e., Sewa, Prarthana etc. which is normally called Shebait or manager. It is in this context that it has been held that right to sue or being sued vests in the Shebait. This phrase we have already considered and explained above. It means that since an artificial person does not have a capacity to possess or to act like a natural person, it acts through a natural person and hence right to possession, management and also to bring an action, i.e., corporeal activities vest in such natural person but that does not mean that the deity shall always depend upon such person. Where the rights of deities are otherwise affected, a worshipper can also bring an action for the benefit of the deity and its property but in such a case such next friend shall not be entitled to claim possession. The position may have a different colour where the deity is in the nature of a Swayambhu deity and there is no defined or ascertained natural person who is employed to take its care. The deity is open for worship to public at large but no individual is assigned the job of maintenance of the deity. In such case it is for the Court to appoint a person to take care but when the deity filed suit for protection of itself or its property, on which it is continuing to present/reside or existing, no relief of possession is necessary, a suit for mere declaration can be filed.

4475. In Anjuman Islamia Vs. Najim Ali and others (supra) a Division Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in para 8 of the judgment said:

> "8. It has been contended by the defendants/respondents that the suit as framed for a declaration simpliciter was not

www.vadaprativada.com

maintainable under the proviso to Section 34 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, for the defendants are in possession of the property in suit. In our view the defendants as well as the Court below misconceived the provisions of Section 34 of the S. R. Act. Section 34 of the S. R. Act provides that any person entitled to any loyal character or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right and the Court may in its discretion make such a declaration. There is a proviso attached to Section 34 which contemplates that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title omits to do so. It is under this proviso that the defendants contended that the suit for mere declaration was not tenable without seeking further relief of possession. In our opinion the present suit does not fall under Section 34 of the Act for the reason that the present suit was not instituted by the Anjuman for a declaration of its own right or title to property in suit, or its right to a legal character. But it was a suit, on the other hand, to challenge the defendants assertion for right to property and their legal character in respect thereof. But assuming the suit falls under the provisions of Section 34 of the Act yet it would he tenable for declaration simpliciter and the plaintiff will have locus standi to bring the suit because the plaintiff was not Mutwalli or trustee of the alleged wakf and it did not claim to possess the property in its own behalf. Therefore, the plaintiff was not legally entitled to possession. The plaintiff therefore could not have asked for any further relief for possession. In such a position it was not necessary at all for the plaintiff to claim any consequential relief and in our opinion there can be no doubt that in the circumstances of this case the plaintiff had a right to ask for a declaratory relief only that the suit property was wakf and not the private property of the defendants. In this view of the matter we are supported by the decisions in Ram Rup v. Sarn Dayal, AIR 1936 Lah. 283 decided by Coldstream, J.-- and Abdul Rahim v. Faqir Mohd, Shah, AIR 1946 Nag. 401."

www.vadaprativada.com

4476. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 has been explained by the Apex Court in Vemareddi Ramaraghava Reddy and others Vs. Konduru Seshu Reddy (supra) and in para 11 it says:

"11. In our opinion, S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not exhaustive of the cases in which a declaratory decree may be made and the courts have power to grant such a decree independently of the requirements of the section. It follows, therefore, in the present case that the suit of the plaintiff for a declaration that the compromise decree is not binding on the deity is maintainable as falling outside the purview of S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act."

4477. In the context of a suit filed for the benefit of deity by the next friend, the Court held that a mere declaratory suit is proper. In paras 10 and 12 of the judgment the Court held:

"10. The legal position is also well-established that the worshipper of a Hindu temple is entitled, in certain circumstances, to bring a suit for declaration that the alienation of the temple properties by the de jure Shebait is invalid and not binding upon the temple. If a Shebait has improperly alienated trust property a suit can be brought

by any person interested for a declaration that such alienation is not binding upon the deity but no decree for recovery of possession can be made in such a suit unless the plaintiff in the suit has the present right to the possession. Worshippers of temples are in the position of cestuui que trustent or beneficiaries in a spiritual sense (See Vidhyapurna Thirthaswami v. Vidhyanidhi Thirthaswami, 1904 ILR 27 Mad. 435 at page 451). Since the worshippers do not exercise the deity's power of suing to protect its own interests, they are not entitled to recover possession of the property improperly alienated by the Shebait, but they can be granted a declaratory decree that the alienation is not binding on the deity (See for example, Kalyana Venkataramana Ayyangar v. Kasturiranga Ayyangar, ILR 40 Mad 212:AIR 1917 Mad 112 (FB) and Chidambaranatha Thambiran v. Nallasiva Mudaliar, ILR 41 Mad 124:AIR 1918 Mad 464). It has also been decided by the Judicial Committee in Abdur Rahim v. Mahomed Barkat Ali, 55 Ind. App. 96: AIR 1928 PC 16 that a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a wakf can be maintained by Mahomedans interested in the wakf without the sanction of the Advocate-General, and a declaration can be given in such a suit that the plaintiff is not bound by the compromise decree relating to wakf properties."

"12. The next question presented for determination in this case is whether the compromise decree is invalid for the reason that the Commissioner did not represent the deity. The High Court has taken the view that the Commissioner could not represent the deity because S. 20

of the Hindu Religious & Charitable Endowments Act provided only that the administration of all the endowments shall be under the superintendence and control of the Commissioner. Mr. Babula Reddy took us through all the provisions of the Act but he was not able to satisfy us that the Commissioner had authority to represent the deity in the judicial proceedings. It is true that under S. 20 of the Act the Commissioner is vested with the power of superintendence and control over the temple but that does not mean that he has authority to represent the deity in proceedings before the District Judge under S. 85 of the Act. As a matter of law the only person who can represent the deity or who can bring a suit on behalf of the deity is the Shebait, and although a deity is a juridical person capable of holding property, it is only in an ideal sense that property is so held. The possession and management of the property with the right to sue in respect thereof are, in the normal course, vested in the Shebait, but where, however, the Shebait is negligent or where the Shebait himself is the guilty party against whom the deity needs relief it is open to the worshippers or other persons interested in the religious endowment to file suits for the protection of the trust properties. It is open, in such a case to the deity to file a suit through some person as next friend for recovery of possession of the property improperly alienated or for other relief. Such a next friend may be a person who is a worshipper of the deity or as a prospective Shebait is legally interested in the endowment. In a case where the Shebait has denied the right of the deity to the dedicated properties, it is obviously desirable that the deity should file the suit through a disinterested next friend, nominated by the court. The principle is clearly stated in Pramath Nath v. Pradymma Kumar, ILR 52 Cal. 809. That was a suit between contending Shebaits about the location of the deity, and the Judicial Committee held that the will of the idol on that question must be respect, and inasmuch as the idol was not represented otherwise than by Shebaits, it ought to appear through a disinterested next friend appointed by the Court. In the present case no such action was taken by the District Court in O.P. no. 3 of 1950 and as there was no representation of the deity in that judicial proceeding it is manifest that the compromise decree cannot be binding upon the deity. It was also contended by Mr. P. Rama Reddy on behalf of respondent no. 1 that the compromise decree was beyond the scope of the proceedings in O.P. no. 3 of 1950 and was, therefore, invalid. In our opinion, this argument is well-founded and must prevail. The proceeding was brought under s. 84(2) of the old Act (Act II of 1927) for setting aside the order of the Board dated October 5, 1949 declaring the temple of Sri Kodandaramaswami as a temple defined in S. 6, clause 17 of the Act and for a declaration that the temple was a private temple. After the passing of the new Act, namely Madras Act 19 of 1951, there was an amendment of the original petition and the amended petition included a prayer for a further declaration that the properties in dispute are the personal properties of the petitioner's family and not the properties of the temple. Such a declaration was outside the purview of S. 84(2) of Madras Act II of 1927 and could not have been granted. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the contention of respondent no. 1 is correct and that he is entitled to a declaratory decree that the compromise decree in O.P. no. 3 of 1950 was not valid and was not binding upon Sri Kodandaramaswami temple."

4478. No authority is cited by learned counsels to persuade us to take a different view. The suit in question cannot be held barred by Section 34 of Act 1963. The issue 18 (Suit-5) is accordingly answered in negative, i.e., against the defendants no. 3, 4 and 5.

4479. (N) Others, if any:

4480. The discussions and the evidences, which we have already considered were in respect of the above issues on the question of juridical person, next friend, limitation, possession/adverse possession and relating to characteristics of Mosque and Wakf, etc. still there are some other issues which are mostly covered by the findings already recorded above and, hence, the same may also be dealt with hereat.

www.vadaprativada.com

"Does the property in suit belong to the plaintiff no.1?"

4482. As is evident, the property in suit for the purpose of Suit-3 is the premises within the inner courtyard. The plaintiff, though claimed to be the owner thereof and its counsel has also made a statement to this effect under Order X Rule 2 C.P.C., but not even a single document has been placed on record to show the title. Faced with this situation, the plaintiff sought to claim acquisition of title by way of adverse possession against the Muslim parties. This claim we have already negatived above. We answer this issue in negative, i.e., against the plaintiff.

4483. Issue No. 4 (Suit-3) reads as under:

"Are plaintiffs entitled to get management and charge of the said temple?"

4484. The plaintiff claim handing over of charge of the property in suit and the disputed structure to it instead of the Receiver. The basis of the claim is that the property in suit was all through a temple even before 1528 and has always been managed, possessed and owned by the plaintiff. It has however miserably failed to prove this fact. This aspect we have already discussed in detail while considering the issues relating to limitation and possession/adverse possession etc. We have also held that the idols were kept under the central dome inside the inner courtyard in the night of 22nd/23rd December, 1949. The plaintiffs having disputed this incident being a factitious and fabricated story, the question of treating them as Shebait in respect of the idols placed under the central dome on 22nd/23rd December, 1949 does not arise since according to their own pleadings, they have not admitted any where of taking care of the deity in the inner courtyard under the central dome of the disputed structure. Issue No. 4 (Suit-3), therefore, is answered in negative, i.e., against the plaintiffs.

"Is the suit not maintainable as framed?"

4486. This issue has arisen for the reason that the property in dispute was attached and handed over to the Receiver pursuant to a statutory order passed by the Magistrate under Section 145 Cr.P.C. on 29.12.1949. If the plaintiff (Suit-3) had any grievance, it could have filed objection before the Magistrate inasmuch order of attachment was a preliminary order and was subject to the final order under Section 145(2)

www.vadaprativada.com

Cr.P.C., but no such objection appears to have been filed by the plaintiff (Suit-3) before the Magistrate. The plaintiffs did not seek any declaration about its title or status and without determining the same, the Civil Judge could not have directed handing over charge from the Receiver to the plaintiff. It is for this reason, in our view, Suit-3 is not maintainable. The issue is answered accordingly.

4487. Issue No. 19 (a) (Suit-4):

"Whether even after construction of the building in suit Deities of Bhagwan Sri Ram Virajman and the Asthan, Sri Ram Janam Bhumi continued to exist on the property in suit as alleged on behalf of defendant no.13 and the said places continued to be visited by devotees for purposes of worship? If so, whether the property in dispute continued to vest in the said Deities?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4488. In view of our findings recorded in respect to Issue No. 1 (Suit-5), holding that the place can be a 'deity' and also in view of our finding recorded in respect to the issues relating to possession/adverse possession that the Hindus, believing the place in dispute as birthplace of Lord Rama, had been continuously vising it for the purpose of worship, it is evident that the status of place as deity had continued. We have already held that a deity is not damaged or comes to end due to destruction in any manner, since the spirit of Supreme Being continues to exist and it will not disappear, particularly when the deity is Swayambhu, i.e. self created. The property in dispute, therefore, has a dual character. Firstly, being birthplace of Lord Rama, as per the beliefs of Hindus, it is a Swyambhu deity and would continue so long as the place continues, but then, being an immovable property, it also has its nature as property. The question of owning the property is different than the status. On this aspect, we have to examine the relevant area. The area of fort of Lord Rama is said to be quite bigger. It is claimed to have several mansions (eight mansions), besides other kinds of structures. In various evidences, which we have already discussed, it is mentioned that the disputed structure was constructed on some part of the area covered by the Fort of Lord Rama. The suit was filed by the plaintiffs (Suit-5) in 1989 claiming a much larger area. During the course of arguments, we inquired from the learned counsel for plaintiffs (Suit-5), Sri M.M. Pandey, as to what is his concept of place of birth. Whether he considered the area constituting deity equal to a small room or to a small house or a bigger house or the entire locality, city, province or country, as the case may be. Despite our repeated query, learned counsel could not tell us as to what is his the concept of place of birth for the purpose of this case. Various religious literature, which have been placed before us, show that Ayodhya is believed to be the place of birth of Lord Rama. It did not specify any particular area or a particular place in Ayodhya. We have held that a place can be a deity and a Swyambhu deity. It is quite possible that the entire city may be held to be very pious and sacred on account of some occurrence of divinity or religious spirituality. It may happen that a small place may attain such a status. For example, the tree under which Gautam Buddha attained divine knowledge is considered to be extremely sacred and pious place by Buddhist. When Lord Rama was born in Ayodhya and must have played and walked throughout thereat, the then entire territory of city of Ayodhya, from the point of view of all Hindu people, must acquire the status of reverence and piety, but then can it be said that such

www.vadaprativada.com

bigger place cannot absorb and accommodate persons having different faith or religion or those worship differently. No doubt true, if such absorption or accommodation has the result of extinguishing the very place of reverence, meaning thereby the very object of faith and belief may vanish, such absorption may not be allowed, but otherwise, in a country like ours, where unity in diversity is its characteristic, the existence of people or other faith, existence of their place of religion at a place, in wider sense as it is known, cannot be ruled out and by necessity they will have to exist, live and survive together. There are several cities in India which are considered to be the place of reverence of highest degree like Kashi, Haridwar, Prayag, Ayodhya, Mathura etc. Can it be said in the independent India governed by a written Constitution the existence of or permissibility to establish or to create place of worship of people of different religion will depend upon undefined, unknown and unclassified kind of faith or belief of another section particularly when it is a case of a majority people in respect of a place. Nobody has ever bothered, the people of different religions in these very places of reverence have been residing thereat since time immemorial and have very well established temples of their faith. In all the places which are known to be major Tirtha places of Hindus, religious places of other religion are well established and there is complete comity and understanding between all the people. They all mutually respect the places of worship of different religions. At Ayodhya also a large number of Mosques are in existence, which have also came in evidence inasmuch some of the witnesses have estimated the number of Mosques in Ayodhya from 50 to 80. Even in the building in dispute, though the structure was raised

as a Mosque known and called a Mosque, yet Hindus continued to visit it and worship thereat on account of their cemented faith and belief which could not be withered due to construction of such building. Simultaneously, Muslims also visited the premises, as we have already noticed, may be occasionally but the fact remains that they visited the premises and offered Namaz. This system and arrangement without any dispute had continued for almost hundred years as evident which we could get and notice above. There do not appear to be any grievance raised by any Hindu that the Muslims cannot visit the premises in dispute, i.e. inner courtyard and offer worship though against the visit of Hindus in the same premises several complaints were made from 1858 and onwards by Muslims, which are part of record.

4489. It has been pleaded and some religious texts have also been placed before us to show that in a place of worship Parikrama is an integral part and, therefore, in every temple around the deity a passage is always made to enable the worshippers to have a Parikrama of deity. In the building in dispute passage for Parikrama was available. It was, therefore, suggested that this Parikrama passage itself suggested that the building in dispute was not a mosque but the temple. Simultaneously it is also admitted that there are four kinds of Parikrama which the people normally observe at Ayodhya. One is the Parikrama in a particular place of worship for example in the disputed building where the Hindu people believe that Lord Rama was born. The other three kinds of Parikrama are known as "Panchkosi Parikrama", "Chaudahkosi Parikrama" and "Chaurasikosi Parikrama". We may extract statements of some of the witnesses just to illustrate these three later kinds of

"The area of the palace of King Dashrath, as mentioned in Valmiki Ramayana, extends over five-six 'kose' in Ayodhya. The palace of King Dashrath begins from the same place, from where the 'Panchkosi' circumambulation starts, and it ends where the 'Panchkosi' circumambulation concludes. At present, 'Panchkosi' circumambulation starts from many places, some from Rinmochan ghat, some from Jhumki ghat, some from Rajghat and some from Nayaghat. 4490. If we believe what has been submitted by learned counsel for the Hindu parties to be correct that Parikrama is an integral part of worship of the deity and if this Parikrama passage is available in a place it should be treated in a temple,

very interesting result may arrive in respect to these three kinds of large Parikrama. The area covered by Panchkosi Parikrama includes several localities of Ayodhya wherein number of muslim residences as well as their religious places are also covered. Similarly, Chaudahkosi Parikrama not only covered Ayodhya but some part of Faizabad also and there also similar result would arrive. Chaurasikosi Parikrama obviously goes much much beyond that. Can it be said that all the persons residing and the religious places of other religions constitute part and parcel of such a wider concept of temple. This is neither the intention nor can be accepted. When a person believe in respect to a place that it has divine power, Supreme Being exist thereat which may bless happiness, salvation etc. to the worshipper that does mean that this place of worship has to be identified in narrowest possible area. For example at Gangotri if one goes it is the particular temple or just above it the Gomukh which is considered sacred and not the entire area where the people also reside and do other daily activities. In the case of place in dispute also, unless we ascertain the exact place in respect whereof the belief of such a large Hindu people is continuing by tradition and custom from generations to generation, it cannot allow us to be guided with such kind of arguments which goes much beyond the belief but in the realm of the procedure of worship which is absolutely different. The core belief in the matter of religion which is essential is something different than what is incidental or ancillary. It is the former which is protected by Article 25 of the Constitution.

4491. In view of the above, to suggest that the entire property in dispute shall vest in the deity without there being any specificity regarding the area would neither be just nor

rational. Many of the witnesses appearing on behalf of the plaintiff (Suit-5) as well as plaintiff (Suit-3) and other Hindu parties have averred that according to their faith, the place where the idols are kept, i.e., the area under the central dome of the disputed structure in inner courtyard is the place of birth of Lord Rama. If that be so, it may not be said that the entire property in the inner courtyard would vest in the deity. On this aspect we have already dealt with in detail while considering the issues relating to the place of birth of Lord Rama, i.e., the issues no. 11 (Suit-4), 1 (Suit-1) and 22 (Suit-5).

4492. So far as the property in the outer courtyard is concerned, we have already said that there existed several Hindu structures and the Hindu people used to visit thereat regularly without there being any intervention or interruption by the Muslim people at least for the last more than 90 years till the date of attachment, i.e., since 1856-57. The Hindu religious structures like Sita Rasoi, Ram Chabutara etc. are claimed to be managed by Nirmohi Akhara, plaintiff (Suit-3). Though they have also stated that this is the place of birth of Lord Rama but those temples in outer courtyard, are being managed by them since the last several decades.

4493. The place of birth as we have already held, therefore, would continue to vest in the deity and in view of the fact that deity is indestructible and imperishable, even the construction of the building in dispute would make no impact on its sacredness and otherwise. So far as the religious structure within the outer courtyard are concerned, they cannot be said to be vested in the deity, (plaintiffs 1 and 2) for the reason that they are the temples claim to be possessed and managed by Nirmohi Akhara defendant no. 3, and its status having claimed as

Shebait. This status of Nirmohi Akhara qua the religious structures of Hindus existing in the outer courtyard have not been controverted by anyone. Even OPW 1, the witness who deposed on behalf of plaintiff (Suit-5) has also supported this case of Nirmohi Akhara.

4494. So far as the continuous visit of devotees is concerned, we have already discussed this issue and held that despite construction of disputed structure, Hindus continued to visit and worship the place which they believe to be the place of birth of Lord Rama. Simultaneously, in the same premises, muslims also offered their worship as we have already discussed in detail above.

4495. We, therefore, hold that so far as the premises which constitute the place of birth of Lord Rama, continue to vest in the deities, but so far as the Hindu religious structures existing in the outer courtyard are concerned, the same cannot be said to be the property of the plaintiffs (Suit-5), i.e., the deity of Bhagwan Sri Ram Virajman and Sthan Sri Ram Janambhumi as claimed by the defendant no. 13. Issue No. 19 (a) (Suit-4) is answered accordingly.

4496. Issue No. 4 (Suit-5):

> "Whether the idol in question had been in existence under the "Shikhar" prior to 6.12.92 from time immemorial as alleged in paragraph 44 of the additional written statement of defendant no.3?"

4497. We have already held while deciding Issues No 12 (Suit-4) and 3 (a) (Suit-5) that the idols under the central dome in the inner courtyard were placed in the night of 22nd/23rd, December, 1949 and since then are continuing as such in view of interim injunction granted by the Civil Court on 16.1.1950

and the subsequent stay orders of this Court as well as the Apex Court. In view thereof, no doubt that prior to 6th December, 1992, the idols were there but it cannot be said that the same remained there from time immemorial. Besides, this issue is in the context of para 44 of additional written statement of defendant no. 3 which reads as under:

> "That attachment made in the 1949 is only in respect of main building of Garbh Grahya Carrying three "Shikar (शिखर) where in the deity of Bhagwan Sri Ram Chanraji is installed by Nirmohi Akhara from time beyond the human memory and are since then in management and possession of it till the said property attached. Therefore, plaintiff 3 can not claim any right to represent him."

4498. The pleading, however, do not talk of 6th December, 1992. On the contrary, it says when the attachment was made in 1949, at that time idols were installed in the main building much before and beyond the human memory, which we have already negatived. Hence, Issue No. 4 (Suit-5) is answered in negative, as the idols in question did remain under the Sikhar prior to 6th December, 1992, but not from time immemorial and, instead, were kept thereat in the night of 22nd/23rd December, 1949.

4499. Issue No.15 (Suit-5):

> "Whether the disputed structure claimed to be Babri Masjid was always used by the Muslims only regularly for offering Namaz ever since its alleged construction in 1528 A.D. to 22nd December 1949 as alleged by the defendants 4 and 5?

4500. This issue has been framed assuming that the disputed structure was constructed in 1528 AD by Babar or his agent. This aspect we have already discussed in detail while considering issues no. 6 (Suit-1), 5 (Suit-3) and 1(a) (Suit-4).

We have already answered that the concerned parties have miserably failed to prove that it was so constructed in 1528 AD by Babar or any of his agent. That being so, the question of offering Namaj in the disputed structure since 1528 AD does not arise at all. With respect to the question as to whether Namaj was ever offered in the building in dispute we find that this aspect has also been discussed and answered in issues no. 15 (Suit-4), 1-B(c) (Suit-4) and 2 (Suit-4) wherein it has been held that the evidence which we have on record shows that atleast from 1860 and onwards Namaj has been offered in the building in dispute in the inner courtyard and the last Namaj was offered on 16th December, 1949. Accordingly issue 15 (Suit-5) is answered. We observe that though it is not proved that Namaj was offered in the building in dispute since 1528 AD, simultaneously it is also not proved that any Namaj was offered in the building in dispute after 16th December, 1949. However, we hold that between 1860 and up to 16th December, 1949 if not regularly, occasionally, intermittently Friday prayers, i.e., Jumma Namaj was offered in the disputed structure which was commonly known as Babri Masjid.

4501. Issue No.20(b)(Suit-4):

"Whether there was a Mutwalli of the alleged Waqf and whether the alleged Mutwalli not having joined in the suit, the suit is not maintainable so far as it relates to relief for possession?"

4502. It has been stated by several witnesses deposing on behalf of plaintiffs (Suit-4) that one Javvad Hussain was Mutwalli of the building in dispute in 1949 when the property in dispute was attached. Certain documents filed as Exhibit A 55 (Suit-1) (Register 8, page 503); Exhibit A 57 (Suit-1) (Register

8, page 507); and, Exhibit A 59 (Suit-1) (Register 8, page 511) as well as the report of Waqf Inspector dated 10th December, 1949 and 23rd December, 1949 also show that Javvad Hussain represented himself as Mutwalli of the building and the Inspector of Waqf requested Sunni Board to treat him and continue as Mutawalli of the waqf.

4503. Nothing to contradict the above has been placed on record. We need not to doubt the above stand of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) on this aspect but it is really surprising, had he been Mutawalli of the building in dispute, responsible for its proper management etc. yet at no point of time he took any step for protection of the building in dispute or to contest the cases in the Court in respect to said property. Not only this, but also the so called Imam, named Abdul Gaffar, as also one Ismail, Moazzim are also missing and they have also failed to take any step. Not even a complaint was filed by anyone of them, if anything wrong was done in the night of 22/23rd December, 1949 preventing them from discharging their duties as also preventing Muslims from offering Namaz in the building in dispute. It appears to us that Javvad Hussain was not a properly appointed Mutwalli of the building in dispute but he simply enjoyed the grant of village Bahoranpur and Sholapur and used to call him as "Nambardar" thereof. In order to justify the amount of revenue he used to realize from the said grant, on papers, he had shown the income and expenditures also but as a matter of fact, did not take care of the building in dispute.

4504. Be that as it may, in the absence of any other claimant and also in the absence of any procedure with respect to appointment of Mutwalli, person who ought to have managed the building in dispute, may be on account of the grant of the two villages, can be treated to be a de facto mutwalli. The Management being responsibility of a Mutwalli, the possession of the waqf can also be claimed by him since a worshiper is not entitled for the possession of a waqf property though he may be allowed to file a suit for protection of the property of waqf but possession of such waqf cannot be granted to such worshiper.

4505. In the result we answer Issue No.20(b) (Suit-4) holding that at the time of attachment of the building or when the suit in question was filed, Javvad Hussain was Mutawalli but in his absence or any other Mutawalli succeeding him, relief of possession cannot be allowed to the plaintiffs (Suit-4) who have come before this Court in the capacity of worshipers and not the person who can claim possession of waqf i.e. a Mutawalli.

4506. Issue No. 7 (Suit-5):

> "Whether the defendant no.3 alone is entitled to represent plaintiffs 1 and 2, and is the suit not competent on that account as alleged in paragraph 49 of the additional written statement of defendant no.3?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4507. Basically the objection relates to non service of notice under Section 80 CPC to the State Government. No such objection has been raised by the State Government or its authorities though they are impleaded as defendants no. 7, 8 and 9 to the Suit. Even a written statement has not been filed on behalf of the State Government or its officers. We have already held while considering issue no.10 (Suit-3), that objection regarding notice under Section 80 CPC cannot be taken by a private defendant, if no such objection has been raised and pressed by the State authorities. In view of our discussion and findings recorded in respect to issue no. 10 (Suit-3), we hold that the objection under para 49 of the additional written statement of defendant no. 3 is of no consequence.

4508. Coming to the first part of the issue that the defendant no. 3 alone is entitled to represent plaintiffs 1 and 2 in the absence of any material to show that the defendant no. 3 was in possession of the property within the inner courtyard and looking after and managing the affairs as Shebait, no such right can be claimed by the defendant no. 3. On this aspect the case of defendant no. 3, i.e., Nirmohi Akhara has already been considered by us while discussing the issues relating to adverse possession. For the reasons thereof and as discussed, issue 7 (Suit-5) in its entirety is answered in negative.

4509. `Issues No. 10 and 11 (Suit-5):

"Whether the disputed structure could be treated to be a mosque on the allegations contained in paragraph 24 of the plaint?"

"Whether on the averments made in paragraph 25 of the plaint, no valid waqf was created in respect of the structure in dispute to constitute it as a mosque?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4510. These issues are founded on the averments contained in paras 24 and 25 of the plaint which read as under:

"24. That such a structure raised by the force of arms on land belonging to the Plaintiff Deities, after destroying the ancient Temple situate thereat, with its materials including the Kasauti pillars with figures of Hindu gods carved thereon, could not be a mosque and did not become one in spite of the attempts to treat it as a mosque during the British rule after the annexation of Avadh. Some salient points with regard thereto are noted below.

(A) According to the Koran, Allah spoke to the Prophet thus-

www.vadaprativada.com

"And fight for the religion of GOD against those who fight against you; but transgress not by attacking them first, for GOD loveth not the trangressers. And kill them wherever ye find them; and turn them out of that whereof they have dispossessed you; for temptation to idolatory is more grievous than slaughter. Yet fight not against them in the holy temple, until they attack you therein;.....

(B) According to all the Muslim authorities and precedents and the decided cases also, ALLAH never accepts a dedication of property which does not belong to the Waqif that is, the person who purports to dedicate property to ALLAH for purposes recognised as pious or charitable, as waqf under the Muslim law. By his acts of trespass and violence for raising a mosque on the site of the Temple after destroying it by force, Mir Baqi committed a highly un-Islamic act. His attempt to convert the Temple into a mosque did not, therefore, create a valid dedication of property to ALLAH, whether in fact or in law, and it never became a mosque.

(C) That inspite of all that Mir Baqi tried to do with the Temple, the land always continued to vest in the Plaintiff Deities, and they never surrendered their possession over it. Their possession continued in fact and in law. The ASTHAN never went out of the possession of the Deity and HIS worshippers. They continued to worship HIM through such symbols as the CHARAN and SITA RASOI, and the idol of BHAGWAN SRI RAMA LALA VIRAJMAN on the Chabutra, called the Rama Chabutra, within the enclosed courtyard of the building directly in front of the arched opening of its Southern dome. No one could enter the building except after passing through these places of Hindu worship. According to the Muslim religion and law there can be no Idol worship within the courtyard of a mosque, and the passage to a mosque must be free and unobstructed and open at all times to the 'Faithful'. It can never be through a Hindu place of worship. There can be no co-sharing of title or possession with ALLAH in the case of a mosque. His possession must be exclusive.

(D) A mosque must be built in a place of peace and quiet, but near to a place where there is a sizeable Muslim population, according to the tenets of Islam, and as insisted upon by it, a mosque cannot be built in a place which is surrounded on all sides by Temples, where the sound of music or conch shells or Ghanta Ghariyals must always disturb the peace and quiet of the place.

(E) A mosque must have a minaret for calling the Azan. According to Baillie. "When an assembly of worshippers pray in a masjid with permission, that is delivery. But it is a condition that the prayers be with izan. Or the regular call, and be public not private, for though there should be an assembly yet if it is without izan. And the prayers are private instead of public, the place is no masjid. Accouding to the two disciples." (Pt. I. BK.IX, ch. VII Sec. I,p. 605) Indeed, there has been no mosque without a minaret after the first half century from the Flight. (See-P.R. Ganapathi Iyer's Law relating to Hindu and Mahomedan Endowments, 2nd Edition, 1918. Chap. XVII, P. 388.)

(F) According to the claim laid by the Muslims in their suit No. 12 of 1961, the building is surrounded on all sides by grave-yard known as 'Ganj Shahidan'. There is a mention in the Fyzabad Gazetteer also, quoted hereinabove, of the burial of 75 Muslims at the gate of the Janmasthan, and the place being known as Ganj Shahidan. After the battle of 1855. Although there are no graves anywhere near the building at Sri Rama Janma Bhumi, or in its precincts, or the area appurtenant thereto, for the last more than 50 years, if the building was surrounded by a grave-yard during the British times soon after the annexation of Avadh by them, the building could not be a mosque, and could not be used as a mosque, for the offering of prayers, except the funeral prayers on the death of a person buried therein, is prohibited in a grave-yard according to the Muslim authorities.

(G) As already stated, there is no arrangement for storage of water for Vazoo and there are the Kasauti pillars with the figures of Hindu Gods and Godesses inscribed thereon in the building.

25. That the worship of the Plaintiff Deities has continued since ever throughout the ages at Sri Rama Janma Bhumi. The place belongs to the Deities. No valid waqf was ever created or could have been created of the place or any part of it, in view of the title and possession of the Plaintiff Deities thereon. ALLAH, as conceived by the Muslims, never got any title or possession over the premises or any part of them. Nor has there ever been any person, living or juridical, who might have put forward any claim to ownership of the property or any part of it. Occasional acts of trespass or attempts to get into possession by the muslims were successfully resisted and repulsed by the Hindus from time to time, and there was no

blemish or dent in the continuity of title and possession of the Plaintiff Deities. No title could or did vest in ALLAH over any part of Sri Rama Janma Bhumi by adverse possession or in any other manner. Neither ALLAH nor any person on his behalf had any possession over any part of the premises at any time what-soever, not to speak of any adverse possession."

4511. We have discussed similar issues in the category of those relating to characteristics of mosque, dedication, valid waqf etc. In the light of the findings recorded therein we answer issues 10 and 11 (Suit-5) in affirmative.

4512. Issue No. 19 (Suit-5):

"Whether the suit is bad for non-joinder of necessary parties, as pleaded in paragraph 43 of the additional written statement of defendant no.3?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4513. This issue emanates from the pleading of para 43 of the additional written statement of defendant no. 3 which reads as under:

"Para 43: That outer portion consisting of Bhagwan Ram Lala on Sri Ram Chabutara alongwith other deities, Chathi Pujan Sthan and Bhandar with eastern outer wall carrying engraved image of Varah Bhagwan with southern and northern wall and also western portion of all carries the present municipal no. 10/12/29 old 506, 507 and older 647 of Ram Kot ward of Ayodhya City had been a continuous referred in main litigation since 1885 till Reg. Suit no. 239/82 of the Court of Civil Judge Faizabad and in every case Nirmohi Akhara was held always in possession and management of this temple so the Bhagwan Ram Lalaji installed by Nirmohi Akhara on this Ram Chabutara is a

4514. What defendant no. 3 claims is that Bhagwan Ram Lala installed on Ram Chabutara in the outer courtyard, though was in possession and management of Nirmohi Akhara, but being a distinct legal entity, ought to have been impleaded separately and in the absence thereof the suit is bad for want of necessary party.

4515. The submission is thoroughly misconceived. Once Nirmohi Akhara admits that the deity at Ram Chabutara is managed by Nirmohi Akhara which is a Math, a legal entity, it stands in the position of Shebait to the said deity and in such a case it has well been held that right to sue or be sued vests in Shebait [See, Bishwanath Vs. Sri Thakur Radha Ballabhji (supra) and Jagadindra Nath Vs. Hemanta Kumari (supra)].

4516. We, therefore, find no substance in the above submission. Issue 19 (Suit-5) is answered in negative.

4517. Issue No. 25 (Suit-5):

"Whether the judgment and decree dated 30th March 1946 passed in Suit No. 29 of 1945 is not binding upon the plaintiffs as alleged by the plaintiffs?"

4518. Suit No. 29 of 1945 was an inter se dispute between the Shia Central Waqf Board and Sunni Central Waqf Board in respect to the property in dispute. Both were claiming it to be a waqf which ought to have been placed within their control. In respect to the suit and the judgment dated 30.03.1946 we have already considered the matter in detail while discussing issue no. 6 (Suit-3).

4519. Admittedly, the plaintiffs of suit in question were not party in the said suit. The judgment, therefore, cannot be said to be binding upon the plaintiffs. No authority on this question has been placed before us which is binding upon us to take a different view. Issue 25 (Suit-5) is accordingly answered holding that the judgment and decree dated 30.03.1946 in Suit No. 29 of 1945 is not binding upon the plaintiffs (Suit-5).

4520. Issue No. 19(c)(Suit-4):

"Whether any portion of the property in suit was used as a place of worship by the Hindus immediately prior to the construction of the building in question? If the finding is in the affirmative, whether no mosque could come into existence in view of the Islamic tenets at the place in dispute?"

4521. We have already held that there existed a religious place of Non-Islamic character before the construction of the disputed structure. From the travel account of William Finch it is also evident that Hindus were worshipping in the Fort of Lord Rama, as he called it, when he visited Ayodhya between 1608 to 1611 AD. It is not the case of the Muslim parties that in that Fort of Lord Rama, besides the place in dispute, there was any other place known as place of birth of Lord Rama which the people used to worship at that time or thereafter also. The disputed structure, as we have already noticed, came into being after the visit of the William Finch but before the visit of father Joseph Tieffenthaler. He (Tieffenthaler) has also mentioned about the worship at the premises in dispute by Hindus during his visit, and, from the description he has given, we are satisfied that the said worship must have been near the structure itself. The cumulative effect of these facts as also the discussion we have already made in respect of various issues above, leaves no doubt in our mind that even before the construction of the building in dispute, the place which the Hindus believed the place of birth of Lord Rama, used to be worship. We have also held that according to faith, belief and tradition amongst Hindus it is the area covered under the central dome of the disputed structure which they believe to be the place of birth of Lord Rama and worship thereat continuously. Therefore, in the absence of anything otherwise, it can safely be said that only this was the part of the property in dispute which was used as a place of worship by Hindus immediately prior to the construction of the building in question. To this extent the first part of the issue under consideration is answered in affirmative.

4522. So far as the second part is concerned, we do not find that it has any relevance being as a hypothetical question whether a mosque could have come into existence in view of the Islamic tenets at the place of dispute, where Hindus were worshiping earlier, for the reason that, as a matter of fact, a building was constructed as a mosque, centuries back, under the Sovereign's command. After its construction, the locals and the other called and treated it, 'a mosque', it was used later, may be intermittently, as we have already held, for offering namaz by Muslims also. It is a different thing that in the same premises Hindus also continued to visit and worship according to their faith and belief but that would not erode in any manner the factual establishment of a structure as a mosque. Whether a person who made this construction or allowed it at that time, acted in accordance with Islamic tenets or not, cannot be allowed to be reviewed on judicial side in a court of law which is a creation of much subsequent period. The subsequent statutes cannot be applied to a sovereign function as sole Monarch, at a time when his command was supreme and unchallengeable. In our view it is not open to any party to raise such a dispute, which in effect require a judicial review of something which has been done by a king at a time when there was no codified law. We have no doubt in our mind that our jurisdiction to peep into such an objection cannot be stressed to such an extent. Sri Jain sought to refer Article 13 of the constitution and some other provisions but we find all those reference wholly misconceived and in our view the argument is simply noticed to be rejected.

4523. Issue No. 19 (c), Suit-4 is decided accordingly.

4524. Issues No.3(b), (c) and (d) (Suit-5) read as under:

> "(b) Whether the same idol was reinstalled at the same place on a Chabutara under the canopy?
> (c) Whether the idols were placed at the disputed site on or after 6.12.1992 in violation of the courts order dated 14.8.1989 and 15.11.91?
> (d) If the aforesaid issue is answered in the affirmative, whether the idols so placed still acquire the status of a deity."

4525. After the demolition of the disputed structure, the defendants no. 4 and 5 (Suit-5) filed an additional written statement dated 22nd August, 1995 and in para 3 and 13 thereof pleaded as under:

> "3. That the contents of para 35 J of the Amended Plaint are denied as stated and in reply thereto it is submitted that the demolition of the Babri Masjid appeared to be a pre-planned, deliberate and intentional act on the part of the miscreants and criminals who had assembled at the site on the call of the Vishwa Hindi Parishad, Bajrang Dal and Shiv Sena etc. All the acts of the said so-called Kar Sewaks

were totally illegal, unjustified and in violation of the orders of this Hon'ble Court as well as of the Hon'ble Supreme Court and amounted to blatant exercise of the Rule of Jungle and the so called construction of make-shift temple and placing of idols in the same on 7.12.92 was all totally illegal and contemptuous and the said idols could not be described as deity under Hindu Law also."

"13. That the Plaintiffs have no cause of action and specially so when the idols placed in the Mosque surreptitiously in the night of 22nd -23rd December, 1949 have been removed on 6-12-1992. The claim, if any, regarding the said idols stood extinguished on the removal of the said idols."

4526. The submission of Sri Jilani and Sri Siddiqui is that once the Deity is removed from the place where it was consecrated or where it was being worshipped, it ceased to have the status of a deity on removal unless reconsecrated. Therefore, it is contended that plaintiff no.1 ceased to be a 'juristic personality' after its removal on 6th December, 1992, rendering suit not maintainable and liable to be dismissed. Reliance is placed on the authority of "History of Dharmashatra" by P.V. Kane Chapter XXVI, page 904 which reads as under:

"Punah-pratistha :-(Re-consecration of images in temples). The Brahmapurana quoted by the Devapratisthatattva and the Nirnayasindhu says 'when an image is broken into two or is reduced to particles, is burnt, is removed from its pedestal, is insulted, has ceased to be worshipped, is touched by beasts like donkeys or falls on impure ground or is worshipped with mantras of other deities or is rendered impure by the touch of outcasts and the like-in these ten

contingencies, god ceases to indwell therein.' When an image is polluted by (contact with) the blood of a brahmana or by the touch of a corpse or the touch of a patita it should be re-consecrated. If an image is broken in parts or reduced to particles it should be removed according to sastric rules and another should be installed in its place. When an image is broken or stolen a fast should be observed. If images of metal such as of copper are touched by thieves or candalas, they should be purified in the same way in which polluted vessels of those metals are purified and then they should be re-consecrated. If an image properly consecrated has had no worship performed without pre-meditation (i.e. owing to forgetfulness or neglect) for one night or a month or two months or the image is touched by a sudra or a woman in her monthly illness, then the image should have water adhivasa (placing in water) performed on it, and it should be bathed with water from a jar, then with pancagavya, then it should be bathed with pure water from jars to the accompaniment of the hymn to Purusa (Rg. X. 90) repeated 8000 times, 800 times or 28 times, worship should be offered with sandal-wood paste and flowers, naivedya (food) of rice cooked with jaggery should be offered. This is the way in which the re-consecration is effected."

4527. The matter of reconsecration as and when is required and what is a procedure, how it is to be observed, we have already discussed in detail while dealing with the issues relating to deities, their rights etc. i.e. issues No.12 and 21 (Suit-4), issues no.1, 2, 3(a), 6 and 21 (Suit-5). The defendant no.3/1 on page 225, 232 of his statement has admitted removal of deity,

as existed under the central dome of the disputed structure upto 6th December, 1992 for a short while and says that the same were restored after a few hours at the same place. To the same effect is the statement of OPW 1-Mahant Paramhans Ram Chandra Das. Nothing has come on record contradicting the said statements of the two witness. Therefore, a very transition and temporary kind of removal is not disputed. The circumstances in which this removal took place is also known to all. A huge mob, in a most abominable manner, caused demolition of the disputed structure against all norms and principles of a civilized society. It is, however, not the case of the defendants that the plaintiffs have any role in this matter. Now, the question is whether such removal, whatsoever were the circumstances, is permissible and secondly; its effect in the light of the answer of the former.

4528. Fortunately, the issue is no more res integra. In Hari Raghunath Vs. Antaji Bhikaji (supra) the Bombay High Court considered this question and held:

> "It is not disputed that the existing building is in a ruinous condition and that it may be that for the purpose of effecting the necessary repairs the image may have to be temporarily removed. Still the question is whether the defendant as manager is entitled to remove the image with a view to its installation in another building which is near the existing building. Taking the most liberal view of the powers of the manager, I do not think that as the manager of a public temple he can do what he claims the power to do, viz., to remove the image from its present position and to instal it in the new building. The image is consecrated in its present position for a number of years and there is the existing temple. To remove the image from that temple and to instal it in another building would be practically putting a new temple in place of the existing temple. Whatever may be the occasions on which the installation of a new image as a substitute for the old may be allowable according to the Hindu law, it is not shown on behalf of the defendant that the ruinous condition of the existing building is a ground for practically removing the image from its present place to a new place permanently. We are not concerned in this suit with the question of the temporary removal which may be necessary when the existing building is repaired."

4529. This decision in Hari Raghunath (supra) has been quoted and approved by a three Judge Bench of the Apex Court in Narayan Bhagwantrao Gosavi Balajiwale Vs. Gopal Vinayak Gosavi (supra) in para 36 and it says:

"The case is an authority for the proposition that the idol cannot be removed permanently to another place, because that would be tantamount to establishing a new temple. However, if the public agreed to a temporary removal, it could be done for a valid reason."

4530. Therefore in a given situation a temporary removal is permissible and that shall not cause any impact upon the authority and status of the deity.

4531. Now coming to the two orders referred to in issue no.3(c) of the Court, we find that this Court on 14th August, 1989 passed the following order on an application filed by the State of U.P. under Section 94 read with Order XXXIX, Rule 1 and 2 C.P.C. which reads:

"This is an application filed by the State of U.P. under Section 94 read with Order 39 Rules 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the grant of injunction:-

www.vadaprativada.com

(i) Restraining the plaintiffs and defendants from disturbing the status quo and organising any activity which may bring about confrontation between Hindus and Muslims and

(ii) Ensuring that orders passed by the Court are strictly enforced and are not breached.

We have heard Sri S.S.Bhatnagar, learned Advocate General in support of this application. We also heard Sri V.K.S.Chaudhary and Sri Deoki Nandan Agarwal, who submitted in their arguments that the threats expressed by the learned Advocate-General in his application and in his arguments were groundless as no such situation as stated in the affidavit filed in support of the application is in existence or is going to arise as the parties represented by them consisted of law abiding citizens and no breach of peace or any order of the court was intended by them. Sri Abdul Mannan, Counsel appearing for the other side, virtually supported by the application for injunction and narrated the dire consequences if the law is taken to hands by the parties.

In this connection, our attention was drawn to the following order dated 3.2.1986 passed by a learned single Judge of this Court in Civil Misc. Writ No.746 of 1986:-

> "Until further orders of the Court, the nature of the property in question as existing today shall not be changed."

It was also brought to our notice that another learned single Judge of this Court has passed an order for appointment of receiver for the property in question in F.A.F.O. No.17 of 1977 on 23rd July, 1987.

www.vadaprativada.com

In view of the order for appointment of receiver and the order dated 3.2.1986 which has become final, we are not inclined to accept that any of the parties will take law to hands and do anything which may culminate in law breaking. However, since in the writ petition, in which the order dated 3.2.1986 was passed, only some of the parties to the present suits were arrayed, we consider it necessary in the interest of justice that a similar order is adopted in each of the injunction applications in the present suits, as a result whereof until further orders of the Court, the parties to suits No.1 of 1989 (Reg. Suit No.2 of 1950), 2 of 1989 (Reg. Suit No.25 of 1950), 3 of 1989 (Reg. Suit No.26 of 1959), 4 of 1989 (Reg. Suit No.12 of 1961) and 5 of 1989 (Reg. Suit No.236 of 1989) shall maintain status quo and shall not change the nature of the property in question.

Sri V.K.S.Chaudhary strenuously contended that in view of the order appointing receiver, there was absolutely no justification for apprehending that the parties are likely to take the law to their hands, but by way of abundant caution, we have made the above order."

4532. A perusal of this order shows that the parties to the suit were directed to maintain status quo, and, that they shall not change the nature of the property in question. There is no pleading by the defendants (Suit-5) that in demolition of the disputed structure etc., the plaintiffs are responsible or guilty of violation of this Court's order dated 14.08.1989.

4533. So far as order dated 15.11.1991 is concerned, Sri Jilani informed that no such order was passed by this Court but it appears that the Apex Court on some application had passed an order but the same has not been placed before us during the course of argument. Therefore, we are not able to consider and appreciate the same.

4534. In view thereof we answer issues no.3(b) and (d) (Suit-5) in affirmative and issue no.3(c) (Suit-5) in negative.

4535. Issue No.8 (Suit-5) reads as under:

> "Is the defendant Nirmohi Akhara the "Shebait" of Bhagwan Sri Ram installed in the disputed structure?"

4536. This issue has to be considered in the light of the pleadings of defendant Nirmohi Akhara. Its case is that since time immemorial the disputed structure was a temple. There was no demolition. No construction of mosque. The idol under the disputed structure also continued since time immemorial. This case of the Nirmohi Akhara has not been found correct. They have failed to prove it. We have already held so. It is not their case that the idols were kept under the central dome of the disputed structure in the night of 22/23 December, 1949 by any member or Mahants or Pujaris of Nirmohi Akhara and after such placing they continued to take care of the idols and it is the Nirmohi Akhara which is responsible for all this. In fact Nirmohi Akhara having taken a totally different stand, denied occurrence of any such incident.

4537. In these peculiar facts and circumstances and the stand of Nirmohi Akhara, we have no option but to hold that so far as the idols of Bhagwan Sri Ram installed in the disputed structure i.e. within the inner courtyard is concerned, the defendant Nirmohi Akhara cannot said to be Shebait thereof.

4538. Issue No.8 (Suit-5) is accordingly answered against Nirmohi Akhara defendant No.3 (Suit-5).

4539. Issue No.20(a) (Suit-4)

> "Whether the Waqf in question cannot be a Sunni Waqf as

www.vadaprativada.com

the building was not allegedly constructed by a Sunni Mohammedan but was allegedly constructed by Meer Baqi who was allegedly a Shia Muslim and the alleged Mutawallis were allegedly Shia Mohammedans? If so, its effect?"

4540. This issue has been framed in view of the plea taken by the defendants no.13, 20 and a few others that the building in dispute having been constructed by Mir Baqi, who was a Shia Muslim, the waqf cannot be a Sunni Waqf and therefore, plaintiff no.1 (Suit-4) has no authority to file the suit. We have already answered this question while considering the issue relating to wakf that if a mosque is constructed, under law of Shariat no distinction is made like Sunni mosque or Shia mosque. Every person, who is a worshipper of Islam, as a matter of right, is entitled to enter the mosque and offer Namaz. This aspect has been considered in three Full Bench decisions of this Court in Jangu & Others Vs. Ahmad Ullah (supra), Queen Empress Vs. Ramzan (supra) as well as in Ata-Ullah & another Vs. Azim-Ullah (supra). The above judgments have been discussed in detail in paras 3254 and 3256 of this judgment. It is only pursuant to the U.P. Act, 1936 or U.P. Act, 1960, for the effective management and superintendence of waqfs in the State of U.P., two Boards were created and for that purpose only, the waqfs were required to be identified whether a Sunni waqf or Shia Waqf.

4541. Be that as it may, before us, firstly, neither any evidence has been placed to show that Mir Baqi in fact existed during the regime of Babar, and, then nothing is there to prove about his religion, what it was. Some observations here and there by some writers and that too on a sheer guess work would not be sufficient for this Court to investigate into this factual position which relates back to an alleged event of almost 500 years back. Moreover, we have already held that the building in question has not been proved to have been constructed in 1528 AD by Mir Baqi. Therefore the question, whether it was a Sunni waqf or Shia waqf becomes redundant. Moreover, the rights of Hindus in no manner would be affected whether the building in dispute, if mosque, constitute a 'Sunni Waqf' or 'Shia Waqf' since the consequence, if any, would flow in the same way and would be equal in both the cases.

4542. Our considered opinion is that nature of the waqf whether Sunni or Shia would not cause any impact upon the issues raised by the defendants Hindu parties in these cases. Therefore, for the purpose of suits in question, issue 20(a) (Suit-4) is wholly irrelevant and need not to be answered. It is ordered accordingly.

4543. Issue 25, 26 (Suit-4) are as under:

> "Whether demolition of the disputed structure as claimed by the plaintiff, it can still be called a mosque and if not whether the claim of the plaintiffs is liable to be dismissed as no longer maintainable?"
>
> "Whether Muslims can use the open site as mosque to offer prayer when structure which stood thereon has been demolished?"

4544. Both these issues are interconnected and can be decided together. The submission of the defendants-Hindu parties is that the plaintiffs are the beneficiaries in the sense that they are only the worshippers and in that capacity had filed the suit in question. This right of the plaintiffs (Suit-4) would continue only so long as the disputed structure was there and

after its demolition since there cannot be a mosque in existence, the plaintiffs lose right of worship for all times to come and therefore, the suit in question is liable to be dismissed as no longer maintainable.

4545. On the contrary, the plaintiffs (Suit-4) have pleaded that once there is a waqf by construction of a mosque, it is not confined only to the building but to land also and therefore, even if the building is subsequently damaged, collapsed or demolished, it would not affect the rights of the Muslims to offer prayer (Namaz) at the site in dispute. Even if it is a open site, its status of mosque (waqf) will continue.

4546. While considering the issues relating to the mosque, we have already observed that a waqf can be created only when the wakif is the owner of the land and once he creates a waqf, the property in its entirety vests in the almighty and the wakif ceases to have any relation with the property thereafter. In the case in hand, we have already held that the building in dispute was constructed as mosque and it was so treated, believed and practiced by all concerned, which included the Hindus also. Moreover, in the absence of any claim as to title, the plaintiffs (Suit-4), have approached this Court on the basis of their interest in the property in dispute derived from possession in the sense of a right to offer Namaz at the disputed site. Such right, in our view, cannot be defeated merely by removing the construction, since the plaintiffs if had a right to possess the land in question, they can continue to maintain their suit irrespective of whether building in dispute has been demolished.

4547. In our view, issues no.25 and 26 (Suit-4) are answered in the manner that as a result of the demolition of disputed structure, Suit-4 of the plaintiffs muslim parties cannot be said to be not maintainable. No further aspect needs to be answered. Issues no.25 and 26 (Suit-4) are answered accordingly.

4548. Issue No.3 and 4 (Suit-1) read as under:

Issue No.3

"Has the plaintiff any right to worship the 'Charan Paduka' and the idols situated in the site in suit."

Issue No.4

"Has the plaintiff the right to have Darshan of the place in suit?"

4549. As we have already noticed, Charan Paduka i.e. Sita Rasoi is in the outer courtyard, there is no occasion to make any declaration in this regard. This is not within the scope of Suit-1. So far as the idol and right of Darshan of the place are concerned, we have already held that place in suit, in so far as it constitute the place of birth of lord Rama can be visited for Darshan and worship by all the Hindus as a matter of right, who believed and aspire for the same. However, it cannot be said that while visiting a place for worship, the defendant State or others who are responsible for management of the place of worship cannot impose restrictions provided they are reasonable and necessary for the benefit and facility of the worshippers as also for the safety, security, cleanliness etc. of the deity.

4550. Therefore, subject to such reasonable restriction, as may be necessary in the given facts and circumstances, we hold that the plaintiff has a right to worship the place in suit to the extent it has been held by this Court constituting the birthplace of lord Rama, and if an idol is also placed in such a place, the same can also be worshipped accordingly. Both these issues are answered accordingly.

4551. Issues relating to reliefs:

4552. Issue No. 16, Suit-4:

"To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs or any of them, entitled?"

4553. In view of our finding on Issue No. 3 since the suit is barred by limitation, the question of entitlement of any relief to the plaintiff does not arise as the suit itself is liable to be dismissed.

4554. Issue No. 17, Suit-1:

"To what reliefs, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?"

4555. Since the site in dispute includes part of the land which is believed to be the place of birth of Lord Rama and has been held to be a deity and place of worship of Hindus, the plaintiff's right to worship cannot be doubted. To this extent the plaintiff is entitled for a declaration, which is ordered accordingly. However, it is made clear that such right of the plaintiff is always subject to restrictions which may be found necessary by the competent authority on account of security, safety and maintenance of the place of worship. Since the place of worship is a "Swayambhu deity", whether an idol is kept there or not, would make no difference and it is the matter to be seen by those who are responsible for management of such place, and according to the majority of the worshippers as to how they intend to keep and maintain the place of worship without disturbing its nature as deity. No individual worshipper can insist that such place of worship be maintained in a particular manner. Therefore, except the declaration as above, the plaintiff (Suit-1) is not entitled to any other relief.

4556. Issue No. 13, Suit-3:

"To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?"

www.vadaprativada.com

4557. In view of our findings in respect of issues no. 2, 3, 4, 9 and 14 the plaintiff, Suit-3, is not entitled to any relief.

4558. Issue no. 30, Suit-5:

"To what relief, if any, are plaintiffs or any of them entitled?"

4559. Plaintiffs have sought a declaration that the entire premises described vide Annexures- 1, 2 and 3 belonged to the plaintiffs deities and also a permanent injunction against the defendants prohibiting them from interfering with or raising any objection to or placing any restriction on the construction of the new temple at Sri Ram Janambhumi Ayodhya. We have already held that the area under the central dome of the disputed construction is believed and worshipped by the Hindu people as the place of birth of Lord Rama and they were worshiping thereat since time immemorial.This part of the land constitutes deity, "Sri Ram Janamsthan", and a place of special significance for Hindus. Therefore it has to be treated in a manner where the very right of worship of Hindus of place of birth of Lord Rama is not extinguished or otherwise interfered with. We have simultaneously held that so far as other land within the inner courtyard of the disputed structure is concerned, this open land had been continuously used by members of both the communities for their respective prayers and worship for decades and centuries.

4560. Though the prayer in the suit is worded in the different manner but for complete justice and to avoid multiplicity of litigation as also the adjudication which may settle centuries old dispute finally, we are of the view that we can mould the wordings of the reliefs and can pass an order in respect to respective parties in this case which as such may not be covered by the form of relief but is within the scope of the case. In this regard we can rely on the provision under Order VII Rule 7 CPC.

4561. We may also refer to earlier decision of this Court in Pandohi Ahir Vs. Faruq Khan and another AIR 1954 All. 191 "A" and "B" were co-sharers. "A" sold a land to "C". "B" filed a suit claiming possession of the land stating that he was entitled for exclusive possession of the property as the said land was already in his possession to the exclusion of "A". A Single Judge of this Court held that "A" and "B", being co-sharers, "B" had no right to claim exclusive possession of the plot to the exclusion of "A" and similarly "A" had no right to transfer specific plot to "C" but can transfer his share in plot to "C" and, thereafter "A" and "C" will hold the plot in question as co-sharers. It also observed that if the prayer clause in a plaint is not properly worded, the Court should give due consideration to the decree which should be passed. This part of the observation is referable to Order VII Rule 7 C.P.C. Judgment is relied on to overcome the difficulty in the suits with respect to the relief sought therein. In our view, Order VII Rule 7 can be resorted to by the Court when something can be found within the scope of the relief sought by the plaintiff or where a higher relief is claimed but the Court found that the plaintiff is entitled for a lesser relief but the scope of Order VII Rule 7 cannot be extended by widening the scope of the relief which has actually not been called for or to permit plaintiff to wriggle out of the statutory obstruction like limitation etc. on account of a relief claimed by him which is barred or prohibited or cannot be granted for one or the other reason. The Court will not provide a safe passage to a party by reading the words of the reliefs sought

by it in a manner which may help it in overcoming the difficulty it otherwise is facing or is bound to face on account of the mandatory provisions of the statute of limitation etc. The scope of Order VII Rule 7 is not to use it as a leverage to help a party to the extent that the other party stands discriminated in an otherwise matter where other party is entitled to get the issue decided in its favour whether it is in respect to limitation, res judicata or similar other statutory provisions. It is the plaintiff who has to be careful enough to find out as to what grievance he actually has, what the real cause of action is and what relief one must claim from the Court. The Court will not provide a comfortable question in the form of rewording of all these things to the extent it may change what has actually been changed by the plaintiff in its entirety.

4562. In order to mould relief under Order VII Rule 7, reliance is placed on a Division Bench decision in Sardar Ali Raza khan Vs. Sardar Nawazish Ali Khan AIR (30) 1943 Oudh 243, it was held therein that where more is claimed, the plaintiff may get what is found due to him even though less that what he has claimed. Where more is claimed any smaller amount may be given if found due to the plaintiff. This proposition cannot be doubted but then we may refer to the further observation of the Court that relief not founded on the pleadings should not be granted. It is not proper for a Court to displace the case made by a party in his pleading and to give effect to an entirely new case which that party has not made out in his pleading and which he has expressly disclaimed. But where the substantial matters which constitute the title of all the parties are touched, though obscurely, in the issues, and they have been fully put in evidence and have formed the main subject of discussion in the Court, the Court may grant a relief though it may not be founded on the pleadings. Therefore, the mould of relief will depend upon the case and recourse to Order VII Rule 7 can be had only to the extent it does not make violence with the pleadings and reliefs in the suit.

4563. Considering the scope of Order VII Rule 7 C.P.C. in Smt. Neelawwa Vs. Smt. Shivawwa AIR 1989 Kar. 45, a Division Bench observed:

> "The normal rule that relief not founded on the pleadings should not be granted is not without an exception. Where substantial matters constituting the title of all the parities are touched in the issues and have been fully put in evidence the case does not fall within the aforesaid rule. The Court has to look into the substance of the claim in determining the nature of the relief to be granted. Of course, the Court while moulding the relief must take care to see that relief it grants is not inconsistent with the plaintiff's claim, and is based on the same cause of action on which the relief claimed in the suit, that it occasions no prejudice or causes embarrassment to the other side; that it is not larger than the one claimed in the suit, even if the plaintiff is really entitled to it, unless he amends the plaint; that it had not been barred by time on the date of presentation of the plaint."
>
> "No doubt the plaintiff has sought for exclusive title and he has not been able to prove his exclusive title; but has been able to prove, that he is entitled to a half share in the suit properties. When a party claims exclusive title to the suit property and is liable to establish that he is entitled to half of the suit property, it will not be unusual for the Court to pass a decree for partition and possession of his half share. In fact such a relief flows from the relief prayed for in the plaint that he is the exclusive owner of the entire property. When a larger relief is claimed and what is established, is not the entire relief claimed in the suit but a part of it, as whole includes a part, larger relief includes smaller relief, and it also arises out of the same cause of action. ... Therefore, even if a separate suit has to be filed for partition, the defendant does not have any sustainable defence. Therefore no prejudice will be caused to the defendant/ respondent if a preliminary decree for partition and separate possession is passed in this suit itself."

www.vadaprativada.com

4564. Relief of declaration and injunction is discretionary but it is the duty of the Court to administer justice between the parties and not to convert itself into instrument of injustice or an engine of oppression. In Executive Committee of Vaish Degree College, Shamli and others Vs. Lakshmi Narain (supra) the Court said:

"27. . . . . the relief of declaration and injunction under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act is purely discretionary and the plaintiff cannot claim it as of right. The relief has to be granted by the court according to sound legal principles and ex debito justitiae. The court has to administer justice between the parties and cannot convert itself into an instrument of injustice or an engine of oppression. In these circumstances, while exercising its discretionary powers the court must keep in mind the well settled principles of justice and fairplay and should exercise the discretion only if the ends of justice require it, for justice is not an object which can be administered in

4565. In American Express Bank Ltd. Calcutta Steep Co. (supra) the Court said:

> "22. Undoubtedly declaration of the rights or status is one of discretion of the court under Section 34 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963. Equally the grant or refusal of the relief of declaration and injunction under the provision of that Act is discretionary. The plaintiff cannot claim the relief as of right. It has to be granted according to sound principles of law and ex debito justicia. The court cannot convert itself into an instrument of injustice or vehicle of oppression. While exercising its discretionary power, the court must keep in its mind the well settled principles of justice and fair play and the discretion would be exercised keeping in view the ends of justice since justice is the hall mark and it cannot be administered in vacuum. Grant of declaration and injunction relating to commercial transactions tend to aid dishonesty and perfidy. Conversely refusal to grant relief generally encourages candour in business behaviour, facilitates free Row of capital, prompt compliance of covenants, sustained growth of commerce and above all inculcates respect for the efficacy of judicial adjudication. Before granting or refusing to grant of relief of declaration or injunction or both the court must weigh pros and cons in each case, consider the facts and circumstances in their proper perspective and exercise discretion with circumspection to further the ends of justice."

4566. In the light of the above and considering overall findings of this Court on various issues, following directions and/or declaration, are given which in our view would meet the

(i)It is declared that the area covered by the central dome of the three domed structure, i.e., the disputed structure being the deity of Bhagwan Ram Janamsthan and place of birth of Lord Rama as per faith and belief of the Hindus, belong to plaintiffs (Suit-5) and shall not be obstructed or interfered in any manner by the defendants. This area is shown by letters AA BB CC DD in Appendix 7 to this judgment.

(ii) The area within the inner courtyard denoted by letters B C D L K J H G in Appendix 7 (excluding (i) above) belong to members of both the communities, i.e., Hindus (here plaintiffs, Suit-5) and Muslims since it was being used by both since decades and centuries. It is, however, made clear that for the purpose of share of plaintiffs, Suit-5 under this direction the area which is covered by (i) above shall also be included.

(iii) The area covered by the structures, namely, Ram Chabutra, (EE FF GG HH in Appendix 7) Sita Rasoi (MM NN OO PP in Appendix 7) and Bhandar (II JJ KK LL in Appendix 7) in the outer courtyard is declared in the share of Nirmohi Akhara (defendant no. 3) and they shall be entitled to possession thereof in the absence of any person with better title.

(iv) The open area within the outer courtyard (A G H J K L E F in Appendix 7) (except that covered by (iii) above) shall be shared by Nirmohi Akhara (defendant no. 3) and plaintiffs (Suit-5) since it has been generally used by the Hindu people for worship at both places.

(iv-a) It is however made clear that the share of muslim parties shall not be less than one third (1/3) of the total area of the premises and if necessary it may be given some area of outer courtyard. It is also made clear that while making partition by metes and bounds, if some minor adjustments are to be made

with respect to the share of different parties, the affected party may be compensated by allotting the requisite land from the area which is under acquisition of the Government of India.

(v)The land which is available with the Government of India acquired under Ayodhya Act 1993 for providing it to the parties who are successful in the suit for better enjoyment of the property shall be made available to the above concerned parties in such manner so that all the three parties may utilise the area to which they are entitled to, by having separate entry for egress and ingress of the people without disturbing each others rights. For this purpose the concerned parties may approach the Government of India who shall act in accordance with the above directions and also as contained in the judgement of Apex Court in Dr. Ismail Farooqi (Supra).

(vi)A decree, partly preliminary and partly final, to the effect as said above (i to v) is passed. Suit-5 is decreed in part to the above extent. The parties are at liberty to file their suggestions for actual partition of the property in dispute in the manner as directed above by metes and bounds by submitting an application to this effect to the Officer on Special Duty, Ayodhya Bench at Lucknow or the Registrar, Lucknow Bench, Lucknow, as the case may be.

(vii)For a period of three months or unless directed otherwise, whichever is earlier, the parties shall maintain status quo as on today in respect of property in dispute.

4567. Before parting with this matter, we find it necessary to place on record our appreciation to learned counsels, Sri Ravi Shankar Prasad, Sri P.R. Ganpathi Ayer, Sri K.N. Bhat, Senior Advocates; Sri Zafaryab Jilani, Sri M.A. Siddiqui, Sri S.I. Ahamad, Sri C.M. Shukla, Sri S.P. Srivastava, Sri M.M. Pandey, Sri R.L. Verma, Sri Tarunjeet Verma, Sri Hari Shankar Jain, Sri Rakesh Pandey, Sri R.K. Srivastava, Sri P.N. Mishra, Amitabh Shukla, Sushri Ranjana Agnihotri, Sri Ajay Kumar Pandey, Sri D.P. Gupta, K.G. Mishra, Sri Fazle Alam, Sri Ved Prakash and Sri Ramakant Srivastava, Advocates who assisted us with ability and it is because of their hard labour in placing voluminous record including religious, historical and other kinds of texts etc., before the Court in a systematic manner that we have been able to decide one of the most delicate, complicated and cumbersome matter involving almost the entire population of the country. The cordial atmosphere, peaceful and amicable behaviour which they have shown in the Court also deserve our commendation.

4568. This was a gigantic and herculean task. The record of the case was so voluminous that without having a few very competent and expert hands we could not have accomplished our task. We place on record commendation to the able and effective assistance provided by Sri Hari Shankar Dube, O.S.D. Ayodhya Bench, Sri Chintamani Ram, Bench Secretary, and Sri Yusuf Hussain, Court's Staff, S/Sri Akhilesh Kumar Nayak, P.S., Awadhesh Kumar, Puneet Srivastava, Kushal Agarwal, Yogendra Kumar Singh, Arvind Kumar Gupta and Alkesh who are the Court's personal staff and worked almost day-night enabling us to complete this matter.

4569. Since the judgment has become extremely bulky and it may be difficult to find different factual and legal aspects, therefore, for convenience we have prepared three indexes, (i) General Index, (ii) Citation; and, (iii) Reference Books which are appended with this judgment as Appendix Nos. 9, 8 and 10.

4570. The number of issues are 120 (including sub-issues).

We, therefore, summarize our findings on different issues, suitwise, as under:

Suit-4

1. Issue 1 (Suit-4) is answered in favour of plaintiffs.

2. Issue 1(a) (Suit-4) is answered in negative. The plaintiffs have failed to prove that the building in dispute was built by Babar or by Mir Baqi.

3. Issues 1(b), 6, 13, 14 and 27 (Suit-4) are answered in affirmative.

4. Issue 1-B(a) (Suit-4) is answered in affirmative and it is held that the fact that the land in dispute entered in the records of the authorities as Nazul plot would not make things different.

5. Issue 1-B(b) (Suit-4) is not answered being irrelevant.

6. Issue 1-B(c) (Suit-4)-It is held that building in question was not exclusively used by the members of muslim community. After 1856-57 outer courtyard was exclusively used by Hindu and inner courtyard had been visited for the purpose of worship by the members of both the communities.

7. Issue 2 (Suit-4) is answered in negative, i.e., against the plaintiffs.

8. Issue 3 (Suit-4) is answered in negative, i.e., against the plaintiffs. It is held that Suit-4 is barred by limitation.

9. Issue 4 (Suit-4)-At least since 1856-57, i.e., after the erection of partition wall the premises in outer courtyard has not been shown to be used/possessed by muslim parties but so far as the inner courtyard is concerned it has been used by both the parties.

www.vadaprativada.com

10. Issue 5(a) (Suit-4) is answered against the plaintiffs.

11. Issue 5(b) (Suit-4) is answered in favour of defendants and Hindu parties in general.

12. Issues 5(c), 7(c), 8, 12, 22 (Suit-4), are answered in negative.

13. Issue 5(d) (Suit-4) not pressed by the defendants, hence not answered.

14. Issue 5(e) (Suit-4) is decided in favour of plaintiffs subject to that issue 6 (Suit-3) is also decided in favour of defendants (Suit-3).

15. Issue 5(f) (Suit-4) is answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs and against the defendants.

16. Issue 7(a) (Suit-4) is answered in negative. It is held that there is nothing to show that Mahant Raghubar Das filed Suit-1885 on behalf of Janamsthan and whole body of persons interested in Janamsthan.

www.vadaprativada.com

17. Issue 7(b) (Suit-4) answered in affirmative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-4).

18. Issue 7(d) (Suit-4) is answered in negative to the extent that there is no admission by Mahant Raghubar Das plaintiff of Suit-1885 about the title of Muslims to the property in dispute or any portion thereof. Consequently, the question of considering its effect does not arise.

19. Issues 10 and 15 (Suit4) are answered in negative, i.e., against the plaintiffs and muslims in general.

20. Issue 11 (Suit-4)-It is held that the place of birth as believed and worshipped by Hindus is the area covered under the central dome of the three domed structure, i.e., the disputed structure in the inner courtyard in the premises in dispute.

www.vadaprativada.com

21. Issue 16 (Suit-4)-No relief since the suit is liable to be dismissed being barred by limitation.

22. Issue 17 (Suit-4) answered in negative holding that no valid notification under Section 5(3) of U.P. Act No. 13 of 1936 was issued.

23. Issue 18 (Suit-4)-it is held that the decision of the Apex Court in Gulam Abbas Vs. State of U.P. and others, AIR 1981 SC 2199 does not affect findings on issue 17 (Suit-4) and on the contrary the same stands supported and strengthened by the said judgment.

24. Issue 19(a) (Suit-4)-It is held that the premises which is believed to be the place of birth of Lord Rama continue to vest in the deity but the Hindu religious structures in the outer courtyard cannot be said to be the property of plaintiffs (Suit-5).

25. Issue 19(b) (Suit-4) is answered in affirmative to the extent that the building was land locked and could not be reached except of passing through the passage of Hindu worship. However, this by itself was of no consequence.

26. Issue 19(c) (Suit-4)-It is held that Hindus were worshipping at the place in dispute before construction of the disputed structure but that would not make any difference to the status of the building in dispute which came to be constructed at the command of the sole monarch having supreme power which cannot be adjudicated by a Court of Law, constituted or formed much after, and according to the law which was not applicable at that time.

27. Issue 19(d) and 19(e) (Suit-4) are answered in favour of the plaintiffs.

www.vadaprativada.com

28. Issue 19(f) (Suit-4)-In so far as the first part is concerned, is answered in affirmative. The second part is left unanswered being redundant. In the ultimate result the issue is answered in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-4).

29. Issue 20(a) being irrelevant not answered.

30. Issue 20(b) (Suit-4)-It is held that at the time of attachment of the building there was a Mutawalli, i.e., one Sri Javvad Hussain and in the absence of Mutawalli relief of possession cannot be allowed to plaintiffs who are before the Court in the capacity of worshippers.

31. Issue 21 (Suit-4) decided in negative, i.e., in favour of the plaintiffs. The suit is not bad for non-joinder of deities.

32. Issues 23 and 24 (Suit-4): It is held that neither the Waqf Board is an instrumentality of State nor there is any bar in filing a suit by the Board against the State. It is also not a 'State' under Article 12 of the Constitution and can very well represent the interest of one community without infringing any provision of the Constitution.

33. Issues 25 and 26 (Suit-4)-Held that as a result of demolition of the disputed structure it cannot be said that the suit has rendered not maintainable. Nothing further needs to be answered.

34. Issue 28 (Suit-4)-It is held that plaintiffs have failed to prove their possession over the disputed premises, i.e., outer and inner courtyard including the disputed building ever.

Suit-1

1. Issue 1 (Suit-1)-It is held that the place of birth, as believed and worshipped by Hindus, is the area covered

under the central dome of the three domed structure, i.e., the disputed structure in the inner courtyard in the premises of dispute.

2. Issue 2 (Suit-1)- It is held that the idols were kept under the central dome of the disputed structure within inner courtyard in the night of 22nd/23rd December, 1949 and prior thereto the same existed in the outer courtyard. Therefore, on 16.01.1950 when Suit-1 was filed the said idol existed in the inner courtyard under the central dome of the disputed structure, i.e., prior to the filing of the suit. So far as the Charan Paduka is concerned, the said premises existed in the outer courtyard. Since Suit-1 is confined only to the inner courtyard, question of existence of Charan Paduka on the site in suit does not arise.

3. Issues 3 and 4 (Suit-1)-It is held that plaintiffs have right to worship. The place in suit to the extent it has been held by this Court to be the birthplace of Lord Rama and if an idol is also placed in such a place the same can also be worshipped, but this is subject to reasonable restrictions like security, safety, maintenance etc.

4. Issues 5(a), 5(c), 5(d), 9(c) and 11(a) (Suit-1) are answered in negative.

5. Issue 5(b) (Suit-1)-Held, the Suit 1885 was decided against Mahant Raghubar Das and he was not granted any relief by the respective courts, and, no more.

6. Issue 6 (Suit-1) is answered in negative. The defendants have failed to prove that the property in dispute was constructed by Shahanshah/Emperor Babar in 1528 AD.

7. Issue 7 (Suit-1) is decided in negative, i.e., against

www.vadaprativada.com

the defendants muslim parties.

8. Issue 8 (Suit-1) is answered in negative. Suit is not barred by proviso to Section 42 of Specific Relief Act, 1963.

9. Issue 9 (Suit-1) is decided in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-1).

10. Issue 9(a) (Suit-1) is answered in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-1).

11. Issue 9(b) (Suit-1) is answered against the plaintiffs.

12. Issue 10 (Suit-1) is answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs of Suit-1.

13. Issue 11(b) (Suit-1) is answered in affirmative.

14. Issue 12, 13, 15, 16 and 21 (Suit-1) are answered in negative, i.e., in favour of the plaintiffs (Suit-1).

15. Issue 14 (Suit-1) has become redundant after dismissal of Suit No. 25 of 1950 as withdrawn.

www.vadaprativada.com

16. Issue 17 (suit-1)-The plaintiffs are declared to have right of worship at the site in dispute including the part of the land which is held by this Court to be the place of birth of Lord Rama according to the faith and belief of Hindus but this right is subject to such restrictions as may be necessary by authorities concerned in regard to law and order, i.e., safety, security and also for the maintenance of place of worship etc. The plaintiffs are not entitled to any other relief.

Suit-3

1. Issue 1 and 16 (Suit-3) are answered in negative.

2. Issue 2, 3, 4 and 9 (Suit-3) are answered in negative, i.e., against the plaintiffs.

3. Issue 5 (Suit-3) is answered in negative. The

www.vadaprativada.com

defendants have failed to prove that the property in dispute was constructed by Shahanshah/Emperor Babar in 1528 AD.

4. Issue 6 (Suit-3) is not proved hence answered in negative.

5. Issue 7(a) and 7(b) (Suit-3) are answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs and against the defendants in Suit-3.

6. Issue 8 (Suit-3) is decided in negative.

7. Issue 10 (Suit-3) is decided in favour of plaintiff. It is also held that a private defendant cannot raise objection of maintainability of suit for want of notice under Section 80 CPC.

8. Issue 11 and 12 (Suit-3) are decided in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs.

www.vadaprativada.com

9. Issue 13 (Suit-3)-The plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in view of the findings in respect of issues 2, 3, 4, 14 and 19.

10. Issue 14 (Suit-3) is answered in affirmative. It is held that the suit as framed is not maintainable.

11. Issue 15 (Suit-3) is answered in affirmative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-3).

12. Issue 17 (Suit-3) is decided in favour of plaintiffs. Nirmohi Akhara is held a Panchayati Math of Ramanandi Sect of Bairagi, is a religious denomination following its religious faith and pursuit according to its own customs. However, its continuance at Ayodhya is found sometime after 1734 AD and not earlier thereto.

Suit-5

1. Issue 1 (Suit-5) is answered in affirmative. Plaintiffs

www.vadaprativada.com

1 and 2 both are juridical persons.

2. Issue 2 (Suit-5) is not answered as it is not necessary for the dispute in the case.

3. Issue 3(a) (Suit-5) is answered in affirmative. The idols were installed under the central dome of the disputed building in the early hours of 23rd December, 1949.

4. Issue 3(b), 3(d), 5, 10, 11, 14 and 24 (Suit-5) are answered in affirmative.

5. Issues 3(c), 7, 19, 23 and 28 (Suit-5) are answered in negative.

6. Issue 4 (Suit-5) is answered in negative. The idol in question kept under the Shikhar existed there prior to 6th December, 1992 but not from time immemorial and instead kept thereat in the night of 22nd/23rd December, 1949.

www.vadaprativada.com

7. Issue 6 (Suit-5) is decided in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-5).

8. Issue 8 (Suit-5) is answered against the defendant no. 3, Nirmohi Akhara.

9. Issue 9 (Suit-5) is answered against the plaintiffs.

10. Issue 13 (Suit-5) is answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs. It is held that suit is not barred by limitation.

11. Issue 15 (Suit-5)-It is held that the muslims at least from 1860 and onwards have visited the inner courtyard in the premises in dispute and have offered Namaj thereat. The last Namaj was offered on 16th December, 1949.

12. Issue 16 (Suit-5)-Neither the title of plaintiffs 1 and 2 ever extinguished nor the question of reacquisition thereof ever arose.

13. Issue 18 (Suit-5) is answered in negative, i.e., against the defendants no. 3, 4 and 5.

14. Issue 20 (Suit-5) is not answered being unnecessary for the dispute in the case in hand.

15. Issue 21 (Suit-5) is answered in negative, i.e., against the defendants no. 4 and 5.

16. Issue 22 (Suit-5)-It is held that the place of birth as believed and worshipped by Hindus is the area covered under the central dome of the three domed structure, i.e., the disputed structure in the inner courtyard in the premises of dispute.

17. Issue 25 (Suit-5) is answered in affirmative. It is held that the judgment dated 30.03.1946 in Suit No. 29 of 1949 is not binding upon the plaintiffs (suit-5).

18. Issues 26 and 27 (Suit-5) are answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs (Suit-5).

19. Issue 29 (Suit-5) is answered in negative, i.e., in favour of plaintiffs.

20. Issue 30 (Suit-5)-The suit is partly decreed in the manner the directions are issued in para 4566.

4571. In the result, Suit-1 is partly decreed. Suits 3 and 4 are dismissed. Suit-5 is decreed partly. In the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs.
